1. In Jefferson County just north of the city limits at Ray's Truck Stop forty demonstrators were arrested on February 19. The demonstrations were initiated by Bill Hansen, field secretary of SNCC, and Dick Gregory, the comedian, after the latter's Sunday evening speech to a mass meeting. They went to the Truck Stop for a sandwich and were turned away. Serious tension and incidents occurred calling forth the attention of Governor Faubus and the state troopers whose presence city officials in Pine Bluff openly resented. Resolution of the tension came after a seventy-two hour truce and destruction by protestors inside the jail which focused attention on the conditions there. A local judge granted the truck stop manager a blanket injunction which is still in force.
2. On March 22 Little Rock's COCA (Council on Community Affairs) and SNCC field workers announced plans for direct action protests against school officials, including picketing the school board in session and a boycott of Negro students on April 6. The purpose was to get affirmative action from the school officials on the five points of COCA petition last August which the board rejected last November. After the board first refused to discuss the issues with COCA and after the picketing and after much community ferment with business leaders exerting strong influence the good offices of the executive committee of the Ministerial Association were used to secure some concessions from the board on four points. Thereupon the boycott was delayed or "postponed." The existing downtown negotiating committee was accepted as the effective continuing negotiating agent.
3. On January 25 the Arkansas Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights held public hearings for complaints. Newspapers gave full stories on the testimony of SNCC representatives and the Pine Bluff Movement in regard to treatment by law enforcement officers, a newspaper editor's complaint about abuse by county officials because he exposed corruption in elections, a Negro student's testimony about denial of housing at the University.
4. On February 14 Negro leaders of Pulaski County met with county legislators to get their views on the proposed system for voter registration. The Negroes were united on a system of permanent personal registration.

D. In Politics

1. The Arkansas legislature met in extraordinary session March 24 to establish a voter registration system and to enact eighteen other items requested by the Governor. In four days it enacted all he asked. The registration system provides for annual registration at the sheriff-collector's office. A registrant may register close relatives. Strong newspaper and citizen interest developed for the system of permanent registration.
2. Monday after the legislative session a citizen's committee led by Representative Hardy Croxton met to plan for an initiated act for a system of permanent registration.
3. After consultation with Representative J. H. Cottrell, Jr., member of the Little Rock School Board, Governor Faubus said he would support the Little Rock School District in securing $300,000 federal funds to build a new technical high school. (Mr. Cottrell sponsored the registration bill supported by the Governor.)
4. The legislature passed, 93 to 3, a resolution condemning gambling at Hot Springs. On the next day Governor Faubus ordered all gambling establishments there to close or be closed. Earlier he had vigorously rejected requests that he take action vowing that gambling was a local matter for local officials to deal with.
5. Political liberals - individuals from labor, women's groups, etc. - have been breakfasting each Monday morning. The Associate Director of ACHR has met with them.

II. ACHR Activities Related to Events

A. In Organizations

1. On January 23-26, twenty-six high school students and five adult counselors, representing three white churches and some six Negro churches in Little Rock, were guests of fourteen churches in and near Des Moines, Iowa, in what the hosts called "Operation Friendship." The fourteen Negro and twelve white high school students traveled the 1100 miles round trip in a chartered bus furnished by the Des Moines churches.

   The enclosed clipping gives essentials of the story. The whole project evolved from a conference late last summer between the directors of ACHR and the Reverend James Harris of Des Moines. The clergy in Westover Hills and the Second Presbyterian churches at Little Rock assumed major responsibility in the final plans.

Implementing the plans involved ACHR staff in four meetings with adult churchmen, two sessions with the young people, preparation of materials about Little Rock for use of adults and students, multiplied telephone calls between Little Rock and Des Moines. The minister of the Second Presbyterian Church facetiously suggested the bus trip be called "Liberty Ride."

2. The directors continued working with the steering committee of the Greater Little Rock Conference on Religion and Human Relations in setting up the January public meeting, in a sub-committee planning an all-day workshop in May, through its Committee on Community Problems.
3. The directors filled engagements for and participated in a wide range of meetings: annual conference at Southwest Center for Human Relations at the University of Oklahoma, convention of the Arkansas Methodist and Presbyterian college students, meetings of COCA and that of the Negro leaders with legislators, monthly luncheon meeting of ministers, weekly meeting of the Sunday Informational Fellowship of Negro professionals, programs for observance of Centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation by four different institutions in Little Rock, Hot Springs' YWCA's public luncheon for study of the civil rights legislation, March meeting of Ft. Smith's Council on Human Relations, Christian Education workshop of the CME Church.
4. The Director was made "captain" in the drive to secure members for the Community Concert Association of Little Rock. His team included Mrs. Robert Eubanks of Philander Smith, Mrs. Hazel Hynson, Mr. Arthur Porter of Horace Mann, and Mrs. Callaway of Dunbar Junior High. Total number of members has not been tallied.
5. In March the directors in cooperating with the three colleges of Little Rock and church leaders made plans for the conference of Arkansas Negro ministers at Philander Smith on April 28-29, on the topic: "Leadership in Church and Community for the Sixties."
6. The Director held conferences with Mr. Wilder Towle, St. Louis Conference of the Congregational Church; Mr. Naylor, Little Rock Housing Authority; and Reverend Sam Allen, Arkansas Council of Churches, planning a local committee to oversee college student volunteers in a recreation program at Little Rock public housing centers this summer.
7. Reactions of federal agencies to the resolutions passed at ACHR's annual meeting led to requests for follow-up from the staff by three of the agencies: Employment Security Division; Health, Education and Welfare; and the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training. Results not yet determined.
8. Bishop Raines of the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Church presented the Raney Lectures at Pulaski Heights Methodist Church, Little Rock. He is the father of the Reverend John Raines who as a freedom rider in 1961 was a guest at Little Rock's new jail. The Director contacted the Chamber of Commerce to suggest officials extend Bishop Raines special courtesy as a part of the city's new image. The suggestion was well received but not acted upon. It was left for the Director on the Bishop's last day to walk with him over the Ninth Street section of Little Rock and the campus of Philander Smith College, a Methodist Institution. Reports of his lecture that night indicate the Bishop left no doubt as to the Methodist Church's position and as to the responsibility of a local church in race relations, reflecting some ideas about which he had talked on the walk.
9. The Director conferred on March 17 with Dr. Payton Kolb in regard to plans for the engagement of Dr. Robert Coles, psychiatrist associated with SRC, for addresses in Arkansas. Dr. Kolb, President of the Regional Association of Psychiatrists, wants Dr. Coles for their annual meeting in Hot Springs on the weekend of September 18. ACHR would use him at Little Rock and will cooperate with the Association of Psychiatrists in bringing Dr. Coles.

B. In Communities

1. The staff had two conferences with Mr. Donaubauer in regard to two reports coming to ACHR: (a) that the retiring president of the United Fund briefing the new president said: "Do not be guided by the recommendations of the Council on Health and Welfare as the result of its studies;" (b) that the Budget Committee alloted money for construction of a new Carver YMCA principally on the ground that this would lessen pressure on the Central "Y" to desegregate, although this reason would not appear in its recommendation to the Board of the United Fund. Mr. Donaubauer denied that (a) was Fund policy and that (b) was before the Board of United Fund.

On February 19 Mr. Donabauer and Mr. Patillo of UF came to ACHR offices and discussed how ACHR might help in implementing the directive from Mr. John Macy of the U.S. Civil Service Commission. This directive will forbid after June, 1965, federal agency participation in UF drives to support community agencies practicing discrimination. The discussion included consideration of a statewide meeting of executives of United Funds to consider meeting the requirements of the regulations.

3. Concern among some Negro leaders over the continued segregation of Carver "Y" after it is moved, and, consequently, easy continued discrimination at the Central "Y", led to discussions with the directors of a proposal that the name of Carver be changed as a measure for its desegregation. Some Negro members of the board of Carver are against such a change.

4. On February 21 ACHR became involved in the tension at Ray's Truck Stop at Pine Bluff.

At 4:30 a.m. the Reverend A.M. Roberts, ACHR board member from Pine Bluff, called the Director expressing alarm over the threat of serious rioting. Later the Director checked with Walter Trulock who reported on steps under way by the business leaders and the resentment over the intervention ("It can be documented.") of Governor Faubus through use of state troopers ("stirring up the violence"). He also asked the Associate Director to stand by for a possible call for assistance in dealing with the protesting students if "Reverend Grinage is not released from jail." A call to Miss Iris Greenberg, SNCC representative at Pine Bluff, confirmed the immanence of serious violence.

The Director called the Attorney General's office in Washington and reported the situation to Mr. Jerome Heilbron. He said they were getting direct reports.

At 8:30 p.m. another call from Reverend Roberts brought relief. Though unannounced, a seventy-two hour truce had been reached. The protestors would be released on bail.

5. On February 28 Reverend Grinage, President of the Pine Bluff Movement, and Reverend Roberts came to the ACHR office to recap events in Pine Bluff. Earlier a call from the editor of the Commercial of that city enlisted our possible help in getting financial support so Reverend Grinage could remain to lead the Movement.

C. In Politics

1. On Monday, January 6, Mr. Faubus pulled ACHR into politics. On an early morning interview on Channel 11 he made serious charges against the organization, its president, director, and Reverend Cartwright. The sequence of events has been related fully in daily press and the Southern School News and need not be detailed here.

After hearing reports on the Governor's statements, Mrs. Brewer, the President, reached Father Clancy, an author of the resolutions criticised. She phoned and visited Channel 11. She phoned SRC which promised the services of Mrs. Robin to help write a script for ACHR's "equal time" reply.

Meantime the station called the ACHR office almost insisting that we take equal time to reply to the Governor, claiming the Governor's remarks were off-the-cuff, and, admitting the station had no verbatim record of the Governor's charges.

Published accounts record that Father Clancy and Mr. Sutton took the allotted time to describe ACHR, its objectives and methods, its officers and supporters.

Mr. Hugh Patterson of the Gazette expressed the feeling of many people: "The Governor did not make any points in that round."

2. ACHR ordered and in cooperation with AFL-CIO and League of Women Voters distributed twenty-four copies of the "Model Voter Registration System" published by the National Municipal League for the information of newsmen, legislators, and citizens.

D. In its Organization

1. The postmaster denied our request for special rates for mailing as a non-profit educational organization.

2. ACHR had a most interesting annual meeting on January 4.

The luncheon meeting overflowed the facilities of the Grady Manning. The Advisory Council and the Board had effective sessions Les Dunbar as luncheon speaker excelled. The contents of his speech were fully covered. The resolutions, passed on Saturday, on Monday, January 6, were fully reported in the Arkansas Gazette.

Many friends came for the reception for the Reverend and Mrs.

Cartwright at the Baptist Student Union on Saturday night.

3. On February 17 at the Sam Peck a committee of community leaders planned for the appeal to the business community for financial support - Mr. Worthen, Mr. H. Patterson, Rabbi Sanders, Mr. G. Williams.
4. At the Board meeting, February 13, Mrs. Brewer, President, named the following new committees: Committee on Youth, Committee on Surveys, Membership Policy Committee, Intergroup Committee, program and Project Committee, Committee on Procedures. Mrs. Brewer indicated that these were named in the interest of raising the Council's low rating at SRC, to make more active workers out of members of the Board who must be responsible for directing the work of the staff. Staff members were designated to meet with these several committees.
5. Vernon Jordan, Executive Assistant at SRC, came to Little Rock March 2-5 and took the Bar Examination. He visited with the staff and met a number of genial Arkansas attorneys and other persons. Now that he "knows the ropes" he plans to try again.
6. The Associate Director received a service award from King Solomon's Baptist Church, North Little Rock, March 15. Mayor Laman Presented the awards.

E. Miscellaneous

1. At the request of the Reverend Donald Campbell the Director conferred with Postmaster Sharp, Little Rock, about the Gordon Winrod anti-Semetic newsletter. The Postmaster sent the material submitted to the Postal Inspector.
2. A protest letter was sent at the direction of the Board to Holiday Inn, Memphis, calling attention to the dangers to the public peace involved by the re-segregation of the inns at Pine Bluff, Fort Smith and Fayetteville. The letter has not been acknowledged.
3. Mr. Ralph Creger of Little Rock, who with his son at Central High wrote a successful little book, This Is What We Found, on Christianity and racial segregation, will have a book published this Spring pursuing further a Southern Baptist's views of the Bible and racial injustice.

'FRIENDSHIP'

Group From Little Rock Visiting in Des Moines

By Jane Boulware

"Operation Friendship" it might be called, an adventure in interracial hospitality going on this weekend in Des Moines.

It involves 26 boys and girls from Little Rock, Ark.—white and Negro—and five adult chaperons who came to Des Moines Friday in a chartered bus at the invitation of 14 Iowa churches.

The Little Rock visitors are guests in homes of church members during the weekend. They will leave on the return trip to Little Rock at 1:30 p. m. Sunday.

Each of the participating churches—12 in Des Moines, one in Pella and one in Mason City—is contributing $50 to pay the transportation expenses of the guests from Little Rock.

The churches that contributed $50 each and are providing housing and meals for the guests are: First Baptist, Plymouth Congregational, Central Presbyterian, St. John's Lutheran, Corinthian Baptist, Union Baptist, Westminster United Presbyterian, Highland Park Christian, Indianola Heights Christian, Grace Methodist, Glen Echo Christian, and East Side Christian and Missionary Alliance, all in Des Moines; First Baptist

Seriously Hurt in Crash

A Des Moines man was injured severely about 1:45 a. m. Saturday when the car he was driving struck the rear of a gasoline transport on S. E. Thirtieth street about a block north of Vandalia road.

John Albert Wilson, 44, of 5408 S. W. Third st., suffered head lacerations and possible internal injuries when his auto struck the rear of a Ruan Transport Corp. truck driven by Donald F. Atkinson of near Norwalk.

Wilson was taken to Broadlawns Polk County Hospital and later transferred to Veterans Hospital, where his condition was described as good.

Police said Atkinson told them the transport stopped for a railroad crossing and then started again and was going about 20 or 25 miles an hour, when the accident occurred.

Wilson told police that he was going north and didn't see the truck until he was about 30 feet away from it. He said he was driving about 30 miles an hour at the time.

No charges were filed.

in Pella; and Mount Zion Baptist in Mason City.

Two others in Des Moines, Forest Avenue Baptist and Temple B'nai Jeshurun, planned programs focused on the visitors, but did not participate financially.

High Schools

Most in the group of visitors are from Little Rock Technical, Hall, Horace Mann and Central High Schools.

In Des Moines, the guests are doing the sort of things with their hosts that any house guest might do. They are attending basketball games, informal parties in homes, church dinners and youth group meetings.

Dialogue and fellowship at the level of family and small informal group meetings is the purpose of the visit.

The trip to Des Moines materialized chiefly through the efforts of James Harris, a teacher at Callanan Junior High School here. Harris preaches on Sundays at Mount Zion Baptist Church, Mason City, as a lay pastor.

Harris and his family made a seven-week tour of southern cities last summer, including Little Rock. He had been thinking of promoting visits by students from a southern city to Des Moines.

Agreed to Assist

In Little Rock, the Arkansas Council of Human Relations agreed to assist him in organizing the tour. Outstanding Negro and white young people from Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches were selected.

Help of Iowa churches was sought and obtained, and the project was successfully launched. Assisting Harris in making arrangements for the weekend was the Rev. John E. Parrott of First Baptist Church in Des Moines.

Harris and his family will have a party Saturday night at their home, 4053 Plainview drive, for some of the Little Rock guests and students from Roosevelt and Tech High Schools and Drake University. Sunday morning he will take two of the Little Rock students to Mason City with him for church services.

Arriving at 9:45 a. m. Friday, the visitors came directly to Callanan Junior High, where they attended an assembly program and visited classes until noon. After luncheon with their hosts, who picked them up at the school, they were given a tour of the state Capitol and Des Moines Tech High School.

'Emphasize Danger in Smoking' run to "stronger controls over student smoking."

Johnson said he has not discussed student smoking with members of the State Board of Public Instruction, but plans to do so.

Heeren said any future educational program would include material from national associations, such as those dealing with cancer, heart diseases and tuberculosis.

"Pressed"

"But," warned Heeren, "it takes a lot of plotting, planning and money to work these things into a regular curriculum. And most of us are pressed for time and money."

Conn said the problem facing most school boards is that any ban against smoking extending beyond the school grounds "runs against the sensitivity of the outside citizenry."

In other words, he said, many parents object to school boards setting down rules for rearing their children

But Conn said that because of the recent report linking smoking and lung cancer and other diseases, "school boards would do well to consider increased emphasis on personal health and smoking."

Private School Rejects Negroes

NEW ORLEANS, LA. (AP) — The possibility of a court test loomed Saturday for Louisiana's grant - in - aid system — the state's last-ditch effort to preserve school segregation.

Three Negro children made and unsuccessful attempt Friday to enroll at one of the all-white private schools where pupils receive state aid.

Officials of the Ninth Ward Elementary School turned the three children away, saying the head of the school was out of town.

A. P. Tureaud, sr., chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negro children would try again and hinted at a court test for the grant-in-aid program if the private school refuses to admit them.

CONFIDENTIAL

QUARTERLY REPORT to SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
December, January, February
1963 - 1964

We take pleasure in announcing a new Council, the Athens Council on Human Relations. The fourth meeting will be held April 13th. Mr. Jack May is nominated as chairman. The group has started on a substantial program, has had about 40 in attendance at the meetings.

Our membership figure does not reflect the new group since dues have not been turned in to date. The membership has reached the 1133 mark this quarter.

Several other new towns seem ready for organizational efforts. LaGrange has had a first meeting and voted to start an organization. We have made visits to Gainesville and Carrollton. We have spoken to integrated meetings in Tallapoosa and Statesboro. These were firsts in these towns. It will take time and persuasion to allay fears and to build established Councils. We have had requests from individuals in Fitzgerald, Jesup and Swainsboro. Many people are ready if we had organizers who could travel the state. Pauley alone traveled 4534 miles since Christmas. Organizing new groups must not consume time that must be spent in guiding and promoting useful programs in existing councils. There is a real need for added budget for professional help in program.

During the last five (5) months the Columbus Council has shown the greatest percentage of growth, practically doubling its membership. This is fine. Many more people in this city will be needed to plan a wise program to promote change in this town. This can easily be a real trouble spot in the near future.

The Rome Council has experienced much harassment, and have weathered the storm. Lunch counters are still closed in spite of another sit-in. Negroes are attending the formerly white trade school.

Several Councils, Macon, Columbus and Augusta, are beginning to work toward preparing their towns for school desegregation next fall. Macon and Augusta are organizing citizens committees. Gainesville will probably desegregate voluntarily. No work, to our knowledge is being done in Albany to prepare anyone for school desegregation. This could be the scene of Georgia's first closed school.

Desegregation of restaurants and motels seems to be at a standstill. Lunch counters are open in most of the larger towns but the restaurants are still closed except for a few in Atlanta, Savannah and Brunswick. The feeling at the moment seems to be -- "We'll wait and see what Congress does with the Civil Rights Bill". We are also working on this problem -- not waiting to see, but helping communities to plan how to accept the law and implement it.

Mr. Holmes has great hope that this summer will see the end of state park segregation. The Jekyll court case has been heard but no decision rendered.

The Brunswick Council has been suffering from bad radio publicity over WMOG, one of the Johnny Reb radio stations. We had filed complaints to the Federal Communications Commission concerning the station, specifically the word "nigger" being used on the air. It is time for the license to be renewed. The Federal Communications Commission has put the station on probation. This has not made Mr. Allan Woodall happy. Council members are showing courage under the attacks.

We cooperated in a week-end Conference "Better Life for Georgia Farmers", under the leadership of the Sharecroppers Fund. The whole field of farm programs and rural area problems is new to our staff. We hope that some cooperative plan can be worked out so Georgia might have the benefit of a staff person to guide the work of our councils and to reach out into rural Georgia. Perhaps of all the discrimination in the state, that to the farmer has been the greatest. With new federal programs, new emphasis on poverty, we must find ways to meet the challenge.

We cooperated with an Atlanta Student Conference on Race and Religion; spoke at the request of Americus women at the state meeting of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs in Macon.

The spring conference at Augusta March 20, 21 was great success. About 400 people attended about equally divided between South Carolina and Georgia. The work shops were good, the speakers fine. The general atmosphere was great. It meant much to all to walk in the front door of the Richmond Hotel. Thirteen Georgia towns were represented. It was a costly conference financially. If our members are going to enjoy first class hotel service we will have to under write conferences to a greater extent than in the past. We do not want to limit the attendance to those conference goers who can afford the luxury and omit the hard workers in the local groups who cannot pay the price and need the information and inspiration.

We have published the "Albany, Georgia, Police State?". This we hope will be helpful as an educational piece in South Georgia.

Mr. Holmes continues to work with Breadbasket. Mrs. Pauley worked closely in Atlanta with a group of ladies from different organizations in seeking some way of coordinating and stimulating the work of many groups in Civil Rights. "Partners for Progress" has been organized and is proving to be a positive force in the community.

We are planning and working on a spring campaign for new members and for finances. This will be the first large effort in mailing that we have attempted for about 18 months. We are in hopes that it will be successful.

Last year when the executive committee decided to put major emphasis in South Georgia and particularly Southwest Georgia, we realized we would not have the rapid increase of membership. But we believe the decision was sound. When attending a Woman's Club convention in Macon, women from Americus and Albany told of the deep appreciation for the efforts of the Council in this area. Our presence seemed to have meaning even though we have no positive gains to report. At Christmas we helped the Albany Movement send a Christmas letter to 1000 whites. This may have encouraged the Albany Movement more than it touched the hearts of the whites. But who knows? The Albany Council is suffering from the loss of white members, almost every one has moved from town. The remaining white people seem to be more defensive than ever. Recently the General at the Marine Base who had appointed a biracial committee has been transferred. Every positive move seems to meet the same end.

We have kept in touch with the peace walkers (members of the Committee for Non-Violent Action) during the months they have been in Georgia. They are now in Florida. We have sought to find the truth concerning their activities and their treatment by the police so we could answer correctly the many inquiries from over the country concerning them. We have tried to help them have the freedom to walk through the state and give out their information.

Mrs. Pauley made her third trip to New York to try to raise our budget. The financial report is attached. Our membership, our budget, and our program have expanded, but not nearly fast enough. We need more of everything to even begin to get the results that should be expected of an organization such as ours. Many white people are coming out of their dream world, many Negroes are stirring with dissatisfaction and the desire to move. The political climate is changing. Now is the time for a greatly increased program. To do this our immediate needs are: office equipment; added clerical staff; funds to employ the services of professional persons for specific program activities.

Please give us advice and criticism.

Mr. Ralph McGill, Publisher

Dear Mr. McGill:

When you were speaking at Vanderbilt University Divinity School on March 12, I asked you about the FEPC provisions in the Federal Civil Rights bill and we discussed this a bit more during lunch. In comparison with some of the other sections it did not seem so important. Last week I was in rural West Tennessee, and from my interview there, I have come to believe that the fair employment provisions of the civil rights bill are of prime importance in the quest for full citizenship rights.

My visit to Hardeman County (population 21,517) was made at the request of an informal Negro civil rights group who are seeking employment for Negroes. Hardeman County is part of the old cotton economy of West Tennessee, and the county seat, Bolivar, shows evidence of its former affluence. The county courthouse is a masterpiece of ante-bellum architecture, and there are beautiful old Georgian homes still handsomely maintained in Bolivar and the surrounding area. Several years ago, Hardeman County floated a bond issue to build factories and encourage the entrance of industry. There are now 1000 persons employed in the four factories I visited which have been established in the county in recent years. The quest for industry continues, and unemployment in the county remains a problem, but it is more severe for Negroes than whites.

DeSota Metals in Bolivar now employs about 675 persons, all white. They have had "one or two Negroes" in their employ, and are "thinking about how they can include some additional ones - perhaps next fall, or sometime in the future." This factory, a tool and die works, has been in the community less than two years. Except for the top jobs, they use entirely unskilled labor, with on-the-job training. Basic literacy and some manual dexterity is required. The initial screening of applicants is done by the State Employment Service, but the employment selection is made by the company. Negroes referred by the Service are not hired. A new garment factory, making men's pants is just beginning. It will employ mostly women, but plans to use no Negroes, although they have a large group of applications from Negroes. They believe that the white women will "walk off the job" if they take Negroes. They proudly note that they have a male Negro janitor, and two other Negroes in maintenance. A tannery run by International Shoe Company has about 60 Negro men working in the dirtiest process (on hides) but refuses to upgrade. Another production line firm employs many women, but will not consider using Negro women, "because we just don't think it would work to try to mix them in."

It is true that the factories are getting no encouragement from the county officials to change their policies. Officials are anxious not to upset the industries, and the industries feel that they are going along with the community's wishes. Everybody is caught in a vicious circle. The county judge thinks the Negroes ought to be given some of the jobs, but declares that he can't do anything about it. Then he falls back on all of the old cliches: Negroes don't want to work; they spend their money for liquor; they just want integration; everybody is happy here except for some of the "radical Negroes."

With the increase of industry, the plight of the Negro citizens becomes worse. Many small farmers have put their cotton acreage in the soil bank, and entered the factories. Negro unemployment increases. To the plea of Negro leadership for the Negro high school students to remain in school in order to be better trained for jobs, the response is, "What jobs?".

One of the intelligent young Negro leaders remarked, "I know about all of the changes that have come in Memphis. I've heard about the new opportunities there. But I don't live in Memphis; I live in Bolivar, and none of those things is happening here." She's right. There have been no inroads in the rural counties. It seems to me that we must have the FEPC part of the Civil Rights bill in order to gain any access to economic independence for Negroes who reside outside of the urban centers.

The importance of Title VII has evidently been recognized by the segregationists. At least I heard more mis-information on this section, devoutly believed by whites, than on any other. Not one of the persons repeating these fantasies had read the bill, but had been told that it prohibited dismissal of any Negro employee, and required quota employment. If my experience is generally true in small Southern towns, then I believe we need to redouble our efforts to protect Title VII against emasculating amendments.

We are looking forward to your return to the Vanderbilt campus this spring. We are genuinely appreciative of your columns which appear in The Nashville Tennessean, and ~~increases~~ have our eagerness to hear you whenever you are in Nashville.

Sincerely yours,

Katherine Jones

April 10, 1964

Mr. Paul Anthony, Field Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Paul:

Seems as if we have really been neglecting you. We haven't meant to, but as usual our schedule is far too heavy for staff of two. If it weren't for faithful members and volunteers, we'd be out of business.

I am enclosing copies of our last three financial statements. Our March 31, 1964 balance looks mighty good and is, but we still have some large bills on the Dr. Ralph Bunche meeting to take care of. As of today, April 10, 1964, our balance is $2,711.50. This is much better than the balance we showed of $12.67 on December 31, 1963.

For your information, I am enclosing some materials from the Ralph Bunche meeting, including notes from the Evaluation. The last piece of material "Houston Welcomes... Dr. Ralph Bunche" was distributed by the pickets. I have not attempted to include nearly all of the publicity, etc. Mrs. Vincent Fromen, a new member, handled the publicity and did a super job. She came into our membership following the Housing Conference.

Also, have enclosed a Review of Reports as Listed on the Agenda which was distributed to our Board Members at their last meeting.

On an attached sheet, I am listing activities day by day and as usual I am probably leaving several off. Our next activity is the Senior High Workshop. We had an excellent briefing session last night with twenty persons present. Mr. Ted Freedman, ADL, was in charge of this session for us and did an excellent job. We have had numerous other appointments with individuals and conferences with two or three persons.

We have twelve billboards up over town which are very attractive titled, "BE COLOR BLIND -HIRE THE BEST MAN" They were designed by a member of our Mass Communications committee. When we get a copy of the large poster, we will send you one. We hope to get it on TV in the very near future.

Changes - Methodist Hospital now has Negro physician on staff and has desegregated patient services. Memorial Baptist Hospital has desegregated services. City of Houston, under a new administration, has removed racial desegregation from all employment records and has employed a Negro attorney and a Negro lady as secretary and is seeking other Negro applicants. (see copy of news items, I have attached). Rice University has broken the will of the founder and is now open for Negro students to enroll. Rice and University of Houston both have employed Negroes in formerly all-white jobs. The school status remains unchanged with 7/10 of 1% of the eligible Negro students enrolled in formerly all white schools. CK's note: Houston city attorney recently stated that the local chapter of the NAACP was doing the best job in Houston of keeping down trouble. With 7/10 of 1% defacto desegregation things are mighty peaceful. Us Houstonians just don't want much! New job opportunities for Negroes are opening all the time. Humble Oil and Refining Company has just recently employed a man in the Production Research Dept--that is a Negro man and a "truck" drive(Negro) This latter employee has sales responsibilities. We are establishing good relations with many personnel managers in many companies.

Have you done any more surveys on changing conditions in the south and if so, please forward us copies and if none have been made recently, we would certainly encourage you to do so.

Today we received our copy of Ten Years of Prelude by Benjamin Muse with the compliments of SRC and The Viking Press. We are most grateful for this generous gift and know it will be most helpful and intend to recommend it highly.

We would surely like to see you over this way soon, Paul. When can we expect you?

Most sincerely,

Ethel

REVIEW OF REPORTS AS
LISTED ON AGENDA

Membership Campaign- The total amount pledged in the Membership Campaign was $10,969. This was toward a goal of $27,400. Although the campaign was designed to be completed the Big Gifts Division ($100.00 or more) did not complete its canvas and is continuing solicitation. According to our anticipated needs, $15,000.00 additional must be raised this year to continue our present operations.

A permanent Budget and Finance Committee has been appointed to oversea the entire financial operations of the Council. One of the items to be considered by this committee is the possible readjustment of membership fees. This committee, composed of at least Five members and a Chairman who is to be a member of the Board of Directors.

Battaglia Project - Dr. Mary Ellen Goodman and Mr. Kelly met with Mr. John Wildenthal, City Attorney for the City of Houston and Mr. Ed Cazares, first Assistant and reviewed the status of the project. Strong support for our request was given by Mr. Wildenthal. This proposal will be brought before the City Council as soon as Mr. Kelly can assure enough support from the various Councilmen to assure passage. This should be done within the next two weeks.

Racial Harmony Communications Project - Mr. Bob Dannenbaum, of the advertising firm of Goodwin, Dannenbaum, Littman and Wingfield, Inc. has proposed a study to determine if the mass communications media of our community could be used to influence the people of Houston against prejudice and to act as a pilot project for other communities. The project group is composed of the HCHR as sponsoring group, a Negro Rights leader (Mr. Asbury Butler), a Social Scientist (Dr. Rupert Koeninger) and a Marketing Counselor (Mr. Dannenbaum). The Executive Committee has approved the participation of the Council in the project.

The first phase of the project will be to discover the opinion and attitude of the people of Houston toward Negroes and then to devise a communications program to influence this opinion toward facts and truth. The project will be financed through foundation funds to be secured by the HCHR.

Committee on Independent Study - This Committee under the leadership of Mrs. Besselle Attwell is designed to increase the academic performance of selected students through a tutoring relationship with college students and other adults interested in voluhteering such services. The committee has developed a screening process for both the students and the tutors and now has the first pilot project under way.

Employment Meetings - The HCHR has been co-sponsor for two meetings of persons interested in the employment picture in Houston. Other sponsors have been the Texas Employment Commission and Texas S.U. The last of these two meetings was attended by 69 persons representing various employers and sponsoring organization members. Items of discussion were: Available Labor Market Selection Factors, Testing and Adjustment of the working environment. Under the direction of Dr. B. A. Turner, Chairman of the Employment Committee of the HCHR, these meetings have opened communications between many persons concerned with the problems involved in hiring minorities in jobs which have formally been closed to them. Another gathering of these persons and others interested will be held in the next few weeks at the request of the last group present.

Dr. Ralph Bunche Meeting - Mr. Adolph Susholtz has completed an excellent meeting for the HCHR to present Dr. Bunche. As of last Tuesday, all tickets have been sold and many persons have been turned away. Included as honored guests for the evening are the Presidents of the five Universities in Houston, Mr. Dick French, Secretary of the Houston Chamber of Commerce, Mr. John de Menil, Mr. Palmer Hutcheson, and Mayor Louis Welch who will present a key to the city to Dr. Bunche.

Housing Committee - Reports of the Housing Conference have been mailed to you in the last newsletter but two further reports may be of interest. First, the Committee will sponsor the Bus Tour for any group in the city interested. The cost will be $50.00 and the Council will take care of all arrangements. Second, there has been established a sub-committee to begin working in the area of rehabilitating depressed or grey areas of our city. They are looking for a small project which could serve as a demonstration area.

Negro Girl To Take First Clerical Job at City Hall

Miss Carolyn White will become the first Negro ever employed in a clerical job at the Houston City Hall when she goes to work Tuesday as junior clerk in the legal department.

Hiram T. Downard, the Civil Service director, also announced the employment of a $9,000-a-year office manager in the city water division.

HE IS James R. Scanlon, 40 University of Tennessee graduate, most recently connected with a Florida gas company as an accounts supervisor and staff auditor.

Downard said Scanlon is an experienced data processing programmer — a qualification necessary to the water division, where a new data processing system will be put into operation.

Miss White, 3635 Gulf Freeway, is a 19-year-old Houston native. She was graduated from Booker T. Washington High School in 1961, attended Saint Phillips College in San Antonio and the University of Houston.

Downard said the city's application forms for Civil Service jobs no longer require racial identification.

MISS WHITE is at least the third Negro offered a clerical job in recent months at the City Hall. A Negro architect turned down the offer of a job as a city draftsman recently because it paid about $200-a-month less than his present salary.

Also, a young woman who qualified for a clerical job during Former Mayor Lewis Cutrer's administration, declined a city offer because she got a better job with an oil company.

City Drops 'Race' On Applications

The city of Houston has dropped the "race" question from its employe applications for the first time.

The action was taken two weeks ago on orders of newly-appointed Civil Service Director Hiram T. Downard. He said:

He said the city has many Negro civil service employes working already. Most of them are police officers, warrant officers, and junior clerks.

He said he thought there were several Negro employment applications now being processed.

Mr. Downard said he saw no political implications in the change of the application form.

Since it is sometimes hard for laymen to understand extensive financial reports, let me explain that for all budgetary purposes the following should be understood in regard to the General Fund - Exhibit B:

The cash Balance as of December 1963 of $1,936.88 can be misleading unless you understand -

$1,483.22 was received in December, 1963 for 1964 quotas, AND, $1,000.00 was a gift for an additional staff person which was not a budgeted item. This means that we began the year (1964) with a $546.34 defecit. However, since we began 1963 with a defecit of $483.68 which was taken care of by the 1963 budget, we came within $52.66 of meeting our over-all 1963 budget.

Exhibit D: Receipts from William C. Whitney Foundation shows $4,500.00. This should have shown receipts from William C. Whitney Foundation $3,500.00 and receipts from National Methodist Church $1,000.00.

AUDITOR'S REPORT

VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

December 31, 1963

RUTH C. HARRIS
CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT

RUTH C. HARRIS
Certified Public Accountant

2816 Edgewood Avenue
Richmond, Virginia

To the Board of Directors
Virginia Council on Human Relations
17 East Cary Street
Richmond, Virginia

Gentlemen:

I have audited the cash receipts and disbursements records of the Virginia Council on Human Relations for the year ended December 31, 1963, and submit herewith my report consisting of comments and a statement of receipts and disbursements with related exhibits and schedules as follows:

EXHIBIT A - Statement of Cash Receipts and Disbursements
Exhibit B - Statement of Receipts and Disbursements - General Fund Schedule B-1 Memberships and Contributions
Schedule B-2 Salaries
Schedule B-3 Office Equipment Rentals and Purchases
Schedule B-4 Miscellaneous Expenditures
Exhibit C - Statement of Receipts and Disbursements - Field Fund
Schedule C-1 Personal Services
Schedule C-2 Fixed Asset Additions
Schedule C-3 Fixed Charges
Schedule C-4 Miscellaneous
Exhibit D - Statement of Receipts and Disbursements - Whitney Fund
Schedule D-1 Salaries
Exhibit E - Statement of Receipts and Disbursements - Special Prince Edward Project Fund

My examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as I considered necessary in the circumstances.

It has been the practice to handle all transactions from a single fund and to show all receipts and disbursements in the statements. However, beginning in 1963 transactions are accounted for by funds. The statements reflect only the net effect of non-budgeted items in the general fund. (Total recorded receipts and disbursements are reconciled with statement figures in the comments.)

In my opinion, the accompanying statement of cash receipts and disbursements, together with comments, presents fairly the recorded cash transactions of the Virginia Council on Human Relations for the year ended December 31, 1963 on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year, except as stated in the immediately preceding paragraph.

Yours very truly,

Ruth C. Harris, CPA

Re: Quarterly Report for Jan.-March, 1964 (Duplicate copies sent)

Highlights of the Quarter:

1. Lawyers Consultation, January 11, at Executive Motor Hotel, Richmond. Enclosed you will find a report in part. Also, we are now preparing excerps from speeches given during the day and these will be compiled along with copies of speeches which we have reprinted in full for distribution. This was a great day in the life and history of VCHR.

2. Employed Henry Caravati as Director of Development - Henry began work on January 6, and has developed the following methods for fund-raising. A. Meetings with small groups of business men where an educational approach is made with good results concerning the over-all work of VCHR. B. Compiling a list of key industrial leaders who will be solicitated personally. C. Compiling a list of Virginia Foundations who will be approached personally. D. Proposed plan for close co-operation with the Military leadership within Virginia, which includes a point asking for contributions from military personnel on a voluntary basis. This plan has been approved by McNamara and a directive will go out to all Commanding Officers instructing them to work closely with VCHR. New World Foundation has given us a grant of $5,000 once we have in hand $6,000 for this project. We have now reached our quota and a report to New World Foundation has gone out.

3. New Councils were organized in Franklin, with a College Council in Richmond. Co-operating groups were organized in Warrenton, Ashland and Lancester County. We also received invitations to come to Manassas and Covington during the next month to assist in organising groups there. Miss Mary Finch has done an excellent job in this field.

4. I was able to continue my presiding at negotiations between the white power structure and Negro leaders and we have seen progress in Hotels, Motels, Restaurants and Theatres across the State.

5. We got out a new Brochure which tells VCHR's story. This was the first production in color done on our printing press in the office, and we are proud of it.

OTHER ACTIVITIES:

I made speaking engagements at the following places for the first time: Amelia St. P.T.A., Richmond; Forty persons in Warrenton, Virginia who make up our council there; Lancaster County Council; Ginter Park Women's Club, Richmond; Catholic Inter-racial Conference, Richmond; Madison College, Harrisonburg; NAACP group, Amelia; Saint Phillips Episcopal Church, Richmond; Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, Richmond; Five Sundays to Quaker-Friends' Church, Richmond; Astoria Club, Richmond; and to appear on a panel at the Richmond Forum.

OFFICERS Dr. Aubrey N. Brown, Jr., President Mr. W. R. Walker, First Vice-President Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss, Dr. E. B. Henderson, The Rt. Rev. William H. Marmion, Vice-Presidents

Dr. Harry Roberts, Secretary Dr. J. Rupert Picott, Treasurer

At the meeting of the VCHR Board of Directors on March 21, it was voted to suspend the work of VEJOB temporarily until we could re-think our over-all program. This became necessary for the following reasons: 1. VEJOB was originally designed to carry itself financially - in part by the second year, and wholly after three years. It has not brought in any money at this stage nor does it look as if it will under the present structure. 2. We needed to change personnel, since the Board became convinced that the Director had neither the inititiave nor the salesmanship ability to make the project work under its present structure. 3. We need to re-structure our work so as to incorporate any services we offer to employers under VCHR's total program and move away from sub-structures such as VEJOB which became confusing to the general public since VEJOB is structured as a separate entity yet is listed as being affiliated with VCHR. The Field Foundation agreed completely for us to suspend VEJOB temporarily until we could restructure our work. If at that time we find that we can re-activate a service to employers, we shall hire a staff person of VCHR for that purpose and continue to use the money granted from Field Foundation. If we find a service to employers to be something we feel we should not offer, then we will refund the balance of the grant. Mr. Shinert will be with us until May 31, and by July we expect to have completed our study and to have made recommendations both to VCHR's Board of Directors and to Field Foundation sufficient to know just what we will offer as a service to employers.

Personally, I feel that we have in Henry Caravati, a man with experience and know how to deal and work with industrial and business men. I feel that through Caravati's contacts, through our local council's Committees on Employment, through our Board and Staff personnel, that we can hold the ground we have gained through VEJOB until such time as we can re-establish some specific services to employers. I personally feel that we will lose nothing practically, but only in image perhaps, in making these structural changes in VEJOB at this time.

Plans have been made, and one meeting held, for a Consultation of Business leaders sponsored by VCHR. Seven Richmond business men met in VCHR's office on Friday, April 3, to discuss plans for this consultation. These men were all in agreement on the proposal that a consultation be held. However, it was the concensus of the group that the time of the meeting should be after the passage of the Civil Rights Bill, and perhaps after the National political conventions of this Summer. In the meantime the group agreed to serve as a planning committee to move toward a Fall meeting aimed at top business executives and/or heads of large companies since these are the policy makers - the opinion makers. The next meeting of the group is planned for around the first of May.

VCHR's Board of Directors voted to allow Heslip Lee to serve as a coordinator for the model City of Richmond for SRC's effort at preparing for the implementation of Title II of the Civil Rights Bill, and to also authorize VCHR local councils participate as a state agency for the same.

The Board of Directors also approved Heslip Lee's proposals of concentrating on one major City in Virginia for Membership campaigns; concentrate on one City on a concerted effort to build up the total local council by state staff special assistance; and to allow the state staff the privilege of concentration on Danville for an extended period by keeping some staff person there continuously for several weeks or months.

NEWS from

THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

17 EAST CARY STREET RICHMOND 19, VIRGINIA MIlton 9-0872

MARCH 1964 Heslip Lee, Executive Director

DOUBLE OUR MEMBERSHIP IS THE GOAL OF VCHR FOR 1964

Reaching people for commitment and active participation in the work of VCHR is the main business of our organization. Our strength lies in this accomplishment - for only when people are actively engaged in the work of improving human relations will the atmosphere and climate of Virginia become capable for all the citizens of the Commonwealth to realize the legitimate aspirations which are truly ours.

EACH LOCAL COUNCIL SHOULD:

1. Select a Membership Committee.

2. Set a goal of DOUBLE OUR MEMBERSHIP IN 1964.

3. Develop a plan for reaching this goal and follow through with this plan.

INCREASED MEMBERSHIP WILL:

1. Bring in new ideas and enlarged programs to local councils.

2. Provide broader local council services through additional leadership and committee personnel.

3. Enlarge the atmosphere and climate for better human relations throughout the state.

4. Increase financial support from Foundations which require that we show an increase in membership and contributions from Virginians.

LOCAL COUNCILS ALREADY ARE AT WORK:

1. Alexandria Council reports an all-time high of 258 members.

2. Richmond-Petersburg Council has set goal of 1500 members in 1964. Fifty new members have been signed up by Joe Bright, Membership Chm. in two mos.

DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT ADDED TO VCHR STAFF

A special committee was appointed at the VCHR Annual Meeting in December to pursue plans for the employment of an additional staff person to be called "Director of Development". The New World Foundation approved a grant to VCHR of $5,000 to be given as soon as VCHR had raised $6,000 for this project.

Eighteen people have given to date $3,705 toward VCHR's $6,000 goal. With this encouragement, Henry L. Caravati, a retired business man, has been employed as "Director of Development". Mr. Carivati is charged with the responsibility of raising sufficient funds with which to carry out our expanded program for 1964.

Anyone willing to have their gift count double, should make their contribution toward the remaining $2,295 immediately so the New World Foundation Grant of $5,000 may be realized.

ONE HUNDRED LAWYERS ATTEND VCHR'S CONSULTATION OF OPINION MAKERS

A Consultation of Lawyers, sponsored by VCHR, was held on Saturday, January 11, at the Executive Motor Hotel, Richmond, with one hundred in attendance. Invitations to the meeting were extended by F.D.G. Ribble, Dean of the Univ. of Va. Law School; Dudley Woodbridge, Dean of William and Mary Law School; Armistead Boothe, Virginia State Senator and Robert R. Merhige, President of Richmond Bar Association.

Nicholas Katzenbach, Deputy U.S. Attorney General, Washington, D. C. was the luncheon speaker. The program incuded three panel discussions as follows:

"Respect for Law and Order and Our Judicial System" led by Harry L. Cohn, Attorney. Panelists included: Dean F.D.G. Ribble, S.W. Tucker, Attorney, and A.J.G. Priest, Univ. of Virginia Law Professor.

"Bi-Racial Commissions" led by Robert B. Millman, Attorney. Panelists included: W. O. Conrad, General Superintendent, N. C. Western Electric Co., and Attorneys Robert H. Cooley and Percy L. Wall.

"The Bar and the Community" led by Richard M. Ballard, Jr., Attorney. Panelists were: Lewis T. Booker, Attorney, and Howard Rogerson, Acting Staff Director of the the United States Commission on Civil Rights.

Dr. Aubrey N. Brown, Jr., President of VCHR's Board of Directors, welcomed the lawyers and program participants and stated that there would be other such consultations scheduled for the future. Heslip Lee, VCHR Executive Director, read letters of congratulations and regrets at their being unable to attend from many areas of the state, including Governor Albertis Harrison and two former Presidents of the American Bar Association.

At the close of the day's program, the group adopted a resolution which called for lawyers within Virginia to: (1) offer their services in their communities to bring about better communication and understanding among all races (2) use their influence in bettering, on a nondiscriminatory basis, educational and economic opportunities for minority groups (3) elimination of discrimination within the legal profession, and (4) carry out the duties of the legal profession with respect to defendants in locally unpopular causes.

VCHR SPONSORED A CONSULTAION OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES

Following a day-long session of missionaries from all denominations being invited to participate, THIRTY-FIVE missionaries signed a resolution which called for the following: That missionaries - keep informed on race relations. . .participate in social changes. . .speak out for good race relations in this country...urge denominational Boards to appoint Negro Missionaries...and that missionaries make known their willingness to participate as a part of their work assignment in emergency measures that seek to deal with the present racial crisis.

PRESIDENT'S PARAGRAPHS

REAL SUPPORT: All of us should be filled with gratitude and encouragement at the exceptional response to VCHR's challenging program. Before we received word of the $5,000.00 grant from the New World Foundation, we had seen a great demonstration by a number of our leaders who agreed to underwrite by loans the $6,000.00 necessary to assure us the financial security to employ the "Director of Development". Then, when the New World Foundation made the grant conditional on our having in hand $6,000.00 before the $5,000.00 is given, we have seen eighteen people give $3,705.00 to inaugurate this new phase of our work which can lead us into tremendous opportunities. To all of these we should be very grateful and to those of you who will help us reach the $6,000.00 goal we are also extremely grateful.

VERY IMPORTANT ITEM - Information Service (Dec. 7, 1963) focusing on the current struggle. (National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York 10027, 20¢ each) Lead article: "The Businessman and the Negro", based on the Silberman feature in the September issue of Fortune, to be included in his forthcoming book, Crisis In Black and White (Random House)

WORHTY OF NOTE: In South Orange, N. J., 80 Negro couples and 80 white couples have exchanged visits in each others' homes, in many cases with neighbors and other friends invited in to expand the opportunity of acquaintance. More information can be provided from this office if it is desired.

YOU ASKED FOR IT: So many of you requested the list of people cited in my remarks at our annual meeting who have made outstanding contributions to the field of better human relations--people who at personal loss, risk of danger, and for the most part, outside the compass of the work they are being paid to do--until I list these below:

NEW VCHR & VEJOB BROCHURES With a completely new format, the new VCHR Brochures will be available March 10. This will be an eight page booklet done on velvet white paper in blue and green ink, and will tell the entire story of VCHR's work. VEJOB has just produced an attractive eight page Phamphlet which spells out the work of this division of VCHR. Both of these were done in the State Office on our off-set printing machine.

LOCAL COUNCIL SERVICE May we remind local councils once again that we shall be happy to do your letterheads, envelopes, and program brochures if you will put together the materials. We shall only charge you for the actual cost to us, thus saving you considerable cost. We have recently done a brochure for Mercer-Tazewell County Council, letterhead for Norfolk Council and letterhead and envelope return for Montgomery County Council.

PROSPECTIVE LOCAL COUNCILS Five new local councils are in the making. Local groups are meeting regularly in Warrenton, Lancaster County, Franklin and Ashland. Also Petersburg has held two meetings with the expectation of forming its own council. Until now Petersburg has been a part of the Richmond-Petersburg Council.

MISS MARY FINCH, VCHR STAFF WORKER is anxious to get into any area of the State to establish contacts and develop group discussion for better human relations. We feel that Miss Finch could also be of great help to many local councils in their efforts to DOUBLE YOUR MEMBERSHIP in 1964. We suggest the following procedure be established with the state office: 1. Ask for Miss Finch to come to your area. 2. Have Miss Finch compile a list of prospective members through contacts with community leaders. 3. Mail a letter to the prospective list of members. 4. The State Office would be willing to follow up the local council's letter with both a letter and a brochure. 5. Send a special invitation to prospective members to join you for a local council meeting as your guests. In any event, please take advantage of the dedicated services of Miss Finch.

FINANCIAL GIVING THROUGH LOCAL COUNCILS on the whole is off to a good start for 1964. Where local councils have appointed a financial committee and have followed through with plans and solicitations, responses have been good and in the case of Alexandria Council EXCELLENT. However, some local councils need to develop plans immediately and help us keep pace with the demands being made on VCHR for services by helping us meet our financial budget for 1964 of $30,000.00 - $16,750.00 designated to come from local council memberships and contributions.

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT VCHR:

I. Stuart McElroy, Richmond - I have recently joined the Council on Human Relations because I wanted to become acquainted with the best Negroes in the community and to join with them in the needed programs for bettering our community.

Clifton M. Dunn, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania - While in Virginia I considered it an honor and my good fortune to be associated, even in a small way, with those who are fighting to bring about true brotherhood and Christ-like love to all mankind.

Mrs. T. H. Daniel, Charlottesville - Personally, the council on human relations gives me a place to stand and be counted as supporting what I think is both fair and Christian. I think it holds the best promise of righteous peace for the future.

DR. C. G. Gordon Moss, Dean of Longwood College, Farmville - Of all the organizations working for Human Rights, VCHR is the one, stable, sane foundation rock. Its all-inclusive interests protect it against selfish partisanship.

B. B. Simmons, MSgt. U. S. Army, retired, Petersburg - The Council on Human Relations is one of the best sounding boards in this State for men of good will to solve their racial differences. Pray God that more of us should be a part of this great movement.

EXCELLENT MOVIES ARE AVAILABLE

Two excellent movies may be obtained at no cost, which make good local programs and grand discussions. You may obtain "Lillian Smith of Georgia: A Tribute" by writing, Miss Joan Titus, Time & Life Building, Rockefeller Center, New York 20, N. Y. The other film, "The Other Face of Dixie" may be obtained by writing Mr. Courtney Siceloff, Frogmore, South Carolina.

AN EXCELLENT TO MAKE YOUR MONEY COUNT DOUBLE FOR VCHR!!!!!

Please clip and mail today to: VCHR, 17 East Cary Street - Richmond, Va.

To enable VCHR to reach its goal of $6,000.00, in order that the $5,000.00 grant from The New World Foundation may be received:

I/we make an investment of $_____, enclosed to this expanding work of the Virginia Council on Human Relations. I understand this is over and above any pledge or money which I have made or paid toward VCHR's 1964 regular budget.

Council Offices, 5403 Austin

Present: Adolph O. Susholtz, chairman, G. E. Dodd, Mrs. Frank Freed, George Lloyd, Mrs. E. Pliny Shaw, Dr. Reuben Sheller, Vincent Maggio, Mrs. Thelma Hird, E. J. Golaz, Woodrow Seals, Mrs. Hershel Rich, Miss Verle Rennick, Bill Salman, Quentin Mease, Dr. I. A. Ulert, Judge Miron Love (guest) Charles Kelly, and Mrs. Ethel Dumbauld.

Financial Report to-date - Mrs. Dumbauld reported that receipts total $3,334.00 and expenditures have been $1,238.35, leaving a balance of $2,095.65. There are still some outstanding bills. Travel expense and honorarium have not yet been determined.

Mr. Susholtz commended Mrs. Shaw for getting the idea of bringing Dr. Bunche to Houston about a year ago and the groundwork that she did at that time. The itinerary for the day was reviewed with the group present. (see attached sheet.)

Evaluation - One member said that really this was a victory session. Mrs. Shaw stated that the best move was in asking Mr. Susholtz to chair the Dr. Bunche meeting. Congratulations were expressed to everyone working on making the meeting a success, and especially to Mr. Susholtz and Mrs. Shaw. Also, to Mr. Kelly and Mrs. Dumbauld for "keeping after everyone."

Publicity was outstanding. Mrs. Fromen performed a fantastic job. It was felt by all present that the Chronicle was very lax in their handling of the meeting.

Suggestions for future speakers: Adlai Stevenson, Michael Herrington and Gunnar Myrdal. Other suggestions were made that would come under some other committees responsibility.

It was estimated that about 60% white and 40% Negro were in attendance.

Next steps to be taken:

1) Letter to everyone attending meeting not in our membership and inviting them to become members.
2) Letter to men who could not serve in introducing Dr. Bunche.
3) Letter to group at the dinner at the de Menils.
4) Letter to those at head table inviting into membership
5) Letter to Mr. de Menil.
6) Editors of papers to be contacted requesting editorials.
7) Regarding honorarium for Dr. Bunche--write the Director of protocol at the United Nations if honorarium is customary.
8) Write school board, superintendent, and principals of Houston Schools, setting up an award for essary on, "What Can I As a Young Person Do to Improve Human Relations in Houston?"
9) Appoint a sub-committee to come up with program suggestions for next year.

Adjournment was at 1:45 p.m.

Bunche Lauds UN For Peace Effort

By NOE PEREZ

"The record of the UN over the last 15 years is more remarkable than some people think," Dr Ralph Bunche, UN undersecretary for special political affairs, told some 1,500 persons Wednesday night in a talk sponsored by the Houston Council on Human Relations.

Bunche, Nobel Peace Prize winner in 1950 for his mediation work with Arabs and Jews a year earlier, said the two basic objectives of the UN are to preserve the peace and to advance the well-being of man.

HE ADMITTED the UN has weaknesses and imperfections, but said this was because it is still a young organization, still in the fledgling stage.

"We make progress step by step," he went on.

"We don't have that kind of (peaceful) world today, but there are encouraging signs . . . There is hope and expectation that peace is attainable."

Among successful efforts by the UN in preserving peace, Bunche cited the conflicts of Indonesia and the Dutch, India and Pakistan, and crises in Palestine, Korea, Suez, Lebanon, the Congo, Cuba, Yemen, Panama and Cyprus.

The second objective is a "tremendous task," he said.

"A HIGH proportion of the people of the world live below—or just at—a misery level of subsistence . . . and the gap is widening instead of narrowing," he said.

"If they're not given a horizon of hope . . . it can only spell trouble. People become desperate because of the way they have to live."

Bunche said at the end of World War II, eight million people were living under colonial rule, usually with people of one race being ruled by people of another race, and with no prospects of freedom, and self-government.

Colonialism is seen as a cause of war, he said, and those 8 million persons constituted more than one-third the people of the world, but their number has been reduced tremendously through the work of the UN.

Bunche also cited the UN's work in technical assistance to underprivileged countries—in health, education, agriculture and other fields.

"This is done on a meager basis because the UN has meager funds," he said. "The regular budget this year is $85 Million."

HE SAID THAT generous alumni sometimes swell the budgets of their colleges to much more than the UN's.

The cost of maintaining a UN force, alone, he said, is $19 Million a year. The Congo operation, while it lasted, cost about $10 Million a month.

"The cost to each American citizen to support the UN is 52 cents per year," Bunche said. "To support all the international organizations of the world, the overall cost would be $1.28 per year per citizen."

The Cold War has eased, he said. There's not as much name-calling and verbal slugging, and even the members of the Communist bloc are telling funny stories, sometimes on themselves.

Actually, there's no such thing as a solid bloc, he said. The Afro-Asians, who represent 58 of the UN's 113 nations, for example, don't vote as a bloc except in questions of discrimination or colonialism.

HE SAID the question is often asked: Wouldn't the UN be better off without the Soviet Union and other Communist nations?

"No, because the UN acts as a bridge between nations which have differences which could become serious and threaten the peace of the world."

The feeling of some is that the veto is being abused, yet the Security Council voted unanimously on two Cyprus issues—to set up a force and to set up a mediator.

Earlier Wednesday, Dr Bunche presented a book to the Houston Public Library in memory of President Kennedy.

The book was symbolic of a $25 donation from Mrs Bela Halpert to the Houston Chapter of the American Association for United Nations, which was turned over to the library.

AAUN OFFICIALS said the money will be used to supplement the library's book collections on the UN.

The presentation was in the Business and Technical Room of the Central Library, 500 McKinney.

Carl F. Stuebing, president of the library board, accepted the book.

Dr Bunche said a few words in praise of the AAUN.

"I am delighted to be in Houston and to visit with the members of AAUN," Bunche said.

THE ASSOCIATION is doing an outstanding job of keeping the public informed about the UN, he said.

In other brief comments, Bunche said:

It's too early to say yet what Red China's chances are of getting into the UN this time around.

The UN is only indirectly involved in the Malaysia-Indonesia dispute, in that Secretary Gen U Thant has been asked to help in the mediations.

AND THE TOP problem before the UN now, as he sees it, is the Greek-Turkish fighting in Cyprus.

The AAUN took the opportunity to announce a new executive board. The members are Mrs David Mendell, president; Mrs Henry Groppe and Dr Hardin Craig, vice presidents; Mrs Arthur Holt, secretary, and Robert Childres, treasurer.

Pickets Fail to Ruffle Bunche; He Criticizes Them and U.N. Critics

BY PAUL HOUSTON
Chronicle Reporter

Dr. Ralph Bunche, a United Nations undersecretary, used the first 15 minutes of a speech here Wednesday night to talk about people who passed out anti-Bunche and anti-U.N. literature.

BUNCHE

Bunche, sponsored by the Houston Council on Human Relations, spoke to an overflow crowd of 2000 in the Rice Hotel.

Two men and a woman, in their mid-20s, had handed out literature in the hotel and outside on Texas Ave.

They refused to identify themselves.

They distributed reprints of the Congressional Record containing anti-U.N. speeches by the late Rep. Usher L. Burdick (R., N.D.) and Rep. James B. Utt (R., Cal.), plus material questioning Bunche's loyalty.

Most of the people who heard Bunche received the literature.

Bunche laughed about what he called his "special welcoming committee."

"Considering the probable source, I feel honored," he said.

What and Why

"I defend very strongly the right of these people or any people to express disagreement of what I believe and stand for.

"But I do feel they should know what they are doing and why they are doing it—which is not always the case."

In good humor, Bunche told about pickets outside the U.N. building in New York who carried placards calling him "a murderer of the Katangese."

(Bunche was a special U.N. envoy to the Congo in 1960.

Just Some Joker

"The placards entranced me," he said. "I asked one picket about the Congo and and Katanga, and he hardly knew where they were. I asked him, 'Who's Bunche?' He said, 'Oh, he's some joker who works across the street.'

"That hurt me!" Bunche laughed.

"I have seen this literature many times. All allegations about my loyalty have been thoroughly investigated by the government.

"There has been no question about my loyalty, and I dismiss the incident tonight by saying I'm very proud of my loyalty to the United States."

Praise for U.N.

Bunche then listed "encouraging signs that the U.N's work will some day secure world peace."

He cited the reduction of hostilities in Indonesia, India and Pakistan, Palestine, Korea, Suez, Lebanon, the Congo, Cuba, Panama, Yemen and Cyprus.

Reply to Critics

Bunche, winner of the 1950 Nobel Peace Prize, then rebutted a series of criticisms against the U.N.

The criticisms and Bunche's answers:

- Regional blocs are a handicap. "They are not a serious problem," he said. "Only the Soviet bloc, with 10 of the 113 member nations, votes solidly consistently."
- The U.N. would be better off without the Communist nations. "The purpose of the U.N.," Bunche said, "is to establish communication between nations in conflict. To have otherwise is to abandon all hope of an international society based on law and collective security."
- The Security Council veto is abused. "Most of Russia's 103 vetoes were on membership questions. The membership issue doesn't exist any more."
- The preponderance of new "immature, irresponsible" members destroys the effectiveness of the U.N. Bunche replied, "As it has turned out these fears are not justified. In the past three years the General Assembly has had it best record of production."

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 83d CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

The Great Conspiracy to Destroy the United States

OF

HON. USHER L. BURDICK

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 28, 1954

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt that there now exists a widespread understanding and agreement made between the agents of this Government and the United Nations and North Atlantic Treaty Organization to build a world government, and to make the United States a part of it, regardless of our Constitution, laws, and traditions. This is to be done in the name of peace, but will result in the total destruction of our liberty. The agents representing the United States may not be deliberately trying to do this treasonable work, but the best that can be said for them is that they are dupes. Some mighty important people who are United States citizens are not only going along with this scheme, but are daily and hourly contributing all their efforts in that direction.

What proof do we have to back up this general statement? The purpose of this speech is to lay this proof before the American people.

First of all, the people of the United States were so completely sick of war after World War II that these schemers found a fertile field to exploit. They appealed to churches, schools, and every other organization they could reach, on the basis that the way to secure peace in the world was to organize a United Nations group, and that through the machinery which they proposed to set up wars could be stopped before they started. It seemed like a plausible idea, and not knowing the sinister purpose behind the move, millions of people supported the suggestion.

The first move was made at San Francisco, where many nations met, drew up a charter, and submitted that charter to the Senate of the United States for approval as a treaty.

This document had none of the earmarks of a treaty, because the Supreme Court of the United States has held in many cases that a treaty is an agreement made between nations, to do or not to do particular things. In the case of the Charter of the United Nations, it was not an agreement between nations. It was an agreement made by the agents of several governments, and there is no contention from any quarter that the United Nations at that time was a nation with which we could make a treaty agreement. The dark forces behind this move knew that the United Nations was not a nation with which we could make a treaty, but intended to make it an integral power at the first opportunity. How these forces for evil planned to make the United Nations a nation is clear now, since they propose at this time to build a world government by simply amending the Charter of the United Nations.

Who were the principal movers at San Francisco for this United Nations Charter? Who wrote the charter, and who had the most to do about shaping its provisions? The answer is that the Russian Communists and Alger Hiss, a representative of our State Department, were the prime movers and schemers in arranging its provisions. That is the same Alger Hiss who was convicted for perjury when he denied sending secret material to the Soviet Union representatives. Its very beginning gave this document a bad odor.

The universal approval of a plan to preserve world peace had not worn off and the facts were yet unknown when the Senate was called upon to approve the United Nations Charter. The sentiment for peace was so strong that only two Senators refused to approve the charter. If the question were to come up now, a great majority would say "No."

If the real purpose of this charter was to outline a method to secure and preserve world peace, why was it necessary in that charter to make an assault upon the Constitution of the United States? Are we not already a peace-loving nation, without having to rely upon the Soviets and Hiss?

Here you see again that world peace was not the object of this scheme at all. The real purpose was to build a world government, controlled by the Communists and their dupes in the United States.

As soon as this charter was approved the courts of the United States began to hear about it. In the Fujii case in California, the Charter of the United Nations was substituted for the laws of the State of California, and that remained so for several months, until a higher court overruled the court that made this finding. It was a precarious situation, depending upon the whim of a court.

Again, in the Steel Seizure case, where the Supreme Court was searching our Constitution for some provision that would uphold the President in his action, the same Charter of the United Nations once more appeared. Failing to find any authority in the Constitution to fortify the President's position, the Chief Justice resorted to one of the most unheard-of things in American history. He produced the Charter of the United Nations as the authority for the seizure and cited its provisions in an effort to support the President's act. Fortunately for the people of the United States, the majority of the Court would not permit this communistic charter to supplant the Constitution of the United States. It was, however, a close call, and abundantly proved the need of the Bricker amendment. No one can ever tell what the next decision might be, although throughout our history God seems always to be on our side; and no matter what the political complexion of the Supreme Court may be, the decisions have upheld the Constitution.

The next assault on the Constitution is found in the Covenant of Human Rights, which has not as yet been presented to the Senate for ratification. The United Nations has amended its first draft several times, and because of the rising tide of objection to what it is doing and planning to do, the latest draft has not come before the Senate.

The subtle and fraudulent work of the United Nations in trying to prepare the people of the United States for the approval of this un-American document ought in itself to condemn its further consideration by the people and their leaders.

To prove to you that its procedure was fraudulent and totally dishonest, I wish to clearly state that the United Nations put out a Declaration of Human Rights, which, upon its face was not objectionable. This declaration was propagandized by the spreading of millions of copies among church people, in the common schools, and in the higher institutions of learning. Every civic organization was also the object of this avalanche of propaganda.

There was a cunningly designed purpose in this. It was necessary to prepare the people for the advent of the Covenant of Human Rights. When the propagandists thought the ground work had been sufficiently laid, the real human rights document appeared. It was and still is called the Covenant of Human Rights, but it is entirely different from the propagandized Declaration of Human Rights. Here in this Covenant of Human Rights the United Nations, among other things, undertakes to do three important things, all of which threaten the Constitution of the United States. It has rewritten what is meant by free speech, a free press, and free religion. The Constitution is not in doubt in defining these three fundamental attributes of a free government. Here is what it says:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

If the provisions of the document called the Covenant of Human Rights are adopted by the Senate please ask yourselves what has become of these precious constitutional rights. Here is what the covenant says about them:

> Article 15, section 3: Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.
> Article 16, section 2: Everyone shall have the right to freedom of expression; this right shall include freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art or through any other media of his choice.
> Section 3: The exercise of the rights provided for in the foregoing paragraph carries with it special duties and responsibilities. It may therefore be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall be such only as are provided by law and are necessary (1) for respect of the rights or reputations of others, (2) for the protection of national security or of public order, or of public health or morals.

When we go so far as to hedge in, restrain and circumvent free speech, then there is no free speech. There will be no free press. There will be no free religion. Does anyone who is acquainted with these facts want to say that the United Nations is not trying to rewrite our Constitution, with the aid and support of Communists and revolutionists? Just why is it necessary to emasculate our Constitution if the only object of the United Nations is world peace? Is not our Constitution and the desire of all the people of this country in favor of peace?

It is necessary to change our Constitution in order to carry out the design and conspiracy to build a world government. Is it not perfectly clear to you now that this was the real purpose of the framers of the United Nations from its very beginning? It ought to be obvious to any fairminded person that it is the deliberate scheme of the United Nations to destroy the Constitution of the United States, and should need no further proof.

But that is not all, as the following steps will disclose. The United Nations has produced another convention, which in time they will ask the Senate to approve. I refer to the Genocide Convention. This is an appealing subject and it has caught in its net a great many good American citizens. As defined by the dictionary, genocide is "the use or a user of deliberate, systematic measures toward the extermination of a racial, political, or cultural group."

The wholesale destruction of a race or group of people for no reason at all except that they are a race or group, is against all principles of humanity, and in this country is a violation of moral and civic law. Is there anything in the Constitution of the United States, or even in the laws of any State of this great Union, that approves such crime? Why is it necessary to change and amend, abrogate and repeal, our own Constitution in order that we shall be authorized to rise up against such a moral and legal crime? The answer is that there is no possible reason for this action—if the purpose of the covenant is to prevent genocide.

This Convention undertakes to further amend the Constitution of the United States and deny the rights of our citizens under the Bill of Rights in another respect. The sixth amendment to the Constitution provides:

> In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

The Genocide Convention provides that a citizen of the United States, who has, in the opinion of the United Nations, libeled or injured the feelings of a race, a group, or any member of a group, shall be subject to trial for violating the covenant. Will the accused be tried here in the United States, where the crime was alleged to have been committed? No. He will be tried wherever the United Nations may decide. Will he be tried under the Constitution and laws of this country, with the safeguards provided by the sixth amendment? No. He will be tried under such laws as the United Nations World Court shall prescribe. Why was it considered necessary to take away from the citizens of this country the protection our Constitution gives them? Are our people engaged, or were they ever engaged in race annihilation?

The real, hidden, and treasonable purpose of this provision was and is to tear down our Constitution and make all citizens, who are entitled to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, subject to the provisions of a world court, which is already being set up to function in this supergovernment—a world government.

Do we need further proof that the real and only purpose of the builders of the United Nations was to fashion a world government and to make our citizens subject to that world government, and to strip from them the protection guaranteed them under the Constitution of the United States?

If this is not treason, then I do not understand the provision of the Constitution defining it. Section 3 of article III of the Constitution says:

> Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.

For fear that there may be some in the United States who are not yet convinced by what I have said so far, I will not rest this case there, but will present further evidence.

The United Nations set up an organization known as UNESCO—United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization—for the purpose of spreading universal learning, which the promoters contended would bring the people of the world more quickly to a mutual understanding than anything else would.

There was no objection to this proposal—at least on the face of it. But it turned out to be the most dangerous, the most dastardly undertaking of all that the United Nations had theretofore contrived. Its purpose was not what its promoters said it was. It was a deliberate plan to create public opinion for the coming world government. The malicious and cowardly element of the enterprise was that it was directed to the schoolchildren of the Nation, where minds are young and impressionable, and it is patterned exactly after the Soviet teaching of the youth of the country.

These schemers knew that the United States has a strong national spirit; they knew that the average American loves his country; they knew he would defend its institutions, which had brought freedom in a new land. The plotters determined that this spirit must be destroyed, or at least minimized. So UNESCO went to work.

The first step was to train teachers at Columbia University, at the expense of the United Nations—principally at the expense of the taxpayers of this country—to teach our children ways by which they could become world citizens, and that a strong national spirit interferes with this world venture. The birthdays of our great leaders, like Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Lincoln were not to be celebrated in honor of these leaders, but the day of celebration should be devoted to propagandizing these children on the benefits of this future world government. They made it exceedingly plain that love for the United States and its institutions prevented our participation in such a world government.

Printed matter, radio and television were used night and day to carry on the cultivation propaganda, and to root out the love of country from these United States. This program is still being carried on, and the worst part of it is that the people who will eventually be stripped of the protection of our Constitution will pay the price of its destruction in taxes. It should now be proven overwhelmingly that the United Nations was organized to destroy the Constitution of the United States. This is all done in the name of world peace—but who wants to substitute world peace for the liberty and freedom we have? Who wants to surrender the sovereignty of this great republic to an organization which has been assiduously at work from its very beginning to abolish our Constitution?

Two very important sessions of the world government advocates have been held in London, and in the proceedings it is made plain that the machinery for world government is already set up in the Charter of the United Nations, and all that is necessary is to make a few amendments to that charter. Many advocates of the United Nations have now come out openly for this world government. Some very influential men in public life say that we can afford to give up some of our sovereignty to obtain world peace. The propaganda for a world government has flourished in many quarters. I am here to tell you that we cannot afford to give up any of our national sovereignty for any cause.

We have the only government on earth where the people themselves rule. The government here exists for the people, and the people do not exist for the government. For over 160 years we have gone on our way with our own concept of government, and we know what freedom means. Are we fools enough to abandon our course and listen to the siren songs of those whose design it is to destroy this great Government, and fit it into a new world government with a heterogeneous collection of nations whose ideas of the purpose of government conflict with our own? Instead of destroying our national spirit, it should be increased. If other nations want to follow our example, let them do it; but to let any foreign combination direct the affairs of this Government would be intolerable and will never be permitted. It could not be done by force. And if the American people are alert and prize freedom and liberty as much as I think they do, this false, insidious, and conspiratorial scheme to subdue us will never prevail.

The world government proposes a world congress where members are elected according to the population of the member nations. This means that Soviet Russia and Red China and their enslaved comrades will control that government.

After examining this record, can anyone doubt that the United Nations was purposely set up to do to this country what could not be done by force of arms, but through the blandishments of Communists, fellow travelers, and dupes, get us to surrender our liberty without firing a shot?

There are some questions that should be answered. One of them is, "Why does this Government permit the recognition of Soviet Russia, when it is known by all, including all the administration leaders, that from the Russian Embassy here in Washington there is a constant flow to all parts of the country of propaganda that is inimical to the United States?" The next question is, "Why do we remain in the United Nations when we can plainly see that the whole scheme is directed to our destruction?" If the administration officials hide their heads in the sand for security, I am sure that the people will not.

I have faith in the American people, when they are armed with the facts.

I have faith in the Divine Ruler of this universe, who has sustained us in the past; and I have an enduring faith that He will not desert us in our efforts to maintain a government of freedom and liberty here on these shores where it began.

S.C. Man Speaks For Poverty Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 55-year-old South Carolina Negro farmer testified Monday the provisions of President Johnson's anti-poverty bill would keep him from being forced off his land by debt.

Willie Preston Canty of Pinewood told the House subcommittee on labor that he has a mortgage and machinery costs totaling $8,897 and he was ineligible under present laws to get a loan from any federal farm agency.

Canty, who said he was too poor to buy glasses, made highly a statement which said the anti-poverty bill's provision for grants up to $1,000 to poor farmers would help put him back on his feet.

The Sumter County farmer said such a loan would enable him to plant two or three acres of sweet potatoes.

"A friend of mine did this," Canty said, "and he told me he cleared $1,000 or $2,000. . . ."

Canty added, "My friends who have gone to cities bring back some disturbing stories about conditions in which they have to live in some areas.

"I should like to stay on my farm and raise my children in the country, where I feel it is best for all of us; in fact, at my age changing from the farm would not be easy nor helpful."

In other testimony, witnesses for the National Farmers Union, the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor and the National Grange supported the Johnson bill.

TESTIMONY OF FAY BENNETT
PRESENTED TO THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR
ON H.R. 10440, THE ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1964
April 13, 1964

My name is Fay Bennett. I am Executive Secretary of the National Sharecroppers Fund, an organization which has been working for more than a quarter of a century to bring economic and social justice to sharecroppers, tenants, small farmers, and farm workers. I appreciate the opportunity to appear before this Committee to testify to the necessity for a broad federal program to end rural poverty. We support H.R. 10440 as an important step in that direction. We are particularly interested in Title III of the Bill, in the section to help young people through the work-study, work-training, and job corps programs, and in the rural community action programs.

There is much talk about the exodus from the land. We all know that in the last few decades millions of Americans have left the farm and have gone to the city. We know that American research and know-how have made possible the production of a super-abundance of food and fiber, with fewer and fewer people. Just the other day, the financial pages of the New York Times (April 10) told of new developments to harvest prunes and lettuce mechanically. Machines are replacing men on the farm as they are in the factories.

It almost seems as though people are becoming obsolete. When machinery becomes obsolete, we scrap it. Are we also to put our jobless people on the scrap heap? It seems that this is what happens when we offer the jobless the alternative of starving or seeking relief checks.

A nation's human resources are its most important component. This is why the Economic Opportunity Bill is such a necessary and hopeful first step in the war on poverty. It offers hope that a civilized nation with a highly developed technology, educational system, and culture can do the necessary providing and planning to rescue its poor, its unemployed, and its underemployed from despair.

How will it do this?

Here is how the bill will work to help the rural poor. Title III provides for grants of up to $1,500 and loans of up to $2,500 to low-income rural families who have a reasonable possibility of bringing about a permanent increase in their income. They could do this by improving their land or acquiring more land, improving their operations, participating in cooperative associations, paying off debts, and generally "getting on their feet." They would also get technical assistance and help in planning for a better income-producing operation. Those who do not own any land of their own could buy a family-size farm from a nonprofit corporation which, under the Bill, could acquire available land and develop it for resale to low-income farm families. Its cost is slight and can mark the difference between remaining independent and being reduced to relief. This is the realistic help that many of these persons need to gain self-sufficiency.

By now this Committee is well aware of the fact that one out of three rural families (over 15 million in all) has a cash income of less than $3,000 a year. Yet $3,000 would seem like great wealth to the more than five million farm families (some of whom are hired farm workers) whose yearly income may be a few hundred dollars, or perhaps $1,000, but less than $2,000. These are the people who do not have enough to eat, whose children go to bed hungry and often do not have a pair of shoes. Their houses are unsafe, and the wind and rain blow through. They sleep four and five to a bed. They are in despair. They must have help.

Many people in these situations write to our office and ask what they can do to help themselves. Here is one such case: Mrs. C. is a sharecropper in north

Leflore County in the Mississippi Delta. She has eleven children. Her two oldest sons, aged 15 and 17, help her work the farm. They raised 24 bales of cotton last year, but all she got in the settlement was $500, on which all twelve are barely surviving. "In severe need of clothes and food," the report to our office says.

What will happen if Mrs. C. finally gives up this seemingly hopeless struggle to survive on the land? Or, what is more likely, if she is forced off by her landlord's decision to fully mechanize his cotton crop? She will probably not find work to feed, clothe, and house her family of twelve in the country or in the city. They most probably will all be reduced to complete dependence upon welfare, at a tremendous cost to her dignity, her children's future, and the economy of the community. If they come to New York City, they will join the 470,000 persons who were on the Department of Welfare's rolls in January, 1964--six per cent of the population. This welfare cost $34,668,000 for the month, for an average of $180.62 for each of the over 190,000 family cases on the rolls. If Mrs. C.'s family were paid only the average, it would come to $2,167.44 for the year.

Will the Economic Opportunity Bill help Mrs. C.? Probably not directly, and not much. But it could give her children a chance to break out of this pattern, through the work-study, work-training, and job corps programs. And it could and will help many rural families whose situation is not so extreme.

Here is the case of Mrs. D., a South Carolina widow: She and her sons, aged 27, 18, and 14, work her 109-acre farm, 70 acres of which are cleared. She raises cotton, soybeans, and tobacco. Her debts amount to $2,500, and her income is insufficient to warrant a Farmers Home Administration loan to help her improve her situation. Under Title III of this Bill, she might be eligible for a grant or a loan from FHA, along with help in planning for a more efficient and profitable farming operation. Other provisions of the Bill would help her sons prepare for a better future.

Another story comes from Mr. W. P. Canty, who is here today. He writes as follows:

"I am Willie Preston Canty. I live in Pinewood, Clarendon County, South Carolina. I have lived and worked on a farm all my life. I am still anxious to stay on a farm. I am now 56 years of age. I have a wife and three children to support. I have been operating a farm for 36 years. I raise four crops in addition to raising hogs and vegetables for my family as well as for sale.

"Last year, I was able to raise 20 bales of cotton which grossed $3,000, $400 worth of tobacco with an allotment of one acre, and $100 for soybeans. I also raise some corn. My gross income from the farm was $3,500. After paying all expenses, I had about $1,200 left. There has been a gradual decrease in the tobacco allotment which has helped to decrease my income. I was forced to mortgage my farm, which is composed of 112 acres with 55 acres clear land. My total debt including the mortgage and cost of machines is $9,887.

"Many of my relatives and friends have left the farm because of heavy indebtedness and poor crop yield plus inability to get credit. I have found it very difficult to get proper credit from agencies which lend to other farmers. My friends who have gone to cities bring back some disturbing stories about the conditions in which they have to live in some areas. I should like to stay on my farm and raise my children in the country where I feel it is best for all of us; in fact, at my age changing from the farm would not be easy nor helpful."

Mr. Canty will gladly answer any questions the Committee may wish to ask him.

I think that legislators from the urban areas should be deeply interested in supporting the part of Title II of the Bill which calls for community action programs in the rural as well as the urban areas. Our cities are already overcrowded and staggering under the almost crushing burden of trying to meet the needs of millions of uneducated, poorly educated, and untrained people who have already been cast off the land. We dare not add to this intolerable burden. Many of our urban centers are potentially explosive because of the unmet needs of the millions of rural cast-offs.

The community action programs could spark the efforts needed to improve rural health and social services, education, job training and counseling, economic development, and housing. Other programs already authorized will gain greater impetus through a joint community effort aided by federal financing. All of this could bring about a rebirth in our rural areas, relieve the overcrowding in our cities, and help the nation along the road to economic prosperity and social health.

The Bill's loan program to local cooperatives to help low-income farmers would provide essential production, processing, purchasing, marketing, and other services and facilities which may make the difference between survival and going under. This is not a new idea. This kind of program literally saved thousands of small farmers during the thirties. Many of these small and struggling farmers of the thirties have become big and prosperous through their cooperatives. They aren't interested in the little fellow who today is struggling to survive as they struggled to survive thirty years ago. The government of the people in a democracy must care. It must now offer the seed money, along with the technical assistance needed, the guidance, and the intelligent planning to reawaken and renew rural communities.

Of course I am not suggesting that this Bill will bring about the millennium. Lots more is needed in the way of public works programs, extending the minimum wage and unemployment insurance to farm workers, etc.

The provisions of H.R. 10440 will help to make a family self-sufficient, able to provide its members with adequate food, clothing, and shelter. It will bring new dignity and new hope to the mothers and fathers of these families. It will save the taxpayers millions of dollars in relief and welfare payments, which often perpetuate poverty because they do not give a family the basic help needed for a new start.

In addition, it will give local leadership the opportunity to work hand in hand with local government, state government, and federal government to take advantage of the many programs available for education, vocational training, health, and welfare. It will spur cultural development and spiritual growth.

Who can say what kind of new awakening can come from giving those now left out a chance to be included in the promise of the American dream? Who can say what new musicians will develop, new writers and composers, new orchestras and choral and theater groups, and new strength for Americans to think and work and plan together for a better country for all?

S. C. C. H. R. REVIEW

April, 1964

A monthly news review issued by the Information Committee of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations, 1330 Laurel Street, Columbia, S. C.

SENSE OF MOVEMENT AND DIRECTION

The first meeting to be held jointly by the Georgia and South Carolina Councils on Human Relations, March 20-21, at Augusta produced a sense of movement when approximately 400 persons from the two states packed meeting and eating rooms for an exchange of ideas and information, and for fellowship.

SCCHR members were present from twenty-two towns. Program leaders came from four other states, and there was an international visitor! Georgians too were out in strength and with vigor.

Mr. Otis Finley, associate director of the National Urban League, who spoke at the Friday evening meeting shared facts and feelings which forcefully emphasized the necessity of closing the gap between education provided the youth of the United States, urban and rural, Negro and white. A Marshall plan is needed for minority groups, and for the underdeveloped sections of this country, he said.

The federal government has been interested in providing training opportunities for its citizens ever since the New Deal of the Roosevelt Administration, according to Mr. George Butler of The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities. Later, both Republican and Democratic administrations have operated programs to set up equal employment opportunities. At present, both training and fair placement is being provided, he said in urging that full use of the programs be made.

Mr. John Wheeler, President of the Mechanics and Farmers Bank of Durham, N. C., who gives distinguished service to state, regional and national citizens efforts, urged concerned persons to help to inform those who need them most of the job training programs available to them. He emphasized that government employees alone cannot possibly do the job of recruiting, training, and retraining the unemployed and underemployed of the respective states and of the Southern region.

The State of North Carolina has employed Mrs. Sarah Herbin, former director of the merit employment program of the American Friends Service Committee in its new program to make full and fair use of its manpower potential. Mrs. Herbin reported briefly also on Governor Terry's program to eradicate poverty for which the Ford Foundation, several foundations in North Carolina, and the State itself have put up large sums of money.

An encouraging report of South Carolin's Special Training for Economic Progress program (STEP) was made by Mr. Phenizee Ransom, Jr., representative of the Regional Employment Service in Atlanta. Mr. Ransom had just visited Camden and Coosawhatchie where the first training classes have opened.

Persons who want more information about workshop discussions may write the SCCHR office in Columbia.

REBIRTH OF DEMOCRACY

Dr. Lucius Pitts, President of Miles College, Birmingham, Alabama, and a native Southerner was given a stirring ovation after he shared his belief that there will come a rebirth of Democracy and new life for Judeo-Christian teachings when men and women of goodwill in the South work together in freedom for the common good of all. It will be through the efforts of such organizations as the Human Relations Councils that the New South will be born, he said. Dr. Pitts' luncheon address closed the Augusta conference.

STUDENT COUNCIL SPRING CONFERENCE

About 135 persons were at Frogmore on April 10-12 for a program on the theme "New Directions and Continuing Responsibilities." Among speakers and resource persons present were: Mr. Matthew Perry, Attorney of Columbia; Dr. I. W. Zartman, University of South Carolina Department of International Studies; Mr. Randolph A. Blackwell, Southern Regional Council; Rev. H. G. McClain, South Carolina Christian Action Council; and Rev. M. D. McCollum, Methodist District Superintendent.

Guests present included students from Kenya, Nigeria and Ghana, who are attending colleges in North and South Carolina.

The United States Information Agency covered the Conference and taped proceedings for use in broadcasts overseas.

Mr. L. S. James and Mrs. Alice N. Spearman, Council staff, were also present. Mrs. Elizabeth Ledeen, Program Director of SCCHR, is advisor to the SCSCHR.

"STEP" PROGRAM LAUNCHED

When Governor Russell announced in January of this year that over 5½ million dollars in federal grants had been received for new MDTA programs, SCCHR Field Representative L. S. James went to work publicizing the program.

Geared to fight the state's twin enemies of ignorance and unemployment, the program is called STEP (Special Training for Economic Progress). It affords a real and effective way for citizens who so desire to be upgraded in education and employment.

Mr. James has been asked to assist the State Employment Service Coordinator of MDTA in recruiting trainees throughout the state. With 5,000 trainees expected each year of the STEP program, it is likely that the SCCHR recruiting effort will be a major factor in promoting the interest of many citizens, white and Negro, in this program.

In addition to his work in the STEP program, Mr. James has been working effectively in helping to implement programs for the Area Redevelopment Act (ARA), a federal program for which 24 South Carolina counties are eligible.

LOCAL COUNCIL NEWS

The Sumter Council heard SCCHR President Fred M. Reese, Jr., at its April meeting. Mr. Reese spoke of the need to motivate students to apply for TEC and other programs now open to qualified persons. Discussion was held on employment opportunity and needs in the community.

The Columbia Council heard Bethlehem Center Director, Miss Thelma Heath and Case Worker Herbert Dodd at their April meeting. Mr. Dodd related his experiences in working with street gangs and current efforts underway to meet needs of Negro youth in the Columbia Area.

The Rock Hill Council had a member of the Governor's Committee of 100 as their guest speaker in April. Present also were Rock Hill representatives of the State Employment Security Commission. The meeting was held in a government building and lively discussion followed the presentations. Visitors were present from York and Chester, and SCCHR staff from Columbia.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS

SCCHR Executive Committee members met at the Council office on April 21 to hear of the recent foundation exploration trip of the Executive Director, Mrs. Alice N. Spearman.

A workshop for local council officers and key committee chairmen was set for May 16.

The Executive Committee expressed determination to work toward effecting closer coordination and sharing of resources with the nine local groups strategically located across the state.

Persons attending the Executive Committee meeting, in addition to the officers, were Mr. Austin V. Edwards, State Farmers Home Administration official; Dr. R. J. Moore, a local college professor, and Dr. Durham Counts, Columbia pharmacist.

Dear Miss Jones:

Your letter of May 18 has been received and I wish to say that the statement "that the International Association of Chiefs of Police believe that the civil rights advocates throughout the country are engaged in a conspiracy to discredit local police forces" is not true.

Just as you point out that your group is attempting to work toward acceptable solutions, we also have taken steps to clarify the role of the police in street demonstrations. In this respect, you will find enclosed an editorial which I prepared some months ago along these lines, as well as a copy of our June, 1963, issue of THE POLICE CHIEF which contains an editorial and several articles describing a conference in which we participated in an effort to reach this goal.

If I can be of further help, I hope you will let me know.

Sincerely yours,

Quinn Tamm

REPORT OF PROGRAM DIRECTOR

March - May, 1964

I. Work with Committees

The Education Committee carried special responsibility for one of the workshops at the Georgia-South Carolina conference in Augusta, March 20-21 on "The Role of the Citizen in Upgrading and Updating the Public Schools." In this workshop leaders in adult education, guidance, and vocational education discussed areas of special need in South Carolina and Georgia. Dr. Lionel Newsom of Morehouse College and Dr. Judith Joyner of the School of Education at the University of South Carolina gave the overview of the present situation, pointing out problems and promise of upgrading.

Discussion focused on the role of the citizen in undergirding programs of adult education. Particular information concerning the STEP program in South Carolina was included in the discussion. It is essential that persons become more politically minded. Until Negro citizens in larger numbers become a political force, Negro representation on school boards which is so greatly needed will not become a reality. "Compensatory discrimination in favor of 'culturally deprived' Negroes and whites is a must to bridge the gap resulting from 346 years of deprived education." [1](Exhibits attached.)

In subsequent meetings of this committee the need and opportunities for tutorial programs were considered. The committee heard a report of the significant work of the student members in the Columbia area who have developed a tutorial program in conjunction with the guidance department at Booker Washington High School. This work will be continued next year and broadened to include other high schools. It was especially noted that in many communities college students and adults may work together through the local CHR in setting up tutorial programs. It was recognized that there was great need for programs designed for the young child, pre-school "readiness" groups, nursery schools for children from low-income, deprived homes. The committee will explore possible resources--private or governmental--for the development of such pre-school programs.

Councils have been urged to work for more representative school boards with the election of qualified Negro members to such boards; to publicize and undergird programs of adult education now in operation; and to develop new programs such as these described above.

The Committee on the Church and Human Relations has attempted to re-examine its role and purpose in two meetings which have been held this quarter. In view of a more permissive and open policy in some church groups, should this committee continue to function?

It was made clear that while this committee bears no "official" relationship to church bodies, it is needed at the state level to serve as a catalyst, to provide a continuing channel of communication for persons in isolated places in the state who have a deep concern to make their faith relevant to all of life, including the area of race. It was suggested that the committee prepare and disseminate of a broad scale relevant materials on religion and race; and that it call or cooperate with other agencies in calling consultations on specific issues. For example, a consultation on the Church and Civil Rights, may be of great value in the near future. The committee indicated its intention of moving forward in these ways and will meet again during the summer.

Members of this committee were made aware of the necessity for increasing educational efforts on a broad scale after attending a Baptist Conference on the Church and Race. It was designed to discuss complex problems "in a spirit of Christian love and understanding," but became a platform for the most extreme expressions of racism. This made many persons aware of the tremendous job yet to be done if the church is to take even a moderate position. And in this critical period a moderate position is too little and too late!

Members of the staff set up special committee meetings with Mr. Courtney Siceloff who represented the Civil Rights Commission for a consideration of ways in which Columbia might gain voluntary compliance with the civil rights laws. Representatives from Business and Professional Womens Clubs, AAUP, United Church Women as well as from Columbia Council on Human Relations attended. Continuing conversations are taking place in an effort to prepare the community.

II. The Student Program (SCSCHR)

The highlight of the student program for this quarter was the * spring conference held April 10-12 at Penn Center, Frogmore. This was the largest of the student conference in our history with 135 persons in attendance from 15 colleges in South Carolina and two in North Carolina. The conference program included a consideration of the continuing responsibilities of SCSCHR in its tutorial program, voter registration, church relationships, community and campus projects, and an emphasis on Africa. This was an attempt to broaden horizons; to present facts and to become acquainted with students from Africa who are now in attendance at our colleges. Seven African students from Kenya, Ghana, and Nigeria were special conference guests. They participated fully in the conference and shared in the program through leadership in a panel discussion. Dr. William Zartman of the University of South Carolina Department of International Studies was the lecturer on Africa. A unique feature of this conference was the coverage accorded it by the Africa division of the United States Information Agency. As indicated in a letter from the director of this division, "this was a worthwhile effort." Brief tape recordings were released for immediate broadcast by African radio stations; a longer newstory was sent to the African press and pictures were to be used later. These releases of course featured the African students, and also cited this student conference as an example of a positive approach in race relations and of free and genuine bi-racial communication in the deep south. Perhaps in a small way this was a contribution toward improving the American image abroad. [2](Exhibits attached.)

Campus visits were made in April and May to Lander, Erskine, Claflin, S. C. State and Morris colleges. In each of these places conferences were held with students and faculty. At Lander College in Greenwood, firm contacts for SCSCHR were established for the first time and it was learned that the college, which is largely supported by county funds, had already acted officially to open its doors to all qualified students. This was confirmed some weeks later by a press release which also indicated that a highly qualified Negro student had made application.

Erskine College at Due West is very conservative and isolated. Through the determined efforts of one of the faculty members in the Department of Religion, contact has been maintained with students there. This year a small nucleus of about 15 students with a few other faculty members have been meeting once a week in the home of the faculty members mentioned above. It was encouraging to meet with this group, some members of which seem determined to break through some of the complacency and "consiracy of silence" which generally prevails at the college. Since this visit, five students and one additional faculty member from Erskine have attended state-wide student meetings.

The visits in Orangeburg (Claflin and S. C. State) and Sumter(Morris) included conferences with community leaders and prospective students for the desegregated colleges as well as students and faculty at the colleges. General dissatisfaction with the Orangeburg Movement was expressed by some of the students who have been closely involved in the work of the Movement there. A divided leadership was noted. This indicates so they felt the need for projects in the field of community action of a different nature--job opportunity surveys, cooperation with voter registration efforts, etc. Local student councils in Orangeburg it was suggested might move in such direction.

The Student Council has now come of age, rounding out a full college generation, four years. This spring has been a time for reevaluation and planning for new ways of work. The Prosepectus for 1964-65 indicates the areas of work which were discussed at the meeting of the Student Steering Committee on May 9. Some specific planning was crystalized and will be continued in the fall. [3](Exhibit attached)

It should be noted, with justifiable pride, that one of South Carolina student leaders who helped mold the program of SCSCHR for three years, is now in a crucial position of leadership in the field of human relations in the entire south, Mt. Hays Mizell, who has recently become the director of the Southern Human Relations Project of the National Student Association. He is working out of an Atlanta office. It is interesting to note that one of the goals in his approach to his new work is that of setting up Student Councils on Human Relations in other states of the south, similar to that which has been established in South Carolina.

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Quarterly Report

March 1964 - May 1964

Explorations with Foundations

The first week in March was spent by the SCCHR executive director in New York exploring with the few foundations contacted on a previous visit in March 1962 mutuality of interests. Interviews were held also with a few foundations not previously contacted.

The Doris Duke Foundation and The Edgar Stern Family Fund seemed to be receptive to needs which SCCHR would like to meet by providing expanded services. However no requests have been presented yet by SCCHR for grants.

At that time the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund was in the process of study and of interacting with such foundations as Field, Ford, Carnegie, Rockerfeller, et al as to unmet needs in the broad area of civil rights and needs of minorities around which it might effectively expand beyond its initial interne program.

Brief contacts were made with each of the above-named groups and cordial responses were experienced. It was sensed that rethinking of goals and functions is taking place and that there would be receptivity to requests for grants. However it was indicated that a regional approach and broadly based and conceived proposals would be favored.

American Assembly at Duke University

Upon the invitation of Dr. Douglas M. Knight, president of Duke University, the SCCHR executive director attended the southeastern meeting. Valuable contacts were made with leaders and participants. The experience was beneficial also because of the range of viewpoints represented and consensus reached. (Will gladly share findings upon request)

Georgia and South Carolina Councils Meet

See attached copies of March and April SCCHR Review for announcement and report of the conference in Augusta, Georgia held jointly on March 20-21 by these two state councils on human relations. Excellent programs, participation, and responses.

Discussions with SRC and VEP Staff

On March 23, the SCCHR executive director reported to the SRC director and field representative concerning reactions to her explorations with New York foundations for possible grants. Dr. Dunbar authorized her to make a written proposal to the Field Foundation. This was done about mid-April and two copies provided SRC.

Mr. Randolph Blackwell of the Voter Education Project discussed with Mrs. Spearman progress of the project in South Carolina and accepted an invitation to present on April 11, at the spring conference of SCSCHR, a film on activities of a political coalition in Texas.

Student Work-Study Program

Arrangements were made with Kalamazoo College, Kalamazoo, Michigan by the SCCHR executive director for Miss Ginnie Good, a sophmore, to work with SCCHR from March 26 until June 15. In addition to her activities in connection with the SCSCHR which will be reported by Mrs. Ledeen, advisor, she made an informal study to learn what is being done through the South Carolina Public Welfare Department to use U. S. Department of H. E. W. funds to develop a program of day care centers for children of needy families.

She set up a schedule of contacts for Dr. and Mrs. Hendrik J. Van Zyl of South Africa whose visit to Columbia on June 11 and 12 had been planned with Dr. Frank Loescher.

In addition, Miss Good made field trips with the executive director to Rock Hill, Inman, Spartanburg and Newberry. In Rock Hill both students from Winthrop and Friendship Junior College met with members of The Rock Hill Council on Human Relations and decided for the first time to form a local bi-racial student council. She assisted also with general office work.

On evaluating her work, we have rated her contribution as exceptional and consider the arrangement one well worth repeating.

Local Councils

In an effort to lanch a new council on human relations in Cheraw, the executive director met with SCCHR members and friends there early in May. Interest and enthusiasm ran high and communication seemed honest and free. Mr. A. M. Secrest, publisher and editor of The Cheraw Chronicle participated and reported the meeting quite casually and naturally in the next issue of his weekly newspaper.

A few days later, twenty-five Negro children applied for admission to the all-white public schools. Immediately, it was assumed that the exploratory meeting had planned and plotted the integration of schools. Mr. Secrest and other white persons have said that they were definitely "on the spot" but have continued to meet at intevals of about every two weeks.

Although the number of Negroes to attend has continued to grow, it has become difficult for local leaders to secure the participation of additional white persons.

It continues to be a problem to find enough staff time to give the intensive services needed at the local level to get local councils off to a good start and to keep them active and vital.

Persistent requests for a Spartanburg county council have been met by staff visits to Inman and to Spartanburg by Mrs. Spearman, Mr. James and Miss Good. There have been return visits to Columbia and hopefully a council may be formed in Spartanburg before the end of the year - again, intensive work in needed to profit from spade work which is being done.

A concerted effort is being made by the SCCHR chairman, the executive committee, and the staff to strengthen and enlarge programs of the local councils on human relations.

The SCCHR executive committee has scheduled for the first time regular monthly meetings and thus hopes to get under and stay with the jobs to which each member is committed individually and those they are undertaking jointly.

An all-day working session was held at a Columbia Motel on Saturday, May 16 which was attended by representatives from local councils. Local council chairmen worked with Mr. Reese - program chairmen worked with Dr. J. Sherrard Rice, SCCHR vice chairman and Dr. Robert J. Moore, member-at-large of the executive committee. Plans for the 1964 annual meeting program were projected, and program ideas and information shared. Those concerned with membership policies and enlargement were led by a co-chairman of the SCCHR membership committee, Mr. Austin V. Edwards. The SCCHR chairman of finance and the treasurer directed the workshop on finance in which Dr. J. M. Dabbs participated.

The workshops on May 16 followed-up on beginnings made at an enlarged meeting of the board of directors held at the Wade Hampton Hotel on February 2, 1964.

It is proposed to set in motion continual interchange which will require periodic joint meetings of this kind.

1964 Membership Efforts to Focus on Columbia

On May 28, Mr. Paul Anthony, SRC director of field services, assisted in planning an extensive membership drive to begin in Columbia in late August and terminate September 30. A mass mailing to approximately 2,000 persons, a large number of small coffee or coke parties to interpret SCCHR, a large banquet and systematic visitation by teams will be carried out.

SCCHR Promotional Piece

Mrs. Florence Robin, SRC consultant, has drawn from the request and the program prospectus sent to the Field Foundation, and from issues of SCCHR Review appropriate information about SCCHR which she has put together both artistically and skillfully in a brochure, Reach for Tomorrow, which will be available for distribution by July 15. Mrs. Robin spent a day in Columbia conferring with the executive director on April 29. Further collaboration to follow.

Staff Participation in Washington Meetings

Mr. James and Mrs. Spearman attended public hearings on Farm Labor conducted by the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor held in Washington, D. C., May 18 and 19.

While in Washington, Mrs. Spearman held a conference with Mr. Lawrence Houstoun, director of special programs, Office of Manpower Automation and Training (OMAT) re SCCHR's trainee recruitment for South Carolina's Special Training for Economic Progress (STEP) program. Mr. Houstoun is currently serving with a task force set up by Mr. Sargent Shriver who will direct the Office of Economic Opportunity. (OEO)

Plans were made to have Mr. Houstoun visit South Carolina early in June in line with the two important interests he represents.

Miss Good, Miss Mary Harrison, (office stenographer) and Mrs. Spearman participated in the special services held in Washington on the morning of May 18 which were set up by the Commission on The Church and Race of The National Council of Churches. Invitation had been extended to Mrs. Spearman by telephone the previous Friday.

SCCHR Continues to Assist "STEP"

The Aiken, Rock Hill and Sumter councils on human relations have been active in clarifying policies and in informational and recruitment programs for the STEP program. Numerous SCCHR members-at-large have also played varied and valuable "enabling" roles.

Outstanding has been the skill and efficiency with which Mr. James has worked with the government agencies conducting the STEP program. Also, he has established excellent rapport with rural leaders in the 24 South Carolina counties eligible for the Area Redevelopment Administration (ARA) programs. His report which is attached will outline the leadership training and other activities in which he has engaged this quarter.

For Quick Consumption: Tiny Tid-bits

On April 30, the S. C. State Baptist Convention held a conference on The Church and Race. Called to exchange viewpoints concerning proposed integration at Furman University, it provided a forum for Biblical segregationists and white supremacists - a traumatic experience for the SCCHR executive director, a few Christian Baptist ministers and laymen known by her, and a few young leaders whom she met for the first time.

On May 12, the Columbia Chamber of Commerce (C.of C) after 15 months of study proposed a Citizens Design for Progress which was adopted. Fifteen bi-racial committees will be set up; two of these, Community Relations and Attitudes and The Human Element, will deal with facets of human relations. SCCHR will participate.

SCCHR is cooperating with the S. C. Association of Senior Citizens which held its 1964 annual meeting in West Columbia on May 13.

On April 16, Mr. Reese was speaker at the monthly meeting of the Sumter Council on Human Relations.

Mr. Ira Kaye, attorney and valued SCCHR member phoned Mrs. Spearman to report his appointment as director of the Peace Corps in Iran for the next two years.

Negroes have entered the Democratic primaries in several South Carolina cities and counties this year. Candidates for the House of Representatives of the S. C. General Assembly and for the school board in district I, Columbia, have sought advise and information from SCCHR.

On May 27 at the fifty-third annual commencement, Morris College, Sumter, South Carolina conferred upon Mrs. Alice N. Spearman the degree of Doctor of Humanities.

SCCHR has called together several times this quarter small groups to work with Courtney Siceloff in assessing the situation in Columbia for orderly compliance with civil rights legislation, when enacted. The executive director has interviewed a sampling of the managers of restaurants in Columbia and has found negative response from only one source, restrained acquiescence in the majority of cases, and a few quite positively oriented persons.

Checks have been made directly or indirectly in the larger towns; reports are encouraging.

At the request of Mrs. Septima Clark, Mrs. Spearman participated in a panel and discussion presented in Charleston in cooperation with a national committee of The Congregational - Christian Church in April.

In addition to field trips referred to above, the executive director visited Newberry twice this quarter; once to establish needed contacts with two key faculty members and those responsible for the STEP program and the second time to participate in a presentation by the Columbia student council on human relations to the human relations section of the Newberry College, Student Christian Association.

REPORT OF ACTIVITIES OF FIELD REPRESENTATIVE OF
S. C. C. H. R. DURING THE MONTHS
MARCH, APRIL AND MAY 1964

The field activities of the Field Representative during this period has been based largely on the following four projects:

1. Cooperation with Employment Security Commission for Job Training.
2. Special Conferences and Neighborhood County Meetings.
3. Cooperation with Visitor from Unites States Commission on Civil Rights.
4. Present status of ARA and STEP programs of South Carolina.
5. Study of Poverty in S. C. and Cooperation with voter registration.

Cooperation for Job Training

The Executive Director of the Employment Security Commission got Mr. James through request to visit with Mr. Phenizee F. Ramson, Regional Representative of the Employment Bureau Security of the United States Department of Labor, while he was in South Carolina on a routine State visit to some Employment Service Offices.

Mr. Ramson was also interested in seeing not only activities of the Employment Service Offices of the State, but to see the organized STEP training schools. Mr. James spent the entire week of March 16-20, 1964, traveling with Mr. Ramson at the expense of the Employment Security Office. We visited four Employment Service Offices and two STEP schools. At that time, only two STEP schools were open; one in Camden and one at Coosawhatchie, Jasper County, near Ridgeland. This gave Mr. James a chance to meet officially managers of Employment Service Offices in the following cities: Camden, Charleston, Columbia, and Beaufort. All the managers impressed us with their efforts to serve the public without any evidence of discrimination. We are equally pleased with the integration; in one school the faculty was integrated, too. We reported our finding to Mr. Keith Aull, Executive Director of the South Carolina State Employment Commission. (See copy of Mr. Aull's letter attached).

Special Conference and Neighborhood County Meetings

For the first time in the history of the SCCHR, the Georgia and South Carolina Councils on Human Relations held a joint conference in Augusta. This meeting was held at the Augusta Townhouse Motor Inn March 20-21, 1964. Mr. James was responsible for organizing materials, selecting speakers and acting as chairman of the workshop based on the topic, "The Role of Citizens in Implementing State and Federal Training and Retraining Programs." A summary of the discussion, together with a list of some of the people who attended the workshop and the program are attached to the report.

Mr. James has held four neighborhood county group meetings during this period. The group counties included Chester, Chesterfield, Darlington, Kershaw, Lancaster, and Marlboro met April 3rd in Camden, South Carolina. It was fortunate to get the principal of the pilot STEP school in Camden, South Carolina, in the person of Colonel Elder to speak at this meeting. Two county agricultural agents attended this meeting. Colonel Elder emphasized the fact that integration of the school was accepted without complaint by the faculty, students and community. This meeting encouraged four new important ministers of large churches to promise cooperation in helping to spread information about the STEP schools and opportunities available for training of functional illiterates along with other trainees for jobs available in their communities.

The county group meeting on April 17th was held in Barnwell, South Carolina with the following counties participating: Aiken, Bamberg, Allendale, and Barnwell. The chief problem discussed at this meeting was the eligibility of trainees of new STEP schools. The problem of getting underemployed farm workers to receive $15 per week released for training was also discussed.

The April 24th meeting at Kingstree included representatives from four counties: Lee, Sumter, Clarendon and Williamsburg. The chief problem discussed at this meeting was how to get Negro farmers to participate in local elections of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service Community Committee election. It was reported that an official report of an election was not given after Negroes participated in the community election. This problem was investigated at the State Office of ASCS. We are still trying to get a Negro County Agricultural Agent for Lee County.

At St. George, May 8th, 1964, the county group meeting included reports from the following counties: Berkeley, Orangeburg, Dorchester, Colleton, Beaufort and Jasper. Mr. James secured the services of Mr. Jacob R. Henderson, Field Coordinator of ARA to speak for this meeting. He described the kind of projects which the ARA would like to support and indicated that there are no projects in South Carolina or Georgia that meet the democratic requirements of ARA policies.

Cooperation with Visitors from United States Commission on Civil Rights

Mr. James was asked to help, in anyway possible, two representatives from the United States Commission on Civil Rights. These two gentlemen were in South Carolina from April 13-17, 1964 investigating the possibility of discrimination on the part of the Farmers Home Administration and the Extension Service. Mr. James was able to give them a list of persons to contact and furnish them information from his files. They took all of the case studies, correspondence and other written information which Mr. James had in his files relative to appeals from local decisions of FHA committees on applications for helping our low-income farmers.

They were also interested in information in Mr. James' files, relative to letters which showed that one Negro lady applicant, who had qualified on a recent register for clerk-stenographer on the level of Grade 4 with an average rating of 87, was refused a job as secretary in the State FHA Director's Office, even after he promised to hire her if she qualified on the register. Mr. James permitted the representatives from the United States Commission on Civil Rights to take all information mentioned above to their office in Washington for a study. Since their visit, the State Director of FHA has appointed for the first time a Negro Assistant Supervisor in the local office of the FHA Supervisor of Clarendon County. He has also appointed a Negro to membership of the local three-man committee of the FHA in the same county. During this same week, Mr. James sent, on April 13th, a low-income farmer named Willie P. Canty from this same County to testify before the United States House Committee on Education and Labor in favor of the Anti-Poverty Bill. His report was well received and our daily paper called "STATE" carried an article (short write-up) on his appearance before the House Committee on Education and Labor. A copy of this article and Mr. Canty's written testimony is attached.

Status of ARA and STEP Programs of South Carolina

In the last report mention was made of the efforts of Mr. James to get an ARA project started in Colleton County. The leaders in the county organized what is called a Colleton County Garment Corporation which really developed out of their Development Corporation in the same county. They have in the treasury more than $7,000.00 already deposited in one of the leading banks in Walterboro. Since ARA is not inclined to help garment industries anymore, this corporation has decided to work independently without aid from the ARA. The president of the bank in which the money is deposited has promised to co-sign with them for a loan from the Small Business Administration to finance their garment industry project and they have already gotten the STEP school at Coosawhatchie to train 40 power sewing machine operators to do their sewing. This training was done for them free of charge with the help of a large garment factory which is already established in Walterboro.

They are planning to start production at once. All that they produce in garments will be taken by this large garment industry and sold for them. The Chesterfield County Garment Corporation at Pageland has finally gotten started. They are employing 25 persons with a weekly payroll of $1400.00. They are small beginning, but we hope will grow and develop into a large industry in the State.

The Special Training for Economic Progress (STEP) is constantly setting up additional courses in schools throughout the State. Mr. James is still helping to recruit trainees for these schools throughout the State. At present 22 schools have been started with an enrollment of 1380 trainees. So far, 39 counties out of a total of 46 counties have asked for STEP schools. These schools are beginning to turn out people who have completed courses and are now ready for employment.

Mr. James spent the week of May 25-29 visiting various "pockets of poverty" with Mr. Philip Stern and Mr. de Vincent from Washington, D. C. Mr. Stern is a writer and Mr. de Vincent is a photographer. We covered the lower section of the state and spent the day with the migrants in Charleston county. All pictures taken by Mr. de Vincent were to be shown to the Committee on Labor of the U. S. Senate. (see letter from Mr. Stern attached)

Mr. James made special efforts to cooperate with voter registration in all neighborhood county meetings. He prepared a list of the names of the members of all registration boards in all counties in South Carolina and sent them to leaders in each county with a letter suggesting that they contact the registration boards for names of Negroes who have registered.(see copy of letter and list attached.)

The Cost Of Militancy

Decision by the Brooklyn chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality to engineer a gigantic traffic jam at the approaches to The New York World's Fair April 22 is another example of irresponsible behavior that is shocking moderate citizens throughout the nation.

The New York Times, which has encouraged sit - ins, lie-ins and kneel-ins down South, is horrified at the idea of New York's huge fair being paralyzed by militant Negro extremists, engaged in an automobile stall-in. The Times refers to the stall-in as "the mischievous scheme hatched by the Brooklyn chapter of CORE."

John S. Knight, head of the Knight chain of newspapers, another advocate of federal force legislation in the past, has warned in his Sunday column that "the militancy of the Negro struggle for civil rights legislation is alienating many normally fair-minded people who have always been sympathetic to the Negro cause".

We hope that South Carolina will be spared the ugly militancy that is being displayed elsewhere in the nation. Those in the Palmetto State who fan the embers of discontent are ill-serving the public.

In this connection, the public should be forewarned about nice-sounding organizations that increase tensions. The Southern Regional Council is such an organization. Supplied with funds from outside the South, the SRC seems dedicated to promoting discord.

We note that Randolph A. Blackwell, voter education representative of the SRC, was at Frogmore in Beaufort County last weekend to attend a conference of the South Carolina Student Council on Human Relations.

Others taking part in the conference were Matthew Perry, one of the NAACP's top lawyers in South Carolina, and Prof. I. William Zartman, of the Department of International Studies at the University of South Carolina.

We trust that university authorities took note of Prof. Zartman's participation in the Council on Human Relations program. We can't believe that Prof. Zartman's appearance with Matthew Perry and other spokesmen for the integration movement did any good for the university as a whole or for the department of which Prof. Zartman is a member. Academic freedom can be stretched beyond the limits of the public interest.

We hope that the troubles afflicting communities from Cleveland, Ohio, to Los Angeles, will make individuals realize the danger of proposing social changes that the country is not prepared to accept. Social irresponsibility this summer could exact a frightful price from all Americans.

TESTIMONY OF FAY BENNETT
PRESENTED TO THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR
ON H.R. 10440, THE ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1964
April 13, 1964

My name is Fay Bennett. I am Executive Secretary of the National Sharecroppers Fund, an organization which has been working for more than a quarter of a century to bring economic and social justice to sharecroppers, tenants, small farmers, and farm workers. I appreciate the opportunity to appear before this Committee to testify to the necessity for a broad federal program to end rural poverty. We support H.R. 10440 as an important step in that direction. We are particularly interested in Title III of the Bill, in the section to help young people through the work-study, work-training, and job corps programs, and in the rural community action programs.

There is much talk about the exodus from the land. We all know that in the last few decades millions of Americans have left the farm and have gone to the city. We know that American research and know-how have made possible the production of a super-abundance of food and fiber, with fewer and fewer people. Just the other day, the financial pages of the New York Times (April 10) told of new developments to harvest prunes and lettuce mechanically. Machines are replacing men on the farm as they are in the factories.

It almost seems as though people are becoming obsolete. When machinery becomes obsolete, we scrap it. Are we also to put our jobless people on the scrap heap? It seems that this is what happens when we offer the jobless the alternative of starving or seeking relief checks.

A nation's human resources are its most important component. This is why the Economic Opportunity Bill is such a necessary and hopeful first step in the war on poverty. It offers hope that a civilized nation with a highly developed technology, educational system, and culture can do the necessary providing and planning to rescue its poor, its unemployed, and its underemployed from despair.

How will it do this?

Here is how the bill will work to help the rural poor. Title III provides for grants of up to $1,500 and loans of up to $2,500 to low-income rural families who have a reasonable possibility of bringing about a permanent increase in their income. They could do this by improving their land or acquiring more land, improving their operations, participating in cooperative associations, paying off debts, and generally "getting on their feet." They would also get technical assistance and help in planning for a better income-producing operation. Those who do not own any land of their own could buy a family-size farm from a nonprofit corporation which, under the Bill, could acquire available land and develop it for resale to low-income farm families. Its cost is slight and can mark the difference between remaining independent and being reduced to relief. This is the realistic help that many of these persons need to gain self-sufficiency.

By now this Committee is well aware of the fact that one out of three rural families (over 15 million in all) has a cash income of less than $3,000 a year. Yet $3,000 would seem like great wealth to the more than five million farm families (some of whom are hired farm workers) whose yearly income may be a few hundred dollars, or perhaps $1,000, but less than $2,000. These are the people who do not have enough to eat, whose children go to bed hungry and often do not have a pair of shoes. Their houses are unsafe, and the wind and rain blow through. They sleep four and five to a bed. They are in despair. They must have help.

Many people in these situations write to our office and ask what they can do to help themselves. Here is one such case: Mrs. C. is a sharecropper in north

Leflore County in the Mississippi Delta. She has eleven children. Her two oldest sons, aged 15 and 17, help her work the farm. They raised 24 bales of cotton last year, but all she got in the settlement was $500, on which all twelve are barely surviving. "In severe need of clothes and food," the report to our office says.

What will happen if Mrs. C. finally gives up this seemingly hopeless struggle to survive on the land? Or, what is more likely, if she is forced off by her landlord's decision to fully mechanize his cotton crop? She will probably not find work to feed, clothe, and house her family of twelve in the country or in the city. They most probably will all be reduced to complete dependence upon welfare, at a tremendous cost to her dignity, her children's future, and the economy of the community. If they come to New York City, they will join the 470,000 persons who were on the Department of Welfare's rolls in January, 1964--six per cent of the population. This welfare cost $34,668,000 for the month, for an average of $180.62 for each of the over 190,000 family cases on the rolls. If Mrs. C.'s family were paid only the average, it would come to $2,167.44 for the year.

Will the Economic Opportunity Bill help Mrs. C.? Probably not directly, and not much. But it could give her children a chance to break out of this pattern, through the work-study, work-training, and job corps programs. And it could and will help many rural families whose situation is not so extreme.

Here is the case of Mrs. D., a South Carolina widow: She and her sons, aged 27, 18, and 14, work her 109-acre farm, 70 acres of which are cleared. She raises cotton, soybeans, and tobacco. Her debts amount to $2,500, and her income is insufficient to warrant a Farmers Home Administration loan to help her improve her situation. Under Title III of this Bill, she might be eligible for a grant or a loan from FHA, along with help in planning for a more efficient and profitable farming operation. Other provisions of the Bill would help her sons prepare for a better future.

Another story comes from Mr. W. P. Canty, who is here today. He writes as follows:

"I am Willie Preston Canty. I live in Pinewood, Clarendon County, South Carolina. I have lived and worked on a farm all my life. I am still anxious to stay on a farm. I am now 56 years of age. I have a wife and three children to support. I have been operating a farm for 36 years. I raise four crops in addition to raising hogs and vegetables for my family as well as for sale.

"Last year, I was able to raise 20 bales of cotton which grossed $3,000, $400 worth of tobacco with an allotment of one acre, and $100 for soybeans. I also raise some corn. My gross income from the farm was $3,500. After paying all expenses, I had about $1,200 left. There has been a gradual decrease in the tobacco allotment which has helped to decrease my income. I was forced to mortgage my farm, which is composed of 112 acres with 55 acres clear land. My total debt including the mortgage and cost of machines is $9,887.

"Many of my relatives and friends have left the farm because of heavy indebtedness and poor crop yield plus inability to get credit. I have found it very difficult to get proper credit from agencies which lend to other farmers. My friends who have gone to cities bring back some disturbing stories about the conditions in which they have to live in some areas. I should like to stay on my farm and raise my children in the country where I feel it is best for all of us; in fact, at my age changing from the farm would not be easy nor helpful."

Mr. Canty will gladly answer any questions the Committee may wish to ask him.

I think that legislators from the urban areas should be deeply interested in supporting the part of Title II of the Bill which calls for community action programs in the rural as well as the urban areas. Our cities are already overcrowded and staggering under the almost crushing burden of trying to meet the needs of millions of uneducated, poorly educated, and untrained people who have already been cast off the land. We dare not add to this intolerable burden. Many of our urban centers are potentially explosive because of the unmet needs of the millions of rural cast-offs.

The community action programs could spark the efforts needed to improve rural health and social services, education, job training and counseling, economic development, and housing. Other programs already authorized will gain greater impetus through a joint community effort aided by federal financing. All of this could bring about a rebirth in our rural areas, relieve the overcrowding in our cities, and help the nation along the road to economic prosperity and social health.

The Bill's loan program to local cooperatives to help low-income farmers would provide essential production, processing, purchasing, marketing, and other services and facilities which may make the difference between survival and going under. This is not a new idea. This kind of program literally saved thousands of small farmers during the thirties. Many of these small and struggling farmers of the thirties have become big and prosperous through their cooperatives. They aren't interested in the little fellow who today is struggling to survive as they struggled to survive thirty years ago. The government of the people in a democracy must care. It must now offer the seed money, along with the technical assistance needed, the guidance, and the intelligent planning to reawaken and renew rural communities.

Of course I am not suggesting that this Bill will bring about the millennium. Lots more is needed in the way of public works programs, extending the minimum wage and unemployment insurance to farm workers, etc.

The provisions of H.R. 10440 will help to make a family self-sufficient, able to provide its members with adequate food, clothing, and shelter. It will bring new dignity and new hope to the mothers and fathers of these families. It will save the taxpayers millions of dollars in relief and welfare payments, which often perpetuate poverty because they do not give a family the basic help needed for a new start.

In addition, it will give local leadership the opportunity to work hand in hand with local government, state government, and federal government to take advantage of the many programs available for education, vocational training, health, and welfare. It will spur cultural development and spiritual growth.

Who can say what kind of new awakening can come from giving those now left out a chance to be included in the promise of the American dream? Who can say what new musicians will develop, new writers and composers, new orchestras and choral and theater groups, and new strength for Americans to think and work and plan together for a better country for all?

PROF. ZARTMAN'S VIEWS

We respectfully refer to the Columbia Record's editorial page feature written by the professors of the Department of International Studies at the University of South Carolina. These gentlemen are authorities on the United States and World Affairs.

Prof. I. William Zartman writes that, "It's Time to Reassess Our Aid to Ghana". Prof. Zartman writes of his disillusionment with the Nkrumah government of Ghana, the recent riots against American professors at the University of Ghana, the controlled press, the government pressure on native Ghanaians to conform to Nkrumah's politics--all this in spite of U.S. foreign aid which includes $195 million for the Volta river dam and an additional $175 million for an aluminum smelting plant to be operated by power produced at the dam. Prof. Zartman suggests that, if Nkrumah continues to do these bad things, the United States might complete the dam and aluminum plant--but that the United States refuse to build a $40 million steel plant.

Those are Prof. Zartman's views. First, we would ask, why would Prof. Zartman and the university professors wait seven long years to say what kind of man is Nkrumah? In the last seven years, the United States government has created a powerful ally of Moscow in Nkrumah. Now, Prof. Zartman says we might look closer at Nkrumah and his tataliitarian government of Ghana. Now, Prof. Zartman says the United States government may have made a mistake. Isn't this how the United States keeps on losing? Isn't this how we deposed Batista and put Castro in power in Cuba? Isn't this how we deposed Chiang and gave the Reds all of China?

Prof. Zartman and the university professors will recall that Nkrumah has never been anything but a Marxist-Socialist. United Press International reported two years ago, "Nkrumah has declared himself a Marxist-Socialist". But that was not news. Prof. Zartman and the university professors will recall the news photographs of Nikita Khrushchev and Nkrumah giving each other the bear-hug when Nkrumah was made president of Ghana? Khrushchev flew from Moscow to the capital of Ghana to celebrate Nkrumah's becoming President of Ghana.

That was seven years ago. This is not hindsight. Nor is it second-guessing. This is Nkrumah's record. This is the record of the United States defeat in Ghana. It is the continued record of defeat of our country under the guidance of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Foreign Policy Association and the United Nations, which the university professors in the Department of International Studies foster as the "cornerstone of U.S. foreign policy".

Prof. I. William Zartman, one of the professors in the university's Department of International Studies, will lecture at the University of Atlanta April 21, where two identified communists have been leading the Negro revolution. (News and Courier 2-23-64). The professors in the university's Department of International Studies are authorities on the United States and World Affairs. They teach your children what they believe this to be.

Emphasis is on Africa. Several African students are attending.

Conference leaders are Dr. I. William Zartman, International Studies Department professor of the University of South Carolina, who lectured Saturday on "Africa Today and Tomorrow;" Richard Ramsey, college director of the American Friends Service Committee; and Randolph A. Blackwell, voter education project representative of the Southern Regional Council.

Also, Matthew Perry, Columbia attorney; the Rev. Howard G. McClain; executive director of the Christian Action Council; and the Rev. Matthew D. McCollom, district superintendent of the Methodist Church's central jurisdiction.

The conference was to end Sunday with discussion groups.

THE COST OF MILITANCY

Decision by the Brooklyn chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality to engineer a gigantic traffic jam at the approaches to The New York World's Fair April 22 is another example of irresponsible behavior that is shocking moderate citizens throughout the nation.

The New York Times, which has encouraged sit-ins, lie-ins, and kneel-ins down South, is horrified at the idea of New York's hugh fair being paralyzed by militant Negro extremists, engaged in an automobile stall-in as "the mischievous scheme hatched by the Brooklyn chapter of CORE."

John S. Knight, head of the Knight chain of newspapers, another advocate of federal force legislation in the past, has warned in his Sunday column that "the militancy of the Negro struggle for civil right legislation is alienating many normally fair-minded people who have always been sympathetic to the Negro cause".

We hope that South Carolina will be spared the ugly militancy that is being displayed elsewhere in the nation. Those in the Palmetto state who fan the embers of discontent are ill-serving the public.

In this connection, the public should be forewarned about nice-sounding organizations that increase tensions. The Southern Regional Council is such an organization. Supplied with funds from outside the South, the SRCseems dedicated to promoting discord.

We note that Randolph A. Blackeill, voter education representative of the SRC, was at Frogmore in Beaufort County last weekend to attend a conference of the South Carolina Student Council on Human Relations.

Others taking part in the conference were Matthew Perry, one of the NAACP's top lawyers in South Carolina, and Prof. I. William Zartman, of the Department of International Studies at the University of South Carolina.

We trust that university authorities took note of Prof. Zartman's participation in the Council on Human Relations program. We can't believe that Prof. Zartman's appearance with Matthew Perry and other spokesmen for the integration movement did any good for the university as a whole or for the department of which Prof. Zartman is a member. Academic freedom can be stretched beyond the limits of the public interest.

We hope that the trouble afflicting communities from Cleveland, Ohio, to Los Angeles, will make individuals realize the danger of proposing social changes that the country is not prepared to accept. Social irresponsibility this summer could exact a frightful price from all Americans.

The Columbia Record, Columbia

MODERATION IN OUR STATE

South Carolina has been spared, for the large part, the emotional excesses of the Negro Passion simply because a genuinely moderate majority has prevailed in the past. Our state will avoid nasty militancy in the future only if extremism, white or Negro, does not prevail.

If moderation means anything in the Palmetto State, it surely means that free and open discussion will continue, that white Carolinians will talk earnestly and honestly with Negro Carolinians, that responsibility of word and action will be rewarded and that irresponsibility will be condemned.

It means that white Carolinians must recognize intellectual integrity and responsibility in individuals and groups whose judgments they might not accept. It means that Negro Carolinians must temper their impatience and forthrightly confess the honesty and good faith of portions of the white community. It means that both should work energetically to discourage growth of radicalism, white and Negro.

"Moderation" in South Carolina has never meant, nor will it ever mean, an absolute adherence to a vanished segregation or a disquieting demand for impossible, immediate, complete integration. "Moderation" does mean a realistic recognition of an altered system of social relations, likely to change even more in the future.

To be specific, white Carolinians who may be fundamentally segregationists, cannot don a mask of false "moderation" and condemn responsible organizations and individuals as undesirable "militants."

The South Carolina Council on Human Relations, for example, does not merit any coupling with extremist elements in the nation, such as the Brooklyn chapter of CORE. Although we have disagreed with the S.C. Council in the past and likely shall in the future, it provides a valuable discussion table for Negroes and whites.

This past weekend at Frogmore Plantation in Beaufort County, the Student Council held a conference, addressed by Randolph A. Blackwell, voter education representative of the Southern Regional Council; Matthew Perry, an NAACP lawyer from Columbia; and Prof. I. William Zartman of the University of South Carolina.

One of Carolina's most intelligent young Negro attorneys, Mr. Perry has earned the acclaim of his fellow barristers--many of whom fundamentally disagree with him on racial issues. He is a valuable citizen of the state and a distinguished representative of his point of view.

The young people gathered at Beaufort, including African students from Kenya, Nigeria, and Ghana, wanted to expand their knowledge of the African continent beyond that of Black Africa. They wisely called on Professor Zartman, an internationally recognized authority on Northern Africa, to help them. The University professor gave them a talk similar to that which he had delivered earlier to the Air University at Maxwell Air Force Base.

One newspaper in the state, commenting on the conference, wrote: "We trust that university authorities took note of Prof. Zartman's participation in the Council on Human Relations program. We can't believe that Prof. Zartman's appearance with Matthew Perry and other spokesmen for the integration movement did any good for the university as a whole or for the department of which Prof. Zartman is a member. Academic freedom can be stretched beyond the limits of the public interest."

We, too, hope that the University authorities took note of the professor's participation--for a different reason. We hope that not only the University, but the state and its people, will commend Dr. Zartman for sharing his knowledge of Africa with the inquiring students. They now have a better understanding of the continent as a whole, as do the officers of the U.S. Air Force.

The remedy for South Carolina's continuing confrontation over the racial issue cannot be found in the suppression of disagreeable ideas. It can be found (as it always has) in realistic compromise and concession.

Neither inflexible principles of white nor unattainable ideals of Negroes will serve South Carolina in these days. Compromise between the desires of each individual and group and those around them is the way of moderation.

With a firm devotion to law and order, Carolinians will discover the way--somewhere between "Now" and "Never."

HIGH TIME THAT S.C. LEADERS FACE UP TO RACIAL REALITY

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate you on the excellent and very appropriate editorial in last night's (April 16) Record, "Moderation in Our State." I think it is high time that the leaders of this state start facing up to the realities of life and attempt to work things out on a sane and sensible basis.

Under very adverse conditions our school board has made progress on a very limited basis of integration but editorials such as you quoted have continuously placed many of us in my community in a precarious position. However, we have done the best we could and I am hoping that the light will dawn on all parties concerned in the very near future.

I have heard many comments about this editorial and everyone has been most favorable. Keep up the good work!

T. ALLEN LEGARE, JR.
SENATOR, CHARLESTON COUNTY

APRIL 30, 1964
The News and Courier, Charleston

WHAT IS MODERATION?

In a letter to the editor of The Columbia Record, State Sen. T. Allen Legare Jr. of Charleston County has stated:

"I want to take this opportunity to congratulate you on the excellent and very appropriate editorial in last night's (April 16) Record, 'Moderation In Our State,'"

We were struck by the senator's praise, for we recalled the editorial as a rather remarkable departure from the generally prudent position of the Columbia newspapers.

The Record said that the "South Carolina Council on Human Relations, for example, does not merit any coupling with extremist elements in the nation, such as the Brooklyn chapter of CORE." The editorial went out of its way to lavish praise on Matthew Perry of the NAACP as "one of Carolina's most intelligent young Negro attorneys," describing him as a "valuable citizen of the state and distinguished representative of his point of view."

Presumably, Sen. Legare shares this view, since he commends The Record's editorial.

It was a member of the South Carolina Human Relations Council who plunged the 1964 State Democratic convention into an uproar when she voiced a demand for more Negro participation in the party's affairs. There's no record of Sen. Legare backing up the Council member. We wonder why he has not been as candid in public statements in Charleston County as he is in a letter to The Columbia Record.

In that letter Sen. Legare also stated:

"Under very adverse conditions our school board has made progress on a very limited basis of integration but editorials such as you have quoted (a News and Courier editorial citing the character of an interracial group at Frogmore in Beaufort County) have continuously placed many of us in my community in a precarious position."

The News and Courier does not believe that white residents of Charleston County equate integration in the the city schools with "progress". We were not aware that Sen. Legare has felt himself placed in a precarious position because of our advocacy of maximum local control over public schools of Charleston.

Elsewhere on this page today appear excerpts from a Greenville News editorial on school integration under court order in Greenville County. The position of the Greenville News is virtually identical to The News and Courier's position, which Sen. Legare says has put him in a precarious position. Perhaps the Senator ought to feel precarious where he is, but we do not accept responsibility for putting him there.

As for the wider question of "moderation" in South Carolina, we don't believe that responsible, conservative citizens have to praise NAACP lawye or the South Carolina Council on Human Relations in order to be moderate.

Mr. Perry has had good words to say in direct action and street demonstrations. We cannot regard a defender of street demonstrations as a moderate.

The Record says that the answer to problems in South Carolina is to be found in "realistic compromise and concession."

Obviously, we do not rule out compromise, but it should be a two way street. Nor do we shrink from interracial communication.

Our objection to the Frogmore type of operation is domination by professional, militant forces. These people are committed to a cause. We do not approve of radical organizations and their agents, dedicated to imposing their will on the public. They do not represent the community as a whole.

We deplore the prospect that future (conditions) in Charleston, Columbia, or Greenville may be planned over a conference table by academic and doctrinaire standards.

Frogmore has become a symbol for this sort of conference, which we view as a form of plotting against the laws and customs of the region. Martin Luther King--whose communist affiliations are just now coming out in public--was there only last month. Respectable, sober citizens of both races do not wish to be swept away by the professional organizers who are turning the country into a land of turmoil.

Internationally, the United States is in serious trouble because it has followed the course of appeasement.

In South Carolina, the abandonment of a firm, principled stand could result in social and economic disaster.

Northern communities suddenly are discovering that firmness is necessary and that the spirit of compromise can be overdone. It would be tragic if the leadership of communities in the state decided to capitulate to pressure group tactics at the moment when the North and West are waking up to the evil of dictation by organized agitators.

We believe that Sen. Legare should explain himself to the people of Charleston County.

P.S. The Columbia Record is expected to answer this very shortly. Be looking for it. Be aware of the forces at work in S.C.!

S. C. C. H. R. REVIEW

April, 1964

A monthly news review issued by the Information Committee of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations, 1330 Laurel Street, Columbia, S. C.

SENSE OF MOVEMENT AND DIRECTION

The first meeting to be held jointly by the Georgia and South Carolina Councils on Human Relations, March 20-21, at Augusta produced a sense of movement when approximately 400 persons from the two states packed meeting and eating rooms for an exchange of ideas and information, and for fellowship.

SCCHR members were present from twenty-two towns. Program leaders came from four other states, and there was an international visitor! Georgians too were out in strength and with vigor.

Mr. Otis Finley, associate director of the National Urban League, who spoke at the Friday evening meeting shared facts and feelings which forcefully emphasized the necessity of closing the gap between education provided the youth of the United States, urban and rural, Negro and white. A Marshall plan is needed for minority groups, and for the underdeveloped sections of this country, he said.

The federal government has been interested in providing training opportunities for its citizens ever since the New Deal of the Roosevelt Administration, according to Mr. George Butler of The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities. Later, both Republican and Democratic administrations have operated programs to set up equal employment opportunities. At present, both training and fair placement is being provided, he said in urging that full use of the programs be made.

Mr. John Wheeler, President of the Mechanics and Farmers Bank of Durham, N. C., who gives distinguished service to state, regional and national citizens efforts, urged concerned persons to help to inform those who need them most of the job training programs available to them. He emphasized that government employees alone cannot possibly do the job of recruiting, training, and retraining the unemployed and underemployed of the respective states and of the Southern region.

The State of North Carolina has employed Mrs. Sarah Herbin, former director of the merit employment program of the American Friends Service Committee in its new program to make full and fair use of its manpower potential. Mrs. Herbin reported briefly also on Governor Terry's program to eradicate poverty for which the Ford Foundation, several foundations in North Carolina, and the State itself have put up large sums of money.

An encouraging report of South Carolin's Special Training for Economic Progress program (STEP) was made by Mr. Phenizee Ransom, Jr., representative of the Regional Employment Service in Atlanta. Mr. Ransom had just visited Camden and Coosawhatchie where the first training classes have opened.

Persons who want more information about workshop discussions may write the SCCHR office in Columbia.

REBIRTH OF DEMOCRACY

Dr. Lucius Pitts, President of Miles College, Birmingham, Alabama, and a native Southerner was given a stirring ovation after he shared his belief that there will come a rebirth of Democracy and new life for Judeo-Christian teachings when men and women of goodwill in the South work together in freedom for the common good of all. It will be through the efforts of such organizations as the Human Relations Councils that the New South will be born, he said. Dr. Pitts' luncheon address closed the Augusta conference.

STUDENT COUNCIL SPRING CONFERENCE

About 135 persons were at Frogmore on April 10-12 for a program on the theme "New Directions and Continuing Responsibilities." Among speakers and resource persons present were: Mr. Matthew Perry, Attorney of Columbia; Dr. I. W. Zartman, University of South Carolina Department of International Studies; Mr. Randolph A. Blackwell, Southern Regional Council; Rev. H. G. McClain, South Carolina Christian Action Council; and Rev. M. D. McCollum, Methodist District Superintendent.

Guests present included students from Kenya, Nigeria and Ghana, who are attending colleges in North and South Carolina.

The United States Information Agency covered the Conference and taped proceedings for use in broadcasts overseas.

Mr. L. S. James and Mrs. Alice N. Spearman, Council staff, were also present. Mrs. Elizabeth Ledeen, Program Director of SCCHR, is advisor to the SCSCHR.

"STEP" PROGRAM LAUNCHED

When Governor Russell announced in January of this year that over 5½ million dollars in federal grants had been received for new MDTA programs, SCCHR Field Representative L. S. James went to work publicizing the program.

Geared to fight the state's twin enemies of ignorance and unemployment, the program is called STEP (Special Training for Economic Progress). It affords a real and effective way for citizens who so desire to be upgraded in education and employment.

Mr. James has been asked to assist the State Employment Service Coordinator of MDTA in recruiting trainees throughout the state. With 5,000 trainees expected each year of the STEP program, it is likely that the SCCHR recruiting effort will be a major factor in promoting the interest of many citizens, white and Negro, in this program.

In addition to his work in the STEP program, Mr. James has been working effectively in helping to implement programs for the Area Redevelopment Act (ARA), a federal program for which 24 South Carolina counties are eligible.

LOCAL COUNCIL NEWS

The Sumter Council heard SCCHR President Fred M. Reese, Jr., at its April meeting. Mr. Reese spoke of the need to motivate students to apply for TEC and other programs now open to qualified persons. Discussion was held on employment opportunity and needs in the community.

The Columbia Council heard Bethlehem Center Director, Miss Thelma Heath and Case Worker Herbert Dodd at their April meeting. Mr. Dodd related his experiences in working with street gangs and current efforts underway to meet needs of Negro youth in the Columbia Area.

The Rock Hill Council had a member of the Governor's Committee of 100 as their guest speaker in April. Present also were Rock Hill representatives of the State Employment Security Commission. The meeting was held in a government building and lively discussion followed the presentations. Visitors were present from York and Chester, and SCCHR staff from Columbia.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS

SCCHR Executive Committee members met at the Council office on April 21 to hear of the recent foundation exploration trip of the Executive Director, Mrs. Alice N. Spearman.

A workshop for local council officers and key committee chairmen was set for May 16.

The Executive Committee expressed determination to work toward effecting closer coordination and sharing of resources with the nine local groups strategically located across the state.

Persons attending the Executive Committee meeting, in addition to the officers, were Mr. Austin V. Edwards, State Farmers Home Administration official; Dr. R. J. Moore, a local college professor, and Dr. Durham Counts, Columbia pharmacist.

PROSPECTUS 1964-1965

Suggested Program Development and Outreach for

South Carolina Student Council on Human Relations

A. Expansion of the Tutorial Program in Communities in Which Colleges are Located. It is suggested that members of SCSCHR with an adult adviser attempt to work out a cooperative arrangement with the schools for a tutorial program. If this is not feasible, it is urged that students attempt to set up such a service in cooperation with church or community groups for an after school program.

It is also suggested that work may be undertaken with three different types of groups. (1) College preparatory, which would work with students who have the potential for successful college work, who need to upgrade themselves in some academic field and who should be given emotional and psychological under-girding. These groups, hopefully, would correlate with the recruiting program of SCSCHR. (2) The under-achiever and potential dropout who needs friendly interest, encouragement and help in order to complete high school work. (3) A readiness program for young children whose home background or emotional problems have made it difficult for them to adjust to school. This group is very important since statistics in South Carolina are still showing a very large dropout rate between the first and second grades. No compulsory school attendance law requires them to stay in school!

B. Into the Mainstream of Campus Life. The time has come for SCSCHR to move beyond a small committed fellowship of the concerned among students, to confront and challenge the campus in vigorous ways, it was suggested by many students at the recent conference of the Student Council. This may be done by attempting to involve key student leaders such as Student Government officers, Editors of Student newspapers, presidents of organizations, in some phase of the program of SCSCHR. These may be sympathetic or hostile, but should be invited. Furthermore, the Council should lead the way in creating an atmosphere on the campus in which dissent is possible and varying points of view may be heard. This means a willingness to listen to those who disagree with us. Interpretation of the program of SCSCHR and publicity are needed.

Wide distribution of materials to a broad cross-section of student leadership is suggested. For instance, the compilation of the best of student thinking which shows generally an open-minded attitude or progressive approach to social issues, might be published as a service of SCSCHR. This is especially needed because of the limitations and bias of news media in South Carolina.

Providing and scheduling in the colleges of South Carolina outstanding lecturers who will deal with public affairs or human relations in broad aspects. It is to be hoped that in the lectureships Negro speakers might be brought to the white or predominantly white colleges, a practice common in the outstanding southern colleges and universities for decades. This has never, to our knowledge, been done in a single white college in South Carolina.

C. "Operation Search" should be continued with intensified efforts at recruiting qualified Negro students to enter the recently integrated colleges of South Carolina or to apply to colleges not yet opened to Negroes. The group conferences held during the past year with high school students by members of the Public Relations Committee of SCSCHR, under the able chairmanship of Mr. Harvey Gantt, should be continued on a wide scale and should be implemented by college preparatory tutorial programs in various communities. This must be conceived as a long range program of utmost importance, for fears and feelings of inferiority, bred of generations of segregation, must be overcome. Psychological support and undergirding as well as academic preparation of students are needed. In addition, Negro community leaders, teachers, and parents must be involved in conferences concerning an increase in number of Negro applicants. For the full development of the state and its future leadership, it is essential to move "beyond tokenism" at the college level.

D. Christian Citizenship Seminar, sponsored in cooperation with the Christian Action Council, bringing together a group of mature students from all of the colleges, for an intensive study of state government and of public issues facing the state, has been suggested. This seminar would include conferences with state officials, interviews with home county legislators, visits to committee hearings or to sessions of the legislature. A primary emphasis in the discussion program would be that of the role of the Christian in politics. A successful bi-racial seminar of this nature for adults was sponsored last year by the Christian Action Council and could be a very illuminating and meaningful experience for students.

E. Panels of Student Speakers, bi-racial student teams to be made available to church, civic or college groups. These teams would be trained by capable faculty or staff persons for able presentation of public issues of primary concern. Skill in leading discussions would also be stressed. These panels would demonstrate to the larger public the ways in which members of both races may work together. The Columbia Intercollegiate group has already sent out teams to high schools on the general subject of preparation for college. The proposal is that this type of community service be broadened to include other areas and that both adult and youth groups be reached.

QUARTERLY REPORT TO SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
March, April, May

MEMBERSHIP INCREASE - We have 93 new members this quarter, Atlanta had 36 of these whose names were reported without dues refund 32 members are from our new chapter in Athens. This group is well organized. It has persuaded the Mayor to appoint a real bi-racial committee. It is working on a program to persuade Negro teachers and students to attend the University. Jack May, a professor at the University is chairman. The group is a good cross section; town and gown; Jewish, Catholic, Protestant; good representation from Negro factions, the new more belligerant leadership, the old more conservation.

We have made our first organizational efforts in Jesup, Georgia and believe we have enough support to move ahead with a council in the fall.

We have worked with a group in Statesboro who are struggling to do something constructive in this fiels. We may have a council here by Christmas.

The following is a comparison of membership fees collected over the last three years. This is the amount we had collected each year by the end of June. It is the net amount after refunds to locals: October 1 to July 1, 1962 - $1359; October 1 to July 1, 1963 - $1436; October 1 to July 1, 1964 - $1230 + 902 = $2132 (902 is the amount Atlanta owes us, not having paid any dues for 6 Months).

FINANCES - We received a $3000 grant from Anna Lord Strauss during this period plus a $100 donation from another out of state contact.

FUND RAISING IN GEORGIA - As a result of the mailing of the Albany pamphlet to members, we received $796.50 to date. As a result of mailing the Albany pamphlet to non-members, we received $107.00. As a result of mailing "To Secure These Rights" to non-members, we received $228.00.

We are planning to approach Georgia big givers with a folder (grey enclosed). Although these mailings were an appeal for funds, we wished particularly to get the materials distributed and read.

The Albany pamphlet has caused one derogatory phone call and one letter of disapproval. Both were Albany ministers. The general acceptance has been good.

MAILINGS - We have mailed the Albany pamphlet to one official in each town in Georgia over 1000 population.

We have also mailed the "Questions and Answers" pamphlet on the Civil Rights Bill to 400 officials in Georgia towns. 10,000 of "To Secure These Rights" have been distributed. Twenty community leaders distributed 5000, 2229 have been mailed to individuals the remainder have been sent on request.

One other letter to church people enclosing a reprint from Readers Digest "I Wonder Why" is being mailed asking for memberships.

We have distributed to our chapters various materials concerning the Civil Rights Bill; as many copies as we could get of the SRC folder (1500) and the Potomac Institute folder, plus several reprints from editorials and magazines.

We have attempted to organize local efforts in Savannah, Augusta, Macon and Columbus to work for peaceful compliance and for preparation for desegregation of schools this fall. Particular emphasis was placed on Savannah where we worked with a community group rather than the council. The councils generally have done a good job in working for compliance. For instance, when a local lawyer (not sympathetic) talked to the Brunswick Council, and asked in a rather pompous way "Have any of you really read the bill?" Over half of the 75 people present calmly raised their hands.

CONFERENCES - We held our Spring Conference at Augusta in March, in cooperation with South Carolina. This was well attended. In fact, far beyond our expectations.

We also cooperated with the National Sharecroppers Fund in a conference at Fort Valley, which was successful and led to our agreeing to house Jac Wasserman while he works in Georgia and other southern states with problems of rural people.

The Director traveled her usual 4000 miles, with many stops at filling stations, truck stops, restaurants, each place trying to encourage people to comply with the law when it passed. The general feeling was still that "it will not pass", "Russell will look after us".

We have continued to work quietly behind the scenes to help Partners for Progress do a useful job. The quarter has been filled primarily with efforts toward securing compliance for the bill.

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Quarterly Report

March 1964 - May 1964

Explorations with Foundations

The first week in March was spent by the SCCHR executive director in New York exploring with the few foundations contacted on a previous visit in March 1962 mutuality of interests. Interviews were held also with a few foundations not previously contacted.

The Doris Duke Foundation and The Edgar Stern Family Fund seemed to be receptive to needs which SCCHR would like to meet by providing expanded services. However no requests have been presented yet by SCCHR for grants.

At that time the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund was in the process of study and of interacting with such foundations as Field, Ford, Carnegie, Rockerfeller, et al as to unmet needs in the broad area of civil rights and needs of minorities around which it might effectively expand beyond its initial interne program.

Brief contacts were made with each of the above-named groups and cordial responses were experienced. It was sensed that rethinking of goals and functions is taking place and that there would be receptivity to requests for grants. However it was indicated that a regional approach and broadly based and conceived proposals would be favored.

American Assembly at Duke University

Upon the invitation of Dr. Douglas M. Knight, president of Duke University, the SCCHR executive director attended the southeastern meeting. Valuable contacts were made with leaders and participants. The experience was beneficial also because of the range of viewpoints represented and consensus reached. (Will gladly share findings upon request)

Georgia and South Carolina Councils Meet

See attached copies of March and April SCCHR Review for announcement and report of the conference in Augusta, Georgia held jointly on March 20-21 by these two state councils on human relations. Excellent programs, participation, and responses.

Discussions with SRC and VEP Staff

On March 23, the SCCHR executive director reported to the SRC director and field representative concerning reactions to her explorations with New York foundations for possible grants. Dr. Dunbar authorized her to make a written proposal to the Field Foundation. This was done about mid-April and two copies provided SRC.

Mr. Randolph Blackwell of the Voter Education Project discussed with Mrs. Spearman progress of the project in South Carolina and accepted an invitation to present on April 11, at the spring conference of SCSCHR, a film on activities of a political coalition in Texas.

Student Work-Study Program

Arrangements were made with Kalamazoo College, Kalamazoo, Michigan by the SCCHR executive director for Miss Ginnie Good, a sophmore, to work with SCCHR from March 26 until June 15. In addition to her activities in connection with the SCSCHR which will be reported by Mrs. Ledeen, advisor, she made an informal study to learn what is being done through the South Carolina Public Welfare Department to use U. S. Department of H. E. W. funds to develop a program of day care centers for children of needy families.

She set up a schedule of contacts for Dr. and Mrs. Hendrik J. Van Zyl of South Africa whose visit to Columbia on June 11 and 12 had been planned with Dr. Frank Loescher.

In addition, Miss Good made field trips with the executive director to Rock Hill, Inman, Spartanburg and Newberry. In Rock Hill both students from Winthrop and Friendship Junior College met with members of The Rock Hill Council on Human Relations and decided for the first time to form a local bi-racial student council. She assisted also with general office work.

On evaluating her work, we have rated her contribution as exceptional and consider the arrangement one well worth repeating.

Local Councils

In an effort to lanch a new council on human relations in Cheraw, the executive director met with SCCHR members and friends there early in May. Interest and enthusiasm ran high and communication seemed honest and free. Mr. A. M. Secrest, publisher and editor of The Cheraw Chronicle participated and reported the meeting quite casually and naturally in the next issue of his weekly newspaper.

A few days later, twenty-five Negro children applied for admission to the all-white public schools. Immediately, it was assumed that the exploratory meeting had planned and plotted the integration of schools. Mr. Secrest and other white persons have said that they were definitely "on the spot" but have continued to meet at intevals of about every two weeks.

Although the number of Negroes to attend has continued to grow, it has become difficult for lucal leaders to secure the participation of additional white persons.

It continues to be a problem to find enough staff time to give the intensive services needed at the local level to get local councils off to a good start and to keep them active and vital.

Persistent requests for a Spartanburg county council have been met by staff visits to Inman and to Spartanburg by Mrs. Spearman, Mr. James and Miss Good. There have been return visits to Columbia and hopefully a council may be formed in Spartanburg before the end of the year - again, intensive work in needed to profit from spade work which is being done.

A concerted effort is being made by the SCCHR chairman, the executive committee, and the staff to strengthen and enlarge programs of the local councils on human relations.

The SCCHR executive committee has scheduled for the first time regular monthly meetings and thus hopes to get under and stay with the jobs to which each member is committed individually and those they are undertaking jointly.

An all-day working session was held at a Columbia Motel on Saturday, May 16 which was attended by representatives from local councils. Local council chairmen worked with Mr. Reese - program chairmen worked with Dr. J. Sherrard Rice, SCCHR vice chairman and Dr. Robert J. Moore, member-at-large of the executive committee. Plans for the 1964 annual meeting program were projected, and program ideas and information shared. Those concerned with membership policies and enlargement were led by a co-chairman of the SCCHR membership committee, Mr. Austin V. Edwards. The SCCHR chairman of finance and the treasurer directed the workshop on finance in which Dr. J.M. Dabbs participated.

The workshops on May 16 followed-up on beginnings made at an enlarged meeting of the board of directors held at the Wade Hampton Hotel on February 2, 1964.

It is proposed to set in motion continual interchange which will require periodic joint meetings of this kind.

1964 Membership Efforts to Focus on Columbia

On May 28, Mr. Paul Anthony, SRC director of field services, assisted in planning an extensive membership drive to begin in Columbia in late August and terminate September 30. A mass mailing to approximately 2,000 persons, a large number of small coffee or coke parties to interpret SCCHR, a large banquet and systematic visitation by teams will be carried out.

SCCHR Promotional Piece

Mrs. Florence Robin, SRC consultant, has drawn from the request and the program prospectus sent to the Field Foundation, and from issues of SCCHR Review appropriate information about SCCHR which she has put together both artistically and skillfully in a brochure, Reach for Tomorrow, which will be available for distribution by July 15. Mrs. Robin spent a day in Columbia conferring with the executive director on April 29. Further collaboration to follow.

Staff Participation in Washington Meetings

Mr. James and Mrs. Spearman attended public hearings on Farm Labor conducted by the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor held in Washington, D. C., May 18 and 19.

While in Washington, Mrs. Spearman held a conference with Mr. Lawrence Houstoun, director of special programs, Office of Manpower Automation and Training (OMAT) re SCCHR's trainee recruitment for South Carolina's Special Training for Economic Progress (STEP) program. Mr. Houstoun is currently serving with a task force set up by Mr. Sargent Shriver who will direct the Office of Economic Opportunity. (OEO)

Plans were made to have Mr. Houstoun visit South Carolina early in June in line with the two important interests he represents.

Miss Good, Miss Mary Harrison, (office stenographer) and Mrs. Spearman participated in the special services held in Washington on the morning of May 18 which were set up by the Commission on The Church and Race of The National Council of Churches. Invitation had been extended to Mrs. Spearman by telephone the previous Friday.

SCCHR Continues to Assist "STEP"

The Aiken, Rock Hill and Sumter councils on human relations have been active in clarifying policies and in informational and recruitment programs for the STEP program. Numerous SCCHR members-at-large have also played varied and valuable "enabling" roles.

Outstanding has been the skill and efficiency with which Mr. James has worked with the government agencies conducting the STEP program. Also, he has established excellent rapport with rural leaders in the 24 South Carolina counties eligible for the Area Redevelopment Administration (ARA) programs. His report which is attached will outline the leadership training and other activities in which he has engaged this quarter.

For Quick Consumption: Tiny Tid-bits

On April 30, the S. C. State Baptist Convention held a conference on The Church and Race. Called to exchange viewpoints concerning proposed integration at Furman University, it provided a forum for Biblical segregationists and white supremacists - a traumatic experience for the SCCHR executive director, a few Christian Baptist ministers and laymen known by her, and a few young leaders whom she met for the first time.

On May 12, the Columbia Chamber of Commerce (C.of C) after 15 months of study proposed a Citizens Design for Progress which was adopted. Fifteen bi-racial committees will be set up; two of these, Community Relations and Attitudes and The Human Element, will deal with facets of human relations. SCCHR will participate.

SCCHR is cooperating with the S. C. Association of Senior Citizens which held its 1964 annual meeting in West Columbia on May 13.

On April 16, Mr. Reese was speaker at the monthly meeting of the Sumter Council on Human Relations.

Mr. Ira Kaye, attorney and valued SCCHR member phoned Mrs. Spearman to report his appointment as director of the Peace Corps in Iran for the next two years.

Negroes have entered the Democratic primaries in several South Carolina cities and counties this year. Candidates for the House of Representatives of the S. C. General Assembly and for the school board in district 1, Columbia, have sought advise and information from SCCHR.

On May 27 at the fifty-third annual commencement, Morris College, Sumter, South Carolina conferred upon Mrs. Alice N. Spearman the degree of Doctor of Humanities.

SCCHR has called together several times this quarter small groups to work with Courtney Siceloff in assessing the situation in Columbia for orderly compliance with civil rights legislation, when enacted. The executive director has interviewed a sampling of the managers of restaurants in Columbia and has found negative response from only one source, restrained acquiescence in the majority of cases, and a few quite positively oriented persons.

Checks have been made directly or indirectly in the larger towns; reports are encouraging.

At the request of Mrs. Septima Clark, Mrs. Spearman participated in a panel and discussion presented in Charleston in cooperation with a national committee of The Congregational - Christian Church in April.

In addition to field trips referred to above, the executive director visited Newberry twice this quarter; once to establish needed contacts with two key faculty members and those responsible for the STEP program and the second time to participate in a presentation by the Columbia student council on human relations to the human relations section of the Newberry College, Student Christian Association.

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

TO: Paul Anthony

FROM: Katherine Jones

QUARTERLY REPORT: March, April, May, 1964

THE STATE:

This quarter has seen the emergence of politics as the primary interest of the state, and of a number of the leaders of the Council. George Grider, president of the Memphis Chapter, has announced for Congress from the Ninth District which is Memphis, and no successor has been found by the Council there. The former president, Hunter Lane, Jr. was so involved in politics, first as chairman of Ross Prichard's unsuccessful candidacy for Congress in 1962 and then in his own successful race for City Commissioner that he literally did not have time to lead the Memphis Chapter. Now Mr. Grider's candidacy has resulted in his withdrawal from the Chapter presidency. Both of these men have profited from their exposure to this inter-racial grouping, but the Chapter has suffered.

In Knoxville, Mayor Duncan has announced for Congress, and will undoubtedly be the Republican candidate. Nashville is mired in politics. Bill Willis, our state president is managing Ross Bass's campaign for the Senate. Bass is being opposed by Governor Clement, and an East Tennessee businessman M. M. Bullard. The race is between Clement and Bass. Organized labor has endorsed Bass, which means a departure from the recent leadership of organized labor; Matt Lynch has been a public supporter of Clement. The Tennessee Voters Council will meet in Nashville on June 27, and it is unknown what their decision will be. It would appear impossible for them to support Clement with his outright statement that he would not have voted for the Civil Rights bill and his refusal to sign the Code presented to him by the Governor's Commission on Human Relations which he appointed in January.

Now before the Metropolitan Council of Nashville and Davidson County (our combined city-council government) is a public accommodations ordinance. A special committee has been appointed to consider it, with the vice-mayor as its chairman. The proposed ordinance (see enclosed) is almost a direct copy of the St. Louis ordinance, but the weaknesses show up in the attempt to apply it too strictly to the Nashville scene. The Mayor's Committee which has operated during the past year is clearly only a Chamber of Commerce Committee of bankers and confines its concerns to the direct interests of merchants. Its goal, as clearly stated by its chairman, is to keep the "cash registers ringing on Church Street." It has refused to consider schools, parks, etc., as within its province.

The smaller communities of the state seem just as deeply immersed in politics. There are a number of Republicans announcing for state and Federal offices, and they are young, energetic and hardworking; they are also Goldwater supporters. They will undoubtedly make some headway in the state. It is to be recalled that Tennessee has gone Republican in the last two presidential elections.

Two of our 9 Congressmen voted for the Civil Rights bill. Richard Fulton Congressman from the 5th District(Nashville) will have a tough time, and his liberal record is under constant attack. Bass is a recent convert on the civil rights issue. Captain Anderson, who gave Clement considerable opposition as an independent in the Governor's race, is running for Congress. Along with all of the other nine candidates, he has opposed the Civil Rights bill, but at least says that "one is needed".

The performance of our two state Senators is well known. Since Walters was Governor Clement's appointment to the Kefauver seat, we must credit his negative vote as reflecting Clement's stand as well as his own. Gore's performance leaves us all mystified. The problem here is that his Republican opposition is pure Goldwater, and farther to the right than Gore.

There will be no settling down in Tennessee until after the August primary, and then only to regroup for the November general election.

THE COUNCIL STAFF

Mrs. Dorothy Webster resigned in April, leaving the Council April 15 with a week's notice. The job was reclassified, and a new specifications were written by a special committee of the Board, Miss Ectoria Henry, a 1964 graduate in Business Education of Tenn. A & I State University, came to us on June 1 as a clerk typist. She has set about in an orderly and industrious way to organize the office processes. However, we were without a clerical assistant for six weeks, and this meant that the Executive had to carry on many of the necessary functions. During the 10 day April absence of Kay Jones from the office Mrs. Marian Fuson, president of the Nashville Council carried on full time devoting most of her time to work on the Nashville Council, which needed considerable time, and attention. As a result, there has been some good organizational process, with lists of names of members willing to do certain kinds of work, and the work of committees on program, housing, and membership already underway.

Memphis

Louise Young and some of the Memphis women chapter members tried to visit some of the rural West Tennessee communities to recruit members, or at least arouse interest. They were received with fear and uneasiness, and did not actually recruit members. A few new members have been added from Memphis. The United Church Women have been equally unsuccessful in stimulating UCW groups in West Tenn. outside of Memphis. The enclosed clippings will give you some information about some of the other related matters - the Juvenile Jury, Dr. Price's recognition, and the Memphis tutorial project. Also note the Univ. of Tenn. announcement which appeared in a Negro newspaper.

On the Civil Rights Act, Memphis will move to conform. There will be business leadership for the job, spurred to activity by a large and militant NAACP. There will be grumbling and accusations, but Memphis will have only sporadic resistence, and a large amount of grumbling.

Nashville

Nashville has been in turmoil most of the quarter. Before that started in late April, there was held a one day conference at Vanderbilt Divinity School in which selected clergy of all faiths were invited from the middle Tenn. area. I believe that about 150 were invited, and 100 attended. Ralph McGill was the morning speaker, and the afternoon was devoted to discussions, and some panel discussion. Out of this has grown the just organized Nashville Council on Religion and Race, headed by an Episcopal clergyman, Father Robert Insko. All of this activity is belated follow-up on the Chicago conference of January 1963. During the afternoon session I sensed considerable frustration, and difference of opinion as to the role of clergymen in the present situation.

The march of 150 clergymen to city hall in early May was impressive, and important. It was the first and only such stand that Nashville had experienced. The great majority were white, and many of them came from the ranks of clergy working for publishing companies, etc. This again was an ecumenical movement, which began with a service at the Catholic catherdral, and wound up in the office of the Mayor.

Also in May, Vanderbilt University had a 2½ day meeting under the title "Impact". It was open to the public but had excellent attendance from students. Ralph McGill and Kirkpatrick of Richmond Virginia were the opening speakers on Friday night, with the introductory statements begin made by Chancellor Heard. The next day there were addresses by businessmen, SNCC, labor leaders, etc. The affair wound up with a jazz session on Saturday night. The whole program had considerable effect on the university area and in the city. While there were supporters of all shades of opinion, the meetings were obviously not "stacked" for any one speaker, and the audience was not rudely partisan.

All of this had been preceded by the formation of the Joint University Council on Human Relations, an outgrowth of the combined efforts of students from Peabody, Vanderbilt and Scarritt to desegregate nearby restaurants. Officers were elected for next year. Our office furnished stenographic service, assisted their organizational efforts and welcomed them to TCHR affiliation. (See enclosed by-laws)

From an initial early April meeting in Nashville, there has come the Southern Student Organizing Committee, also working out of this office. SSOC hopes to enlist the southern moderate on basically white campuses in the south. Among the recent college graduates now working on this project is a realization that there are open-minded white students on southern campuses, who are open to education and persuasion. They cannot be recruited by the more militant Negro-led organizations such as CORE and SNCC. They can be reached by a different approach. The problems confronting this group involve funds to meet the expenses operation and the need for salary of an executive director for full time work next fall. They have the director, Sue Thrasher of Nashville, but no money. Sue is well aware of the problems which will confront such an approach, and the constant pressure on the group both from within and without to adopt a more militant approach. Again, TCHR through the executive, has furnished space supplies and some guidance.

The foregoing grace notes on Nashville were incidental to the uproar in late April caused when both Negro and white students sat in the streets of Nashville to protest segregation at Morrison's and at segregated mid-town restuarants such as Krystal. Although they don't admit it, the goals, and philosophy of the demonstration evolved after they got in the street. There was undoubtedly police brutality, along with general unruliness. SNCC representatives went to the schools and recruited high school and junior high school students. These youngsters swarmed over local SNCC headquarters for days in a carefree skip-school manner. There was a good deal of learning freedom songs, hand-clapping etc. Eventually, there was some training in non-violence. SNCC representatives poured into Nashville from various parts of the country. Fisk students took up the demonstrations at night, and were orderly. Morrisons had 50 of the demonstrators arrested, and got a temporary injunction which denied the demonstrators the use of the sidewalks. Still they came. The injunction was later made permanent. During this time there were "sip-ins" by whites, and some arrests in these demonstrations. Bouncers at Morrison's were as numerous as customers. Many diners totally unrelated to the demonstration were turned away because the nervous management thought that they looked like students. The demonstrations in front of Morrison's ended soon after the permanent injunction, but really because the college students had to complete exams, and the parents of the younger students were complaining to the schools about their children being tolled away from the schools without permission. Sympathy of the majority of the citizens was not with the students - because of the youth and actions of the demonstrators. The police were called in large numbers each evening to keep order, and haul the demonstrators away. Business leaders protested the actions of the students, and the Mayor made heated and inaccurate accusations. As usual, however, it got the business group into action. They had not met for more than six months. They then began to bring pressure on restaurants to desegregate, and this has continued.

During the uproar, Bill Willis as president of TCHR had a three hour meeting in his office one night with representatives of the student group, ministers, Chamber of Commerce secretary, etc. This was a wide-open discussion, and resulted in helping the business representatives to see that the demands being made were serious. A later session was not as successful as planned because of certain conflicts in time, etc. However, the Chamber of Commerce President was in attendance,(Other business leaders had agreed to come, but the Chamber president undoubtedly discouraged their doing so, agreeing that he would handle it. The Vice Mayor arrived after his earlier appointment was completed. Mr. Cecil Bauer of Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, and Chamber president, could not really take in the demand for a public accommodations ordinance. He kept insisting that a quiet voluntary effort would bring the whole community around in time. Despite his protestations, all in sweet reasonableness, I understand that he was impressed.

Hate groups have not been absent from Nashville. Dr. Carl McIntire of the International Council of Christian Churches was more interested in discrediting the traditional demoninations than in segregation. His meeting was poorly attended, in relation to the size of the auditorium which holds about 2,500, with less than 500 persons there. It was a rather pitiful performance, much like a country church revival of 30 years ago.

The Nashville Community Relations Council held an open meeting on June 18 with 100 in attendance to give information about desegregation, and to discuss what the Civil Rights Act will mean in Nashville. There was no news media coverage although it had been promised. However, the meeting was considered successful, except for the sparcity of Negroes in the audience.

RURAL AREAS

It is in the rural areas that there will be determined non-compliance with the Civil Rights Act. Some of the counties adjacent to major cities will be guided by the way the cities handle the matter. On a recent visit to Franklin, Tennessee (Williamson County) I was told by Negroes that "we can gain more in civil rights by what is done in Nashville than on our own initiative." This came from a group actively working with some success for the desegregation of schools. In the area of public accommodations they are probably right in depending on the initiative of the cities.

Two other visits will point up the variation in the Tennessee situation. Bolivar, the county seat of Hardeman county, is adjacent to Haywood county where there was national coverage of the eviction of sharecroppers in 1960. The situation is still unresolved, although an uneasy truce exists. My visit was in response to requests from Negro citizens in Bolivar who are desperate for jobs. The enclosed letters relating to Bolivar will tell the story there. There is a crass disregard for the welfare of Negro citizens. While I heard no real threats of physical violence, it was apparent that the County Judge and the new industries were not considering any broader employment opportunities for Negroes. New industry, operating on a shoe-string, is anxious to please the officials not to disrupt any community mores by differing with the general employment policies. The County Judge states all of the old bromides about Negroes who don't want to work, the need for Negroes to get together and request an industry solely for Negro employment, etc. All of TCHR communications with Federal Government agencies about employment in government contract firms have been futile. Evidently there is no one source for working on contract agencies. Meantime, there seems little hope for really broader employment for Negroes in counties such as Hardeman which border on Mississippi.

Cleveland, Tennessee is just east of Chattanooga and on the Georgia border. The Negro population makes up about 6 per cent of the county. There are a few militants among the Negroes. The Negro city high school had 8 graduates this year, and there are only 12 in the junior class. This high school serves not only the entire Negro population of the county, but students from an adjacent county. Negroes are employed in mostly menial jobs in the textile and manufacturing plants there. The personnel manager of Burlington Mills told me that Negroes are employed in "all parts of the plant," but insisted that he did not know how many or exactly what positions they held. I am sure that they have employed a few Negroes in positions they have not held before, but only enough to retard any investigation of their contract. The Mayor received me cheerfully, but was frank in his statement of unwillingness to work toward integration of the school, saying that to do so might disrupt the community, and that he felt sure that it was just as good a school as the large ones for whites run by the county and city. If demonstrations came, he is going to see that there was no publicity, and it would all end there as "all they want is publicity". There has been some integration of lunch counters and some restaurants, and there is a beginning United Church Women's group. The Negro population is small and fearful of making demands. The young and ambitious Negro high school graduates get out. The white community leadership is heavily Republican conservative. The Negroes vote Democratic, and the whole community is now in the throes of the Congressional campaign. There is a large sector of the population which is under-privileged white, employed in the stove factories and textile mills. In addition Cleveland is the national headquarters of the Assembly of God with a publishing Company there, and a sizable operation. This adds to the rigid fundamentalist atmosphere. My guest for white support was not really productive. A long talk with the young Episcopal minister did not raise my hopes much as he is anxious not to be classified with the "trouble makers," and has such personal animosity toward "that whole Kennedy family."

Oak Ridge

The group in Oak Ridge, is off on a guest to integrate the barber shops. They have had no success. They are considering starting a barber shop, and would like to make it a cooperative. I think that Oak Ridge actually will comply with the Civil Rights Act, since so much of their industry depends on government contracts. Housing is still difficult to integrate in Oak Ridge. There is no shortage of housing for sale, but it is more difficult to get integrated housing for rent.

Chattanooga

The Chattanooga Council has had some significant activity this past spring and summer, especially with their attempts at an enrichment program. (See June Newsletter). There has been a change of climate in Chattanooga since the election of Mayor Kelley. He is no great liberal, but has been anxious to gain Negro support. He has appointed a Human Relations Committee, and while they are not generally known, they have been working. As a result, there are Negroes employed in city hall, and in some of the retail firms. The "Regional Conference on Jobs, Freedom and Citizenship Responsibility" held in April had about 400 persons in attendance, with sessions varying from 50 to 200. I am somewhat dubious about the carryover of such meetings, but the sponsoring group felt that it was worthwhile. It had good press coverage in the Chattanooga Times, and there was considerable positive approach to problems, such as employment. As one of the sponsors, I assume that you have a report of the meeting itself. When I called on Mayor Kelley following the meeting I found him approving of the conference, and of the goals of Negro leadership. He told of his refusal to meet Governor Wallace when he visited Chattanooga, and of the white pressure on his stand.

Chattanooga will go along with the Civil Rights Act. There will be some resistence from powerful church and business leadership, but it will come along resentfully. The University of Chattanooga is taking Negroes in summer school at the undergraduate level.

Jackson

Vernon Jordan will give you a report on "Civil Rights Day" on May 2. While this seemed a fairly amateur effort, it probably was important as the first open effort of college students from the area to get together. The Jackson situation has deteriorated severely, with the Citizens Council being largely in control of the city. White moderates have been driven out of the city, including nearly all of our former supporters. A sustained vilification of white moderates has been sucessful. Political and business leadership has reneged on promises to desegregate certain employment and places of public accommodation under pressure of the Citizen's Council.

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

The following Tennessee School Systems are listed as having desegregation grades 1 through 12:

Oak Ridge - but geographic patterns restrict the amount of segregation. They do have at least 1 (and this year 2 I think) teachers in one previously white school - Robertson Junior High School.

Hawkins County - with 108 of a possible 197 Negro students in school with whites.

Humphreys County - 80 Negro children out of 164 Negro students in school with whites.

Montgomery County - officially desegregated but only 2 Negroes out of 831 in school with whites.

Obion County - 120 Negro students out of 400 in school with whites.

Putnam County - Fully integrated including teaching staff; 105 out of 105.

Rutherford County - 27 out of 1,200, and all but 1 of the 27 is in Smyrna where Sewart Air Base is located.

Wilson County - ordered desegregated in 1962, but now before Federal Court again because they have evaded the court order. There are 25 out of 800 Negroes in school with whites, and they have had to overcome severe obstacles.

Knoxville - total desegregation will be in effect in September 1964. Geographic patterns of living will limit the number, but Knoxville will make progress in school desegregation, and will comply with Civil Rights Act without turmoil.

TENNESSEE ADVISORY COMMITTEE, U. S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Since this was under discussion at the June meeting at SRC, it seems worthy of comment. The Commission has limped along here for two years. The chairman, Mr. H. O. Forgy, Jr. of Jackson, may not be the most adroit Chairman, but he has tried, and with very little support from most of the members. Mr. S. Shavin has been a staunch supporter, but that is really the only one who has exhibited his real concern during these two years. George Barrett is secretary, and while his interest and assistance during the first year was high he has not carried out the duties of his office during the past year. Mr. Forgy has depended on him to fulfill his agreements, and his failure to do so has contributed to the defeat of the chairman's valiant attempts to make the commission into a visable organization. Mrs. Martha Ragland is vice-chairman, but has been occupied with the final illness and death of her mother, and was then in New York for a 7 weeks assignment for United Church Women in 1964. When the public meeting was set up here in April, only Mr. Shavin, Mr. Forgy and Mr. Sugarman from Memphis attended. Sugarman arrived only after personal persuasion from Sam Simmons. George Barrett was not present because his mother was buried that day. Dr. David Rogers, a member of the Commission and the author of the narrative report on hospital care (copy enclosed) was there, but did not participate as one of the Commission. He is head of Internal Medicine at Vanderbilt University Medical School, and since he had criticized the medical school felt he could not be identified as a Committee member. Only about 12 people came to make statements, and publicity was poor.

Our Council paid for all but the final draft of the report. We are still trying to get that cost out of the Commission. They have agreed to pay the bill but after two months we still have not obtained payment from them. We are still trying.

As currently organized the Advisory Committee is not a viable organization. The current membership will not take responsibility, as indicated by their performance during the past year. There has been pressure from some of the white and Negro members to have the chairman replaced because he is a Republican. His political affiliation and his economic conservatism could serve the Commission very well if other members were really willing to support him. All of the work, with the exception of the chairman's largely futile efforts, and the hospital report has been done by our office. We gathered the biographical data for submission of names to the Commission two years ago, but at that time there was a determined attempt not to have women on it. Mrs. Ragland was appointed a member through the pressure of Senator Kefauver. Mrs. Jean Russell was a carry-over from the old Commission, but her mother's long illness meant that she never attended but 1 meeting prior to her resignation. She was not replaced. If the Commission is to function there will have to be consideration given to dedication of potential members and their time and willingness to work on it.

Respectfully submitted,

Katherine Jones

Dear Paul,

The reason I need a month off is to decuperate. You know I have 3 foster children. One graduated from high school in May and will be going off to college this fall. Another one had a birthday June 12th. He was 14 & I'm looking into a military school for him this fall. The oldest girl was planning to be married next December and decided on June 26th instead. So you see I have need of relaxation. But will probably get far from it as I plan to take the 2 youngest & make a 3500 to 4000 mile trip to the east.

Write you after my return August 1st

THE HOUSTON COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

June 24, 1964

Mr. Paul Anthony, Field Director
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

From all indications you had a grand meeting. My only regret is that I was not there.

I'm really going to surprise you this time--getting my quarterly report to you before the quarter is up. Rush! Rush! Rush! I'm leaving on vacation next Tuesday after work and will be gone a month. No, the Council is not giving months vacation with pay. Ha! I'm taking a leave of two weeks so that I'll not be as rushed as I am in the office.

The financial statements for the three months are enclosed. You will note that our balance has gone down some--probably the summer slump. Since the first of last October we have taken in approximately $19,366.47. That seems like a lot of money, but then we have been spending too. If it is time for our next payment from the grant from Southern Regional Council we shall be most happy to receive it.

Three copies of activities are enclosed. As usual I've probably left half of them off.

I think that the Review of Reports as listed on the Agenda that was done for two months after each executive committee meeting in preparation for the Board meeting was a good idea. Somehow we got bogged down and didn't get to the other two months.

Probably one of the biggest incidents was the grant of $15,000 (half payable this year and half next) from the Battaglia Estate through the City Council. Mr. Holt has been employed as summer director and a brochure is enclosed which has been drawn-up.

The first ANTA theatre outside New York was established in Houston. Mr. Armstrong Prescott who produced the HCHR's "Raisin in the Sun" continued his interest in the theatre in Houston to form the ANTA group. The theatre will be completely integrated--all hiring will be done on the basis of talent and ability.

A Negro newspaper reported a cross-burning incident in Houston marring June 19th Rights Bill passage by Senate. We are investigating this incident.

Changes
Surely there must be more than we know about.

1) The only school integrated under Houston Independent School District this summer is a formerly all Negro school with one white pupil. (This is a gimmic.)
2) A second Negro was hired on the faculty of the University of Texas. I'm attaching a write-up about the first.
3) A Negro has been elected to the Board of the Contemporary Arts Museum and to the Board of the Alley Theatre.
4) It is our understanding that the A.A.U. Olympia Senior swim meet will be integrated this summer.

Now, if I've left anything out, please forgive me. I will enclose a folder from the Religion and Race Conference.

Oh, yes, I believe our Civil Rights ad was excellent and a big venture for us. The funds for it had to be raised in addition to our regular operating funds.

Most sincerely,

Ethel (Dumbauld)

REVIEW OF REPORTS AS

April 24, 1964

Cultural Committee - Mrs. Gertrude Barnstone, chairman, reported that her committee has been asked by Miss Odessa Sayles, Hester House representative, to assist them in presenting programs for subteens, teens and adults and to help encourage these young people and adults to move into the various community cultural activities. Mrs. Ilma Smith is to serve as the coordinator for the committee.

Dr. Nicholas Gerren brought the facts of the deprivement of musical education for Negroes in the Houston community. Dr. Gerren stated that 60,000 Negro children (¼ of the Houston Independent School District population) are learning art and music in school but have no place to apply their skills. Dr. Gerren's main concern is with the situation faced by young Negroes. The failure of news media to cover cultural activities at TSU and the total closed door in community musical activity were pointed out as irritants and handicaps to Negroes.

Dr. Gerren agreed to serve as a chairman for a Sub-committee to gather facts on this situation and institute corrective measures.

This committee is to study the available resources for Negroes in the field of music in Houston, study needed changes in community life and institute a corrective program. A Co-Chairman is to be found who will be knowledgeable about the musical organizations of the community and have some influence with the leadership of these groups.

Senior High Workshop - Last Saturday, the fourth workshop was held for Senior High School students. There 19 high schools represented. Starting out with a limitation of 75, additional workers were secured and the group expanded to include 104. In addition to the youth, 18 adults were on hand to provide resources in human relations. The excitement of the day was a bomb scare. An anonymous caller warned that a bomb was set to go off in the building. The Police Department was notified--everyone cleared the building and a search was made. As you know by now--no Boom!

One conclusion of this meeting seems to indicate the need for creation of an advanced workshop group for those who have attended one or more previous sessions. The High School kids are ready for more than we are providing. As the man says--if we expect to lead, we will have to catch up.

Housing - A sub-committee has been selected under the chairmanship of Mr. Craig Peper to look into the possible uses of a City Ordinance on Slum Clearance and to assist a group of home owners called the North Side Home Owners Aid Association. This group of home owners is interested in improving their community and have come to the Council for our cooperation. This is a relationship we have hoped for many months and will give the Council an opportunity to experiment in improvement of environment of housing. As an outgrowth of the Housing Conference last February, this project illustrates the lack of communications (NSHOAA has been in existence for 12 years) and value of our conferences in establishing contact and opening lines of communications within our community.

Mass Communications Committee - Mr. Bill Salman, chairman, has done a splendid job in working for wide circulation of copies of the Bill itself. Since it is so lengthy, Bill chose to use the excerpts which appeared in the Houston Chronicle. After talking with our Board Member, Bob Cochran, the articles were reprinted by the Forward Times Publishing Co. and made available to all members of the Council. Last Tuesday, the Editorial in the Chronicle carried an announcement of the "splendid service the Council is doing" and noted that we would provide free copies to anyone calling the office. In two days we have sent out 170 copies.The Committee is submitting to the Board a suggested copy of an ad for newspaper circulation.

Committee on Independent Study - Mrs. Bess Attwell reported that the project is well underway (about six weeks). Thirty-six youngsters have been screened. Three schools are participating: Worthing, Yates and Wheatley. Thirty-six students from Rice University are assisting. They have been oriented by Dr. Woods, Head of the Dept. of Education at Rice.

The tutoring group meets weekly on Wednesdays at St. James Episcopal Church, 3129 Southmore. The tutoring sessions begin from 5 to 5:30 and continue until 8:30 or 8:45.

The exciting thing is that this person to person contact is bringing about outside activities, Examples: A group attended "Taming of the Shrew"; another group are planning to go to the Museum and several are going to attend some of the function of the six day celebration at Rice,

Mayor Albert Boutwell yesterday declared that the recent report of the Executive Committee of the City's Community Affairs Committee contains "many areas of agreement and disagreement." Mayor Boutwell said the city recognizes the problems pointed out by the Committee, but added that the city has neither the power nor desire to act on some of the recommendations. A Justice Department petition for an injunction banning discrimination by Wilcox County Voter Registrars against Negro applicants was denied by a Federal judge today. Roosevelt Tatum, 39, charged with giving false information to the FBI concerning the bombing last May of the Rev. A. D. Fire destroyed the school, which was attended only by six Negroes after a boycott by white pupils, early Saturday. Negroes were back on the Huntsville Police Force today. Two new officers were hired after Negro policemen Carl Bailey and John Christmas were fired by the Huntsville City Council on recommendation of Chief Dyar, and Charles Huggins quit in protest of the action.

22. The Justice Department has revealed that it photographed more than 30,000 voting records in eleven Alabama counties during fiscal 1963, which ended June 30, 1963.

23. In Tuscaloosa local Negroes were denied a parade permit by Police Chief Bill Marable today, but Marable said they would be allowed to demonstrate peacefully. Gadsden city officials must open public facilities to Negro citizens. This was ordered yesterday by Federal Judge H. H. Grooms. Specifically the order applies on a permanent basis to public swimming pools and other recreational facilities, the municipal auditorium, coffee shop of City Hall, and use of transit buses.

24. The Co-ordinating Committee for Freedom Fund has received a $15,000 check by the Alabama Sovereignty Commission to use in a fight against the pending Civil Rights Bill. Speaking to a mixed audience of more than 100 persons at a meeting of the Birmingham Council on Human Relations. Huie challenged city officials to raise the first $80,000 of an education fund. "I'll get the next $170,000 this year," he promised.

30. Mayor Albert Boutwell was sharply criticized by the Community Affairs Committee on Group Relations yesterday for failing to take action on the Committee's recommendations. Grafman, Group Relations Committee member, told the Mayor in a joint meeting with the CAC Executive Committee.

May 1. Six Negro children, armed with a new Federal court order, quietly returned to make shift classes today in an auditorium beside the charred ruins of a desegregated high school they desegregated two months ago at Notasulga.

6. Three of the four Negro candidates seeking sounty office in Macon County appeared tonight to have won Democratic nominations. Wallace's unpledged electors wins overwhelmingly in Alabama. Negro voters today credited a persistent registration drive with permitting them to score their first break through in Alabama politics since Reconstrution days.

7. A spokesman said today the Southern Christian Leadership Conference has representatives in 12 Alabama Cities recruiting a "freedom army" for new assaults on segregation.

15. One of two white Presbyterian ministers who say they were beaten by a white intruder in their Camden, Alabama hotel room said today the assailant will be prosecuted. The ministers said their assailant was armed with a shot-gun and pistol and accused them of being civil rights agitators.

19. A National Guard sergeant was fined $100 and sentenced to 90 days in jail Monday after pleading guilty to an attempt to set off dynamite near the University of Alabama last November. A Stillman College English instructor arrested in a racial demonstration April 23 in Tuscaloosa, asked Federal court here yesterday to switch his case from state to Federal jurisdiction.

20. In Selma two police officers were barred from a mass meeting of Negroes here tonight so the rally could be held "unfettered and free from all forms of intimidation." A newly-formed civil rights organization has outlined a seven-point integration program for consideration by Tuscaloosa city officials. The program calls for integrated schools, hospitals, housing, and public accommodations and equal opportunities in employment.

22. Senator Lister Hill (D-Ala.) today told the Senate that civil rights proponents had "seriously misjudged the American people and the real climate of American public opinion" regarding the pending civil rights legislation.

26. A Supreme Court order to Virginia to reopen schools closed to avoid de-segregation yesterday posed new problems to Alabama educators. Alabamians' now "must decide whether they want to have a statewide school system or not," said State Atty. General Richmond Flowers.

27. The Civil Rights Bill now before the Senate will not speed up desegregation of schools, debators both pro and con on the bill said last night at a meeting of the Birmingham Council on Human Relations.

The Negro was first taken to the emergency room of University Hospital where he was treated for scalp lacerations and a cut over his eye and then was taken to City Jail and charged with reckless driving, resisting arrest, assault and battery, and disorderly conduct. After being released from jail on bond, Steele was taken to Carraway Methodist hospital where he was reported to be in good condition.

2. The Supreme Court told Alabama in firm language today to act promptly in letting the National Association For the Advancement of Colored People operate in the state.

3. A 17-year-old Montgomery Negro girl has accepted an academic scholarship to become the first of her race to attend Sacred Heart College in Cullman Alabama.

9. In Tuskegee ten months ago, Sheriff Preston Hornsby hired a Negro deputy. Since then, he says, he has been virtually cut off from radio contact with the Highway Patrol. Hornsby protested in a statement today that patrol radio operators under command of Col. Al. Lingo had been prohibited from handling calls to or from the sheriff or any of his cars. Three Negro students have been admitted to the University of Alabama's main campus for the Summer session.

10. Police jailed 94 anti-segregation demonstrators in Tuscaloosa today after firing volleys of tear gas and bursts from high pressure hoses into a church where some 500 Negroes had congregated. Authorities said they resorted to tear gas only after fire hoses failed to break the back of the outburst, which lasted 45 minutes. At the height of the violence chairs, water pitchers, vases and other objects were hurled from the church, The joint legislative committee to consider abolition of Macon County allegedly reportedly may file a formal report and recommendation by mid-summer. Composed of legislators from Macon and all adjoining counties, the committee is authorized by the Constitution to recommend a final course of action.

12. A leader of recent anti-segregation demonstrations here said late today that there would be no more marches here until a Federal judge in Birmingham rules on a suit seeking to prevent police interference with demonstrations. QUARTERLY REPORT OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF VIRGINIA TO SRC - April, May, June 1964. (Sent in duplicate)

I. Much time was spent on preparing Virginia for the passage and compliance of the Civil Rights Bill.

A. Spent two days in Atlanta at the close of the previous quarter discussing the methods for this phase of work.

B. Louis Mitchell spent three days with me in Richmond, Danville and Charlottesville. We talked to business leaders, newspaper publishers, City Officials and local council leaders. This was very helpful to me.

C. Questionairres were sent to every Virginia community to determine the community preparation (or lack of it), those most likely to defy and those who would be most helpful in compliance. This information was catalogued and sent to proper authorities as well as kept for our use.

D. Made nine addresses before groups all over Virginia concerning the Civil Rights law. Taped six Television talks concerning compliance with the Bill. Released seven newspaper statements on the Bill, and six Radio talks for compliance.

E. Mailed out 600 copies of "Some questions and Answers on the Civil Rights Bill", 2,000 leaflets on Titles II and III prepared by SRC, and over 4,000 other pieces of mail dealing with both information and instructions concerning compliance with the Bill.

F. Led nine discussion groups in various communities within Virginia concerning the Civil Rights Bill. Answered numerous telephone requests as well as written requests concerning information on the Civil Rights Bill.

G. Spent two days and nights in Washington, D.C. in National meetings concerning the Civil Rights Bill.

II. Organized three new local councils in Covington, Lexington and Mannassas, Virginia. In Lexington, I spoke to the City Council and the Mayor at lunch, to 54 Ministers as well as to a community-wide meeting.

III. Addressed three College groups during the quarter and the following churches: Friends of Richmond; Harmony Grove Baptist of Saluda, Unitarian church of Richmond, and Broadview Baptist Church in Maryland. I also spoke to 200 Catholic women of Richmond on the work of VCHR on June 7, and to a Catholic Men's group in Charlottesville on April 3.

In addition, I spoke to three international student groups travelling through Richmond, addressed an audience made up of College students from 17 Colleges in Virginia and a High School group composed of representitives from most of the High Schools of Richmond.

IV. VCHR's Executive Committee held one meeting on June 13 in the state offices, and I attended three committee meetings of local councils. I also addressed the Fairfax County Council and the Arlington local Councils at their Annual Meetings during the Quarter.

V. Our Director of Development, Henry Caravati, had his ups and downs during the Quarter with some good results and some disappointments. The small group meetings which he had employed during the previous quarter were abandoned since he was not receiving enough financial support from these to warrant continuing these. He has worked out a very attractive plan with the Pentagon whereby VCHR and the Military Installations within Virginia will seek ways and means to work closely together on common problems of discrimination. This project looks promising and more details should be forthcoming shortly. Fort Lee of Petersburg will be the pilot project, and according to the Civil Rights Division of the Pentagon, this project should be tried shortly.

Henry and I have agreed on his developing some 300 names of businessmen who have financial means of substantial amounts, and that he cultivate these men for $1,000 contributions to VCHR. He has begun this project and the results are very encouraging. Only one has turned him down flatly. Three have given $1,000 contributions and several are taking the matter up with partners or Boards. Henry is very energetic, dedicated and is a real asset to our work. The only problem is that he doesn't know how to deal with bigots yet he wants to change Virginia by 1965.

VI. Financial Report:

As I had suspected, once Henry Caravati went to work as a Fund Raiser, our gifts from local councils dropped off. We may have to put our entire fund raising efforts into Henry's hands, and I suppose this is what we should do. However, we are still existing on our regular budget and have Caravati's work under a separate budget for the time being.

Arkansas Council on Human Relations

Quarterly Report

April-May-June, 1964

I. Significant Events in the State

A. In the Schools

1. On June 19 the Arkansas Education Association announced the addition of Hal Robbins, former principal at Conway High School, to its staff. He is to direct the cooperative program of the NEA, AEA, ATA. The last is the organization of Negro teachers and administrators in Arkansas.

2. On June 19, President Johnson honored the Presidential Scholars, including Jacquelyn Evans of Hall High, one student from Jacksonville, one from Fort Smith.

3. Eight districts in Arkansas will begin desegregation this fall, making twenty-one districts that have some degree of desegregation.

Up the Arkansas Valley are Ola, Danville, and Havana which will desegregate all grades; Atkins, Dardenelle, and Russellville which will desegregate high schools. All these formerly sent high school students by bus to Morrilton. Action in these districts was stimulated by petitions of parents of Negro children asking for integration.

North Little Rock and Texarkana are the two other districts. North Little Rock has assigned nine Negro children to the first two grades. (A committee of Negro citizens chaired by Dr. H. Solomon Hill of Shorter College threatens a suit if the plan is not extended to high school grades.)

In Little Rock school officials have assigned 105 new Negro students to desegregated schools, rejecting the preference of some 76 Negro parents. This makes a total of 198 Negro students, but does not include 19 Negro students who had been in East Side Junior High, these latter on initial assignment were all put back in all-Negro schools, inexplicably. On June 26 the officials announced they had added by reassignment thirty-one more students including eleven of the East Side students who requested reassignment and had a hearing before the Board and its attorney.

Pine Bluff, which had five Negro children in the first and second grades of three schools last year, has assigned six more. One additional student will be in the first and fourth grades of each of these schools.

Hot Springs, which ended the year with five Negro children in the first and second grade, added one each to the first and second grades next year, seven in all.

4. Negro school patrons by petition asked the Fayetteville school board to eliminate the one remaining all-Negro school, Lincoln, which has an enrollment of 74. Fayetteville has six white elementary schools. The petition came from the Community Concern for Equality, a Negro organization which also asked for full participation of Negro students in school life and for employment of Negro teachers in desegregated schools.

5. May 12, at its final meeting for the year, the Little Rock PTA Council had introduced by a member, Mrs. Philip Greening, a resolution to bar Negro parents from any office in the Council. Action was delayed until fall. National officers of PTA declare the resolution violates national policy.

6. In Hendrix College Newsletter for June 17 President Marshall Steel announced the new policy of the Board of Trustees authorizing "the faculty committee on admissions to admit any worthy student regardless of his race, color, or national origin." The President adds, "It will probably be in the 1965-66 year that Hendrix will have its first Negro student." Could this be one of those self-fulfilling prophesies?

7. The American Association of University Professors voted on April 11 at St. Louis to censure the University of Arkansas because of its handling of the cases under Act 10, 1958. The University refused to reinstate John L. McKenney, assistant professor of philosophy, who left rather than comply with the Act's provisions which since have been declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

8. The Arkansas Democrat, Little Rock, carried an article about how long the policy of segregation in athletics will continue at the University of Arkansas. All other members of the Southwest Conference have desegregated. The article reports on interviews with U. of A. athletes: "The opinion of the Razorbacks themselves is that it (segregation) won't stand long, and furthermore, they don't mind the racial barrier falling."

B. In Organizations and Agencies

1. Whitney Young, Executive Director of the National Urban League, addressed the annual meeting of the Little Rock Urban League on June 16 at the Ballroom of the Marion Hotel. At the annual meeting Ruth Arnold of ACHR staff was given a certificate recognizing her work on behalf of the Urban League.

2. Delegates of forty chapters in Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas attended the Southwest Regional Conference of Delta Sigma Theta, a social sorority, June 5-6, at the Hotel Grady Manning. The luncheon speaker, Dr. Jeanne L. Noble, Associate Professor at the Center of Human Relations at New York University, commented on changes in Little Rock since she was here in the crisis year: "When I was here before I was washing dishes in Daisy Bates' kitchen -- I am glad to return to Little Rock six or seven years later and be standing in an integrated facility."

3. On June 2 Solicitor General Archibald Cox advised members of the Arkansas Bar in convention at Hot Springs that they must help prepare the people to comply with the proposed civil rights law. "Massive resistance challenges the law scarcely less when put into a strained constituional argument than when it is outright civil disobedience," he said. "You cannot expect a person to observe an act of Congress the day after it is upheld in the court if he has been told for months that it is unconstitutional." Later he advised, "...there can be no real doubt that in bold outline the proposed civil rights act, and particularly the sections dealing with public accommodations, will be held constitutional by a unanimous court."

4. The Arkansas Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights held an open hearing May 23 at Ft. Smith and received complaints about school segregation among other matters.

5. A testimonial dinner for former Congressman Brooks Hays was used to raise funds for the local chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews on April 6 at the Marion Hotel, Little Rock. Mitch Miller and Louis Webster Jones, national president of NCCJ were among the notables in attendance.

6. On May 12 the United Automobile workers dedicated their new building which serves as the center for state labor officials. The speaker, the national treasurer, stated persuasively the national policy of labor against all racial discrimination.

7. On May 8 a news item from Forrest City reported the speech of Mr. Haggerty, president of Warwick Electronics, to the Memphis Rotary Club in which he listed the reasons for locating a plant at Forrest City. He emphasized that the company wanted employment on merit regardless of race and that that town's leaders wanted the plant on that basis.

C. In Communities

1. As a climax to the annual Great Decisions sessions in Little Rock Sargent Shriver addressed a large audience on April 9 at Robinson Auditorium. He gave a stirring presentation of the proposed war on poverty as integral to the work of the Peace Corps.

2. For its tenth anniversary of "Black Monday" the White Citizens Council brought back to Little Rock General Edwin A. Walker, who as commander of the Arkansas Military District in 1957 was in command of the 101st Paratroop Division sent to Little Rock to restore order at Central High, on May 18. To 275 persons he spoke for 87 minutes covering the menace of communism, the civil rights bill, and related topics. Editorially, the Gazette on May 20 called the meeting of so few, in so large a space, with such long speeches, a bore, from which many of those present left before conclusion of the meeting.

3. On May 19 Wyatt Tee Walker, assistant to Martin Luther King, spoke to 250 at Watterman Hall at Fayetteville on the invitation of the Student Bar Association at the University. He spoke on the Civil Rights Bill.

4. Swimming pools at Pine Bluff and Little Rock were closed in June after attempted wade-ins. At Pine Bluff representatives of the Movement acted; in Little Rock officials of the NAACP, Mr. L. C. Bates and Dr. Jerry Jewell, escorted a group of young people to the pool. All pools are still closed.

5. In June Little Rock employed a Negro "meter maid", Mrs. Patsy McPeace, making her one of five women meter enforcement officers.

D. In the Courts

Federal Judge John E. Miller told the Fort Smith School Board on June 18 to file a revised plan for integration of that city's schools "within a reasonable time." The Board has been following a grade a year plan beginning in 1957 reaching the seventh grade last year. Only 37 Negro students are in desegregated schools.

E. In Politics

1. One week before the filing deadline closed Governor Faubus filed on April 22 for his sixth term as the Democratic candidate.

On the next day Mr. Winthrop Rockefeller filed as the Republican candidate for Governor.

Mr. Faubus' opponents in the Democratic primary, July 28, are three politically unknowns. One of them, Joe Hubbard, resigned as Captain of the ROTC to enter the race. He is making desegregation and fair play for Negroes the primary plank in his platform, has established acquaintance with Negro leaders and whites working for racial justice.

2. Governor Faubus revealed some current attitudes in speeches in June. At Boys State he reminded the youths that they should remember why Mr. Rockefeller came to Arkansas in the first place, namely to get a divorce from Bobo. (The Gazette refuted this charge with factual data about Bobo getting the divorce.) To a Pine Bluff civic group the Governor berated Secretary Sam Allen of the Arkansas Council of Churches because the latter had issued a criticism of Little Rock officials for closing the swimming pools rather than integrating them: "Let him go swim in the pool with Negroes." To the Association of Peace Officers in Hot Springs he said, "If we had won the Battle of Pea Ridge (Arkansas) we would be members of the United Confederacy of America and not be under the dictation of the U.S. Supreme Court."

3. The proponents of the "Arkansas Amendment for Voter Registration without Poll Tax Payment" filed petitions with almost 60,000 voters' names, almost twice the number required to place it on the ballot in November.

F. Miscellaneous

1. SNCC representatives pushed voter registration in Gould. The response of city officials contrasts with those of some other cities. The mayor: "I told him (SNCC worker) I didn't care how many people he registered and how many he got to vote."

2. Ralph Creger, Chief Dispatcher for the Rock Island Railroad in Little Rock with Doubleday officials released a new book, A Look Down the Lonesome Road, at an autograph party in Pfeifer's Book Store, June 20. Harry Golden has the introduction and Erwin McDonald, Editor of the Arkansas Baptist, a foreword.

II. Activities of ACHR Related to Events

A. In the Schools

1. When news came that Russellville's (first city up the Arkansas River to desegregate) school officials had been asked by ninety Negro patrons to desegregate the high school, the Director got in touch with persons there. These included the Methodist minister, the Baptist minister through the friendly office of Tom Logue. He also advised with the state office of the NAACP and requested Mr. Brooks Hays to confer with members of the school board. Russellville did announce plans to desegregate and was followed by five other cities nearby. (See above)

2. ACHR learned on National Home Visitors Day that a Little Rock Negro teacher is sister-in-law to Dr. Samuel Shepherd, the distinguished principal at St. Louis who has worked successfully in schools with culturally deprived students. The Associate Director has approached Little Rock School Superintendent and Chairman of the School Board about having Dr. Shepherd at the annual pre-school faculty conferences. He found that Negro principals had made the same suggestion earlier.

3. ACHR reminded the Negro principals of elementary schools in Little Rock that the children's wing of the new public library is open to Negro children and that the Story Hour is Wednesday at 10 a.m.

B. In Organizations

1. The Director of ACHR continued to work with the steering committee of the Greater Little Rock Conference on Religion and Human Relations. Both were on the committee which planned a workshop at Aldersgate Camp all day, May 30. Ninty-one persons registered for the four working groups dealing with problems of Housing, Education, Employment, and Accommodations. (See enclosed for details)

2. Ruth Arnold undertook a number of projects for several organizations:

a. For the Arkansas Advisory Committee she investigated discrimination at the Arkansas schools for the deaf, the blind, and at the Children's Colony for the retarded.

b. Served as resource person at a YWCA Conference for Campus and Community Women at Dallas at the invitation of Mrs. Edna T. Anderson, May 30, 31.

c. As Arkansas correspondent joined in one day regional meeting of ACLU in Atlanta to consider a Southern program.

d. At invitation of Louis Mitchell on June 24 joined in one-day conference of Southern women on compliance with the civil rights bill in Atlanta.

e. On June 26-28 attended in Washington the conference of the chairmen of the advisory committees of the states to the Civil Rights Commission.

f. At the suggestion of Paul Anthony of SRC she serves as Little Rock chairman of the National Council of Youth planning for the August visit of 37 delegates to the World Assembly of Youth.

3. Louis Legum with the Law Students Civil Rights Research Council arrived June 22 to work during the summer doing research on the cases of Pupil Placement Law and housing at the University. He is working under the direction of Attorney Harold Anderson and others.

4. On April 25 Morris Milgram of Modern Community Developers met with a group of Little Rock residents to discuss his program and the possibilities in Little Rock. H. Charles Johnston was the local contact.

5. On June 16 the Director guided ten senior high Presbyterian students from over Arkansas in a tour of the offices of the NAACP, the Urban League and ACHR. This one of the projects of the Presbyterians at Camp Ferncliff.

C. ACHR Programs and Organizational Activities

1. On April 28-29 in cooperation with the three Little Rock colleges - Shorter, Philander Smith, Arkansas Baptist - the Council sponsored a Conference-Workshop for Negro ministers. Fifty-four ministers from twenty-two towns and nineteen counties participated. Leaders included Dr. Thomas H. Henderson of Virginia Union University, Mr. Percy Williams of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, and Mr. Randolph T. Blackwell of the Voter Education Project, Atlanta. (A program is attached.)

2. ACHR is cooperating with Fayetteville Council on Community Relations in plans for the latter's annual meeting next October with emphasis on "Residential Problems of Fayetteville Negro Citizens." Miss June Shagaloff has been invited for the keynote speech.

3. On April 10-11 Paul Anthony visited ACHR to counsel on matters organizational.

4. On June 30 Richard Shapiro called from U.S. Civil Rights Commission for persons to see in Pine Bluff in connection with the study he is making there.

5. In late May and June the staff did considerable work toward education for understanding the civil rights bill and law, some of it in preparation for the expected visit of Lou Mitchell May 25-29.

a. In newsletter gave digest of bill.

b. Set stage in Fort Smith, Pine Bluff and Little Rock for Mitchell's visit.

c. Had the accommodation section explained by John Sizemore (new member of ACHR Board) to the workshop of the Conference on Religion and Human Relations.

d. Gave explanatory materials to newsmen.

e. Had Attorney Steele Hays explain to luncheon of ministers in Little Rock. Cleared with him about discussions with Little Rock business men by Berl Bernhart.

f. Called on president of bank at Pine Bluff, President of Chamber of Commerce and publisher of Pine Bluff Commercial to explain the bill and Mitchell's visit.

g. Discussed with Rev. A. M. Roberts of Pine Bluff possible process of testing. He is on Executive Committee of Pine Bluff Movement.

h. Suggested through Harold Fleming names of poweful men in business for the President's Committee for Compliance with the Civil Rights Act.

6. With limited preparation ACHR and Little Rock joined in the National Home Visits Day, April 19. Under ACHR five Negro familes had white guests in their homes. A total of 25 Negroes and 25 whites were involved in this experience with enthusiastic responses.

The Catholic Interracial Council, under Mr. William Kelly, with better preparation observed two days on April 12 and 19. A total of more than 100 participated and held an evaluation session later.

7. In late May and early June Father Walter Clancy, the new Vice President, with Ozell Sutton had cultivation meetings in Little Rock, North Little Rock, Jonesboro, Conway, Pine Bluff. To date 144 new members have been added to the Council this year.

8. Under the leadership of Mrs. Joe R. Brewer, Board Chairman, ACHR took the initiative for getting together representatives of eleven intergroup agencies in Little Rock on May 18. Because of the urgency of the situation on the swimming pools and the Civil Rights Act Mrs. Brewer called these representatives to meet again June 29. Sub-committees are formulating proposed actions for these groups.

9. The Associate Director continued consultant services to employers and employees toward equal opportunity employment policy, adding a number of Negro employees to additional businesses and ironing out complaints.

10. In June the Director and the Associate Director for the Little Rock Office of Social Security visited the directors to discuss employment policies and to ask help in getting Negro applicants for employment.

11. The above may have been related to a visit to ACHR of Dallas officials of the Civil Service Commission investigating discrimination in federal agencies in Little Rock during the first two weeks in June. They reported that of 4000 employees of federal agencies in Little Rock 620 are Negroes. These officials indicated they would use ACHR office to announce openings and examinations for federal employment.

Report on June 30 Meeting.... It was a warm night, but it did not hinder the dedication of over one hundred people who came to hear Mr. Walter Dotts speak on the "Historic Origins of Prejudice". His emphasis was on children and their realization of their own human worth and dignity. The Ebenezer Baptist Church surpassed the Country Club of Virginia and the Commonwealth Club in the quality of refreshments.

BAD NEWS . . . The Richmond-Petersburg Chapter's Treasury is very, very ill. We need MORE members! Mr. Joseph Bright has done an excellent job, but our committees have been active and activity calls for money. Our state assessment is also higher this year and we are way BEHIND.

IT IS UP TO YOU . . . The Civil Rights Law will not solve all the problems of good human relations. It is, what we might say, our CIVIL RESPONSIBILITY to join, renew or persuade another to join in the work of VCHR. We have much to do, but it takes hands and hearts and money to do it. Send your $5.00 membership NOW (additional contribution if possible) to 17 East Cary Street, Richmond, Virginia - 23219.

BEGIN NOW . . . Talk up our September 30th Program. John Howard Griffin, author of BLACK LIKE ME and many magazine articles, will be the speaker. We want every seat at the Mosque comfortably filled. Tickets will soon go on sale for $1.00 each. If Harrisonburg can get 2,000 people, Richmond can get 5,000. Goldwater fans, and members of the John Birch Society are welcome - we are not prejudice and could do them a favor. Already the president has been asked for tickets from Norfolk, Powhatan and Goochland County. The president promises to sell at least 200 tickets - how many will you sell?

We have some lovely ladies who attend our meetings from The Hermitage, 1600 Westwood Avenue. They must come and go by cab. Could we have volunteers to drive them? Call El 5-5721 and offer your services to Mrs Williams.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT . . .Karl Marx said that "religion was the opiate of the people". Many rural and middle class people in his day professed religion, attended services, Bible lessons, prayer meetings, novenas and other forms of public and private worship. In Marx's eye these people were drugged by religion as they had no time to notice the dire need existing in the masses of tenant farmers and factory laborers. Because these "religious" people ignored or didn't notice their neighbor, Herr Marx and his followers have cost this world thousands of lives and billions of dollars. He did not solve the problem. In the United States one fourth of our country is below normal standards. Men, women and children are cold, hungry, lonely and haven't the bare necessities. Through religion and Human Relations we must work for the betterment of our people. Civil Rights and the Negro are only a part, an integral part however, of the vast problem confronting Human Relations Councils. Will your conscience allow you to be drugged beyond the recognition of the condition of your neighbor? What are you - Priest, Levite or Samaritan?

REMEMBER . . .(1)Family Outing - July 31. . .(2)Plan now to hear John Howard Griffin - Mosque - September 30. . .(3)Your membership dues and contributions are vitally needed.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF VIRGINIA TO SRC - April, May, June 1964. (Sent in duplicate)

I. Much time was spent on preparing Virginia for the passage and compliance of the Civil Rights Bill.

A. Spent two days in Atlanta at the close of the previous quarter discussing the methods for this phase of work.

B. Louis Mitchell spent three days with me in Richmond, Danville and Charlottesville. We talked to business leaders, newspaper publishers, City Officials and local council leaders. This was very helpful to me.

C. Questionairres were sent to every Virginia community to determine the community preparation (or lack of it), those most likely to defy and those who would be most helpful in compliance. This information was catalogued and sent to proper authorities as well as kept for our use.

D. Made nine addresses before groups all over Virginia concerning the Civil Rights law. Taped six Television talks concerning compliance with the Bill. Released seven newspaper statements on the Bill, and six Radio talks for compliance.

E. Mailed out 600 copies of "Some questions and Answers on the Civil Rights Bill", 2,000 leaflets on Titles II and III prepared by SRC, and over 4,000 other pieces of mail dealing with both information and instructions concerning compliance with the Bill.

F. Led nine discussion groups in various communities within Virginia concerning the Civil Rights Bill. Answered numerous telephone requests as well as written requests concerning information on the Civil Rights Bill.

G. Spent two days and nights in Washington, D.C. in National meetings concerning the Civil Rights Bill.

II. Organized three new local councils in Covington, Lexington and Mannassas, Virginia. In Lexington, I spoke to the City Council and the Mayor at lunch, to 54 Ministers as well as to a community-wide meeting.

III. Addressed three College groups during the quarter and the following churches: Friends of Richmond; Harmony Grove Baptist of Saluda, Unitarian church of Richmond, and Broadview Baptist Church in Maryland. I also spoke to 200 Catholic women of Richmond on the work of VCHR on June 7, and to a Catholic Men's group in Charlottesville on April 3.

In addition, I spoke to three international student groups travelling through Richmond, addressed an audience made up of College students from 17 Colleges in Virginia and a High School group composed of representtitives from most of the High Schools of Richmond.

IV. VCHR's Executive Committee held one meeting on June 13 in the state offices, and I attended three committee meetings of local councils. I also addressed the Fairfax County Council and the Arlington local Councils at their Annual Meetings during the Quarter.

V. Our Director of Development, Henry Caravati, had his ups and downs during the Quarter with some good results and some disappointments. The small group meetings which he had employed during the previous quarter were abandoned since he was not receiving enough financial support from these to warrant continuing these. He has worked out a very attractive plan with the Pentagon whereby VCHR and the Military Installations within Virginia will seek ways and means to work closely together on common problems of discrimination. This project looks promising and more details should be forthcoming shortly. Fort Lee of Petersburg will be the pilot project, and according to the Civil Rights Division of the Pentagon, this project should be tried shortly.

Henry and I have agreed on his developing some 300 names of businessmen who have financial means of substantial amounts, and that he cultivate these men for $1,000 contributions to VCHR. He has begun this project and the results are very encouraging. Only one has turned him down flatly. Three have given $1,000 contributions and several are taking the matter up with partners or Boards. Henry is very energetic, dedicated and is a real asset to our work. The only problem is that he doesn't know how to deal with bigots yet he wants to change Virginia by 1965.

VI. Financial Report:

As I had suspected, once Henry Caravati went to work as a Fund Raiser, our gifts from local councils dropped off. We may have to put our entire fund raising efforts into Henry's hands, and I suppose this is what we should do. However, we are still existing on our regular budget and have Caravati's work under a separate budget for the time being.

LOCAL COUNCILS CAN SERVE FOR COMPLIANCE WITH CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

All local councils are asked to serve their local communities in preparation for and compliance with the anticipated passage of the Civil Rights Bill now before the U. S. Senate. Some of the ways by which local councils can be of invaluable service are:

1. Open lines of communication and discussion among community leaders concerning the TRUTH of the Bill itself. Distribute the brochures entitled, "Some Questions and answers on the Civil Rights Bill". This brochure can be obtained by writing: Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, Room 314-704-17th St. N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006, or calling Area Code 202, 783-8032, Washington.

2. Point out to community leaders that Title II (Public Accomodations Section) is law the next day after the President signs the Bill. This section of the Bill prohibits dis - crimination in hotels, theatres, motion picture houses, sports arenas, gas stations, specialty shops, etc.

3. A section of the Bill prohibits anyone from assisting in the denial of services in the above places and this could mean that police departments would be enjoined for making arrests under the trespass law of Virginia based on race, color, or religion.

4. Seek to determine which places within your community, if any will be most likely to deny services and cause problems and create suits. Seek to work with such places prior to, and immediately following, the passage of the Bill, pointing out that compliance to the law is in the true Virginia tradition.

5. Report to the VCHR office in Richmond, names of any places where defiance is likely to take place before the passage, and be CERTAIN to report any defiance to the state office as soon as it takes place after the passage of the Bill.

6. Keep all community leaders within your local councils alert to the constructive role local councils can play during the transition period of adjustments to the law.

VCHR'S STAFF KEPT BUSY THESE DAYS

Since the last newsletter went out in March, the Staff of VCHR has been very busy all over the state.

The Executive Director appeared as a panelist on the Richmond Forum; attended meetings in Atlanta, Georgia, with thirty other organizational leaders discussing the Civil Rights Bill; addressed meetings in Fairfax County, Charlottesville, Danville, Arlington, Front Royal, Richmond, Covington and Lexington.

Henry Caravati has been in Fairfax County, Arlington, Alexandria, Danville, Fort Lee, Charlottesville, Petersburg, Franklin, and Richmond as well as Washington, D. C.

Mary Finch has visited in Tappahannock, Lynchburg, Norfolk, Hampton, Newport News, Prince Edward County, Petersburg, Ashland, and Winchester. In addition, Miss Finch was chosen as one of 150 to represent Protestants, Catholics and Jews in visit to President Johnson in Washington, D. C.,when she had a chance to shake hands and chat with the Chief Executive.

Even the secretaries have been kept busy acting as hostesses for formal and informal discussion groups and even speaking to church groups on occasion on the work of VCHR.

IMPORTANT STUDENT MEETINGS HELD IN MAY

The newly formed High School Council of the Richmond-Petersburg Area Council held a Youth Seminar on Human Relations at the YWCA in Richmond, on Saturday, May 2. The theme was "My Phoney Phobias", and some seventy-five students attended, indicating their desires to join the local High School Council.

About one hundred students from several colleges met in Farmville - Prince Edward County, on May 8-9. Mr. Bill Delano, Associate-Director of the Peace Corps, Washington, D. C., was the keynote speaker. Heslip Lee moderated a panel on Saturday, May 9, and group discussions were held on Saturday afternoon. The results of the Conference were most gratifying and a word of congratulations are in order for the effectiveness of this inter-racial meeting in Farmville.

The Richmond Area College Council sponsored a state-wide meeting for college students at the First Baptist Church in Richmond, on Sunday, May 17. Aprox. one hundred students from thirteen colleges across Virginia were in attendance. Speakers were Mr. Henry Marsh, III, NAACP Lawyer from Richmond, and Heslip Lee. Questionnaires were filled out which indicated the desire for more college councils in Virginia with more state-wide college meetings next year.

THIRTY AFFILIATED LOCAL COUNCILS AND/OR CO-OPERATING GROUPS THROUGHOUT STATE

Lest anyone feel that they are operating in isolation, may we remind you that VCHR has councils or co-operating groups in the following areas of Virginia:

Alexandria, Arlington, Ashland, Charlottesville-Albermarle (and High school Council), Covington, Danville, Fairfax County (and High School Council), Franklin, Fredericksburg, Hopewell, Jefferson (Univ. of Va.), Lancaster Co., Lexington, Loudon County, Lynchburg, Mercer-Tazewell (Bluefield), Montgomery County (Blacksburg), Norfolk, Peninsula (Hampton -Newport News area), Petersburg, Prince William County, Radford, Richmond (plus area college and high school councils), Roanoke, Rockingham County (Harrisonburg), Warrenton and Williamsburg.

We ask each council to: 1. Furnish VCHR office with names and addresses of any change in officers; 2. Furnish VCHR office with minutes of meetings and notices of any developments within your communities; 3. Ask for brochures, membership forms and finance forms as needed, plus any other materials which you may desire.

VEJOB DIRECTOR LEAVES VCHR FOR POSITION IN LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY

Gregory E. Shinert, Director of the Virginia Equal Job Opportunity Bureau, for VCHR, leaves his position effective May 31. Mr. Shinert has accepted the position as Executive Director of the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations in Lexington, Ky., and will assume his duties there on June 1. We wish to express our appreciation to "Greg" for the services rendered VCHR and wish him success in his new position.

The Employment Committee of VCHR met recently with top industrial leaders of the state in the William Byrd Hotel, Richmond. The purpose of this meeting was to re-evaluate VCHR's services, which were begun under VEJOB, to the business and industrial firms of Virginia. The industrial leaders present at the meeting were very helpful in advising the Committee, and this item will be discussed very thoroughly at the next meeting of VCHR's Executive Committee scheduled to be held in Richmond on Saturday, June 13.

LOCAL COUNCILS HAVE PAID 50.2% of 1964 QUOTA

$16,750.00 of VCHR's 1964 Budget was subscribed by local councils. As of this date, $8,407.35 has been paid by local councils - or 50.2% of the total. This is a rather good record; however, many local councils have a long way to go in order to meet their quotas.

Please remember that the work of VCHR has become more and more demanding, and we are dependent upon those within Virginia for the support of our basic financial needs. Foundation grants meet the needs for special projects, but the basic operation of the salaries of the Executive Director and his secretary, plus office expenses, must come from Virginians.

Make an all-out effort now to meet your quotas before the summer vacation and slack in financial giving hit us.

The following local councils need honorable mention: Alexandria leads all local councils with 90.7% of its quota paid and more than enough pledged to meet the total. Fairfax County has paid 79%; Williamsburg - 57%; Radford - 50%; Charlottesville - 51%; Fredericksburg - 72%. All others are below the 50% mark.

We realize that money matters are not the most pleasant of subjects. However, we ask you to consider Alexandria Council with a quota of $2,000.00 and already they have paid $1,930.00. Mrs. George A. Eddy can testify to the fact that raising money is not as bad a job as most believe. She would be happy to share with you her simple but effective ways of receiving responses from the Alexandria membership toward the work of VCHR.

ITEMS WORTHY OF NOTE

Henry Caravati, Director of Development for VCHR, has developed some plans for VCHR to work more closely and constructively with all Military personnel within Virginia. More details will be forthcoming as plans are made final.

Also, Mr. Caravati is working with the Presidents of four Negro Colleges, plus several Negro Educators within Virginia, in preparation of a proposal for funds to employ a full time staff member to work exclusively in the field of developing information on, and the implementation of securing job opportunities for college graduates and to study opportunities for scholarships for deserving high school graduates.

The Alexandria Council has made public a "Progress Report on Desegregation in Alexandria 1958-1964". This report includes education, employment, public facilities, housing and Professional Associations. Mrs. George A. Eddy, President of the Council, said, "Most of the obvious barriers are down now, but much remains to be done before we Americans will really be practicing what we preach about democracy, justice and equality of opportunity". For a copy of this report, write Mrs. Eddy, 5235 Polk Ave., Alexandria.

Warrenton Council is sponsoring AMERICA TODAY, a Spring Sememster of Seminars on Contemporary Issues, at Airlie House, for the teachers of Fauquier and adjacent counties in Virginia. The Seminars are conducted by the College of General Studies of George Washington University. For further information about this exciting project write: Mr. J.H. Berne, Associate Director, Airlie House, Warrenton, Virginia.

FOR HUMAN BEINGS ONLY, Sarah Patton Boyles' latest book, will be published June 4, by Seabury Press. Phamplet enclosed.

Race Issue Presented To Students

The executive director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, the Rev. Heslip M. Lee, told approximately 75 college students yesterday that they must help bring the race issue out in the open.

"I challenge each of you in your homes, in your schools and in your total community activities to help the people of Virginia get the race issue out from under the rugs and out of the closets and on top of the table, where it can be dealt with fairly and objectively without emotion," he said.

The meeting was sponsored by the Richmond-Petersburg Area College Council on Human Relations. Students from 13 colleges throughout the state attended the meeting at First Baptist Church.

The purpose of the meeting, according to Mr. Lee, was "to explore ways and means for college students to work together for improved human relations."

The area college council and a compus council at the University of Virginia are affiliated with the Virginia Council. Officials hope to establsh councils on additional campuses.

Lesson For Mother On Integration

A story told by Boston's Cardinal Cushing tells of how children adjust to each other in newly integrated schools. When a little white girl returned home from her first day in an integrated school her somewhat anxious mother began to question her. The child said, "I sat with a little colored girl." The mother continued her query, "Well, what did you talk about? What did she say? What did you say?" The daughter answered, "We didn't say a word. We were both so scared we just sat there and held hands all day."

Darrell E. Davis, comparing public apathy on civil rights issues to the outcry at the President's tugging at ears of a dog: "Only in America can we be so small minded as to be more aroused over a dog being pulled by his ears than we are by a human being pulled by a dog."

"I will say this—I repeat it, I have said it again and again: wherever Federal funds are expended for anything, I do not see how any American can justify—legally, or logically, or morally—a discrimination in the expenditure of those funds as among our citizens. All are taxed to provide those funds. If there is any benefit to be derived from them, I think they must all share, regardless of such inconsequential factors as race and religion."

—President Dwight D. Eisenhower, press conference, March 19, 1953.

Race Action By Churches Advocated

Missionaries and churches have been urged in a formal statement by a group of 35 Christian missionaries to become more involved in current developments in race relations.

At a Richmond meeting called by the Virginia Council on Human Relations, the missionaries stressed their views that experiences and insights from living in multi-racial societies should be shared with fellow-Christians.

The missionaries declared that: "The effectiveness of Christian witness abroad is curtailed by racial strife and discrimination in America."

The statement stressed the importance of finding "ways to encourage and participate in the social changes that are taking place."

Missionaries signing the statement represented six denominations — Baptist, Methodist, Protestant Episcopal, Mennonite, Presbyterian, U.S., and the Lutheran Church in America. They have served in 11 foreign countries.

GUILT BY ASSOCIATION

When a matronly lady was accused of being Communist before a Senate Committee, alleges the Metal Polisher, Buffer and Plater, she hit the ceiling. "You call me a Communist because I once lived in Russia," she cried, "but I'm not! I once lived in Germany, too, but that didn't make me a Nazi."

Then, as an afterthought, she added, "In fact, I've even lived in the Virgin Islands."

A VIEW FROM ABROAD

A cartoon in an Italian magazine depicts an African native woman telling two little boys about the world. "On the banks of the Mississippi," she says, "there still live ferocious tribes of white men."

"Civil Rights" horse race line-up:

Catholic jumped the gun and off at fast clip.

Episcopal off and running in hot pursuit.

Presbyterian foaming at the mouth and with 55 Richmonders laying on the whip is determined to place or show.

Methodist off to slow start, but with some coaxing from jockey is picking up speed and hopes to finish fourth—four years.

Baptist? Perhaps didn't hear the starting gun and still at the post. Maybe has decided to wait for next race. Tsk tsk.

While most of the obvious barriers are down, MUCH REMAINS TO BE DONE TO REMOVE barriers to practicing what we Americans preach about democracy

the dignity of the individual equality of opportunity

Jobs: Active recruitment and on-the-job training by both public and private employers is needed to balance past years of absence of opportunity.

Merit employment has yet to be really applied in city hall. There are no Negro policemen, firemen or clerical employees and very few professional employees.

Negro youth particularly need: acquaintance with the world of work; higher yet realistic job aspirations so that educational preparation is motivated.

Homes: It is an Alexandria tradition that white and Negro neighbors live side by side. Recognition is needed that race does not determine property values. Knowledge is needed that panic-selling by white owners, which is often encouraged by unscrupulous real estate agents, can affect property values. The principle of open occupancy should be applied so that all Americans can rent or buy on the same basis i.e. the ability to pay.

Government action for parks, schools, highways is reducing land formerly lived on by Negroes. Rezoning plans for high-income apartments and commercial-industrial use will further reduce Negro residential areas.

Other: Many professional, civic and service groups still practice racial discrimination. The Nursing School has yet to accept a Negro candidate. No Negro has ever been appointed to a major city board or commission or as an election official. The Police Boys' Camp includes only white boys.

OPERATION MAINSTREAM IS CALLED FOR. The mere opening of doors and removal of obvious barriers is not enough to bring a long-segregated group into the mainstream of community life. We must not be content with tokenism. All of us can remember that our American and religious goal is to release and fulfill human potential. Opportunity should be open to all so that each individual may become a self-reliant and full citizen of our society.

FAIRFAX COUNTY COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

P. O. Box 194
Annandale, Virginia 22003

Affiliated with the Virginia Council on Human Relations
17 East Cary Street, Richmond 19

The Council draws its membership from Fairfax County and the cities of Fairfax and Falls Church. It works through committee programs, membership meetings, public statements, and other means to support a desegregated community life and to improve intergroup relations. Residents and also non-residents with interests in the community are invited to join. The larger the membership, the more effective will be the Council's influence toward democracy.

From the STATEMENT OF PURPOSE
adopted March 4, 1957

We believe that every individual possesses the inalienable God-given right, as confirmed by the Virginia Bill of Rights and our American Constitution, to equal opportunity for the fullest development and use of his capacities. We recognize that legislation to safeguard this right can be fully effective only in an atmosphere of mutual understanding, trust, and respect.

Each member of our community shares the responsibility of bringing constructive abilities to bear for the welfare of our country, state, and county. We believe these attitudes can develop fully only as people of different groups work together.

We cordially invite all those who recognize the need for improving human relations within our community to join and actively participate in the work of the Council.

See inside for program of meetings and committee work. To join, fill out tear sheet and send to membership chairman.

The Fairfax County Council on Human Relations was organized in March 1957 and incorporated in November 1958. Membership currently runs to about 700.

Authority for directing the Council program is vested by the membership in the board, which is chosen at the annual meeting in March. A full board numbers thirty, who serve for a two-year term and may be re-elected; fifteen are elected annually. Officers are appointed by the board.

The Council publishes a newsletter which reviews meeting programs, reports committee activities, and covers local items of human relations interest. This is free to members and is also sent to county officials and civic and church leaders.

As an affiliate of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, the local group shares in the work of the state organization. With twenty-six Councils already established and others always organizing, the VCHR is actively encouraging good will in communities throughout the state. In addition, its executive director, "Happy" Lee, helps with problems like those in Prince Edward County and Danville, and promotes Council purposes by working with political and business leaders and with newspapers, radio, and television. The Fairfax Council meets an annual quota toward the support of the VCHR.

Howerton Hall (room only), $2.50 to $5 per person, per day

New Hall (room only), $3 to $4 per person, per day

Accommodations also available in the Montreat Guest Homes.

Depressed areas, slum areas, areas of white-collar prejudice—these are the places where trouble festers. To ignore modern problems by hiding in a kind of archaic sanctimoniousness is to "pass by on the other side" with the priest and the Levite.* Church people must be informed and inspired to give leadership in working for a society that inhales and exhales the dignity of all human beings.

This year's Christian Action Conference will deal with three major problems in the area of human relations:

Housing
Unemployment
Juvenile delinquency

Totalitarian countries tell men where they shall live and where they shall not. In our free society a man ought to be able to live in a decent house in a community of his own choosing. He should have the privilege of employment according to his talent and skill. Idle hands and idle minds must be pried loose from atmospheres that reek with "rumbles" and vandalism. To help yourself and your neighbors take action "where trouble festers," we urge you to attend.

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Quarterly Report

June 1964 - August 1964

Summer Activities

This report will cover activities classified as follows:

I Strengthening SCCHR

II Staff Training

III Moving in New Directions

IV Local Efforts Focused in Columbia

V Field Trips

VI Gratifying Small Steps

I. Strengthening SCCHR

A generous grant made by The Field Foundation, the certification of SCCHR for participation in The Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund internship program, the organization of a President's Council, and the increased involvement of SCCHR officers in budgeting, evaluating needs for staff enlargement and in summer planning all served to strengthen the Council.

1. Financial Support Enlarged.

Announcement was received from The Field Foundation, Inc., of a two-year grant of $34,000 to be paid in annual installments of $17,000. This represented an increase of $9,200 over the previous two-year grant of $24,800.

2. SCCHR Eligible for Intern Program

An application was submitted to the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund requesting certification for its internship program and matching funds needed. SCCHR was one of twenty-five agencies in the country approved and a matching grant of $2,500 was awarded.

SCCHR recruited two young Negro men, one of whom was approved for training.

Unfortunately, there have been delays in receiving anticipated funds promised by the National Sharecroppers Fund. Also amendments to the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 make it less likely that funds will be available to SCCHR from that source. Consequently, SCCHR has been unable to engage an intern for this year. Hopefully services of Al Ulmer, an intern being paid by the Southern Regional Council may be available on a temporary or occasional basis.

3. Presidents Council

In June, presidents of local councils on human relations met at SCCHR headquarters, decided to organize and to meet quarterly. They hope to profit from closer cooperation and inter-action, and to assist newly elected presidents get off to a good start.

4. Dr. George Bowdler Employed

The SCCHR budget has made possible the employment of Dr. Bowdler for three months, beginning in September. He is being employed primarily to do spade work for organizing new local councils on human relations.

Dr. Bowdler's primary interest is in developing a Fellowship House in Columbia. However, through his ten-year service as chaplain at the Baptist Hospital, Columbia, and as director of pastoral counselling he has numerous contacts throughout South Carolina. Also, Dr. Bowdler is skilled in working with small groups.

II. Staff Training

The 1964 state-staff conference at SRC headquarters in June was rated by Mr. James and Mrs. Spearman as "the best ever." Especially valuable was the orientation to governmental and private agencies which provide important, related services.

Attendance over a long week-end by the executive director of a writers conference provided guidelines for expanding the public relations features of SCCHR's program. This conference was sandwiched between the state-staff conference in Atlanta and a south-wide meeting in Atlanta, in which the SCCHR executive director had been asked to play a leadership role.

At her own expense, Mrs. Spearman attended the annual Southeastern Institute on World Affairs at Blue Ridge, N. C., July 24-26. Of greatest value was contact with conference participants -- a number from South Carolina, updating on human relations in world-wide perspective, and identifying speakers whom we may be able to bring to South Carolina at a future date. Of outstanding value were discussions of non-lethal uses of federal taxes.

For comments concerning the annual conferences of the Southern Baptist Convention Christian Life Commission on Christianity and Race Relations at Ridgecrest, and The Southern Presbyterian Christian Action conference at Montreat, see attached Report of Program Director and copies of programs.

III. Moving In New Directions

SCCHR realized the importance of new federal programs for expanding the scope and effectiveness of its work as early as the spring of 1962 when it sent Attorney Ira Kaye to Washington, D. C., to attend briefings on Rural Areas Development, Area Redevelopment, etc.

Mr. L. S. James, whose work is focused in the 24 rural counties designated by the Area Redevelopment Administration, continues to adapt his efforts to meet emerging needs and opportunities. See attached Report of Activities of Field Representative of SCCHR for details.

1. Groundwork for "Anti-Poverty" Programs

A visit early in June from Mr. Lawrence Houstoun, director of special programs, office of Manpower Automation and Training (OMAT), U.S. Department of Labor, who also serves on the President's Task Force on Poverty, was a forecast of the new kinds of activities in which SCCHR was to engage during the summer of 1964 in response to action on many levels by the Federal Government.

SCCHR actually has assisted in the following important areas:

1) Discussions on establishing community action programs in South Carolina under Title II of the Economic Opportunity Act (EOA) of 1964 and of training directors for same.

2) Planning recruitment on a non-discriminatory basis for the Job Corps (Title I a, EOA of 1964).

3) Alerting former members of SCSCHR and others of examinations for leadership positions in resident centers to be set up under the EOA.

2. Civil Rights Act: Preparation and Follow-up

1) Work with the S.C. Advisory Committee in setting up frequent meetings in Columbia of leaders who were keeping in touch with developments.

2) Continuing outreach to urban and rural centers for mutual strengthening and exchanges.

3) Providing information and insights to U.S. Civil Rights Commission employee who surveyed situation in Columbia as a part of a check made on readiness for compliance in 26 cities across the nation.

4) Participation in a minor leadership role in a south-side preparation of leaders from 5 national women's organizations held in Atlanta.

5) Assistance to A. M. Secrest in preparation of lists of South Carolina leaders -- names, addresses, occupations and spheres of influence to be used in building Community Relations Service committees.

6) Local program in Columbia in which District Attorney Terrell Glenn explained to fine audience provisions of the Act.

7) Continuing promotion and use of desegregated public facilities by bi-racial groups -- needed to establish new patterns and to offset cultural lag and inertia.

3. Special OMAT Project

The special project of the Office of Manpower, Automation and Training of the U.S. Department of Labor set up with the National Sharecroppers Fund has hit snags in South Carolina. SCCHR staff have participated in joint conferences with the special project OMAT staff and had numerous interviews with the South Carolina resident staff member. Confidentially, we've been told that high government officials in South Carolina oppose the program under its N.S.F. auspices.

4. Equal Employment Opportunity

Due to complaints charging non-compliance by a company which has contracts with the U.S. Navy, officers were sent into South Carolina to investigate. Because the situation was considered potentially dangerous both the regional office and the Washington office responded. Later, the two officers involved visited SCCHR separately to request that continuing assistance be given. SCCHR was designated by the complaintants for this service, they said.

IV. Local Efforts Focused in Columbia

For details see Report of the Program Director II, pages 2 and 3.

The SCCHR executive director has kept in close touch with developments which have resulted in the establishment of the first official bi-racial Community Relations Committee in the history of Columbia.

Because of tensions involved, it was agreed to postpone holding a public meeting with Mr. Phillip Hammer as speaker, as previously proposed. Mr. Hammer has been employed by the Columbia City Planning Commission to make a study. Tentative plans are to set up a meeting when Mr. Hammer is ready to make a public report of his findings.

V. Field Trips

Dr. George Bowdler and Mrs. Spearman met with members of the Rock Hill Council in a planning session in June and later participated in the monthly meeting of the Council.

Three important visits were made to Greenville during the summer by the executive director; first, to visit the school set up to assist Negro pupils planning to enter previously all-white schools; next, to speak at the closing meeting with parents and friends of these students; and lastly, to assist with the stubborn problem of securing a nominee for president of the Greenville Council.

Sumter Council members are discouraged by the continuing adamantine position of community segregationists. No Negroes have been admitted to the recently opened Technical Education Center.

Efforts of a committee to interest the county delegation in allowing distribution of surplus foods have failed.

No STEP programs have been started.

To help cope with these problems, the executive director has made two trips to Sumter during the summer.

Dalzell in Sumter county was the location of a tri-state conference called by the Town and Country Church division of The Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., at which Dr. Schubert Frye of the New York office and Mrs. Spearman were speakers. Considerable frustration was expressed by conferees as to producing changes in patterns in small towns, in spite of the opening of public facilities to all by the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

VI. Gratifying Small Steps

SCCHR was the only non-governmental state-wide agency invited to participate in a meeting in July in which state and federal agencies conferred on the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Chairman of the United Fund committee on implementation of Title II (Community Action) of the E.O.A. used SCCHR to enlarge and integrate its committee.

SCCHR staff members have been appointed on five of the committees of the Columbia Citizens Design for Progress.

The SCCHR executive director was offered a part scholarship to the Laboratory in Community Leadership Training of the National Training Laboratories, National Education Association, at Bethel, Maine, July 5-17 but was unable to accept due to the uncertainties surrounding enactment of federal legislation, especially the Civil Rights Act and the Economic Opportunity Act.

At the request of Mr. Frank S. Loescher, general secretary, United States-South Africa Leader Exchange Program, Inc., SCCHR set up appointments for two guests from South Africa who visited Columbia during this quarter.

Four states with large populations---California, Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania---have been joined by South Carolina and the five together account for one-third of all trainees in the employment training aspect of the Manpower Development and Training Act.

Report of Activities of Field Representative of SCCHR

During the Months of June, July and August 1964

The activities of our Field Representative during this period have been based largely on the following four projects:

1. Holding special Neighborhood County Group Conferences.

2. Visiting personnel managers of manufacturing plants to check employment policies.

3. Checking needs for sur-lus food and clothing among needy families.

4. Aid to some low-income rural families finally received.

5. Giving special assistance requested in recruitment of trainees for our STEP program.

Special Meetings

It was necessary to get a large group of our people together for a special meeting which was called to hear Mr. Lawrence Houstoun of the President's Task Force, for the anti-poverty project. This meeting included representatives from eight different counties. A copy of the minutes of this meeting is attached.

Mr. Houstoun came to us to explain the proposed Economic Opportunity Bill. He spent most of the day in a special conference with representatives from various parts of our State.

Mr. James took the group of visiting students from various states, east, south and mid-west, under the supervision of The American Friends Service Committee to visit various field projects, including STEP schools. He also took the group to the neighborhood county meeting at Barnwell, S. C. A copy of the agenda of this meeting is attached. The meeting ended with refreshments and a brief social.

Mr. James held a mass meeting in Abbeville. This marked the beginning of monthly meetings with the people from Abbeville County. He explained the meaning and policies of the STEP school. He also told the people how to prepare for participation in the Anti-Poverty Program.

CHECKING EMPLOYMENT POLICIES OF MANUFACTURERS

Our Field Representative visitdd the following manufacturing plants:

Elgin, at Elgin, S. C.; Allied Chemical and General Electric in Irmo, S. C., and Dictaphone Plant at Pontiac, S. C. Each of these plants indicated through their personnel officer that they were practicing "Equal Employment" on a basis of merit. Negroes are employed in considerable numbers at each plant.

Our Representative got a chance to see employees at work. All of the personnel officers were very anxious to explain all of the policies of their plants related to hiring and non-discriminatory treatment of all employees.

The General Electric plants employs graduates from our Technical Education

Centers for all levels of positions without discrimination. The personnel officer of this plant indicated that Negro as well as white students were doing their summer interne practice work there. These were students who are to graduate next year. They will receive permanent jobs as soon as they complete their training at the Technical Center.

CHECKING NEEDS FOR SURPLUS FOOD AND SUPPLYING NEEDS FOR CLOTHING

South Carolina does not distribute surplus food to needy families. Mr. James was informed by the State Director of Welfare that if he could establish the need for surplus food by counties, he could ask for help from the county delegation of each county. If the county delegation would accept the responsibility for receiving and distributing the surplus food it would be shipped to them direct.

Our Representative has informed all counties eligible under ARA about this opportunity. Ten counties have asked for blanks to collect information about the real conditions about the low-income families who might be eligible for surplus food. Each of the counties has been furnished an outline blank form to use for getting the information necessary about the families. Several of the counties are beginning to contact their county delegations. A copy of the form mentioned above is attached.

Mr. James has secured the cooperation of the National Sharecroppers Fund to get used clothing and shoes for children of needy families in our State. He has seven distributing centers throughout the State in the 24 counties eligible under ARA. More than 6 tons of clothing have been distributed during the summer. More than 300 children have been helped with donations of clothing and shoes.

This clothing comes as donations from the regular contributors to the National Sharecroppers Fund. Contributions of clothing are still coming from the North, East, Mid-West, West and Southwest and two southern states. Many persons send small cash contributions which we use to purchase shoes.

AID TO SOME LOW-INCOME RURAL FAMILIES FINALLY RECEIVED

, Mr. James has been working a long time to get financial assistance for several rural families. Aid for these families has been finally received. Mr. Columbus Cooper of Sumter County received a loan from the Farmers Home Administration for the operation of his farm this year and a loan to repair his home. Mr. John Wheeler of Clarendon County saved his farm from loss by foreclosure of his mortgage with a long term loan from an unknown friend.

Our Field Representative also has been able to get help for two very low income families in Richland County. He explained to them how to request small loans to get wells, running water and home repairs. The F.H.A. made the following loans recently: Mr. Arthur Mills, Rt. 1, Irmo, S. C., received a $500 loan to drill a well and put running water in his home. Mrs. Lula Grant, Rt. 1, Irmo, S. C., received a loan of $789 to drill a well, put running water in her home and a new roof on the house. The people have never had wells nearer than one-half mile to them.before.

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE IN RECRUITMENT OF TRAINEES FOR STEP SCHOOLS

At the special request of the Security Employment Commission, Mr. James has been busy assisting in recruitment of trainees for new courses and the opening of new STEP schools in many counties in South Carolina. He has helped to recruit trainees in the following counties: Fairfield, Bamberg, Barnwell, Florence, Abbeville, Greenville, Orangeburg.

South Carolina now has 40 STEP schools with the expectation of opening schools in all of the counties of the State before the close of this current year.

Mr. James Mays, who had just been employed to work in Mississippi as a representative of the National Sharecroppers Fund, spent two weeks in training with Mr. James before leaving for his assignment.

Beyond "Tokenism" at the College Level in South Carolina

CONSULTATION ON RECRUITING

June 7, 1964 4:00-8:00 p.m., Columbia
YWCA Pine Street Center, 1010 Pine Street

The purpose of the consultation is for long-range planning in order to increase appreciably the number of Negro students in the recently integrated or yet to be opened colleges in South Carolina.

In the efforts which have been made this year to reach high school students by the Public Relations Committee of the S.C. Sustained efforts must be carried on through school and community leaders, as well as by concerned college students. Since the needs are so great in South Carolina and since the doors have been opened so recently, it is of great importance that the type of confrontation which has been undertaken this year be increased and undergirded by local committees.

In order, therefore, to crystallize the work of this year and to do long-range planning, SCCHR is inviting you to a consultation which will bring together students, community leaders, teachers, counselors, and parents.

MINUTES OF THE SPECIAL NEIGHBORHOOD COUNTY GROUP MEETING AT ROME BAPTIST CHURCH, DENMARK, SOUTH CAROLINA
FRIDAY, June 5, 1964 at 7:30 P.M.

1. The meeting was opened with special singing by the Young Woman's Choir of Rome Baptist Church followed by special prayer.

2. The agenda for the meeting was announced by the acting chairman, after he announced that eight counties were represented: Berkeley, Aiken, Bamberg, Barnwell, Jasper, Hampton, Dorchester and Colleton. The agenda included:
   a. Reports from trainees attending STEP schools.
   b. Reports from communities expecting STEP schools to open.
   c. Questions on problems facing communities.
   d. Information on the progress and meaning of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

3. Trainees from two STEP schools expressed satisfaction with the training and help which they were getting from these schools. The men and women from the Bamberg STEP school told how pleased they were with the instruction they were getting in basic education as well as occupational training.

4. The representatives from Aiken County reported that the problem of eligibility for STEP training had been solved and recruiting was progressing with an expected opening date already announced. The representatives from Barnwell County said all plans had been announced for the opening of their STEP school on June 15th. But there had not been any notices sent out to potential trainees. Mr. James was asked to find out why this delay was being made.

5. Several important questions were asked by representatives from several counties. Some of the questions asked were as follows:

   Isn't a lady living alone with herself to support a head of a family? Mr. Houstoun said he did not know.

   Why is it that heads of families only get $28.00 per week? (Asked by a lady from Bamberg.) She had heard they were supposed to get $45 a week. Mr. James told her that $28.00 was the average pay per week for all heads of families. He explained that what she had heard was an erroneous statement from one of our newspapers.

   Mr. John Hotto from Denmark asked why it was that the whites in the community had never called them in to give them any information about how the STEP school in Bamberg County was going to be organized. At this point Rev. Wright emphesized that they had gotten all the information about the opening of their STEP school from Mr. James.

   A lady from Barnwell asked if it were possible to get a training program set up for men who are working but they need to know how to read better in order to hold their jobs and get promotions. Mr. James referred this lady to the District Supt. in Barnwell County to get help in setting up an Adult Evening Education Program for all adults in her area, who are interested in training.

Another lady from Denmark asked,"Is it true that people who can hardly read and write are accepted in these STEP schools when they are unemployed?" Mr. Houstoun answered her by saying everybody unemployed is eligible for training. Mrs. Spearman also told Mr. Hutto that in some of the communities the white members of the STEP committee would come to meetings where colored and white people were present and help to explain the STEP program.

6. Mr. James was asked by Rev. J. S. Wright, Pastor of Rome Baptist Church to introduce the visitors and allow Mr. Houstoun to explain his responsibility on the President's Task Force on the War Against Poverty. Mr. James accepted the responsibility of introducing Mrs. Spearman who made a few brief remarks on the importance of attending meetings like this one, to keep properly informed about what can be done by each of us to improve our communities. She inturn introduced Mr. L. Houstoun who delivered an inspiring talk on how the Anti-Poverty Bill when passed would bring opportunities that would lead to the elimination of poverty. He emphasized the fact that all people, regardless of color, would be included in this program for better living and economic opportunities. Mr. James Mays also gave a short explanation of the type of work that he is planning to do for the disadvantaged low-income people and for students who have been put out of college because of participation in mass demonstration against segregation.

7. Rev. Wright announced some people were being denied registration for the STEP program because they were employed and received $10.00 a week. He promised to submit the name of one person privately after the meeting. He also announced that voter registration for the state of South Carolina had increased by 45,000 during the drive.

The meeting was dismissed with a prayer from the Rev. Frank Murray of Ridgeland, South Carolina.

Report of Program Director

June - August 1964

I. Student Program

The work of the Recruiting Committee, "Operation Search," for the year was climaxed with a Consultation on Recruiting which was held in Columbia on June 7. The efforts of this committee, of which Mr. Harvey Gantt is chairman, have been reported previously. To reiterate, members of the Student Committee, working cooperatively with members of local councils or a representative citizens group in towns where no local council exists, have made visits to twelve (12) communities during this school year for group conferences with high school students. The purpose of this effort has been to discover potential Negro students for recently desegregated colleges in South Carolina, to move beyond tokenism at the college level.

At this point no group in the state is working in the area of college recruitment. The committee has found in meetings, which of necessity have had to be introductory and inadequate because of time limitation, that a great deal of basic information, actual preparation, psychological undergirding and financial assistance [illegible] greatly needed if Negro students in appreciable numbers were to attend previously white colleges.

The summary of this meeting, which is attached, indicates the need for long-range planning. Follow up from this meeting is continuing.

The Program Director has been in correspondence with Dr. John W. Davis, Director of the Lehman Fund which provides scholarships and financial assistance to students to enter desegregated colleges and universities. A number of students have been referred to the Lehman Fund and Dr. Davis reports that a higher percentage of scholarships have been granted for South Carolina than for any other state.

It was encouraging to note at the consultation that not only student applicants for the coming academic year were present but those who would apply for the 1965-1966 year. Thus the process is in its initial stages.

It was particularly encouraging to have a strong community committee from Spartanburg present with Mr. Albert Gray of that city, who was the first Negro applicant to a private college in South Carolina. Wofford College located in Spartanburg, a Methodist church-related college, had just announced a change in admission policy. Mr. Gray was a few weeks later accepted and plans to enroll in September.

A few Negro students, especially teachers, were enrolled at Clemson, University of South Carolina, and the University Center in Aiken for the summer session. There is still great hesitancy among the Negro teacher to attend the recently opened colleges. Our best available information indicates that the total number of teachers attending the summer sessions was approximately ten. Winthrop's first Negro student enrolled for the second summer session, making Winthrop the third state supported college to integrate, and the first one to do so without a court order.

One of the other ways in which members of SCCHR staff have attempted to encourage fuller use of the higher education facilities has been to send information to key Negro educators concerning National Science Foundation Institutes, School of Education Workshops, short courses, Institutes for Business leaders. Three Negro teachers did apply for the National Science Foundation Math Institute at the University of South Carolina this summer and were accepted as a result of early information which was made available to them and a great deal of encouragement from colleagues.

Summer projects and opportunities for work in the human relations field are always stressed by the SCSCHR. This summer two of the student sterring committee members participated in the Human Relations Seminar of the Southern Project; another was a part of an AFSC Institutional Service project with delinquent children in Lexington, Ky.; a fourth was a participant in a National Council of Churches Seminar for student staff at Nantucket, R. I.; another was a member of an AFSC overseas work camp.

Local students also cooperated with the American Friends Service Committee Voter Education project in Orangeburg, which functioned for a period of eight weeks this summer. Two members of SCCHR staff participated in the week-end orientation period for this group in June. Later members of the project met with Columbia students, and from time to time during the summer students from the Columbia area went to Orangeburg and worked with project members in door to door visitation; attended workshops, and shared in the discussions of the group. Three of the student members of this group are remaining in South Carolina to continue their work in voter registration and education.

II. Local Councils.

The Columbia Council began preparation for a major membership interpretation and drive for the fall. A prospect list of some 2000 names from the Greater Columbia area has been compiled. Names have been submitted by many individuals and organized groups in the community. Letters of invitation are to be mailed out as early in the fall quarter as possible, using the new publicity brochure, "Reach for Tomorrow." A coffee-conversation committee has been set up and informal home coffee hours will be a part of the interpretation and membership effort.

The Columbia Council was possibly the first group in the state to arrange a citizens meeting for a discussion of the Civil Rights Act after its passage in July. United States District Attorney Terrell Glenn, an able and concerned young lawyer, discussed the major Titles of the Act; cleared misconceptions and it is hoped allayed some fears.

Another "first" for the Council was a family picnic in June, using the nearby Sesqui-Centennial State Park as the picnic site. The State Parks, having opened on June 1 with somewhat limited facilities (no swimming at this particular park, although family camping is allowed), it was thought should be used as widely as possible by integrated groups. As far as we know this was the first integrated group in the state to make use of a state-owned park. A round 125 persons attended.

In mid-August it became known that Columbia city schools would become integrated on a token basis when the schools opened August 31. The Negro community in Columbia had apparently moved very slowly in attempting to break the pattern of public school segregation. Late applications for transfer for 23 students were approved by the School Board on a voluntary basis (no court action). At the request of one of the families involved, the Columbia Council held one or two orientation sessions for the parents and children who were to be transferred to formerly white schools. These were helpful, even though there was almost no time for preparation. It was quickly apparent that the parents did not know each other and came from a widely divergent background. No careful selection of the first applicants was done. The Council was able to bring children and a few white parents from the schools to which the children would go to meet with the new parents and children. The opening day on August 31 was quiet and uneventful. Staff and leaders of the Columbia Council are keeping in close touch with the parents and another meeting of the group will be held at the end of the first week of school.

I III. Two significant southwide church conferences were held in August. Promotion for these was done by staff members of SCCHR in mid-summer. Several South Carolinians attended the Southern Baptist Christian Life Commission conference on Race Relations at Ridgecrest at the suggestion of the SCCHR office, among them three outstanding Negro educators, who were the only Negro delegates living on the grounds and attending the entire conference. Staff members and others from this state also participated in the Presbyterian Christian Action conference at Montreat.

IV. In late August, after the passage of the Economic Opportunity Act, the Program Director communicated with the Presidents of each of the Negro colleges in the state concerning the Work-Study scholarship provision of the Act. The number of students from low-income families in the state is great. Two of the Negro college presidents reported that between 75-80 percent of their students come from low-income families. Assistance is needed and the Council was interested in getting information concerning this resource to persons in a position to apply immediately for assistance.

During the Months of June, July and August 1964

The activities of our Field Representative during this period have been based largely on the following four projects:

1. Holding special Neighborhood County Group Conferences.

2. Visiting personnel managers of manufacturing plants to check employment policies.

3. Checking needs for surplus food and clothing among needy families.

4. Aid to some low-income rural families finally received.

5. Giving special assistance requested in recruitment of trainees for our STEP program.

Special Meetings

It was necessary to get a large group of our people together for a special meeting which was called to hear Mr. Lawrence Houstoun of the President's Task Force, for the anti-poverty project. This meeting included representatives from eight different counties. A copy of the minutes of this meeting is attached.

Mr. Houstoun came to us to explain the proposed Economic Opportunity Bill. He spent most of the day in a special conference with representatives from various parts of our State.

Mr. James took the group of visiting students from various states, east, south and mid-west, under the supervision of The American Friends Service Committee to visit various field projects, including STEP schools. He also took the group to the neighborhood county meeting at Barnwell, S. C. A copy of the agenda of this meeting is attached. The meeting ended with refreshments and a brief social.

Mr. James held a mass meeting in Abbeville. This marked the beginning of monthly meetings with the people from Abbeville County. He explained the meaning and policies of the STEP school. He also told the people how to prepare for paritiicipation in the Anti-Poverty Program.

CHECKING EMPLOYMENT POLICIES OF MANUFACTURERS

Our Field Representative visitdd the following manufacturing plants:

Elgin, at Elgin, S. C.; Allied Chemical and General Electric in Irmo, S. C., and Dictaphone Plant at Pontiac, S. C. Each of these plants indicated through their personnel officer that they were practicing "Equal Employment" on a basis of merit. Negroes are employed in considerable numbers at each plant.

Our Representative got a chance to see employees at work. All of the personnel officers were very anxious to explain all of the policies of their plants related to hiring and non-discrimatory treatment of all employees.

The General Electric plant employs graduates from our Technical Education

Centers for all levels of positions without discrimination. The personnel officer of this plant indicated that Negro as well as white students were doing their summer interne practice work there. These were students who are to graduate next year. They will receive permanent jobs as soon as they complete their training at the Technical Center.

CHECKING NEEDS FOR SURPLUS FOOD AND SUPPLYING NEEDS FOR CLOTHING

South Carolina does not distribute surplus food to needy families. Mr. James was informed by the State Director of Welfare that if he could establish the need for surplus food by counties, he could ask for help from the county delegation of each county. If the county delegation would accept the responsibility for receiving and distributing the surplus food it would be shipped to them direct.

Our Representative has informed all counties eligible under ARA about this opportunity. Ten counties have asked for blanks to collect information about the real conditions about the low-income families who might be eligible for surplus food. Each of the counties has been furnished an outline blank form to use for getting the information necessary about the families. Several of the counties are beginning to contact their county delegations. A copy of the form mentioned above is attached.

Mr. James has secured the cooperation of the National Sharecroppers Fund to get used clothing and shoes for children of needy families in our State. He has seven distributing centers throughout the State in the 24 counties eligible under ARA. More than 6 tons of clothing have been distributed during the summer. More than 300 children have been helped with donations of clothing and shoes.

This clothing comes as donations from the regular contributors to the National Sharecroppers Fund. Contributions of clothing are still coming from the North, East, Mid-West, West and Southwest and two southern states. Many persons send small cash contributions which we use to purchase shoes.

AID TO SOME LOW-INCOME RURAL FAMILIES FINALLY RECEIVED

, Mr. James has been working a long time to get financial assistance for several rural families. Aid for these families has been finally received. Mr. Columbus Cooper of Sumter County received a loan from the Farmers Home Administration for the operation of his farm this year and a loan to repair his home. Mr. John Wheeler of Clarendon County saved his farm from loss by foreclosure of his mortgage with a long term loan from an unknown friend.

Our Field Representative also has been able to get help for two very low income families in Richland County. He explained to them how to request small loans to get wells, running water and home repairs. The F.H.A. made the following loans recently: Mr. Arthur Mills, Rt. 1, Irmo, S. C., received a $500 loan to drill a well and put running water in his home. Mrs. Lula Grant, Rt. 1, Irmo, S. C., received a loan of $789 to drill a well, put running water in her home and a new roof on the house. The people have never had wells nearer than one-half mile to them.before.

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE IN RECRUITMENT OF TRAINEES FOR STEP SCHOOLS

At the special request of the Security Employment Commission, Mr. James has been busy assisting in recruitment of trainees for new courses and the opening of new STEP schools in many counties in South Carolina. He has helped to recruit trainees in the following counties: Fairfield, Bamberg, Barnwell, Florence, Abbeville, Greenville, Orangeburg.

South Carolina now has 40 STEP schools with the expectation of opening schools in all of the counties of the State before the close of this current year.

Mr. James Mays, who had just been employed to work in Mississippi as a representative of the National Sharecroppers Fund, spent two weeks in training with Mr. James before leaving for his assignment.

2. The agenda for the meeting was announced by the acting chairman, after he announced that eight counties were represented: Berkeley, Aiken, Bamberg, Barnwell, Jasper, Hampton, Dorchester and Colleton. The agenda included:
   a. Reports from trainees attending STEP schools.
   b. Reports from communities expecting STEP schools to open.
   c. Questions on problems facing communities.
   d. Information on the progress and meaning of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

4. The representatives from Aiken County reported that the problem of eligibility for STEP training had been solved and recruiting was progressing with an expected opening date already announced. The representatives from Barnwell County said all plans had been announced for the opening of their STEP school on June 15th. But there had not been any notices sent out to potential trainees. Mr. James was asked to find out why this delay was being made.

5. Several important questions were asked by representatives from several counties. Some of the questions asked were as follows:

   Isn't a lady living alone with herself to support a head of a family? Mr. Houstoun said he did not know.

   Why is it that heads of families only get $28.00 per week? (Asked by a lady from Bamberg.) She had heard they were supposed to get $45 a week. Mr. James told her that $28.00 was the average pay per week for all heads of families. He explained that what she had heard was an erroneous statement from one of our newspapers.

   Mr. John Hotto from Denmark asked why it was that the whites in the community had never called them in to give them any information about how the STEP school in Bamberg County was going to be organized. At this point Rev. Wright emphasized that they had gotten all the information about the opening of their STEP school from Mr. James.

   A lady from Barnwell asked if it were possible to get a training program set up for men who are working but they need to know how to read better in order to hold their jobs and get promotions. Mr. James referred this lady to the District Supt. in Barnwell County to get help in setting up an Adult Evening Education Program for all adults in her area, who are interested in training.

Another lady from Denmark asked,"Is it true that people who can hardly read and write are accepted in these STEP schools when they are unemployed?" Mr. Houstoun answered her by saying everybody unemployed is eligible for training. Mrs. Spearman also told Mr. Hutto that in some of the communities the white members of the STEP committee would come to meetings where colored and white people were present and help to explain the STEP program.

6. Mr. James was asked by Rev. J. S. She inturn introduced Mr. L. Houstoun who delivered an inspiring talk on how the Anti-Poverty Bill when passed would bring opportunities that would lead to the elimination of poverty. He emphasized the fact that all people, regardless of color, would be included in this program for better living and economic opportunities. Mr. James Mays also gave a short explanation of the type of work that he is planning to do for the disadvantaged low-income people and for students who have been put out of college because of participation in mass demonstration against segregation.

7. Rev. Wright announced some people were being denied registration for the STEP program because they were employed and received $10.00 a week. He promised to submit the name of one person privately after the meeting. He also announced that voter registration for the state of South Carolina had increased by 45,000 during the drive.

The meeting was dismissed with a prayer from the Rev. Frank Murray of Ridgeland, South Carolina.

Report of Program Director

June - August 1964

I. Student Program

The work of the Recruiting Committee, "Operation Search," for the year was climaxed with a Consultation on Recruiting which was held in Columbia on June 7. The efforts of this committee, of which Mr. Harvey Gantt is chairman, have been reported previously. To reiterate, members of the Student Committee, working cooperatively with members of local councils or a representative citizens group in towns where no local council exists, have made visits to twelve (12) communities during this school year for group conferences with high school students. The purpose of this effort has been to discover potential Negro students for recently desegregated colleges in South Carolina, to move beyond tokenism at the college level.

At this point no group in the state is working in the area of college recruitment. The committee has found in meetings, which of necessity have had to be introductory and inadequate because of time limitation, that a great deal of basic information, actual preparation, psychological undergirding and financial assistance was greatly needed if Negro students in appreciable numbers were to attend previously white colleges.

The summary of this meeting, which is attached, indicates the need for long-range planning. Follow up from this meeting is continuing.

The Program Director has been in correspondence with Dr. John W. Davis, Director of the Lehman Fund which provides scholarships and financial assistance to students to enter desegregated colleges and universities. A number of students have been referred to the Lehman Fund and Dr. Davis reports that a higher percentage of scholarships have been granted for South Carolina than for any other state.

It was encouraging to note at the consultation that not only student applicants for the coming academic year were present but those who would apply for the 1965-1966 year. Thus the process is in its initial stages.

It was particularly encouraging to have a strong community committee from Spartanburg present with Mr. Albert Gray of that city, who was the first Negro applicant to a private college in South Carolina. Wofford College located in Spartanburg, a Methodist church-related college, had just announced a change in admission policy. Mr. Gray was a few weeks later accepted and plans to enroll in September.

A few Negro students, especially teachers, were enrolled at Clemson, University of South Carolina, and the University Center in Aiken for the summer session. There is still great hesitancy among the Negro teacher to attend the recently opened colleges. Our best available information indicates that the total number of teachers attending the summer sessions was approximately ten. Winthrop's first Negro student enrolled for the second summer session, making Winthrop the third state supported college to integrate, and the first one to do so without a court order.

One of the other ways in which members of SCCHR staff have attempted to encourage fuller use of the higher education facilities has been to send information to key Negro educators concerning National Science Foundation Institutes, School of Education Workshops, short courses, Institutes for Business leaders. Three Negro teachers did apply for the National Science Foundation Math Institute at the University of South Carolina this summer and were accepted as a result of early information which was made available to them and a great deal of encouragement from colleagues.

Summer projects and opportunities for work in the human relations field are always stressed by the SCSCHR. This summer two of the student steering committee members participated in the Human Relations Seminar of the Southern Project; another was a part of an AFSC Institutional Service project with delinquent children in Lexington, Ky.; a fourth was a participant in a National Council of Churches Seminar for student staff at Nantucket, R. I.; another was a member of an AFSC overseas work camp.

Local students also cooperated with the American Friends Service Committee Voter Education project in Orangeburg, which functioned for a period of eight weeks this summer. Two members of SCCHR staff participated in the week-end orientation period for this group in June. Later members of the project met with Columbia students, and from time to time during the summer students from the Columbia area went to Orangeburg and worked with project members in door to door visitation; attended workshops, and shared in the discussions of the group. Three of the student members of this group are remaining in South Carolina to continue their work in voter registration and education.

II. Local Councils.

The Columbia Council began preparation for a major membership interpretation and drive for the fall. A prospect list of some 2000 names from the Greater Columbia area has been compiled. Names have been submitted by many individuals and organized groups in the community. Letters of invitation are to be mailed out as early in the fall quarter as possible, using the new publicity brochure, "Reach for Tomorrow." A coffee-conversation committee has been set up and informal home coffee hours will be a part of the interpretation and membership effort.

The Columbia Council was possibly the first group in the state to arrange a citizens meeting for a discussion of the Civil Rights Act after its passage in July. United States District Attorney Terrell Glenn, an able and concerned young lawyer, discussed the major Titles of the Act; cleared misconceptions and it is hoped allayed some fears.

Another "first" for the Council was a family picnic in June, using the nearby Sesqui-Centennial State Park as the picnic site. The State Parks, having opened on June 1 with somewhat limited facilities (no swimming at this particular park, although family camping is allowed), it was thought should be used as widely as possible by integrated groups. As far as we know this was the first integrated group in the state to make use of a state-owned park. A round 125 persons attended.

In mid-August it became known that Columbia city schools would become integrated on a token basis when the schools opened August 31. The Negro community in Columbia had apparently moved very slowly in attempting to break the pattern of public school segregation. Late applications for transfer for 23 students were approved by the School Board on a voluntary basis (no court action). At the request of one of the families involved, the Columbia Council held one or two orientation sessions for the parents and children who were to be transferred to formerly white schools. These were helpful, even though there was almost no time for preparation. It was quickly apparent that the parents did not know each other and came from a widely divergent background. No careful selection of the first applicants was done. The Council was able to bring children and a few white parents from the schools to which the children would go to meet with the new parents and children. The opening day on August 31 was quiet and uneventful. Staff and leaders of the Columbia Council are keeping in close touch with the parents and another meeting of the group will be held at the end of the first week of school.

I III. Two significant southwide church conferences were held in August. Promotion for these was done by staff members of SCCHR in mid-summer. Several South Carolinians attended the Southern Baptist Christian Life Commission conference on Race Relations at Ridgecrest at the suggestion of the SCCHR office, among them three outstanding Negro educators, who were the only Negro delegates living on the grounds and attending the entire conference. Staff members and others from this state also participated in the Presbyterian Christian Action conference at Montreat.

IV. In late August, after the passage of the Economic Opportunity Act, the Program Director communicated with the Presidents of each of the Negro colleges in the state concerning the Work-Study scholarship provision of the Act. The number of students from low-income families in the state is great. Two of the Negro college presidents reported that between 75-80 percent of their students come from low-income families. Assistance is needed and the Council was interested in getting information concerning this resource to persons in a position to apply immediately for assistance.

to
June, July, August, 1964

The "long, hot, summer" is over. We planned, braced ourselves, and made ready for the storm. It has been a period of major accomplishments in Civil Rights and we believe the Council has played a useful role. The New World Foundation helped tremendously with a grant for program above and beyond our regular budget.

June was spent in continuing to get out information concerning the Civil Rights Bill. Since its passage we have worked on checking and encouraging compliance and reporting the offenders. You have received our July compliance report. Recently the director was a witness at the NAACP court case before Judge Bootle concerning public accommodations in Perry, Georgia. The judge has not given a decision. This city has had no compliance.

Mrs. Robin has been of inestimable value to us in preparing mailings and helping present our view point to the public. With the passage of the Civil Rights Bill many more people are awakened and asking questions. We must meet this need more adequately. We are making progress in reaching out and touching more people. But it is only a meagre beginning in spite of the fact that the postage bill and telephone bill staggers our small operation.

On July 1 we moved into slightly larger quarters and Jac Wasserman from the National Sharecroppers Fund, moved in to share office space and coordinate our efforts in rural areas. This gives a new dimension to our usefulness, since Mr. Wasserman could give new information to Council members over the state, thus giving them an opportunity to provide leadership in their communities. Two specific summer projects were added to our program. We were able to secure the services of Don Franks, of Paine College for three months. (We wish we could keep him permanently). He has done significant work in:

Crawfordville
Greensboro
Louisville
Milledgeville
Sandersville
Sparta
Statesboro
Swainsboro
Thomson
Warrenton
Washington
Waynesboro
Wrens

Except for Milledgeville and Statesboro, our staff had previously done no work. Mr. Franks will continue to help us do some follow up in the more promising towns during the fall. In this Eastern area of the state little movement among the Negroes has taken place. Much of this is old plantation country, with deep prejudice and feeling of isolation. Throughout this area it will be most difficult to get compliance with the Civil Rights Act. An organized Council in towns less than 10,000 people seems to be almost impossible. However, it is far from hopeless. After fully checking on the director, the city attorney at Louisville invited us to come to this historic town to discuss the setting up of a bi-racial committee. This town has decided to move ahead as slowly as possible and as late as possible. (The carefully preserved slave market still stands in the center of the main street.)

Another summer project that we feel is successful is the formation of our "Georgia Women for Progress". With the experience of organizing Atlanta's Women for Progress, which became Partners for Progress, Mrs. Hamilton called together some 90 women from 10 towns in Georgia. The response was terrific. At a meeting at the Biltmore Hotel, Georgia Women for Progress was launched. The group was interracial (over 1/3 Negro). Signatures on the Petition (enclosed) are coming in from places like the Canton Junior Women's Club and various individuals from over 30 towns scattered over the state. Many of these are new names of people who would hesitate to join a Council on Human Relations, but will take this first step. We hope the group can grow to be useful in the state. Fifty eight (58) women have responded by securing 1304 signatures to this date.

We gave the services of our office to the Civil Rights Commission in promoting the very successful meeting at the Dinkler on August 12. Between 500 and 600 people attended from 110 Georgia towns to get information concerning the Civil Rights Act. The people who attended were Mayors, City and County Attorneys, Sheriffs, Chiefs of Police and businessmen. From observations at the meeting it seemed the majority who attended were questioning if there was a way out or if compliance was to be demanded. Fortunately the men from Washington were firm in their interpretation of the law. Since that date we have found in several South Georgia communities, evidence that the meeting was exceedingly worth while.

During the summer we aided several cities in preparation for school desegregation - although the activities in various places was not terrifically great, we think it did help mold public opinion toward peaceful compliance. All has gone well. Of the cities already desegregated, Atlanta has increased its desegregation from 9 in September 1962 to something close to 800 Negroes attending the 8th through 12th grades.

Savannah increased from 19 to 87.

Brunswick from 6 in the high school to 10 in high school and 7 in elementary.

Athens from 6 to 9, from 1 senior high, 4 junior high, and 1 elementary to 5 senior high, 4 junior high (1 elementary withdrew).

This fall the following schools desegregated for the first time:

Columbus - (the court had ordered a plan) 4 attended 12th grade. There was a little difficulty from outside adults when before school started one Negro started band practice with the group. This was quickly controlled.

Macon - 16 students are in the 12th grade in 3 high schools, (under court order.)

Augusta - 10 attended the first three grades without court order. Except for some nasty phone calls all went well.

Marietta - received 2 students in 10th grade without court order.

Albany - received 59 in the 1st and 2nd grades and 6 in 12th grades under court order.

Americus - the surprise came in Americus where without any previous publicity, the school board opened the entire system to transfers. 4 students, 2 in 10th 2 in 11th had the stupendous courage to enter school. The first 2 days were tense with some rock throwing, by the third day the school personnel had control of the situation.

Several school systems have refused Negroes.

The Houston County Board has refused to admit Negroes both in Warner Robbins and in Perry. They say, however, they will desegregate in the 2nd half of 1964-1965.

The Covington (Newton County) School refused 2 Negroes who attempted to enter High School.

The Monroe (Walton County) High School also turned away 2 Negroes.

In Rome parents of several small children have asked that their children be transferred to a neighborhood school, rather than go 5 miles by bus to a Negro school. They have received no answer from the superintendent.

Mr. Holmes has continued his work with Atlanta's "Breadbasket". Based on his experience, we are preparing materials to be used in other towns. A "do it yourself" employment pamphlet. We hope it will be useful for Negro leaders in many towns.

We have kept in close touch with our contacts in Southwest Georgia, interpreting their problems to the proper governmental departments in Washington. After recent trips into Americus, we are beginning to have optimism concerning this town. We finally know of one integrationist in Terrell County. Mr. Wasserman had made three trips into this area, working with individuals and groups concerning employment. In our recent work with Georgia Women for Progress some of our white contacts in Tifton have signed the petition. Perhaps some of the visits and mailings are beginning to pay off. We'll see.

With the strength of the law behind us and the encouragement this has given people throughout the state we are looking forward to a good fall and winter.

Six of our nine councils are in excellent health, carrying on a meaningful program. We have non-affiliated groups in three towns to whom we give regular assistance and hope they will eventually be new councils. Forty three new members have been added this summer. Atlanta has sent the names (no refund) of 20 new members. Financial statement attached.

Georgia Women for Progress

5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W., ROOM 201

We are Georgia women deeply concerned that a climate of law and order and of mutual respect for the rights of others prevail and grow throughout our state and nation.

We applaud the statements of our governor, our senators and other public officials in support of lawful behavior. We commend businessmen throughout our state who have demonstrated their faith in a law-abiding society. We pay tribute to the religious and civic leaders who have encouraged and supported this faith.

We pledge our full support as citizens, parents, voters, churchgoers and consumers, to every business, civic, religious and governmental program designed to aid our state in its progress and to help every Georgian become a useful citizen.

The creative talents of the individual can best develop where there are no artificial barriers in education, employment, government and political affairs, and where every Georgian has equal opportunity to become a useful and responsible citizen.

We want our state to be in the forefront of national growth and development and believe Georgia has the potential. If we use our human resources to the fullest we can achieve the goal.

This can happen only in a climate of law and order when there is mutual respect for the rights of others, and when we as Georgians uphold the state motto of "wisdom, justice and moderation."

Dear

We are convinced that many other Georgia women share our concern that a climate of law and order and of mutual respect for the rights of others prevail and grow throughout our state and nation. We believe that many others share our conviction that the progress and well-being of our state depends upon a continued demonstration by all our people of our faith in a law-abiding society.

We therefore invite you to join in signing the enclosed testimonial. It will be presented to our Governor at an appropriate ceremony during the month of September to express Georgia women's appreciation for support of law observance.

We welcome the signatures of other concerned women in your community whom you may wish to invite to sign as a witness to our faith in the potentials for progress in our state as part of a law-abiding society.

All signators are asked to indicate their city in Georgia. Please return the enclosed testimonial with as many signatures as you can secure, to the address above by September 14. The signatures will become a part of the testimonial, as will the signatures below.

Plain Words Express Concern, Convictions of Many Women

Sometimes it's not easy for people to—in the somewhat grandiloquent phrase—"stand up and be counted." If nobody seeks our views, we might not even put them into words ourselves. On the other hand, we may know what we believe and believe it ardently, but we keep our convictions to ourselves out of natural reticence, a wish to be tactful or the desire to avoid conflict. But sometimes it's good to make one's convictions unmistakably plain—for the inner relief of having taken a stand, as much as for any influence it might have on others.

Women throughout Georgia are busy doing that even now. In small towns and cities and country places they are circulating a testimonial labelled "Georgia Women for Progress." They hope to have 10,000 names within a few weeks to hand, along with the testimonial, to Gov. Sanders.

It says: "We are Georgia women deeply concerned that a climate of law and order and of mutual respect for the rights of others prevail and grow through our state and nation.

"We applaud the statements of our governor, our senators and other public officials in support of lawful behavior. We commend businessmen throughout our state who have demonstrated their faith in a law-abiding society. We pay tribute to the religious and civic leaders who have encouraged and supported this faith.

"We pledge our full support as citizens, parents, voters, church-goers and consumers to every business, civic, religious and governmental program designed to aid our state in its progress and to help every Georgian become a useful citizen.

"The creative talents of the individual can best develop where there are no artificial barriers in education, employment, government and political affairs, and where every Georgian has equal opportunity to become a useful and responsible citizen.

"We want our state to be in the forefront of national growth and development and believe Georgia has the potential. If we use our human resources to the fullest we can achieve the goal.

"This can happen only in a climate of law and order when there is mutual respect for the rights of others, and when we as Georgians uphold the state motto of 'wisdom, justice and moderation.' "

There are people who scorn signing a petition or a statement as a puny instrument in any war. Hardier souls demonstrate and sometimes boycott. Many of the brave have had their heads bashed in.

If copies of this testimonial are not available in your community and you would like to get them, the office of Georgia Women for Progress, 5 Forsyth St., NW, Atlanta, can provide them.

QUARTERLY REPORT

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

TO: Southern Regional Council

Quarterly Report: June, July, August, 1964

As indicated in the previous quarterly report, all Tennessee has been solely involved in the recent political contests. The primary on August 6 settled some of the state contests, but not all of them. The Republican Party is presenting a slate of able candidates to oppose Democratic candidates for the State Legislature seats in Memphis and Nashville, as well as East Tennessee, and in some of the other districts which had formerly been considered wholly Democratic. From my personal white contacts in rural west Tennessee, it is anticipated that the usual solidly Democratic vote will be almost solidly Republican. This is really not related to a change in convictions, but retribution against the Kennedy-Johnson administration which they feel has betrayed them. This was the vote which Governor Clement courted in the August primary. It will be stronger in the general election because many Republicans felt it would be easier to beat Ross Bass in a general election than Governor Clement. What all this means to the Council is that our leadership has priorities other than Council activity. This will continue until after the November 3 election.

Some important conclusions have developed from the August primary. The Negro vote is enough to sway elections in the state - not enough to win on its own. In cities such as Memphis, Nashville, and Knoxville it is better organized and not to be gained by appeals of the old political henchmen. This level of sophistication has not been achieved in smaller population areas such as Jackson, Tennessee and Fayette county, where there were inroads of politicians who worked successfully to divide the Negro vote. Considerable money was spent by the Clement forces in the Knoxville area without success. According to Negro leadership in Knoxville Negro citizens took the money but voted against Clement. Negroes contributed to partisan campaigns, sometimes rejecting funds from the candidates headquarters. The Republican Party in Middle and West Tennessee has obviously written off the Negro vote, and is attempting to exploit the resentment against Negro gains. (See political clippings of early September enclosed).

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT

Following the Atlanta meeting of June 24 and 25, Mrs. Irving Hand gathered together representatives from the same women's groups who participated in Atlanta. It was not a good time of the year since many of the elected leaders of the organizations were out of the city. In addition, Mrs. Hand had to overcome some resistance from the membership of her own organization who felt she was usurping an authority which was not delegated to her. Part of the problem was that the national offices of the organizations had not all written to their local leaders, or at least the letter had not yet reached the persons who participated. The United Church Women were poorly represented for this purpose, and their representative obviously believed that the action proposed would do more harm than good. It was recognized that the group could not possibly test all restaurants, but it was determined that the facilities offering service along the main arteries of the city were the most important. Following the meeting, on July 2, the President signed the Civil Rights Bill, and in the following 24 hours some of the more vindictive hold-outs, such as Morrison's opened up with great cordiality. Since that time, there have been reports of isolated restaurants, drug-store, food service, drive-ins, etc. which are not complying. As far as we can tell they form no pattern. All of these firms have been made known to Mrs. Hand, and I know that she has called some of the representatives and asked that they check these places. The problem has been in getting reports. The TCHR designed report forms but they have not been returned. We also made "We Serve The Public" cards available for firms if they wished to use them and they were also distributed to the women at the meeting.

While initial compliance was better than expected, it now appears that in the small towns there has been little testing. Restaurants are still displaying signs saying that "We reserve the right to serve--", and "Prices subject to change without notice." In small towns there is real fear about trying to use restaurants. In a drug store in Waverly, Negroes are served from paper cups when they order at the fountain; only by firmly demanding a glass do you get one. My own meager experience in the use of Nashville restaurants by bi-racial groups has been entirely uneventful. No one seemed to even notice. There is considerable complaint from our white members that Negroes are never seen in the formerly segregated restaurants. It is recognized that limited funds will have an effect on the use of such facilities, but this is not true for all. It would seem that Negro college faculty, especially faculty of tax supported schools, might make a particular contribution in this regard since they are cautious about getting involved in direct action or aggressive approaches to controversial matters.

TENNESSEE ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The TAC to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights will hold a state-wide meeting in Nashville on November 20, modeled after the Atlanta one in August. While this properly belongs in the next quarter's report, some of the developments have grown out of events of the past three months. By Board action, TCHR has agreed to help with the promotion of the meeting, and a Nashville Chapter member is appointed to coordinate the clerical part of the promotion. At the planning session last week all local members of LeRoy Collins' committee were present, and led by ex-Governor Buford Ellington endorsed the meeting. Ellington promised specific assistance in enlisting the support of the Tennessee Association of Manufacturers. (The TAM has been resistive since they want to wait for the outcome of the regulations which will affect employment.) Since Ellington ran for Governor and won on a segregation platform, I was interested to hear him say that he hoped "there would never be another political campaign in Tennessee in which race would be an issue". This was said with considerable fervor. The TAC members wanted to have the meeting on October 6; the will of the Community Service members prevailed in setting the meeting after the general election. There was no doubt in the minds of all those present that race is an issue in November, 1964.

The TAC will not be an effective force for change, until old members who have not participated are dropped, and a new slate of members who actually want to work on this are recruited. Mrs. Ragland has recruited several new members and Mahlon Griffith has been added to the TAC, but there is more non-active membership than active. Furthermore there has been little genuine leadership from the U. S. Commission staff.

STAFF TRAVEL

In late May and early June, I made a brief trip to Cleveland, Tennessee in response to a specific request. In mid-July I was on a seven day trip to East Tennessee, and since then there have been brief day trips in the middle Tennessee area including Clarksville and Waverly. Some of the developments are outlined in recent NEWSLETTERS. When there is an opportunity, I try to talk with public officials, such as the mayor or city manager. Frequently these persons tell an outsider things about the community which they do not share with our group there. Visits are sometimes made to Employment offices both for specific information and to observe whether discriminatory practices are still obviously in effect. In East Tennessee there is little interest in the public accommodations section of the civil rights act. Throughout most of the cities in the eastern part of the state this has been settled a year ago, the big concerns are housing and jobs. They see education as the key to employment and are concerned about the limited opportunities for Negro children in the small and ill-equipped schools which are still in being for Negroes. However, there is great ambivalence about the schools for fear of loss of Negro teaching jobs. Frequently, Negro groups and our local councils must work in opposition not only to the white leadership, but against a faction of the Negro community.

There is an increasing number of school systems desegregating this fall. At an August meeting in Waverly, one of the earliest schools systems which desegregated (total - grades 1-12 in September, 1962), it was apparent that there has been no real integration. Negro boys may play on the competitive athletic teams provided this is agreeable with the opposing team. This limitation is in force regardless of whether the Humphreys County school (Waverly) is playing on its home ground or away. The Negro children are not genuine participants in the school activities. There are no Negro teachers; some Negro residents say that they were all poorly qualified. At the Sunday afternoon meeting at an AME church, I had, at the request of the Waverly minister, brought several white high school students from Nashville with me. The ministerial association had promised the minister that at least 2 young people from each of the white churches would be present. There were none. A Negro male student who has just graduated from the integrated high school will be among the first Negro undergraduates at Vanderbilt this fall; he has a scholarship.

MEMPHIS

As you know from the clippings forwarded to you, the SRC report on Memphis was received with enthusiasm in the press and among white leadership. There was no such endorsement in the Negro community. The general attitude is that Memphis is already the most over-rated southern community in race relations, and the article only increased this image which is false. For example: a women's group across racial and religious lines (similar in make-up to the June 25 meeting in Atlanta) talked with Mr. Ed Meeman who now heads the Community Relations Committee about their contribution to the Memphis scene. This was following the passage of the civil rights law. He proposed that they confine their dining to places where it had been determined ahead of time that they were wanted and would be genuinely welcome. If a place seemed reluctant they should avoid patronizing that restaurant. He indicated that in time, all restaurants would want their trade, and welcome them; obviously this was not acceptable to the more aggressive members. The group has had to hold a number of meetings at the airport restaurant. Leadership in the CRC has tried to get a promise from the officers of the TCHR chapter that they will clear all proposed projects with CRC, and obtain their approval, and that a liason person from CRC sit in on all TCHR sessions. (CRC even appointed the liason person.)

NASHVILLE

A plan is in being to have regular luncheon or evening meetings monthly. A meeting in late July was held for presentation of the summer tutorial and enrichment program at a local neighborhood center; it was well attended despite vacations and a storm. (See enclosed notice for September meeting.) The Seminar at Tennessee A&I State University was canceled just as our NEWSLETTER was being assembled for mailing in June. No reason was given to the participants in the planning, but the University President announced cancellation. This is not unusual. The Nashville Bar Association refuses all pleas to open its membership to Negroes. The executive board of nine(9) has a majority wishing to continue segregation and this includes the president. The state bar is also segregated and Olin White of Nashville is president elect. He spoke against the civil rights law on August 31 at the Nashville Rotary Club (See enclosed clipping).

GOVERNOR'S COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS

This commission has been inactive since last spring. They have not met since Governor Clement made his opening campaign speech for the Senate. The Commission had urged the signing of a fair employment practices pledge modeled after the Kentucky one, but not that strong. The Governor delayed, and finally refused to sign it. In his opening campaign speech he announced that he would not have voted for the civil rights bill had he been in the Senate. Two meetings of the Commission have since been set, but each one has been canceled. The Chairman of the Commission has been the target for both sides. He has had a very difficult time in his church because of his stand for equality. He is the Governor's minister, and the Governor did not come to his rescue in the church, and then actually repudiated him in the campaign without calling names. There was considerable speculation as to whether the Commission would resign. Some of the Governor's ardent supporters have told Chairman Sam Dodson that he is directly the cause of the Governor's losing the race - by allowing the FEPC code to be developed. Despite all of this the Commission has a staff of a typist and a research assistant, Mr. J. L. Perkins, a Fisk graduate with about 14 months experience, working for the New York City Youth Board. Under direction of Mr. Charles Clelland of Knoxville, the Commission is making a survey of public accommodations in Tennessee. I do know the definition they have made of the subject, or in what way they have considered the impact of the civil rights bill. The Governor has since the election given indication of some financial backing for the Commission, but its future and prestige are uncertain.

The Race Relations Institute was held at Fisk from June 29 to July 11. Since this was just at the time of the passage of the Civil Rights Act it was not possible to attend many sessions. A large amount of the yearly impact on Nashville has been lost since the Institute now holds no lectures at night. These sessions were formerly well attended by Nashville residents, and were one of the factors which made for a more liberal community in Nashville than in some other Tennessee cities.

COUNCIL ADMINISTRATION

On July 6, the Executive Committee of the Council, with some additional members from Nashville met to discuss the possible effects of the Civil Rights Law. On August 19, the semi-annual board meeting was held in Nashville. The minutes are enclosed. The State Meeting is planned for November 12 and 13. The current problem is determining the speaker and his availability for the dates which have been recommended.

Financial information is enclosed.

ADDENDA TO QUARTERLY REPORT

JACKSON

Information has just been received that the Jackson League of Women Voters has disbanded. Negro members were merely notified of the demise of the local league. No details are available at the moment, but it seems probably that it is due to the pressure on the league since it opened its membership without regard to race. There were two Negro members.

See attached clipping about the school boycott. This year there will be no Negro Fair which ordinarily falls a week or two after the West Tennessee District Fair. The PTA Council for the Negro schools had talked with the City Commissioner of Education and other officials about the variation in school program, and the desire that Negro children participate in Children's Day at the Fair.

The following letter was received by parents of Negro children who did not attend school on the day of the boycott:

City of Jackson School System
Jackson, Tennessee

To the Parents of_____

You are hereby notified that the above named student has, by order of the School Board of the City of Jackson, been placed on probation in the Jackson City School System for the remainder of the 1964-65 school year for taking part in an organized boycott of the City Schools on this date by failing to attend school.

You are further notified that any further violation of the rules, policy, schedule of attendance or faculty instruction by this student may result in expulsion of this student from the system. This is the only notice you will receive from this office, if further action is necessary the School Board will handle same.

QUARTERLY REPORT

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

TO: Southern Regional Council

Quarterly Report: June, July, August, 1964

As indicated in the previous quarterly report, all Tennessee has been solely involved in the recent political contests. The primary on August 6 settled some of the state contests, but not all of them. The Republican Party is presenting a slate of able candidates to oppose Democratic candidates for the State Legislature seats in Memphis and Nashville, as well as East Tennessee, and in some of the other districts which had formerly been considered wholly Democratic. From my personal white contacts in rural west Tennessee, it is anticipated that the usual solidly Democratic vote will be almost solidly Republican. This is really not related to a change in convictions, but retribution against the Kennedy-Johnson administration which they feel has betrayed them. This was the vote which Governor Clement courted in the August primary. It will be stronger in the general election because many Republicans felt it would be easier to beat Ross Bass in a general election than Governor Clement. What all this means to the Council is that our leadership has priorities other than Council activity. This will continue until after the November 3 election.

Some important conclusions have developed from the August primary. The Negro vote is enough to sway elections in the state - not enough to win on its own. In cities such as Memphis, Nashville, and Knoxville it is better organized and not to be gained by appeals of the old political henchmen. This level of sophistication has not been achieved in smaller population areas such as Jackson, Tennessee and Fayette county, where there were inroads of politicians who worked successfully to divide the Negro vote. Considerable money was spent by the Clement forces in the Knoxville area without success. According to Negro leadership in Knoxville Negro citizens took the money but voted against Clement. Negroes contributed to partisan campaigns, sometimes rejecting funds from the candidates headquarters. The Republican Party in Middle and West Tennessee has obviously written off the Negro vote, and is attempting to exploit the resentment against Negro gains. (See political clippings of early September enclosed).

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT

Following the Atlanta meeting of June 24 and 25, Mrs. Irving Hand gathered together representatives from the same women's groups who participated in Atlanta. It was not a good time of the year since many of the elected leaders of the organizations were out of the city. In addition, Mrs. Hand had to overcome some resistance from the membership of her own organization who felt she was usurping an authority which was not delegated to her. Part of the problem was that the national offices of the organizations had not all written to their local leaders, or at least the letter had not yet reached the persons who participated. The United Church Women were poorly represented for this purpose, and their representative obviously believed that the action proposed would do more harm than good. It was recognized that the group could not possibly test all restaurants, but it was determined that the facilities offering service along the main arteries of the city were the most important. Following the meeting, on July 2, the President signed the Civil Rights Bill, and in the following 24 hours some of the more vindictive hold-outs, such as Morrison's opened up with great cordiality. Since that time, there have been reports of isolated restaurants, drug-store, food service, drive-ins, etc. which are not complying. As far as we can tell they form no pattern. All of these firms have been made known to Mrs. Hand, and I know that she has called some of the representatives and asked that they check these places. The problem has been in getting reports. The TCHR designed report forms but they have not been returned. We also made "We Serve The Public" cards available for firms if they wished to use them and they were also distributed to the women at the meeting.

While initial compliance was better than expected, it now appears that in the small towns there has been little testing. Restaurants are still displaying signs saying that "We reserve the right to serve--", and "Prices subject to change without notice." In small towns there is real fear about trying to use restaurants. In a drug store in Waverly, Negroes are served from paper cups when they order at the fountain; only by firmly demanding a glass do you get one. My own meager experience in the use of Nashville restaurants by bi-racial groups has been entirely uneventful. No one seemed to even notice. There is considerable complaint from our white members that Negroes are never seen in the formerly segregated restaurants. It is recognized that limited funds will have an effect on the use of such facilities, but this is not true for all. It would seem that Negro college faculty, especially faculty of tax supported schools, might make a particular contribution in this regard since they are cautious about getting involved in direct action or aggressive approaches to controversial matters.

TENNESSEE ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The TAC to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights will hold a state-wide meeting in Nashville on November 20, modeled after the Atlanta one in August. While this properly belongs in the next quarter's report, some of the developments have grown out of events of the past three months. By Board action, TCHR has agreed to help with the promotion of the meeting, and a Nashville Chapter member is appointed to coordinate the clerical part of the promotion. At the planning session last week all local members of LeRoy Collins' committee were present, and led by ex-Governor Buford Ellington endorsed the meeting. Ellington promised specific assistance in enlisting the support of the Tennessee Association of Manufacturers. (The TAM has been resistive since they want to wait for the outcome of the regulations which will affect employment.) Since Ellington ran for Governor and won on a segregation platform, I was interested to hear him say that he hoped "there would never be another political campaign in Tennessee in which race would be an issue". This was said with considerable fervor. The TAC members wanted to have the meeting on October 6; the will of the Community Service members prevailed in setting the meeting after the general election. There was no doubt in the minds of all those present that race is an issue in November, 1964.

The TAC will not be an effective force for change, until old members who have not participated are dropped, and a new slate of members who actually want to work on this are recruited. Mrs. Ragland has recruited several new members and Mahlon Griffith has been added to the TAC, but there is more non-active membership than active. Furthermore there has been little genuine leadership from the U. S. Commission staff.

NOON MEETING

NASHVILLE COMMUNITY RELATIONS COUNCIL

TIME: Thursday, September 17, 1964
12:30 until 1:30 p.m.

PLACE: Corson Room, Methodist Board of Education

PROGRAM: "Impact of Segregation on Student Nurses at Meharry Medical College"

Speaker — Dr. H. James Crecraft

Convener — Miss Alma Gault

Persons wishing to lunch in the Methodist Board cafeteria prior to the meeting should arrive before 12 noon. It is necessary that the program begin promptly in order to keep within the time limits set for the meeting.

In addition to his private practice, Dr. Crecraft is Assistant Clinical Professor of Psychiatry, and acting director of child Psychiatry at Vanderbilt Medical School. He is also consultant on Child Psychiatry, Department of Pediatrics, Meharry Medical College. At the time of the study outlined on the following page, he was a consultant to the Meharry Medical College School of Nursing.

The Nashville Community Relations Council is a Chapter of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations

Between 1957 and 1960, Meharry Medical College School of Nursing undertook an extensive evaluation of its program and methods for increasing the students' knowledge of mental health concepts. According to Dr. Laurie Gunter, dean of the school of nursing at Meharry at the time of the study, the faculty also was "concerned about the effects segregation in primary and secondary schools had on the personalities of our students who had received all of their education in schools for Negroes in the South".

Dr. Gunter has written tellingly of the experiment and its results. Nursing Outlook, in its February 1961 issue, published an article entitled"The Effects of Segregation on Nursing Students", based on a paper Mrs. Gunter presented at the annual meeting of the American Ortho-psychiatric Association in Chicago in February 1960. Copies of the article are available from the Nashville Community Relations Council.

As Nashville students move out of a rigidly segregated society into integrated higher education and professional schools, what problems in learning are likely to be encountered by them and their instructors? What self-concepts do minority group students carry with them as a result of their earlier training and experience ? What are the probable consequences for the students and their classmates?

Dr. Crecraft was closely associated with the study, and the Nashville Community Relations Council is privileged to have him relate his conclusions from his own participation in the study. There will be an opportunity for questions from the floor.

The meeting is open to members and non-members of the Council. We look forward to seeing you.

SOUTH STREET TUTORIAL PROGRAM

Now in its second summer, the South Street Summer Tutorial Program represents a unique blending of the efforts of a community center, a religious organization, and a public school system to provide extra remedial help during the summer for children in culturally deprived areas. The first opportunity to participate in this endeavor was presented last year to the South Street Community Center by the Mennonite Central Committee. The Committee received applications from teachers who desire to teach as volunteers during the summer in interracial situations. The Committee then attempts to place the volunteers through teaching programs set up by community agencies particularly in Negro areas. Last summer's program was not only the first such effort by South Street Community Center--it was the first experiment of this kind by the Mennonite Central Committee itself. Classes were set up in two Negro elementary schools and four volunteer teachers undertook to help about 100 children who had fallen behind in their class work. Even under last year's "shoestring" conditions, there was clear evidence that the remedial help had been rewarding to the children.

This year, South Street Community Center again sponsored the tutorial program in the same two elementary schools. Although there is some public summer program, ours is the only work being done with children in the first three grades of school. We have five Mennonite volunteer teachers and one local volunteer teacher, and we have endeavored to keep the classes to about fifteen children each. This year, doctoral candidates from the Special Education Department of Peabody College are working with the Mennonite volunteer teachers part of each day, using exciting new materials. Mrs. Joseph E. Wright, of the South Street Board, has organized the enrichment phase of our efforts designed to try to expand the horizons of these children, give them experiences not otherwise attainable, stimulate their imaginations--all elements which stimulate their observation and verbalization and encourage them to learn.

The entire program is designed to help small children over some handicaps of environment. By any measurement, even the modest efforts are meeting with outstanding success.

BOARD MINUTES--August 19, 1964

The Board meeting was convened at the Presbyterian Center, adjacent to the Council office at 10:15 a.m. Mr. Willis, president, presided. Minutes of the January 24 Board Meeting were read by Kay Jones in the absence of Mrs. Silver, secretary, and approved. Miss Jones explained that the Board was meeting in Nashville instead of Memphis, as proposed at the time of the January meeting, because of the inability of Memphis board members to attend this meeting. The meeting itself was not held in the spring because of the imminent passage of the Civil Rights Bill and its effect on the Council's program, and the summer involvement of many persons in the August primary elections.

It was noted that "Operation Benchmark" was not repeated this year, in accordance with the proposal made in January 1964. This omission related to the passage of the Civil Rights Bill on July 2, and the recognition that a new assessment of voluntary desegregation of places of public accommodation would not be valid undertaking on the eve of passage of the act. In addition, the Governor's Commission on Human Relations is in the process of making a similar survey at this time.

President William Willis said that many things had transpired to change the direction and role of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations. The facts and their import had been voiced by the executive director. With Paul Anthony of the Southern Regional Council was in attendance today, Mr. Willis proposed a regrouping of the Board members present for today's assignments. He therefore asked that the following persons present meet in a special committee: Mrs. Martha Ragland, Lewis Sinclair, Will D. Campbell, and William Willis. Mr. Campbell was asked to serve as chairman, and Paul Anthony was requested to meet with the Committee.

Miss Louise Young was asked to serve as today's chairman of the Annual Meeting committee, and meeting with her were Rev. Crutcher, Mrs. Hull, and Mr. Merriwether.

The Civil Rights Committee included Mrs. Muhleman, Mr. Seeber, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. Sasser, Mrs. Fuson, and Miss Jones. This group also gave brief attention to the membership situation at present.

Following lunch, the Board met as a unit, and the morning group was joined by Rev. M. J. Jones, Rev. Dogan Williams, and Dr. Tarleton. The President asked for reports from the committees which had met in the morning.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE, Will Campbell reporting. The proposal for redirection of the Council's activities, including additional staff and change in assignment had been made by the executive director of the Council. With the backing of law, opportunities are opening up to talk with civic clubs, and civic leadership groups in terms of community progress. It is also possible to enlist, or at least challenge, these same groups to community action to eliminate or lessen poverty, illiteracy, poor level of education and inadequate or inappropriate job training. Here are matters which are not limited by race, although they may be more widely experienced by Negroes than whites. For example: we need to alert communities to plan ahead in the area of housing, and not build ghettoes which lead to frustration, unrest, and later problems for the whole community.

The proposal of the Special Committee today is for the employment of an additional staff member, preferably a white male, to carry major responsibility for public relations, fund raising, and administration. The present executive would continue with the council in areas of program assistance, direct recruitment of members, response to requests for assistance from over the state, and other duties as assigned. It is recognized that this is a proposal which needs serious consideration. The Board discussed the matter at some length. Kay Jones explained that the proposal had been initiated by her and that she felt that the Council was at a turning point. We should either expand our program, or begin a retrenchment toward concluding it.

On a motion of Louise Young, seconded by Mrs. Hull, the Board voted to give the Special Committee power to consider the matter further. Today's committee is to be enlarged by the inclusion of Dr. Vasco Smith of Memphis, Mrs. Adele Schweid of Nashville, and George Barrett of Nashville in addition to Rev. Sam Dodson, Jr. as an ex-officio member and President Willis serving also as an ex-officio member. The resolution further authorized the Executive Committee of the Council to receive the report of the Sepcial Committee when completed and take appropriate action in the name of the Board and the membership, including the recruiting of personnel.

Members of the Board proposed that the committee seek to coordinate the activities of this organization with other organizations and agencies working in the area of human relations. Dr. Tarleton urged that the Council be bold, and that it take positions on issues, even though it might result in the loss of timid members.

ANNUAL MEETING Committee reported by Mrs. Hull. It is recommended that the meeting be held on November 12 and 13, with alternate dates being November 19 and 20. The former pattern of the meeting be adhered to with the initial session a luncheon on Thursday at noon with President Willis as speaker. The program emphasis should be directed toward human rights rather than limited to civil rights. Program emphasis should include strategy for strengthening of local councils and membership with guidelines to their development. In addition to competent leadership for each session, there should be time for members to participate directly in discussion and questioning. A panel discussion on church leadership in human rights is recommended for inclusion in the Annual Meeting with representatives of three major religious groups representing churches with white membership to speak on specific contributions made by local churches, not statements of principle by their national bodies. It is proposed that the panel moderator be Negro.

Other topics for possible inclusion might be housing and the elimination of poverty. There should not be concurrent sessions.

There should be a dinner meeting on Thursday night, following precedent of past meetings. Speakers proposed were Sargent Shriver, Leroy Collins, Robert Weaver, George Grider, Ross Bass, E. William Henry (Federal Communications Commission Chairman). The decisions as to place, speakers, and program detail are to be left to the staff, and persons appointed by the president to promote the annual meeting. The president called for discussion of time, place, and program proposals as presented. It was recognized that the November 12 and 13 date were not possible for some of our membership. The November 19 and 20, alternate dates, are already set for the Southern Regional Council for their annual meeting. It was then voted to accept the dates of November 12 and 13 with Nashville the place of the meeting.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS Committee at the Board meeting reported continued good compliance with the public accommodations section of the bill. There is undoubtedly some non-compliance, but it is difficult to pin-point. It was noted that some new church bodies have arisen from groups of individuals discontented with national church and governmental leadership. There is renewed activity on the part of the Ku Klux Klan noted in Chattanooga. Since matters in Tennessee have been relatively quiet there has been little direct leadership on the part of mayors or state officials urging positive compliance. Citizens have been mislead by untrue statements relating to the civil rights bill which were made by certain candidates in the recent primary elections. In Bristol, there has never been a white minister who has attended a Bristol Council on Human Relations local meeting, although some of them have promised to do so. In Chattanooga and elsewhere, education is the real issue. The following recommendations were made to Board members:

1. Confer with editors of local newspapers to publish success stories of compliance with civil rights law. Need is for positive outcome of compliance.

2. Ask local TV and radio stations to present a section-by-section interpretation of the civil rights law, recommending such persons as law school professors for analysis.

3. Work for inclusion of Negroes on all policy-making boards of city and county government housing, civil service board, school board, etc.

4. Join with other groups in community for large community meeting on civil rights law. Ask Tennessee members of Community Service (Leroy Collins committee) to speak. Tennessee members are: Carl Carson, Memphis businessman; former Governor Buford Ellington; Amon C. Evans, publisher of the Nashville Tennesseen; Chancellor Alexander Heard of Vanderbilt University; Greenfield Pitts, Nashville Department Store Executive; John Wade, Dean of Vanderbilt University Law School; Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fisk University; and Martin Ochs, publisher of the Chattanooga Times.

Dr. Jones announced that a Negro had been appointed coordinator of instruction for the entire public school system in Chattanooga.

Mrs. Martha Ragland asked the assistance of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations in promoting and assisting with a state-wide meeting proposed for late September under the Tennessee Advisory Committee of the United States Commission on Civil Rights. The Advisory Committee's function is to report to the Commission on compliance with the Civil Rights Law and to disseminate information on the scope and meaning of the law. It is in this latter capacity that the TAC is planning to invite city and county officials, law enforcement officers, civil leadership to a Nashville meeting. The assistance of TCHR is requested to assist with the mailings, and local arrangements for the meeting. The TAC will not require funds from TCHR. It was moved, seconded and carried that assistance be given by TCHR in launching the TAC meeting. Mrs. Fuson, president of the Nashville Community Relations Council agreed to recruit local members to assist in clerical tasks.

Information on membership and income was distributed to Board members. The lessened income in 1964 results from the delay in membership drive in 1964. The Annual Meeting in 1962 was in October, and the Council appealed for membership renewal beginning with December, 1962 NEWSLETTER. The 1963 meeting was not held until late January 1964, and an appeal for renewals was not begun until March, 1964. In addition to NEWSLETTER appeals for renewals, a first class letter appeal has been sent to all unpaid members, and one additional notice has gone to all Nashville members.

The Board meeting adjourned at 3:40 p.m.

Respectfully submitted,

Katherine Jones, Acting Secretary

September 1, 1964

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
1106-19th Avenue, South
Nashville, Tennessee 37212

Dear Board Member:

When you read the enclosed minutes of the Board meeting of August 19, I hope you will be as enthusiastic as I am about the consideration now being given to enlarging the staff and the scope of the Council. During the six years which Louise Young and I have served as your executive directors, some of the important goals of the council have been achieved. While we don't take credit for all of them, it is rewarding to know that we were on the right track, and now we have increased governmental support for their attainment.

I've been thinking a lot about the council and its future. It is one of the hallmarks of integrity for an organization to look frankly at its goals, decide when they have been accomplished, and fold its tents.

Another approach is to determine if the old machinery should be re-tooled to accomplish another purpose. The initiative for the proposal for adding another staff member and reassigning responsibilities came from me. What talent I may have is in direct approach to persons on a one-to-one basis. While that is still valid, we should now be able to push our cause through encouraging leadership in civic clubs, chambers of commerce, etc. While there may be four million more women voters than men in this country, women are still part of a minority group in the seats of power and persuasion. That is one of the reasons I think we should have a man as director of the Council at this time. Not just any man--this needs to be one good at public speaking, fund raising, etc. and a man who cares keenly about the community of dignity and decency which we are all striving diligently to build.

Now won't you read the minutes, and if you have suggestions to make, send them to: William R. Willis, 214 Union Street, Nashville, or Will D. Campbell, (chairman of the Special Committee)
Committee of Southern Churchmen, 1106-19th Avenue, South, Nashville.

Or, you can send your suggestions in care of this office, and I will route them to the Special Committee. I'm sure that President Willis and the Special Committee would genuinely appreciate your guidance. And so would I.

Sincerely yours,

Katherine Jones

Drive On To Register Citizens

The Davidson County Independent Political and The Nashville Branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are currently sponsoring a major effort to obtain the registration and exercise of civic responsibility of the large number of unregistered citizens in our county and especially in the general service area.

There are at present several thousand Negro citizens in Nashville who are of voting age and are not registered. This is a shocking fact, for if ever there was a time or need for all citizens to exercise their right of the ballot, the time is now.

In November the people of this nation will be faced with the choice of selecting a president the true American image or one who will alienate the foreign powers and bring us even closer to war. However, if these thousands who are not registered do not participate in this election, the freedom of your children and grandchildren will be placed in jeopardy by these negligent citizens.

If freedom is to prevail extremism must be given the boot by citizens who are registered voters. The free ballot is the symbol of democracy. It provides the key to a society of freedom, justice, and security.

Please register and vote and protect your children's future.

Remnants of funeral wreaths found in tombs show that ancient Egyptions grew such flowers as the lily, cornflower and narcissus.

Negro Group Backs Democratic Nominees

By FRANK SUTHERLAND

The Tennessee Voters Council, statewide organization seeking to unify Negroes in elections, yesterday endorsed. Some Democratic nominees running for national office in Tennessee, but withheld unqualified support from Sen. Albert Gore and one other.

The group, in an all-day session on the Fisk University campus, termed Gore and Robert Summitt, Democartic nominee for U.S. representative from the 3rd Congressional District, as "acceptable," but refused to endorse them outright.

Z. Alexander Looby, long-time Republican leader and member of the Metro Council, led the floor fight against Gore and Summit, saying: "We should support people who have supported us."

Guests of honor at the meeting were Bass, Fulton, Anderson, and Grider.

Bass received a loud, standing ovation when he was introduced by Nashville attorney John J. Hooker Jr. Bass asked the council for support of the Democratic ticket.

"As a Democratic nominee, I ask your assistance for the other Democratic nominees because the future of this nation rests on the decision that will be made in November," Bass said.

"There is a clear cut choice in this year's elections—like driving a pushbutton car.

"If you want to go backwards, push "R" for reverse—that's Republican.

"If you want to go forward, push "D" for drive—that's Democratic," Bass concluded.

FULTON told the council meeting that they must keep faith through the ups and downs of the next seven weeks.

"1964 will probably be the brightest moment of history," Fulton said.

"The Democratic nominees that are before you today represent the new look in government," he said.

Anderson told the TVC meeting that "Sen. Barry Goldwater has his watch set 100 years slow."

"Now he is asking us to set our watch 100 years slow," Anderson said.

Other resolutions adopted in the afternoon session included:

- A special emphasis on the endorsement of Yarborough. The council decided this was necessary in order to influence labor organizations to support Yarborough's candidacy in the Second Congressional District.
- Formation of a committee to study independent fund raising by TVC to support their campaign efforts. These efforts would include a mass membership program, a state wide newspaper, and a voter education program.
- Congratulations to the Negro members of the Tennessee delegation to the Democratic convention for a "fine job in representing the people of this state."

In other action yesterday morning, the council heard reports of efforts securing votes in the August primary.

The Rev. Frank Gordon of Knoxville told the council that while East Tennessee is a Republican stronghold, "we must convince them the Democratic ticket is best for the Negro."

Avon Williams, co-chairman of the council's Middle Tennessee area, told the group there is a true realization of a "new day" in Tennessee politics.

"People of Tennessee—in particular the Negro citizens of Tennessee—have reached their maturity in politics," he said.

He said a major problem has been the "pitiful" voter registration among Negroes in Tennessee.

"We have run up against election commissions and in particular the Davidson County election commission, who don't want to see Negroes registered.

Willis, secretary of the council, told the meeting Bass carried all of the predominantly Negro wards in Shelby County and six of the seven candidates supported by the council won the primary in Memphis.

Voter Body Asks Probe Of Firings

The Tennessee Voters Council yesterday recommended that Gov. Frank Clement order an investigation of the firing of two state employes who refused to support Clement in the Aug. 6 primary and were dismissed three weeks later.

Rufus E. Jones and Fred L. Jones, both Negroes of Memphis, were dismissed from their position as state auditors Aug. 26 by Donald R. King, state commissioner of revenue.

TVC requested that if evidence of unfair firing was discovered, both men should be reinstated.

THE TVC resolution also requested the governor to support legislation "designed to prohibit the use of state employes in political campaigns and the practice of requesting contributions from state employes to political campaigns."

King, in firing the two Memphis employes, said only that they were guilty of any or all of three mistakes: inability to do the job, failure to take instruction from supervisors, or absent from duty without permission.

The TVC resolution, however, said:

"On further information coming before the council, it appears that, prior to the dismissal of these employes, their work was perfectly satisfactory, in fact outstanding in many respects."

JONES SAID after he was fired that his immediate superior told him his firing had nothing to do with his work performance.

The council said Jones had held his job more than a year and Davis his more than six months. The adopted resolution, in part, said:

". . . The Tennessee Voters Council hereby goes on record as being opposed to the practice of requiring any state employes to support any candidate for public office either through active campaigning or financial contributions solicited by his immediate supervisor.

". . . (IT IS) noticed that the vacancies (from the firings) were not filled by Negroes when job opportunities for Negroes are and have been limited because of racial descrimination. . .

"The Tennessee Voters Council does expect the Hon. Frank G. Clement . . . to carry out the campaign commitments and promises made to the Tennessee Voters Council relative to eliminating the practice of racial discrimination in the hiring and upgrading of Negro employes.

"Copies of this resolution shall be forwarded to . . . Clement."

Negroes Admitted to 5 Schools

By MARGARET McKEE
Press-Scimitar Staff Writer

Fourteen Negro children today entered four previously all-white county schools and one school desegregated last year.

The students were enrolled under the county's one-step desegregation plan put into effect this fall.

County Schools Supt. George Barnes said one Negro student entered Millington Central, which has grades 7-12; one entered Bartlett High; two entered Scenic Hills (grades 1-8); three entered Whitehaven (grades 1-12), with one of these in elementary school; and seven are in Millington East (grades 1-6).

Millington East had six Negro students last year following federal requirements that schools serving military installations be desegregated. Only one Negro student who applied to transfer to an all-white school was rejected "because he lived closer to the school he was already attending," Barnes said.

The desegregation went smoothly, Barnes said. He said transfer applications will be accepted through tomorrow.

COUNTY'S PLAN

The county's 12-grade desegregation plan, approved by Federal Judge Boyd in March, states that any pupil—Negro or white—could apply for transfer from his present school to any other school in his immediate neighborhood.

Approval for the transfer must be given by principals of both schools involved and by Supt. Barnes.

The 61 county schools have

an enrollment of about 45,000 students, Barnes said.

In a typical opening-day scene, much the same at all schools, children and mothers flooded into Scenic Hills School from buses and cars and on foot. A teacher cautiously treaded her way across the parking lot, carrying a small aquarium for her classroom.

Registration Dates For City Schools

Mothers escorting their school-age youngsters on the first day often had two or three pre-schoolers trailing along as well. One mother got out of the family car with four children in tow while a fifth child, a little blond boy, yelled his protest at being left behind in the car with Daddy.

Florida City, south of here, caught fire and was destroyed. Damage estimated at $300,000.

- A boxcar was ripped away from a halted train and sent rolling eight miles to Fort Lauderdale where it crashed into an automobile seriously injuring one person.

- Windows in the Deauville, Americana, Carillon and other plush resort hotels at Miami Beach were smashed making a shambles of the hotel lobbies.

- Windows in many guests' rooms also were knocked out injuring some of the visitors.

Safety patrol boys were on duty at the crossing next to the school, outfitted in their white hats and shoulder-bands and carrying red flags. But the major work of directing the heavy traffic fell to the capable hands of a white-gloved policewoman, Mrs. David Garrett of the sheriff's squad.

ARRAY OF BIKES

The bicycle racks were soon filled with shiny bikes—and some showing a hard summer's use.

A big bulletin board just inside the schoolhouse door directed children to their proper rooms, while a teacher at an information desk took care of the youngsters who haven't yet attained the reading stage. Mrs. Martha Branch, the principal, and the teachers stood by for extra assistance.

While county schools got into full swing, city schools began registration with grades 10-12 registering today and grades 1-9 to register tomorrow. Grades 1-6 in the city register tomorrow at 8:30 a.m., as does grade 7, while grade 8 registers at 10:30 a.m. and grade 9 at 1 p.m. City schools begin classes Tuesday.

'Sample Ballot' Triggers Protests

The attorney general's office may be asked to investigate election-eve literature distribution by some Clayton Elam campaign workers, a Negro political leader said last night.

The disclosure came after it was reported some Elam workers copied and widely distributed the Negro Shelby County Democratic Club's sample ballot Wednesday night in predominantly white East Memphis sections. When asked, they told several persons they were from the Republican Association and "this is who the Negroes are for."

"We want to know how they got our literature and whether or not this type of misrepresentation is covered by election laws," said Russell B. Sugarmon Jr., Democratic Club chairman. "If it's not (covered), it's certainly a deplorable type of politics and we think the public ought to know about it."

The sample ballot, an accurate list of the Democratic Club's candidates, was headed by the statement: "We must elect these candidates to stop Senator (Barry) Goldwater."

Below this were the pictures of "the freedom seven" candidates—William N. Morris for sheriff, Negro Charles E. Ware for constable, District 2, and Negro Jesse H. Turner for the state Constitutional Convention.

The other four, candidates in the Democratic Primary, were: Representative Ross Bass for United States Senate, Squire George W. Grider for Congress, Mr. Sugarmon for state senator and Negro attorney A. W. Willis for state representative.

The material apparently was distributed in hopes of showing Mr. Morris, one of the leading candidates in the sheriff's race, as a candidate of the Negroes and anti-Goldwater forces.

One witness said he saw the literature being loaded into two cars at the Elam headquarters at 1403 Union Wednesday night and that Mr. Elam and attorney Seymour S. Rosenberg of Germantown, the candidate's publicity chairman, were present.

Mr. Elam and Mr. Rosenberg yesterday both denied that they knew anything about the matter.

"It must have been some Republicans," said Mr. Rosenberg.

"I don't run that kind of campaign," said Mr. Elam.

However, Eugene S. Goldberger, president of Tri-State Press, Inc., at 277 Jefferson, told a reporter for The Commercial Appeal that he had printed such material for Mr. Rosenberg.

Mr. Goldberger declined to say how many of the ballots were printed but said the ballots were made from a copy furnished by Mr. Rosenberg.

When asked about this, Mr. Rosenberg said he would prepare a statement for release later last night. But later, he could not be reached for comment.

Other groups indirectly involved in the incident, however, were quick to comment.

"We will definitely look into it," said Harry Wellford, a member of the state Republican Executive Committee. "Whether it had any adverse effect or not, it is a vicious type of politics that anyone interested in good government would be appalled at."

Mr. Morris said he had received reports of the incident but did not know what, if any, action he would take.

"This is the vicious type of campaigning we have been up against all along, so I wasn't very surprised," he said.

A Shelby County Election Commission official said the commission had not received any reports on the matter but said it would investigate if a formal complaint were filed.

Negro Attorney Willis Wins Nomination for Legislature

By JOHN SPENCE
Press-Scimitar Staff Writer

Shelby County Democrats have nominated a Negro for the Tennessee Legislature for the first time in the 20th Century. Attorney A. W. Willis will face a Republican labor leader, Garvin Crawford, in the Nov. 3 general election.

Willis won nomination yesterday in a four-way contest with Aubrey Fox, an Illinois Central railroad employe and union member; Squire Lawrence Hughes of Arlington, a former legislator; and Max Lucas Jr., young attorney and newcomer to Shelby politics.

Crawford defeated Orrin W. Pickett, Negro real estate man who was supported by the remnants of the George W. Lee faction of the GOP.

BOB JAMES WON AGAIN—Just like two years ago, Bob James, Memphis businessman, won the GOP nomination for Congress, and is shown in a victory celebration at political headquarters last night. He is surrounded by family and supporters. The only difference this time is that he runs in November against George Grider, Democratic nominee, instead of Rep. Cliff Davis as he did two years ago.

CONTESTED RACE

The November election promises to be a most hotly contested general election for Shelby's five Senate and 13 House seats.

Fourteen of the Democrats enter that election after defeating opponents in the primary; 16 of the Republicans were unopposed.

BIG WINNERS

The big winners in the Democratic primary, besides Willis, were:

Rep. Charles H. O'Brien, for Senate Seat 29.

Rep. Joe M. Pipkin, for Senate Seat 30.

Leland Carter, for Senate Seat 33.

Winner of the second Republican contest was:

Lawrence Naab.

Other Democratic winners of Senate nominations were Sen. Tom Todd, who won renomination, and Lewis Taliaferro, who won renomination after a layout of two years in which he unsuccessfully sought a seat in Congress.

SLATE COMPLETED

Completing the Democratic House slate will be:

Charles Burch, James E. Williams, Rep. Joan Strong, Ralph Farmer, Rep. Marvin Brode, Rep. Marvin Spruill, D. J. (Jack) Smith Jr., Rep. Robert Fargarson, Rep. Hugh Stanton Jr., Rep. Jack McNeill, Rep. John B. Maxwell Jr., and Rep. Edgar Gillock.

The Democrats will have eight veterans of House service seeking re-election and five newcomers.

ALL UNOPPOSED

The Republican Senate nominees, all unopposed in the primary, are:

M. B. Adelson III, for seat 29; W. K. Weldon, for seat 30; J. C. Strange, for seat 31; Mrs. Keith Spurrier, seat 32; Frank B. Liddell Jr., seat 33.

Republican House nominees, besides Crawford and Naab, are:

James A. Shepherd, J. Malcolm Gentry, Glenn Medick, James M. Avent Jr., Mrs. Sunshine Snyder, James E. Harpster, True Redd, John D. Peeples Jr., Ferdinand Landau, Eugene Lafoy Smith, Mrs. Edward H. Storer.

Most interest centered in the Joe Pipkin-Tim Schaeffer contest for the nomination for Senate District 30.

Both attended the '63 General Assembly as House members. Pipkin had two terms more experience than Schaeffer. A young insurance man and winner of the Jaycees' most recent "Young Man of the Year" award, Pipkin "ran on his record," while Schaeffer, a 36-year-old attorney, campaigned on the issues of county court reapportionment and legislative reform.

Pipkin's margin, from unofficial returns, was about 3,000 votes.

NAACP COUNSEL

Willis, 39-year-old attorney often in the news as counsel for the NAACP, was leading his nearest opponent, 27-year-old Max Lucas, by about 5,000 votes. Aubrey Fox was running fourth. Squire Hughes, with a big rural vote, was third and some 7,000 votes back of Willis.

Russell B. Sugarmon Jr., only other Negro candidate for the Legislature in the Democratic primary, was second by about 3,000 votes in the three-way race he lost to Rep. O'Brien. Richard Ryan, third man, was 20,000 votes back of Sugarmon. All three are lawyers.

EASY WINS

Other Democratic candidates won handily, their margins over their opponents ranging from 30,000 votes (Taliaferro over his fellow attorney, Tom Buford) to about a 350-vote lead for James E. Williams over Grover N. McCormick Jr.

Republicans Crawford and Naab, backed by the Republican Association, had about 10-to-1 or 9-to-1 margins over their opponents, Pickett and W. Lessley Lay.

Negroes Claim Housing Bans

Protest To LBJ By Urban League Cites Federal Projects In City

The National Urban League yesterday disclosed a request to President Johnson to end racial discrimination in Federally-aided housing projects in Memphis and eight other Tennessee cities.

The projects were part of a list of several hundred Federally-aided programs in 24 states. Under the Civil Rights Law, passed last month, Federal aid to institutions which discriminate wholly or in part on the basis of race can be cut off.

Walter Simmons, director of the Memphis Housing Authority, said he had received no complaints about segregation in the eight housing projects administered by the agency.

"We're subject to laws passed by Congress and are always mindful of them," he said. "It's a matter for the people in the projects—if they want to integrate, Okay."

Mr. Simmons said 73 per cent of the occupants and 59 per cent of the staff members under the housing authority were Negroes.

Other Tennessee cities on the Urban League's list were Chattanooga, Clarksville, Jackson, Johnson City, Kingsport, Knoxville, Murfreesboro and Nashville.

The Urban League also accused several Memphis hospitals of racial bias. Hospital officials denied the accusations.

Hospitals singled out were the Tennessee Psychiatric Hospital, West Tennessee Tuberculosis Hospital, City of Memphis Hospitals, E. H. Crump Hospital, Le Bonheur Children's Hospital, Les Passees Clinic, Memphis and Shelby County Health Center, St. Jude's Hospital, Walter Chandler Clinic of Memphis Hospital and the West Tennessee Cancer Clinic.

No Integrated Exchange Now

There are no immediate plans for a cultural exchange program between white and Negro high schools, Hugh Bosworth, president of the City School Board, said.

Earlier in the week, E. C. Stimbert, city school superintendent, said the idea was under study by representatives of the white and Negro principals' association. Groups that might be involved in the exchange would include glee clubs, choirs, debate teams and student councils, Stimbert said.

The proposal triggered a protest from a group led by Richard Ely, president of Memphis Citizens' Council, at the school board meeting yesterday.

"I suggest you'd better go slow on integration," Ely said.

Another member of the protesting group, Willis Ayres asked:

"Is this not an out-growth of so-called proposals made to the Board of Education by the NAACP?" Bosworth repeated his statement about no immediate plans.

Voters Council Head Resigns

The Rev. Charles F. Williams, of Memphis, has announced his resignation of the presidency of the Tennessee Voters Council, because, he said, "I cannot head a movement for Rep. Ross Bass, a man whose election I feel would not be in the best interest of Tennessee."

The Rev. Mr. Williams, who is Grand Worthy Master of the Prince Hall Grand Masonic Lodge of Tennessee, said he will support Gov. Frank G. Clement in the race for the U. S. Senate.

The break came following an explosive TVC convention here three weeks ago when Nashville attorney Avon Williams, president of the TVC middle region, threatened to kick out of the organization and the convention all TVC officers and members who supports Clement's candidacy.

The Rev. Mr. Williams' statement in full:

"For the past three years I have served as chairman of the Tennessee Voters Council. During this time I have strived to give honest, forthright leadership in the efforts to advance the State of Tennessee along the path of full and free participation of all the citizens in the Democratic process.

"On last Saturday, June 27, the Tennessee Voters Council endorsed Ross Bass for United States senator. This endorsement without a doubt represented the majority sentiment of the people there assembled.

"I am certain it does not represent the feeling of the majority of Negro citizens of the state.

"The choice made was not my personal choice. Ordinarily I would have felt compelled to follow this endorsement. I am not endorsing Ross Bass and I am not supporting him for the Senate seat formerly held by the late Sen. Estes Kefauver.

"There are two factors which have caused me to make this decision. In the first place there was too much personal bitterness injected by those who supported Bass. I believe that such an endorsement can and should be made without questioning the sincerity or motives of those who happen to support other candidates.

"In the second place, I do not feel that the action taken by the Tennessee Voters Council represents the majority thinking of the Negroes across the state.

"Since the meeting I have been deluged with phone and personal calls from persons all across the state asking that I assist in a grassroots voters' movement for Gov. Frank Clement.

"I have searched my conscience and cannot in good faith continue to head a movement election I feel would not be in the best interest of Tennessee. I cannot honestly turn my back on Frank Clement, a man who has revolutionized new job opportunities for Negroes in this state on all levels of state employment. I am therefore resigning as chairman of the Tennessee Voters Council and will give whatever support I am able to give the Honorable Frank G. Clement in his bid for election to the United States Senate.

"I am doing this with malice toward none but in the interest of continued good government in Tennessee and with a view toward helping in the election of a man who has shown time and time again that he has the vision and the courage to meet the needs of all of the people of the state of Tennessee without regard to race, color or creed."

Give Light and the People Will Find Their Own Way

Other Cities--And Memphis

In one city after another, there have been racial disorders, lasting many days, sometimes weeks and months.

Finally businessmen say: "We can't stand this any longer; it must stop.

And what do they do to stop it? They get a bi-racial citizens committee appointed "to restore communication between the races."

This occurred in Birmingham. It has just occurred in St. Augustine.

In Memphis such a committee was formed BEFORE there could be racial disorders—the Memphis Committee on Community Relations. And there has been no violence. Now that the Civil Rights Act has been passed, and is being generally observed, it is not to be expected that there will be any disorders.

What proved to be the remedy in other cities, proved to be a preventive in Memphis. Prevention is better than cure.

Such forethought should be our watchword in other civic matters.

Rights Law Problems May Top Gains: White

Olin White, Nashville lawyer and president of the Tennessee Bar Association, said yesterday he expects the recently enacted Civil Rights Law will create more problems than it solves.

In an address to the Nashville Rotary Club, White said he anticipates considerable litigation will grow out of the act "but it isn't the sort of business my profession necessarily goes looking for."

Speaking on the subject, "An Interpretation of the Civil Rights Law," White said:

"The question involved i whether in giving civil right to some infringes on the civ rights of somebody else."

HE DISCUSSED two section of the new law public accom modations and employment and said both sections hold p tential trouble for businessme

In discussing public accomm dations he described a case i which a barber shop operato might not want to cut the hai of a Negro patron.

He said that in such a case th barber shop owner might fe that some of his barbers woul quit and that since he didn't cu women's hair because it wa "different" he felt he could re fuse to cut the hair of th Negro customer.

Under the law, White said this would be referred to a com munity counseling service estab lished by the act which woul try to resolve the differenc through persuasion. "Some mor cynical among us would sugges it was coercion rather than per suasion," White said.

HE SAID IF the barber sti refuses to cut the Negro's hai that ultimately he may have t pay for his own lawyer, the law yer for the Negro patron, cos for the case and suffer the los of time involved. In employmen disputes, he said, the employe who refuses to hire a Negro ma also ultimately have to hire hi and pay back wages.

In employment he said, at th very least the employers are go ing to be required to keep con siderably more voluminous rec ords than before.

White said that in reading the act he had found that religious institutions are permitted to discriminate in hiring.

"Some of them have encouraged demonstrations," he said, "and yet they seem to have taken good care of themselves in all this."

The attorney, who is a member of the law firm, Manier, Crouch, White and Herod, said he felt that demonstrations which led up to the passing of the law were "illegal."

Bar Member Pleads For Negroes

By JAMES H. WHITE
Press-Scimitar Staff Writer

Negro lawyers should be admitted to the Memphis and Shelby County Bar Association, James E. Irwin, chairman of the Shelby County Democratic Executive Committee, said today.

Irwin has practiced law in Memphis 24 years and is now a member of the Bar Association's public relations committee.

His statement came after Jesse Turner, president of the NAACP said local professional groups, including bar, teacher and medical organizations, should be integrated.

CALLED SILLY

Irwin said it's "silly" for the Bar to exclude Negro lawyers.

"Our President, Congress and courts have recognized the equal rights of all men to enjoy the benefits of freedom," he said.

"Our Bar Association should take the lead by demonstrating to the community our support of national laws."

PRESIDENT SPEAKS

James M. Manire, president of the Bar Association, said he could understand why Turner made his statement and said Irwin's statement "was a good one," but the whole Bar should take up the question rather than the president taking a position.

The question of integrating the Bar Association came up last year. A motion to integrate was defeated.

QUARTERLY REPORT TO SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL for July, August, September 1964 of The Virginia Council on Human Relations by Heslip Lee

I. Civil Rights Bill's passage has placed us in a new dimension. Compliance has gone well - better than most people expected. Problems in Virginia have been small in number and in stature, but some have resulted. Membership cards; 15% service charge; outrageous charges through two menus; some problems in voter registration in Richmond; golf courses; some individual defiance; and many haven't yet been patronized.

VCHR office sent out a request that local councils take the inititive in creating a co-ordinating committee with other agency representitives to assist communities in compliance. Reports have come in from most communities and we have been able to keep abreast of most community developments.

The next decade will determine whether the South learns to avoid the subtleties which have long been adopted in North. We cannot afford to let up, but must give leadership for the next decade to educate and implement compliance.

Titles VI & VII are yet to be implemented and here we must assist.

II. The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964- Community Relations Service

A state-wide conference is needed to educate our local council leaders both as to what local communities may expect from these two agencies and also what local councils may do to assist these two agencies.

We must await the time when both of these agencies are officially organized and properly staffed, but this should be done in the near future.

III. Many council leaders have felt that the National Election is of such paramount importance that we should, as individuals, work for the next month unreservedly for the assurance of the best possible Chief Executive in the White House .

IV. Now to Staff activities:

A. Through the arrangements with NAIRO, we have a new staff member, Mr. Bobby D. Doctor. Under the agreement, we are to pay one-half of his $5,000 salary plus his expenses to a conference next August.

Mr. Doctor has been working in Voter Registration; has met with Youth leaders and will be doing quiet a bit in this field; Has been reading materials which will acquaint him with both SRC and VCHR; has accompained the Executive Director to Hopewell's Council meeting; and has assisted the state staff in routine office work.

We are about to work out an arrangement whereby Mr. Doctor can visit 15 cities in Virginia and do surveys of the atmosphere and conditions in each through interviews with agency heads. If this arrangement is worked out, his expenses will be paid by another agency with whom we shall share this information.

Mr. Doctor will work with Miss Finch, Mr. Caravati, Mr. Lee and through any and all local councils during the next year.

B. Henry Caravati, Director of Development, has been actively contacting business and industrial leaders for financial support, and he will be able to carry his work through the remainder of this year. Reactions of those upon whom he calls vary from giving $1,000 to saying that sub-machine guns should be used to stop integration.

Outdoor Billboard Advertising Agencies have agreed to display 40-50 signs bearing the name of VCHR which say "BE COLOR BLIND - HIRE THE BEST MAN". Costs of these signs are ten dollars each for printing with no charge for the displaying which will run from one to three months each.

The plan for closer relationships with the Under-Secretary of Defense for Civil Rights has hit a snag in the Pentagon with a disillusionment by the staff there in any vital and active inititive from the Military leaders. The staff is resigning with only a letter being sent to most of the Military bases in Virginia recommending that the Commanding Officers work with the Virginia Council.

A brochure designed especially for the business men is being developed. The idea came from the ~~head~~ Chairman of the ~~Virginia Insurance Commission~~ State Corporation Commission which stated that Insurance Companies were being hit more heavily than anyone else when rioting and looting takes place. Mr. Caravati was told that if we could prepare a brochure showing what VCHR had done and what we seek to do, that if we were convincing then money would be no problem for our operation.

Mr. Caravati continues to cultivate some 300 top state industrial leaders for eventual interviews and contributions. Many contacts have brought forth definite promises for contributions.

Mr. Caravati has also been handling much of the work which Greg Shinert had begun, that is, screening employees for certain firms which have asked us for assistance in hiring Negroes for the first time.

C. Miss Mary Finch - has been off duty during the Summer because of an arrangement whereby she only desires to make $1200 per year so that her financial plans will not be jeopordized. However, she is back in business and is continuing to visit communities where we either have no local council, or new and weak local councils seeking to strengthen these. Her's is a vital work to our over-all cause. On October 13, we shall organize a local council at Mannassas, Virginia, where Miss Finch laid the groundwork for this reality.

D. The Executive Director continues to work in many directions. Some of the areas where he has been involved since the last meeting of the Executive Committee are:

1. Working with restaurants and places of public accomodations to negotiate for peaceful compliance to the Civil Rights Act.

2. He has given two Radio addresses and has been on T.V. six times since June 13.

3. He has worked with five local councils in setting up yearly programs.

4. He has attended the Annual Meeting of Directors in Atlanta and another meeting in Atlanta being briefed on the Economic Opportunity Act.

5. He has attended five meetings in Washington with the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, The Community Relations Service, The Pentagon, and the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities.

6. He has spoken to Summer Seminars at Norfolk State College, Virginia Lutheran Church Youth Week at Massanetta Springs, keynote address in Charlotte, North Carolina to the Thomas Jefferson Regional Unitarian Church Convention, Addressed the Prince Edward County NAACP, Annual Freedom Rally, spoke twice to the Conference of the Virginia Church of the Brethren at Bridgewater College, addressed the Radford and Hopewell local councils, delivered fourteen sermons in churches in Maryland and Virginia, and conducted one w edding, in addition to regular office work and interviews.

V. At the Executive Committee Meeting of VCHR on September 30, the following items were approved:

1. That the New River Council on Human Relations, located in Giles County, Virginia, become an affiliated local council of VCHR upon their request which was read to the Executive Committee.

2. That the Rockbridge County-Buena Vista Council on Human Relations become an affiliated local council of VCHR upon their request which was read to the Executive Committee.

3. That the Department of Development, headed by Henry L. Caravati, which has been a temporary project, be made a continuing part of the work of VCHR, and that this department be reviewed from time to time by the Executive Committee until such time as it is financially strong enough to be budgeted under the total VCHR budget.

4. That the Executive Director, Heslip Lee, be given permission to work for the Community Relations Service of the Department of Commerce on a per diem basis, subject to calls from the Honorable Leroy Collins. Mr. Lee will be allowed to use his own judgement as to the amount of time he gives this agency and all money he receives from such work will be his without and deductions from his regular salary from VCHR.

5. That the Executive Directro be authorized to institute suit against George McMillan for a breach of his contract with the Council should he be unable to arrive at a satisfactory settlement of differences with Mr. McMillan by October 15, 1964.

6. That VCHR proceed with plans to celebrate our tenth Anniversary in January, 1965, in conjunction with the Annual Meeting. A Committee was established to work out plans for this special event. Mr Carl Auvil of Fairfax County was elected Chairman of the Committee/

VI. I acknowledge a report entitled REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF STATE COUNCIL DIRECTORS. I concur wholeheartedly with the report with strong exceptions from point 5, entitled Finances. I would withhold comments at this time, but feel that the committee went far over its rights to recommend for the state councils such radical departures from the present procedures of financing as is included in 5e of its report. Furthermore, I feel that any report given as one from state councils should have had the approval of State Directors before being presented the SRC staff and Executive Committee. This is no reflection on SRC, but is a minority report of procedure and a negative vote for the official records from one Director, at least at this date.

It is my personal belief that state councils have developed in a much too independent manner, and have come to the end of our first decade of operation being too differently structured, to make recommendations to SRC's Executive Committee for such changes as are included in the report without long, and CAREFUL study by a Committee which includes at least a knowledge of what is being presented SRC's Executive Committee under the atmosphere of the state directors.

VII. Enclosed is a financial report for the past quarter.

Special Commission on Staff

The Commission met at the Presbyterian Student Center next door to the Tennessee Council on Human Relations at 10 a.m. on September 9, 1964. Members of the Commission present at the meeting were: Will Campbell, Chairman, Martha Ragland, Lewis Sinclair, Adele Schweid, William Willis, and Rev. Sam Dodson, Jr. Mr. Willis and Rev. Dodson were serving as ex-officio members. Kay Jones served as staff representative. Paul Anthony of the Southern Regional Council staff was present at the request of the Commission. Kay Jones reviewed the discussion during the Board meeting on August 19. (See page 2 of the minutes, and cover letter sent to all Board members). The proposal as outlined in the minutes would involve considerable redirection of the Council's program and activities.

Paul Anthony stated that the rough and tumble is ahead in the real integration of the school system, Urban Renewal etc. There is clear need to attract new resources and skills. The Tennessee Council on Human Relations is in a unique position of having over $10,000 from the Field Foundation which it can depend on for 1965. The Southern Regional Council will consider the possibility of adding $5,000 making a total of $15,000 for additional staff. The time has come when groups who once considered us enemies, such as business and industrial leaders, and local government officials are now beginning to ask for help. They now want peaceful progress in race relations.

Sam Dodson as Chairman of the Governor's Commission on Human Relations was asked about the future plans of the Commission. He felt that they were uncertain, and that there has not been a meeting of the Commission for several months, but one is planned in the near future. A proposal has been made to the Governor for a two year budget of sizable proportions, and some studies are already underway. The Commission has one full time professional staff member, Mr. J. L. Perkins, and an office and clerical assistance. The Commission office is located at 328 Cordell Hull Building. Mr. Perkins is working with Charles Cleland of the University of Tennessee on a broad survey of public accommodations and services in Tennessee. Consideration is being given to requesting funds through the Legislature.

Mrs. Schweid commented that the continuity and direction of the Governor's Commission has some influence on the future of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations. Mr. Dodson agreed that the Governor's Commission might well take over some of the services which has been rendered formerly by the Council.

Paul Anthony commented that the Tennessee Council may consider one of its functions as that of a fair critic of the Commission, offering support or criticism as indicated.

The following matters were considered as potential items for Council study and action:

1. Capital Punishment. During the past 20 years what was the race and economic status of the persons condemned to death in our state. How many of them had competent legal counsel? What was the race and economic status of a comparative group also accused of a capital offense?

2. Illiteracy. In a state in which functional illiteracy ranges from 9 to 33 per cent, this is a matter of concern. The need is to present dramatic figures to people, which the press will then pick up; and in turn this will begin to arouse public opinion.

3. Urban Renewal. With planning commissions and other governmental agencies involved with urban renewal projects, we must find effective ways of showing the direction which this is taking in the south. The kinds of questions which are asked of city planners can help them to see that they may be building in walls of segregation which will cause future disruption.

4. Education. Some aspects of public education are always of concern. For example: the cost of drop outs. The needs of culturally deprived pre-school children. Stimulating the community to achieve integration rather than segregation.

Staff job is to give guidance and information to citizens ready to work for change. There was a difference of opinion on whether surveys and studies made by the Council must be scientifically planned. Mrs. Ragland stated that citizens asking a series of questions of a particular subject in a community gets them involved, and builds public interest.

In commenting on the job as described in the minutes of the August 19 board meeting, it was agreed that the need was for an imaginative person, genuinely committed to the goals of equality of opportunity, and not just a "spellbinder". Mr. Anthony noted that there was so much to be done that administration can become a goal in itself. Vasco Smith pointed out that we must have strong local councils, which we do not have. Will Campbell in summarizing the discussion reemphasized this by saying that the most important thing before the Council was the building of strong local councils and local initiative.

Mr. Campbell gave brief summaries of two persons who had the kinds of qualifications we were requesting. He was requested to follow up on candidates. The committee will be notified. The offer of the Southern Regional Council to pay travel expenses for candidates to come to Tennessee for interviews, was gratefully accepted. (Later, it developed that one candidate was not interested in considering a job change at this time, and the other was not recommended for consideration.)

Funds for Staff Increase

It is proposed that the council can offer salary of approximately $8,000. From the Field Foundation money and the SRC contribution this could be met for one year. It is recognized that to meet the rough budget given below, the Council will have to raise $7,000 In 1963, we raised $4,359. Through September 30, we have raised $2,793.25.

The attached summary of our current membership and financial situation is forwarded in accordance with your request of September 4, 1964. The summary was made for a double purpose, and may need an explanation.

The Special Account is the Field Foundation money on hand. We have not received any Field Foundation money during 1964. A grant of $7,500 was received in November 1963 to be used anytime after March 1964. We anticipate a similar grant this November for use in 1965.

The unpaid members are ones who have not paid during this calendar year but are still carried because we anticipate that they will do so. Some of them are old line members, and consequently are still on our mailing list, and we intend to continue billing them.

Included is also a report on the Special Account which has been omitted from the past two quarterly reports.

QUARTERLY REPORT, JULY-SEPTEMBER, 1964
ALABAMA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
October 3, 1964

In this quarter the Reverend Norman C. Jimerson resigned as Executive Director of the Alabama Council on Human Relations and moved to Kalamazoo, Michigan, having accepted a position with Kalamazoo College. He was succeeded by J. Edwin Stanfield, who was employed by the Board of Directors on August 15, 1964. Mr. Stanfield's employment officially began on September 15.

On the same date, August 15, the Board of Directors voted to move the office of the Council to Huntsville.

Mrs. Myrtice Hubbard, secretary in the Council office, secured a teaching position in Tuscaloosa. Her employment officially terminated September 15, but she has continued to help in the office on weekends.

The Council office has not yet been moved to Huntsville. The Executive Director, after inspecting a number of possible offices, chose space on the ground floor of the new 2109 West Clinton Building. This office is now being prepared to our specifications concerning division of the space and decor. It is due to be ready between October 10 and October 15.

In addition to looking for office space and acceptable housing arrangements for his family in Huntsville, the Executive Director has attended a meeting in Tuskegee on September 13, a meeting of the Huntsville Chapter on September 22, an NCCJ meeting in Huntsville on September 24. He spoke at a meeting of the Mississippi Council in Waveland, Mississippi on September 30 and spent an evening in Mobile en route for the purpose of meeting some of the Mobile members. A couple of days were spent working with a group of clergymen who were attempting to start a bi-racial ministerial group in Birmingham. The Board of Directors met in Birmingham on September 26. The Executive Director spent all other Saturdays and two Monday in the office in Birmingham,

As the attached statements will show, the state of the Alabama Council relative to membership and finances is not good. The Board of Directors has taken cognizance of this fact and has taken some steps to relieve the situation at least temporarily. The Executive Director hopes to develop a firmer organization and a sound financial basis as a matter of first importance.

Respectfully submitted,

J. Edwin Stanfield

QUARTERLY REPORT, JULY-SEPTEMBER, 1964
ALABAMA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
October 3, 1964

In this quarter the Reverend Norman C. Jimerson resigned as Executive Director of the Alabama Council on Human Relations and moved to Kalamazoo, Michigan, having accepted a position with Kalamazoo College. He was succeeded by J. Edwin Stanfield, who was employed by the Board of Directors on August 15, 1964. Mr. Stanfield's employment officially began on September 15.

On the same date, August 15, the Board of Directors voted to move the office of the Council to Huntsville.

Mrs. Myrtice Hubbard, secretary in the Council office, secured a teaching position in Tuscaloosa. Her employment officially terminated September 15, but she has continued to help in the office on weekends.

The Council office has not yet been moved to Huntsville. The Executive Director, after inspecting a number of possible offices, chose space on the ground floor of the new 2109 West Clinton Building. This office is now being prepared to our specifications concerning division of the space and decor. It is due to be ready between October 10 and October 15.

In addition to looking for office space and acceptable housing arrangements for his family in Huntsville, the Executive Director has attended a meeting in Tuskegee on September 13, a meeting of the Huntsville Chapter on September 22, an NCCJ meeting in Huntsville on September 24. He spoke at a meeting of the Mississippi Council in Waveland, Mississippi on September 30 and spent an evening in Mobile en route for the purpose of meeting some of the Mobile members. A couple of days were spent working with a group of clergymen who were attempting to start a bi-racial ministerial group in Birmingham. The Board of Directors met in Birmingham on September 26. The Executive Director spent all other Saturdays and two Monday in the office in Birmingham.

As the attached statements will show, the state of the Alabama Council relative to membership and finances is not good. The Board of Directors has taken cognizance of this fact and has taken some steps to relieve the situation at least temporarily. The Executive Director hopes to develop a firmer organization and a sound financial basis as a matter of first importance.

Respectfully submitted,

J. Edwin STanfield
Executive Director

I. Significant Events

A. In the Schools

1. The school bell in September called students in 24 districts to desegregated schools. This means eleven districts are desegregated for the first time. As reported by the school officials 931 Negro students will be in school with whites compared to 390 in 1964. The big increases were at Fort Smith, from 31 to 286 and at Little Rock, from 121 to 213.

Of special interest is the story of the plans of Alma's schools carried in the Alma News-Herald, in part as follows: "For Alma to educate its 30 Negro students the cost is near the $10,000 figure. This averages more than $300 per student. The average for white students is about $200." Superintendent Charles Manning told the school parents, "This (integration) could avoid the loss to the system its federal aid and a costly law suit against the district to integrate in compliance with existing federal laws."

2. An Arkansas Gazette report of September 29 states that only one Arkansas college, public or private, has a policy against accepting Negro students, namely, Central Baptist College (Associated Baptist) of Conway. The number of Negro students cannot be obtained, but the number is negligible with an estimated 25 at the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville which leads all the rest. Hendrix, Arkansas A & M, John Brown, Southern Baptist are known to have no Negro students. Except at the University no college houses students; none permit them to participate in athletics. The University under court injunction placed two students in campus dormitories this year.

3. Nine hundred teachers in Pulaski County think 18.4 per cent of their 27,095 children have emotional problems that need professional help. This was one finding of a study by the Pulaski County Mental Health Association. These teachers saw a greater need for help among Negro students than white, 29% to 13%. The 121 page report was printed by the Little Rock Schools.

4. Fifty-two Negro patrons of the Star City School District petitioned the School Board for a public hearing on their grievances, including a request for desegregation. The meeting was held July 27 at Lincoln High School (Negro) with 350 patrons attending, about half white. No school policies were changed. This was the fourth meeting this year with the Negro patrons at their request.

B. In Organizations

1. Greater Little Rock Intergroup Coordinating Committee with representatives from more than twenty cooperating groups continued to meet during the summer. It discussed the closing of swimming pools, compliance with the Civil Rights Law of 1964, the proposed state-wide workshop on the Civil Rights Law. It defined its purpose and structured an organization for guiding its activities.

2. The Steering Committee for the Greater Little Rock Conference on Religion and Human Relations met regularly during the summer, discussed closed swimming pools, Civil Rights Law, and plans for Fall meeting.

3. On September 28 the Little Rock Conference on Religion and Human Relations sponsored a community meeting on Housing at which staff members of Little Rock and North Little Rock Housing Authorities joined on a panel focussed on the affect of the program of the Housing Authority on segregated housing patterns. All agreed segregated housing had increased, disagreed as to cause and cure. Fundamental challenges were made to the Housing Authority.

4. The Conference of Christians and Jews has established a regional office in Little Rock with William L. Pharr as Director. Mr. Pfarr came from Fort Smith where his wife and he were active with the local Council on Human Relations.

5. The Little Rock monthly ministers' luncheon resumed on September 22 and conferred with Dr. G. P. Freeman, campaign manager for Dr. Jackson, Negro candidate for school board.

C. In Communities - Reactions to the Civil Rights Law of 1964

1. The following groups and individuals were publicized as recommending "obedience" to this law: Executive Committee of the Arkansas Bar Association, Pine Bluff and Little Rock Chambers of Commerce, Board of Jefferson County Bar Association, Senators Ellender of Louisiana, Russell and Talmadge of Georgia, Fulbright of Arkansas.

2. Except for the Arkansas Democrat the widely circulated dailies (Arkansas Gazette and Pine Bluff Commercial) were forthrightly affirmative in advocating obedience. The Democrat, editorially, denounced the law using the familiar epithets. But its columnists and news coverage took a different view.

3. Attorney General Bruce Bennett in a letter advised places of public accommodation to operate on "a business as usual basis" until courts rule on the law. Governor Faubus refused to meet Secretary of Commerce Hodges and Mr. LeRoy Collins, head of Community Relations service.

4. Reports of voluntary compliance across the state are encouraging:

In Pine Bluff, where many public accommodations already were open, four additional restaurants served Negro customers. Two refused.

At Jonesboro the better restaurants, hotels and motels are open.

At Fort Smith a Negro minister and eight boys on a picnic in Creekmore Park swam in the pool without incident. Two additional cafes served testers; one refused.

At Benton and Malvern movie theaters were opened.

At Forrest City testers were admitted to bowling alley, a restaurant, a skating rink. The swimming pool closed. At Helena testers were served at Habib's Restaurant, where earlier arrests had been made, rode front seats on buses, were admitted to the public library. They were arrested at the swimming pool.

At El Dorado Negroes attended a drive-in theater but were locked out of a diner.

At North Little Rock Negro patrons sat down stairs at the Rialto Theater and were served at Hamburher Cafe.

At Little Rock Coachman Inn for the first time served Negro patrons. At least two "cheaper" eating places, Whit's and Andy's refused to serve Negroes. Frostop changed its signs saying "Colored Orders to Go" to simply "Orders to Go." (This after some pressure from a law student here for the summer.)

At Texarkana occurred the only serious mass violence where some 200 Negroes engaged in rioting. Five Negroes and one white man received gunshot wounds. The protest was organized by the local NAACP, but the unorganized protesters who joined the demonstrators were blamed for the violence. Texarkana white and Negro leaders have organized to prevent further violence.

D. In the Courts

1. Judge John E. Miller, Federal District Court at Fort Smith, on August 19 dismissed the suit seeking admission of Janice and Patricia Rogers to the all white high school and approved the efforts of the school board toward integration, 37 students in seven years. He advised the board to revise its plan in the light of certain U.S. Supreme Court decisions. On the basis of his advice the board chose to discontinue the seventh and eighth grades of the Negro school. According to reports this means 268 Negro students will be in desegregated schools this year.

2. On September 18 Mrs. Corine Rogers, mother of Janice and Patricia, filed notice in Federal District Court that she will appeal Judge Miller's dismissal of her suit for admission of her daughters to the all-white high school in Fort Smith.

3. Federal District Judge J. Smith Henley turned down the request of Joanna Edwards and Robert Whitfield, students of the University of Arkansas, that he issue a temporary injunction demanding desegregation of dormitories while their suit challenging discrimination in all phases of university life is heard. At the same time the judge directed the University to admit Miss Edwards and Mr. Whitfield to the dormitories.

4. Suit was filed in Federal District Court by Ozell Sutton against the Capitol Club, former cafeteria at the State Capitol, for refusing to serve him. The cafeteria was changed to a "private club" with the blessing of the Governor after passage of the Civil Rights Bill.

E. In Politics

1. Governor Faubus overwhemed his unknown opponents for nomination for governor in the July Democratic Primary. In the campaign the Governor indicated he already was running against Winthrop Rockefeller, Republican candidate who is carrying a man-to-man campaign out to remote places of the state.

The Governor has moved from a position favorable to Goldwater to one of neutrality in the presidential race to one of endorsement of the Johnson-Humphrey ticket. For this he has been disowned by the White Citizens Council.

2. On August 11 Jim Brandon defeated Everett Tucker handily for state senator, 12,132 to 9,517. Mr. Tucker's reckless blast at "Labor Boss Becker" and at "radical Negro elements" produced a reverse backlash. The Arkansas Gazette concludes editorially, "The first and foremost conclusion from the returns, against the background of the campaign, is simply this: Raising the segregation issue in Pulaski County....does not pay off."

3. Incumbent Little Rock School Board member, J. H. Cottrell, on September 29, was overwhelmingly defeated by Warren Bass. Mr. Cottrell's disfavor was crowned by his acceptance of the post of Pulaski County campaign manager for Governor Faubus.

In the same school election Dr. Morris A. Jackson polled 5,500 votes to run second in his race for membership on the Little Rock School Board. A record number of votes, 17,000, were cast in the school elections.

5. Three persons active in the Pine Bluff Movement and with SNNC have filed as independent candidates for the legislature from Jefferson and Lincoln Counties.

6. Mr. Arthur Miller, professor at A.M.& N. College, was elected to the Dollarway School Board on September 29.

F. In Federal Agencies

On July 21 Mr. Quigley and Mr. Keppel of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare conferred with school administrators from four states in Little Rock. Mr. Keppel met with the heads of higher education. Mr. Quigley explained to public school men the meaning of the Civil Rights Law of 1964 to the schools. He was explicit in explaining the affirmative role which the Department now must take to speed up desegregation of all public schools, including the withholding of federal funds.

II. Activities of ACHR Related to Events

A. In Organizations

1. The Director was called to Fort Smith in July about a crisis in the local Council on Human Relations. An effective boycott against the Chairman, Alan Crump, an executive in Seven-Up and Dr. Pepper bottling business, had cut about one third of 1500 accounts in ten days. He felt obligated to resign his position for the good of the company and to leave the city. Other members of the Council had also suffered some recrimination. Members of the organization felt vulnerable and were fearful. Two other members of the steering committee have left since. But the group with its third chairman since summer plans to go forward. What evidence exists as to those attacking points to the Birchists' influence.

2. Members of the Board and staff have been influentially active with a number of Little Rock groups: The Intergroup Coordinating Committee, The Steering Committee of the Conference on Religion and Human Relations, the monthly ministers' luncheon, The Council on Community Affairs.

C. In Communities

1. ACHR became deeply involved in problems of housing in Little Rock this summer and fall, including two situations of "block-busting" and one of a total clearance project by the Urban Renewal Agency. Its activities included conferences with knowledgeable persons, conferences with the plaintiffs, showing of the film called "Values and Race" and joining in protests to federal agencies. The protests have led to further personal investigation from HHFA which is now in process. An ACHR Committee on Housing for Greater Little Rock has become active.

2. ACHR is sponsoring a state-wide conference on "Human Values and Housing" on October 14 with Mr. Wagner Jackson, Assistant to the Regional Administrator of HHFA at Philadelphia, as the speaker. (See enclosed.)

3. The Associate Director took leave August and September to direct the Arkansas Voter Education Project having as its objective collecting poll tax from 20,000 additional Negro citizens. The project had going organizations in 25 counties with headquarters in Little Rock with a state committee of substantial Negro leaders. Committee chairman was Dr. W. H. Townsend, Vice-President of ACHR.

4. By action of the Board ACHR wrote letters to the mayors of all first class cities offering its services in meeting the requirements of the Civil Rights Law of 1964.

D. In the Courts

1. ACHR arranged for a member of the Law Students Civil Rights Research Council to be in Little Rock and Arkansas for six weeks. Mr. Louis Legum, student at Georgetown University, worked with Attorney Harold Anderson, conferred with professors at the School of Law and attorneys at Pine Bluff.

2. John W. Walker, former Associate Director of ACHR, recent graduate of Yale Law School, working out of the national office of the Education and Legal Defense Fund, spent time in Little Rock assisting local attorneys in cases on discriminatory housing at the University, discrimination at the cafeteria of the State Capitol, and use of the Arkansas Pupil Placement Law. He asked conferences frequently with members of the staff and used materials on file at ACHR office.

E. With Federal Agencies

1. Ruth Arnold, Secretary and Program Assistant, as a member of the Arkansas Advisory Committee to the Civil Rights Commission made a number of inquiries and factual reports to the Commission and the Committee.

2. In that capacity, also, Mrs. Arnold has done much work toward setting up an Arkansas workshop on the Civil Rights Law of 1964 to be held October 19. A sub-committee of SAC is chaired by Mr. Steel Hays and has the cooperation of the 13 Arkansas members of the National Citizens Committee on Compliance. Along with others, both Directors of ACHR have been included in planning for the workshop.

3. On August 19-23, 43 foreign guests, delegates to the World Assembly of Youth at Amherst, Massachusetts, were in Little Rock under the sponsorship of Mrs. Arnold of ACHR staff in cooperation with the Arkansas Youth Council.

4. The Director went to Atlanta on August 5 for discussions with a task force on the President's War on Poverty. In connection with plans for recruiting youths for the Job Corps he had the advice and help of Mr. Charles Hicks of the Arkansas Department of Education and Mr. T. E. Patterson, Secretary of the Arkansas Teachers Association.

5. The Director attended the session of Mr. Quigley of HEW with the school administrators in July. Since then, ACHR has offered Mr. Quigley its services in helping get local schools to comply peaceably with the requirements of the Civil Rights Law of 1964.

October 22, 1964

Mr. Paul Anthony, Field Director
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

Sorry to be back in my usual class--late.

Enclosed you will find financial statements for July, August, September and the Recapitulation from October 1, 1963, through September 30, 1964. I am sorry not to have the auditor's report, but he asked that I not bring my materials to him until the end of October. Also, the day by day activities in the office is listed for your information. As usual there are many appointments with individuals and assistance by way of referral not given.

I have made a separate listing of appointments for Mr. Holt, the Resource Auditor, on the Battaglia Project. You can see what a fine person and a whiz he was. I have completed the recap for the Battaglia Project and have enclosed it too. Miss Frankie Austin (Negro) was hired and is still on the job as a secretary for the Battaglia Project. She is working out fine. She completed training under the MDTA as a Steno on June 19th and came to us just after that time.

Maybe you will be interested in two other items that I have enclosed: 1) a daily log we are attempting to keep and 2) personnel information form we are having members of our committees fill in for record.

Three of the revised copies of the Battaglia Report are enclosed.

More and more industries are attempting to employ Negroes and several are employing. In most cases they are working out satisfactorily, in some cases where there are problems we are trying to work with them.

In the past month we have set down with the Houston Housing Authority in their integration of a housing unit, and with the Vocational Rehabilitation Project who wanted suggestions on program and how best to go about integrating their next class. One complaint received from an elementary school where trouble might be, but thoroughly investigated and found rumors were false. South MacGregor Civic Club is still promoting idea "this is Our Home, It Is Not For Sale."

This Voter Check List (enclosed) is good, we have distributed a limited number. Gave out numerous copies of Civil Rights Bill to scholars just after school opened.

Charles is teaching one course (one hour, three days a week) at TSU in Freshman Sociology.

Getting ready for our Hootenanny titled "American Songs of Protest" for Friday evening, October 23 and Sunday evening, October 25th and then the Annual meeting November 10th. Trying to pull together a group--small--our executive committee members, who can make it, and heads of agencies for Monday afternoon, October 26h, 4:00 to 5:30 P.M. to hear David Danzig talk on "extremism."

So you see we are not idle.

Most sincerely,

Ethel

AGENDA

1. Relationship with local councils

   (a) The membership fee -- the minimum $5.00, as of now, entitles membership in both local and state council. How shall this be allocated?

   In the past, at least one local council paid a flat monthly fee of $100 to the state office in return for service. What shall be the procedure now and in the future?

2. Shall the By-Laws be amended to include procedures for the formation of local councils and to detail their relationship with the state Council?

   Article X - The bylaws may be amended at any annual meeting of the members or in any special meeting called for that purpose by a majority of the members present.

3. Additional Amendments

   Article II - The purpose of this organization shall be as follows: To strive through education, research, information and consultation to improve the educational, economic, and civic conditions of the people of North Carolina without regard to ethnic or national origins; to combat the causes of inter-group friction and misunderstanding, and to encourage inter-group cooperation for the common welfare; to interpret to the public the needs and aspirations of minority groups; to strive to attain the goal of equal opportunity for all the people of the state; and to propose from time to time constructive measures for the attainment of these purposes.

   Suggested amendments

   Omit - (beginning on the seventh line down) "to interpret to the public the needs and aspirations of minority groups;"

   Insert - (beginning on the tenth line down) "and to propose (and assist in the implementation) from time to time constructive measures for the attainment of these purposes." (insert in parentheses)

4. Draft a written policy statement with specific programs outlined.

   (a) Questions arise as to the Council's activities, endorsements, etc. These need to be explained and made official for the benefit of new local councils in formation and for the public as a whole.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

THE NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS, INC.

September 1, 1964 - to - October 31, 1964

Meetings of State and Local Councils

State

A planning and general discussion meeting was held by the state officers in the Council office in Charlotte on Saturday, September 12. The meeting was also attended by Paul Anthony, Field Director of the Southern Regional Council.

An organizational plan was agreed upon (copy attached). A questionnaire to be sent to the general membership was also agreed upon.

Dr. Williams has selected committee chairmen, and these will be appointed immediately. Evaluation of the response to the questionnaire is attached.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg

The Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council executive committee has held two meetings under the guidance of the state office. An annual meeting of this Council will be held in December, according to present plans, and Mr. George Esser, Director of the North Carolina Fund has been invited to be the principle speaker.

In January, the Council will hold an open city-wide meeting which will be co-sponsored by the two major PTA Councils in Charlotte (white and Negro). At that time, Mrs. Bertha Maxwell will make a report on the pre-school program she began on a voluntary basis last summer. The state Council supported the program with a gift of money ($50).

The program of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council for 1964-65 is attached.

A new slate of officers has been nominated as well as a number of new members of the executive committee.

Durham

The Durham Council has held two meetings. One was attended by your director.

A study on Negro employment in Durham was made last summer by Mr. Ed Barber. Mr. Barber was a volunteer as was his wife. Mrs. Barber spent her month of volunteer work in a pre-school program for disadvantaged students while Mr. Barber conducted the study. Mr. Barber is with the textbook division of Harpers. The study was summarized and an excellent cover designed by Mrs. Delores Marvin of Durham. The booklet, with a letter from the chairman, Dr. C. D. Watts, will go to all those persons interviewed. Plans will be made later for a press conference on the study, a city-wide meeting to discuss the report and for continuing the study in greater depth.

This council plans to hold a career clinic and to continue its pre-school program begun last summer.

The Durham leaders have been "self-starters" and their example can serve other local councils, pointing the way to local problems which seriously need the attention of a human relations council with officers, executive committee and membership speaking as one voice and, thus, having the influence of numbers.

Wilmington

The Wilmington Council is new. Mr. Lisbon C. Berry invited your director to an organization meeting of some 25 persons, including the Mayor. A nominating committee was appointed, and as soon as a chairman is selected, the new council will decide on a city-wide open meeting with a speaker of note. This will launch a drive for members. The executive committee, composed of those who attended the initial organizational meeting, will consider a project for the year. It has been suggested that the new council work with an already well launched project in mental health, providing student and adult volunteers to participate in carrying forward some of the present plans and to provide new ideas for extending this work.

Since Wilmington has the largest organization of KKK in the state the slogan of the new council may well be "for every KKK, two human relations members."

GOLDSBORO

Goldsboro leaders have worked with great diligence on a proposal to the North Carolina Fund. Unfortunately, it was not one of the projects selected by the Fund, but they are receiving some help from the Good Neighbor Council, and they expect to qualify for a part of their project under the Anti-Poverty legislation.

The major stumbling block is the housing portion of the project. It is in this area that the state office of this Council can be helpful. I held a meeting with the leaders at the home of your long time member and contributor, Miss Gertrude Weil.

Mrs. Geneva Hamilton who has spearheaded the Goldsboro study is also a member of the state Council and she wishes to help organize a local body.

We have put the group in touch with educators in the field of sociology for assistance in writing a new and well documentated presentation, and if the plans progress, we may be helpful in interesting a foundation in the housing problems in Goldsboro.

An organization meeting will be held in the near future.

Greensboro

The cart is before the horse in Greensboro. We have a project possibility with a fine potential. I had a meeting with Mr. Niel Armstrong, Director of the Summer Program of A & T College. It is our hope that a local council in Greensboro, as well as the state Council, can sponsor a Human Relations Institute in Greensboro this summer.

The plans envision two weeks of various types of sessions. The entire program could be taken as an "in service training" for teachers and students and credit would be given to those who matriculate. Mr. Armstrong and I hope we can raise funds for the program in order to give scholarships as generously as possible and in order to finance fees for outstanding speakers and teachers. We believe this fund raising can be done in Greensboro. The classes would, of course, be inter-racial.

All sessions would be open to the public for a small registration fee and could be audited without credit. Thus, this would become an adult education program as well as a specialized college course.

We know of the possibility of a group already organized in Greensboro which might well consider itself a human relations council. We hope that with a ready made project of importance and one that should attract interest throughout the state, our Greensboro council will be organized.

Asheville

At the time of writing this report we have no council or program in this city. However, Mr. Dailey, member of the executive committee, will be meeting with me before our meeting on Saturday. I hope to bring a verbal report on this.

Winston-Salem

As in the above situation, we have no council or program here but several persons have responded to letters and questionnaire showing interest. This is an area where a council should be started since the North Carolina Fund has a project director on the job. Almost all grant from the Fund must come through the local project. A human relations council with a good program could be valuable to the Winston-Salem project, and the Fund welcomes ideas and assistance from us.

Other Related Meetings and Conferences
Covered by Executive Director

(1) Two meetings set up by Mr. George Esser of the North Carolina Fund

One meeting was to consider the use of the North Carolina Council for a special program being planned by the Fund Director, Mr. Esser, and his assistant. This is still in the planning stage.

A second meeting was to discuss the Youth Program which has already been coordinated through the efforts of our office. The Fund will provide a small amount for this program to cover speakers and traveling expenses.

(2) Conference with Mr. John Brooks, Mike Lawler and William Parker in our office.

(3) Conference with Mrs. Bertha Maxwell of Charlotte

(4) Conference with Mr. Charles Lowe of Charlotte

(5) Conference with Mrs. Mary Semans of Durham, and Mrs. Herbert Bluethenthal of Wilmington

(6) Meeting of the Good Neighbor Council in Goldsboro

(7) Conference with Mrs. Frisbee and Mrs. Lynch, PTA Council, Charlotte

(8) Conference with Mr. Louis Davis, PTA Council, Charlotte

(9) Interracial meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society at the St. Paul's Baptist Church in Charlotte

(10) Meeting of the State Democratic Women in Charlotte

(11) Student Assembly at Johnson C. Smith University for a short speech

There are several meetings and talks scheduled for November,

STATE-WIDE PROJECTS

We have one state-wide project in operation.

One important way in which the state Council can be of service is to coordinate the efforts of several organizations.

At our instigation we have begun a youth project with the Intercollegiate Council for Human Rights (an organization begun with Negro colleges by Governor Sanford's staff), the National Student's Association and the North Carolina Fund (see reference above).

The student organization is set up for the purpose of directing student volunteer services into avenues of greatest usefulness, such as tutorials, school readiness programs, getting out the vote, etc.

Our assignment is to organize the young people at Johnson C. Smith, Queens, Charlotte College, Barber-Scotia and other institutions of higher learning in and near Charlotte. We have had outstanding success at Smith, and we are making progress at Queens and Charlotte. Barber-Scotia is next on the list.

Our two staff members, Betty Jo McMakin and Roberta Blackwell, have attended and contributed to all the planning sessions with the other organizations, and have been responsible for meeting with faculty and student leaders in the institutions for which we are responsible.

The Smith students did a neighborhood survey on voting during a Saturday afternoon and evening, ending the project with a report at the home of Miss Blackwell. She was their hostess for supper.

A state-wide meeting is planned by the four participating organizations to be held at Wake Forest College on November 13 and 14. At this meeting definite plans for summer programs to assist in the educational advancements of children and other young people will be made. It will be an inter-racial over night meeting.

It will be our responsibility to see that our schools are well represented, that they have transportation, and to contribute our share toward the general expenses.

Mrs. Martin Cannon has secured a $500 grant for us so that we may carry our share of these expenses.

* * * * * *

At my invitation, Mr. Lee Muth of Washington visited Charlotte and met members of the Charlotte Area Fund at a supper at the home of Mrs. Martin Cannon. Mr. Muth is in charge of the implementation of Title 1B of the Economic Opportunity Act. This title is known as "the work-training program."

Mr. Muth made specific suggestions for an independent proposal on the part of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations to the Department of Labor. I shall not go into details in this report except to tell you that I hope to begin work on this proposal at once and shall seek the help of many of you and other experts.

Should our proposal be acted upon favorably, we should receive a sizable grant for a very specific undertaking which would be a major contribution to a number of young people in the state, to other organizations and to the Department of Labor.

PRINTED MATERIALS

The announcement (copy attached) has been mailed to about 1,500 persons. We still have a large mailing list to cover but not the staff to put out the work.

Our mailing lists have been greatly increased by responses to Dr. Williams' letter to mayors, by our request for PTA and other civic organizations lists.

We have also built our national VIP list.

We shall continue to mail the announcement during November, until they are all out.

Attractive new stationery is being prepared by Mr. N. B. White in Durham.

The membership brochures are on hand. We hope that all local councils will furnish lists of names of persons to receive the brochure. In order to secure the bulk rate, these must go out at a minimum of 250 at a time.

The brochures will be used at all open meetings of councils throughout the state and at the state annual meeting. The help of every member to secure new members is needed.

Our newspaper is to be known as the NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL COMMENT. We have held up publishing in order to get in more biographies of the executive committee. We still lack a number and shall print these in the next issue.

The paper is a four page tabloid which we shall allow to speak for itself. Marion Cannon is co-editor with me.

The Circulation will be 3,000. It is our hope to publish eight issues a year, dropping two in the summer--July and August. We shall need a subsidy and/or advertising to meet the cost.

FUTURE PLANS

The general outline of future activities is obvious--more councils, more projects, more complete organization and much, much more fund raising.

Leadership seems to be abundant if channels and inspiration can be provided.

In considering the scope of the Council's work, I have, at times, been troubled by seeming duplication of effort--that is, other groups engaged in the same work. However, in most cases these groups are not membership organizations --as for example, the mayors' bi-racial committees which consist of a few leaders at the top.

Leadership of this kind and of the type provided by our own executive committee is, of course, a fundamental need. Yet we cannot develop human relations without a broad base of human beings. As Leslie Dunbar said in his annual report, "Numbers do count--the day of a few good people working behind the scenes no longer serves sufficiently."

I believe the state Council can fill two needs. One would be to serve as a coordinator where there is duplication as in the case of the student project accounted for above. We brought about the cooperation.

The second would be to bring in large numbers of people to benefit from educational advantages we shall offer them and to give them the opportunity to work in projects to benefit their neighbors.

My hope is to organize a dollar membership campaign from February to June, on vocational lines--cab drivers, mechanics, construction workers, office workers. We should make every effort to give these groups a forum to discuss their concerns re the community, to hear from their leaders--political and vocational. We should arrange programs dealing with vocational advancements, provide resource materials on adult education, etc.

These are the groups which should be of important concern in human relations!

After experimenting in one or two areas with this project, we could prepare a presentation to go to foundations--especially the foundations of organized labor who might be interested in using and financing this project as a "show case" of union interest in the welfare of the community.

This is an untouched area of activity as far as I know. There will be no duplication of effort here. It will be doing the job for which we are organized --to develop good human relations between peoples of all levels.

This is, of course, a long range plan but it could be started this year.

NEEDS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Miss Blackwell carried the burden of the office after Mr. Jones' death far beyond the call of duty. She is at this time doing the job of secretary, office manager and part-time field worker. The secretarial work is double the amount of what it has been.

Although she received a raise of $300 this does not approach an adequate compensation for her intelligence, loyalty and long hours of overtime. I recommend that she be given another increase to bring the total raise to $500 for the year. I hope her salary will be increased again next year.

We have taken steps to provide Blue Cross and Blue Shield hospital coverage for Miss McMakin, although this is not part of the consideration of the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, which provides half of her salary.

Miss McMakin, I might add here, is proving to be highly effective in all of her undertakings for us.

With a staff of three and very occasional part-time clerical and volunteer help, we are unable to function efficiently. In the end this inadequacy will curtail creative efforts and result in poor public relations due to neglected correspondence (letters of thanks, welcome, etc.).

The financial report will point out that we are probably already overspending our budget although you have not put strict limitations on when or how we spend for such items as printing and traveling.

If the Council is needed and wanted, we must have funds for implementation of our program, and for sufficient staff to carry it forward.

Eventually when we have a well established program, it will be part of my responsibility to prepare the ground work for increased fund raising. I expect to do this with the help of an active Finance Committee and with the assistance of members of the executive committee. Fund raising and increased membership are part of the responsibility of officers and members of the executive committee, and of local councils as well.

I have had extensive experience in fund raising, and from that experience I must point out that the staff director has the responsibility to develop program and organization; to prepare presentations in writing, and to meet in person with contributors. But finally the request for gifts and grants must come from the organization leaders and not from paid staff.

In the interim period, I shall attempt to begin some minor fund raising (in fact we have already done this with slight success). I hope you will all be helpful in securing new gifts and pledges even in small amounts--it all helps.

Our needs are many but our requests will be for the minimum.

We need --

Staff:

Two additional staff members: (1) a clerk typist for 20 hours a week at $1.25 per hour; (2) a full-time young man for field work, especially in the areas described in the dollar membership campaign, at $5,000 a year.

Equipment:

My "portable" typewriter, which I need badly at home and which is too heavy to be really portable, does not give us an adequate number of typewriters in the office.

We need one good electric typewriter to turn out a creditable letter and on which we can prepare plates for duplication. Approximate cost--$400.

We should have at least one more small room. This may not be available on this floor and it will probably be necessary to wait on this in the hope that we can move in a year.

AGENDA

Meeting of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council Executive Committee, Thursday, September 24, 1964, at 6:30 p.m.

SUGGESTED ORGANIZATION

(Committees for needed activities)

1. POLICY AND PROGRAM

To determine, with the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council Chairman, other committee members and the Executive Director of the Council, areas where the Council will work this year; where its efforts are most needed; where it can be most effective in developing improved human relations situations.

(Suggested areas of activities: Assist in school readiness and counseling programs; assist in career guidance; work for greater employment integration in government and business; assist in activities with church groups in their efforts to combat juvenile delinquency and other problems; to serve as liaison between white and Negro organizations now working toward integration -- such as, Girl & Boy Scout programs and P. T. A. groups, working for improvement in housing and participating in aspects of the poverty program.)

Naturally the committee would make a selection since it is unlikely that the Council, with its small staff, could be effective in all of the areas.

2. CIVIL RIGHTS

To assist in understanding and implementing the Civil Rights Law; work with the Mayor's Committee and Chamber of Commerce and other groups equally concerned.

3. FORUM COMMITTEE

Planning and arranging for meetings; securing speakers and other types of programs in the adult education field and/or cultural programs and discussion sessions.

4. MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE

To conduct a membership campaign; to enlarge the scope of the Council and to make its educational opportunities and services available to many more persons; to carry on the membership campaign through contact with individuals and groups; to assist in secruing memberships from senior high school and college students in order to develop youth groups.

DRAFT OF PLAN FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF ORGANIZATION AND PROGRAM

A questionnaire should be sent to every Council member (suggested questionnaire attached).

Dr. Williams should appoint the chairmen of committees and in each case explain the work of the committee (this would be done by the staff in the office with Dr. Williams' approval of the content).

The first step for a committee chairman would be to build a state-wide committee in order to involve the membership in an active program. This would be achieved by our staff, studying the responses to the questionnaire and reporting to chairman the names of those interested in serving on his particular committee.

It would then be the responsibility of the chairman to contact the member by letter, phone or in person, where practical, inviting him to serve on the committee and advising him of the activities and goals of his particular committee. In cases where the committee chairman knows of person interested in working with him he should inform the office that he is contacting this person in order to avoid duplication by some other chairman.

COMMITTEE ACTIVITIES

1. COMMITTEE TO ASSIST IN UNDERSTANDING AND IMPLEMENTING CIVIL RIGHTS LAW.

The chairman should arrange for at least one member in all the major areas of the state. The best person would perhaps be a lawyer, -- better still would be a lawyer and several others who would be knowledgeable about the law and sensitive to their community's response.

The chairman of the committee should then prepare a memorandum to business firms offering the Council's help and name the local person to contact. The memorandum should be duplicated so that many thousands of copies would be on hand, and supplies of these should then be sent to local committee members for distribution in their own areas. The Council should undertake to pay for third-class mailing of these but they should be addressed by the local committee member and any volunteers he might recruit to help him.

When a business firm asks for guidance the local person should consult his chairman at least by telephone.

When failure to observe the law is reported the same procedure should be followed.

It is, of course, urgent that any member of this committee be carefully screened by the chairman and only those who are known to be entirely dependable asked to serve.

2. SPEAKERS BUREAU

The chairman of this committee should draft a questionnaire to be sent to faculties of schools, colleges and universities and to others such as experts, newspaper men, professional persons, inviting enrollment in the Council's Speakers Bureau.

The questionnaire should allow space for listing topics and should ask for the minimum fee or honorarium expected.

Again the local committee member should be expected to distribute the questionnaire to institutions and individuals in his own area. The response, however, should come to the office where a file will be set up with all pertinent information.

3. ASSISTANCE IN LOCAL COUNCIL ORGANIZATION

The chairman of this committee should seek out leadership in areas where there is no local council. The office can be of help here with lists supplied to Dr. Williams in response to his letter to the mayors. These are all people evidently interested in civil rights and in many cases could provide leadership.

The chairman should prepare a memorandum on the technique of organizing a council -- how to conduct the first organizational meeting, planning activities; how to participate in the council's over-all program.

The new council chairman should know that the services of the staff are available -- that the executive director will be on hand to assist in organizing and planning. He should know that the services of the speakers bureau are also available for arranging educational meetings for interracial groups in his community.

4. PUBLICITY

The chairman of this committee will help the staff with ideas and will attempt to keep in contact with personnel in the mass communication media throughout the state.

Actual press releases will probably be prepared in the office but it would be helpful if we have publicity committee members in the various communities and if they would call on the press in their areas asking for cooperation with the Council.

The chairman might suggest the subject matter of "Letters-to-the Editor" to the members of his committee.

An active chairman could undoubtedly interest radio and television staffs in the work of the Council. Some of the programs developed by the speakers bureau would be material in these media.

5. SPECIAL PROJECTS

The chairman of this committee should initiate studies and reports on matter of concern to the Council such as progress in school integration, employment, career opportunities, where and how the Council might be helpful in rural areas, where and how we might cooperate in the proverty program.

The members of his committee throughout the state should be asked to collect data on subjects being studied.

The chairman and committee members might also recommend to the Council Chairman and Executive Director areas where negotiation should be undertaken.

6. ASSISTANCE IN PREPARATION OF MONTHLY BULLETIN

The chairman of this committee could be of great help to the staff. Advice on materials to be used; asking for articles and stories from important persons in the state as well as from students, etc.; asking committee members to keep the office informed on happenings in their communities which would be of interest to the Council membership -- this type of help could result in a dynamic, even if small, publication.

7. FINANCE

The Council should certainly have a finance committee. The need for a continuous income is obvious. We cannot seek funds without a constructive program which contributes to the constant improvement of human relations in North Carolina, but neither can we conduct such a program without adequate funds.

If we believe that North Carolina needs a human relations council the money must be found to finance it. Membership income can hardly be counted. We should question whether the present minimum membership covers the cost of serving these members. However, these members are important, and if we develop other membership campaigns (students and lower income groups for the $1.00 memberships we have discussed) we shall be performing an unusual educational service in intergroup relations, but we shall need funds.

The Finance Committee should explore sources of possible bigger gifts, arrange meetings with contributors for the Executive Director accompanied by a member of the board.

Special memberships for business institutions ($100) should be sought. A list of these civic minded business firms, lending moral and material support to better intergroup relations in the state, could be published in the press and Council publications, unless such publicity is not desired.

Funds for special projects can be developed (this is largely staff work but the committee chairman can advise and often be the most effective liaison between the contributor and the staff director). A grant to underwrite the cost of the speakers bureau could very well interest a prominent North Carolinian. The director would prepare a presentation on the usefulness of the bureau in several directions and a breakdown on costs.

A number of other such presentations could be prepared if the Finance Committee has a possible contributor in mind.

A study of North Carolina foundations which are committed to better race relations is also in order, as is exploration in ways in which the Council can participate in the North Carolina Fund.

STATEMENT AND QUESTIONNAIRE
TO MEMBERS OF THE N. C. COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

FROM: Helen Adams, Executive Director

The staff of the North Carolina Council is small in numbers but eager to be of service. We ask you to put us to work in order that our state may continue to be a leader in developing intergroup relations through education and through constantly improving civic and economic conditions.

How can the staff of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations serve your community this year?

We can help you set up a school readiness program for your little ones who may be disadvantaged.

We can help you set up a career counseling program for your teens and/or a tutoring program for children of any age.

We can help the cause of adult education by providing you with educational public lectures on a variety of topics by experts in their fields.

We can help you make a study of integration in employment in your community.

We can help you study the progress of school integration.

We can help you develop a dynamic local Human Relations Council.

We shall invite you to participate in the Council's own monthly newspaper by sending us news and information about interesting activities in your area. If you write a good article the editor will give you a "by-line."

You and all the members of your council will receive the newspaper. We hope to begin publishing by mid-October.

If we are serious about Human Relations then we must relate.

Therefore, will you:

1. If your community has no council will you attempt to organize one by bringing together a group of people for an organizing meeting at a school, a church or a home? Will you confer with me about a date and invite me to meet with you and your group in order to permit me to assist you in your plans and program?

2. If you have a council will you confer with me about a date for a meeting and invite me to attend in order that I may have the pleasure of knowing all of the members?

3. Will you give me your ideas of what your community needs most in the way of activities or studies to improve intergroup relations?

4. Will you assist us in organizing a student group -- college and high school?

5. Will you invite other civic groups to take a "club membership" and send one or two representatives to meetings?

6. At some future date would you attend a large statewide meeting which would offer a vitally interesting program with nationally known speakers?

The Council is planning to develop a number of sub-committees. We invite you to be your community representative on one of the following committees. Please check the one which interests you.

☐ 1. Committee to assist in understanding and implementation of the Civil Rights Law.

☐ 2. Speakers Bureau

3. Publicity

4. Assist in local organization of Human Relations Council

5. Assist in preparation of Council Bulletin

6. Finance

7. Special projects such as development of school readiness and counseling programs, reports on progress of integration in employment and schools, studies in career opportunities.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE 1964-65 PROGRAM

CHARLOTTE-MECKLENBURG COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

SCHOOL READINESS FOR PRE-SCHOOL CHILDREN

Meet with school officials, teachers and PTA Councils to plan integrated summer program for disadvantaged children based on the pre-school operated in Charlotte last summer;

Assist to finance the project by interesting individuals in the needs (last summer's milk and cookies were obtained without cost, bus service for field trips, special toys and other materials were given);

Assist teachers in securing high school helpers which will give the high school students a summer project;

Provide publicity for the project with special emphasis on integration (it was all Negro last summer). National newspaper and magazine coverage is possible.

Council would arrange for an interracial two-day camp at the end of the session, with mothers invited.

CAREER GUIDANCE

Council will initiate study to determine curriculum weaknesses in training, particularly of Negro students. It is noted that jobs exist. Employers will accept Negro applicant IF he qualifies. Frequently he does not. Native intelligence may be obvious but preparation has been inadequate.

Upon completion of the study a committee will be organized to talk to both public and private school officials. The East Side Council will cooperate on this project. The goal will be to upgrade the curriculum, especially in the areas where job opportunities are plentiful--such as in the scientific field, secretarial and mechanical.

*With the East Side Council and other groups equally interested, the Charlotte Council would initiate a Career Clinic.

ALL high school seniors would be invited. Personnel officers from the fields of business, government and education would hold workshops for the students registering an interest in a particular career. Professional men would also be asked to meet with the students wishing to go into law or medicine.

This would be an all-day meeting with a dinner in the evening with nationally known speaker (Fred Heckinger, Education Editor, New York Times).

Funds and workers would be needed NOW if this project is to succeed.

*Other groups whose cooperation we would need would be top school officials, the Chamber of Commerce, the Mayor's Community Relations Committee and the Mayor himself.

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Quarterly Report

September 1964 November 1964

Slowed Down

To say that the presidential campaign slowed down SCCHR's operations in most directions is perhaps an under-statement. The switch by Senator Strom Thurmond to the Republican party followed by the support of Goldwater by Albert Watson, South Carolina congressman from District II, brightened the fires of fear and ignorance which are always smoldering in a backward state like South Carolina. Already in the June Democratic Primary, Maurice Bessenger, a restaurant owner in Columbia, in his unsuccessful race for a seat in the House of Representatives had fanned fires of hatred and fanaticism. His expressed opposition at that time to civil rights legislation has, since passage of the Act of 1964, become open defiance.

The Honorable James F. Byrnes and his followers declared early for Goldwater.

Bessenger and the notorious "Red" Bethea of Dillon County held a large Wallace-for- President rally in Colulmbia and later supported Goldwater.

In the climate which was created, it was almost impossible to step-up a program designed to inform, to promote discussion and progressive action.

A public meeting into which considerable planning had gone and at which Phillip Hammer was to have been the featured speaker was postponed or called off.

"Coffees" and informal get-togethers in homes as a membership enlargement effort were very difficult to schedule due to preoccupation with politics and rightist activities.

Some SCCHR members undertook to determine the extent of rightist activities. There was wide distribution of hate literature and especially of such books as None Dare Call It Treason and A Texan Looks At Lyndon. The first-named and perhaps both of these books were given away at meetings, from counters in stores, and in filling stations. We countered only feebly with distribution to a few persons of pieces which attempted to set the record straight.

Anthony + Dunbar, Please react! aus

There is a great unmet need in South Carolina for the education of responsible leaders of goodwill, all too many of whom are "buying" the wrong information and ideas. While we in SCCHR have some thoughts on this subject, we'd like to see it given serious consideration by a joint committee or conference participated in by SRC and state councils staff and lay leaders.

Serving as individuals, some SCCHR members gave service to party headquarters, to getting-out-the-vote, and in numerous other ways to the election process.

Implementation of the Civil Rights Act

Throughout the summer months of 1964 the SCCHR staff used every available opportunity for education concerning the provisions of this Act and is continuing to do so.

More importantly perhaps, SCCHR staff and lay leaders are opening up the use of public facilities by small bi-racial groups. It is hard to realize how difficult it is to get even the most dedicated SCCHR white members to do this in their own communities.

There is the continuing serious problem of use by Negroes in small towns of public facilities, especially of eating establishments. This presents a special challenge for several reasons:

1) Since South Carolina still has vast rural areas and numerous small towns, the old patterns persist in the state onall too large a scale.

2) If changes in the patterns do not take place soon which are definitely tied to the 1964 Act, may not enforcement of the Act become more difficult?

3) May not reactions by white people comparable to those which followed the 1954 Supreme Court decision onsegregation in public schools be espected; such as federal law can be ignored since we can successfully keep Negroes'in their place" or we will delay compliance a long time yet, etc.?

4) Why should the burden of changing these patterns rest primarily on those persons already most burdened and least able to pay the price of economic reprisal or even of physical violence?

5) SCCHR simply does not have sufficient resources and outreach to successfully meet the challenge unaided.

6) This problem was presented by the SCCHR executive director at a sectional meeting of the South Carolina Advisory Committee's Informational Meeting held in Columbia in September. Obvious response from Negroes showed awareness and concern. The panel of consultants from the U. S. Community Relations Service and U. S. Commission on Civil Rights did not respond effectively.

During the fall, Mrs. Spearman accepted an invitation to serve as a member of the South Carolina Advisory Committee on Civil Rights.

How Organize to Fight Poverty in South Carolina?

One weekend inSeptember, a SCCHR board member took the executive director to one of the regional meetings in North Carolina, called by Dr. James White, director of the North Carolina Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) at Asheville. Dr. White was assisted by Dr. Koch, in charge of community programs under the North Carolina Fund. The latter invited the SCCHR staff to visit his office in Durham, which it did inlate October. These experiences demonstrated intelligent ways of organizing governmental and voluntary resources to fight poverty.

Unfortunately, the negative political climate inSouth Carolina, which heightened during the presidential campaign has further complicated organizational efforts in the State. The Governor and Senator Thurmond had already taken opposite stands, we believe, concerning need for five counties in the northwestern section of the State to participate in the Appalachia program.

In late November, a conversation with Mr. Edwin Culpepper, South Carolina director of OEO, revealed that he has not yet been given an office or a staff and that Washington has not agreed to the plan of organization proposed by South Carolina.

~~SCCHR members and staff are serving on numerous other committees of the Columbia Citizens Design for Progress. The stepped-up participation of Negroes in this~~

Greenville Council Becomes An Affiliate

On October 14 and 15, Dr. George Bowdler, who is employed on a temporary basis to explore possibilities for organizing new local councils, Mrs. Spearman, and Al Ulmer, assistant to the SRC director of field services, worked intensively with the new officers of the Greenville Council. Community contacts were renewed and introductions made also.

Discussions focused primarily upon local council structure and function, with emphasis upon affiliation with SCCHR; and also upon ways of activating a CAP in Greenville under the EOA of 1964.

Al Ulmer remained in Greenville until October 16 and visited Furman University to strengthen ties and organization there.

Mr. L. S. James spoke at the November meeting of the Greenville Council and gave a thorough explanation of the EOA. At this meeting, members voted to affiliate with SCCHR. Previously, its relationship with SCCHR had been a loose but cooperative one.

Columbia Moves Along

In spite of slowness at the state level to implement the OEA of 1964, the Social Planning Division of the United Fund of the Greater Columbia Area is actively working to produce a Community Action Program (CAP) plan. SCCHR is well represented.

Also there is a committee of the Citizens Design for Progress in Columbia, which is holding meetings to inform its members and to project plans. The SCCHR executive director is chairman of a subcommittee to make specific proposals for Columbia and for Richland and Lexington counties.

SCCHR members and staff are serving on numerous other committees of the Columbia Citizens Design for Progress. The stepped-up participation of Negroes in this effort is encouraging and noteworthy.

SCCHR 1964 Annual Meeting

Al Ulmer represented the SRC staff at the annual meeting November 12. No doubt his report and the attachments to this report cover the essentials. But, to add a few facts:

This was the first annual meeting which has been limited to an afternoon and evening meeting. We thought it went well. The preliminary meeting of the Board of Directors helped as a warm-up for the annual meeting.

Reports from local councils showed progress and increased vigor and enthusiasm at the community level. Only one report d-r-a-g-g-e-d, possibly because it was made by the incoming chairman.

Through the Presidents Council and the Program Council, both organized in1964, the work of the local councils will continue to be better coordinated and improved, we believe.

The address of Heslip Lee, Director of the VCHR, was enthusiastically received by both Negro and white persons in attendance. He attended a meeting later in the evening in the home of a relative of a unit of the John Birch Society, from which he reported insights and information.

The banquet held in the ballroom of the Wade Hampton Hotel was attended by well over 200 persons and was the first such affair ever to be held in South Carolina.

Before the banquet speaker was introduced, the program featured introductions of persons who have contributed significantly to enlarging the number of registrants and voters, persons who have been admitted to previously all-white public schools, those who are organizing corporations and making other contributions to improving rural life, leaders in the student council, officers of other civil rights organizations working in South Carolina, and others making significant contributions.

Volunteers were registered to keep SCCHR updated on progress in use of public facilities and others to enlarge the merit employment programs under the leadership of Mr. L. S. James.

Dr. Samuel Proctor, former associate director of the Peace Corps, paid tribute to Al Ulmer and other Peace Corpsmen who are currently taking significant leadership roles at home. Dr. Proctor made a motivating and incisive address. We recommend him as an able and useful speaker and find him both generous and cooperative.

And, now for a few frills:

Two able, but young newspaper reporters were invited to cover the speeches of Mr. Lee and Dr. Proctor. About midway through the banquet, they rushed to the SCCHR executive director with keen enthusiasm saying that although they had agreed to cover only the addresses they wanted to report the entire meeting to tell South Carolinians and the world how much of a positive nature is going on in the State. Parenthetically, the newspaper reports of the annual meeting of the State Baptist Convention, which concluded the day before, were unusually negative; no doubt the contrast electrified the reporters!

Notable progress was seen in the fact that attendance at the banquet was roughly 50-50 and that a few outstanding white persons who are not yet members attended. A judge of the Juvenile and Domestic Court, head of the engineering department of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, several University professors and their families illustrate this limited gain.

In Brief

Beginning in September, SCCHR staff has held periodic consultations with Mr. Robert Sigmond, director, and members of his five man team in the AFSC sponsored Volunteers in Service to America (VISA) program. A husband and wife team was stationed inSt. George, Dorchester County. . . . . .

Upon special invitation the SCCHR executive director participated on October first in the conference of the South Carolina Citizens Committee on Children and Youth. . . . .

Again as representatives of the only non-governmental statewide agency, SCCHR staff was invited to participate in a meeting in October of governmental agencies addressed by Dr. Levine, director of the U. S. Employment Service, U. S. Department of Labor, in the interest of developing adequate anti-poverty programs. . . . .

Mr. L, S, James, Mrs. Septima Clark of the S.C.L.C. staff, and Mrs. Spearman attended the annual meeting of the Georgia Council on Jekyll Island the weekend of October 23. . . . .

The Columbia Council continues to get good newspaper coverage of its monthly meetings. . . . .

The SCCHR executive director served on a special committee of state-staff directors which made specific recommendations to the SRC executive committee and later to the SRC annual meeting. The recommendations related to the need for closer tie-in and for additional services. Mr. Reese and Mrs. Spearman attended the SRC annual meeting in Atlanta on November 20 and 21 and an SRC state-staff conference on the preceding day. . . . .

Mrs. Spearman was the official delegate from South Carolina to the 1964 conference of the Adult Education Association of the U.S.A. in November. . . . .

An initial meeting between Dr. J. M. Dabbs and the executive director has been held in relation to his service on the SRC Development Committee (Fund Raising from local and state foundations). . . .

Finance

See attached Quarterly Financial Report.

A letter from Paul Anthony received in late November stated that a quarterly payment on a New World Foundation grant to cover SCCHR's rural project directed by Mr. James would be mailed December first. Hence no withdrawal was made to cover payroll for November 30.

REPORT OF PROGRAM DIRECTOR

September - November, 1964

The Membership effort, which was reported briefly last quarter has continued, concentrated in the Columbia area. A total of 2,235 names were compiled in a prospect list for the greater Columbia area. During September and October letters of interpretation and invitation and a copy of the publicity brochure, "Reach for Tomorrow", were mailed to this number of persons. Cultivation of this group has continued, through invitations from the Columbia Council on Human Relations and to the annual meeting of SCCHR on November 12.

Six informal coffee hours were held in September in homes of members for a discussion of the work of SCCHR. A member of the staff or an officer of the Council was present at each of these events to give factual information and to help in interpreting the role of the Council at the present time. It is hoped that the coffee hours, which gave evidence of a growing interest in SCCHR and the need for a broader interpretation of the present program, may continue and increase in number. On the basis of the evaluation of the hostesses and the participants this was one of the most effective methods of public relations.

The actual increase in the number of members is not spectacular, but shows a steady gradual growth. Since September 1, 68 new members have been added in Columbia, bringing the present total of adult members in all categories in greater Columbia to 258.

The Columbia Council has continued to offer an outstanding public meeting once a month featuring the following discussions: "The Changing Face of the South," at the September meeting; "The Role of the Church in Human Relations," with the Rev. Henry McKenna of the National Council of Churches as the speaker in October; "The Meaning of the Election" was the theme at the November meeting; The various committees of the Columbia Council in the areas of education, community affairs, economics and job opportunities are being reorganized and it is hoped that these will become more effective working committees in the coming year.

The Columbia Council has maintained close contact with parents and students who desegregated Columbia schools this fall. Two special meetings for this group with parents and students from the schools which these children attend, were held during September. At the end of the first month of school a positive report of progress was given. The transition has been made quite easily. Administrators and teachers have been very helpful. In one Junior High school Negro students have been elected to a class office and are on the football team. Some fellow students in every school have made real efforts to demonstrate their friendship for the new students.

The Committee on the Church and Human Relatio ns of SCCHR has held several meetings during this quarter and has organized a number of sub-committees to carry out the various phases of its program: a speaker's bureau, Youth Work, Young Ministers' Group; Literature Distribution, and Convocations for Churchmen. The convocation committee, using Columbia as a pilot area, is projecting its first meeting for February. Since there is no Council of Churches in South Carolina, it seems that a committee such as this one, sponsored by SCCHR, is continuing to meet a need.

The program of the SC Student Council on Human Relations has been of major importance during this quarter and has consumed a major block of time of the Program Director, who carries special responsibility for the student program of the Council.

September saw two new colleges admitting Negro students for the first time and two formerly all-Negro colleges, Benedict College in Columbia and Claflin College in Orangeburg, admitting one white student each, the first to be enrolled in any of the Negro colleges of the state. Since the whole process of college desegregation has been of major concern to SCSCHR and has constituted one of its important projects, a special report on college desegregation is attached hereto.

A meeting of the Steering Committee held on September 27 projected program plans for the fall semester. The Conference Planning Committee confirmed the plans for a conference to be held at Camp Gravatt, December 4-6 and suggested that this be a genuine working session with Workshops on Panelist Training; Tutorials, Politics, and Poverty Programs in South Carolina. Speakers recommended were Mr. Randolph Blackwell of Southern Christian Leadership Conference and Mr. Joseph Hendricks, Dean of Students at Mercer University. The Citizenship and Projects committee recommended that Tutorials in communities in which colleges were located be urged and that help be given in setting these up. It was also suggested that Panels of Student Speakers be trained to be available for campus, church or community groups. It was hoped that training would be given on Religion and Race and on educational needs in South Ca rolina. The Outreach and Public Relations Committee crystallized plans for the organization of districts and suggested that local groups in the various colleges be organized or strengthened.

Subsequently, a conference sub-committee in Columbia and the Program Director finalized plans for the conference to be held December 4-6 and sent out numerous mailings to student members and campus leaders. (Exhibits attached.)

A visit to Winthrop College in Rock Hill in November to share inoutstanding meetings on Race Relations, sponsored by Westminster and Wesley Foundations, brought an opportunity to interpret the student program of the Council and to confer with key students there concerning an intercollegiate program in the Rock Hill area.

It was valuable for the Program Director and student groups from the University of South Carolina and Winthrop to attend the first general conference of SSOC (Southern Student Organizing Committee), held in Atlanta, November 12-14. This group first come together last spring to seek ways whereby students, especially those from predominantly white colleges, might channel their efforts in the area of Civil Rights and other pressing problems of the South. SSOC is seeking its identity and unique role and is now in the process of structuring itself to serve all the colleges of the South as a Southern Student movement for human rights. It seems highly important that already existing councils such as SCSCHR keep abreast of these developments in order to have a voice in determing the role of SSOC in the future. SCSCHR will be represented at the Planning Committee meeting of SSOC in December.

--Elizabeth C. Ledeen (Mrs. T.J.)

SCSCHR REPORT ON THE ENROLLMENT OF NEGRO STUDENTS

IN RECENTLY DESEGREGATED COLLEGES OF THE STATE, First Semester 1964-65

The rate of increase in the number of Negro students enrolling in the recently desegregated colleges of the state this year has been 400 percent, an increase in number from 5 to 25 full time students, with some additional personnel enrolled for special courses. The increase in the actual number of Negro students is disappointing, but it does represent a gradual recognition that these predominantly white colleges are open and will accept q ualified Negro students. It also indicates the continuing need for a major emphasis upon recruiting Negro students for these colleges. It is safe to assume that for some time to come in South Carolina the colleges will make no effort to recruit Negro students. Factual information, interpretation of the existing situation, encouragement and psychological undergirding are greatly needed. For these reasons, the Student Council will continue "Operation Search" during this school year.

In September three new colleges received Negro students for the first time--all of them doing so voluntarily. Winthrop college, a state supported Woman's College, enrolled its first Negro students for residence in the college dormitories; Wofford and Lander colleges, private church-related and a municipally owned and operated college, enrolled one Negro student each.

Prior to enrollment, SCSCHR assisted in specific ways 14 of the 25 students now enrolled. This was done through informal guidance and counseling; through correspondence and/or personal contact with students attending the several colleges; and by student meetings set up especially for the purpose of recruiting. Eight of the new students entering recently integrated colleges had attended one or more of the meetings of the Public Relations Committee. Assistance on possible scholarship sources has been given to a number of prospective students and to guidance counselors in various schools.

It is now the policy of the colleges in the state to give no information on the number of Negro students enrolled, since this is no longer "news" and every attempt is being made to accept these students just as any other new student. This is undoubtedly a good policy, yet there is a need for those who are concerned to move "beyond tokenism" to know facts in order to evaluate the situation and to plan for future enrollment.

At the beginning of the fall term, SCSCHR attempted to get in touch with all the entering Negro students; to follow their enrollment with friendly assistance, and to help in various ways in the first weeks of the school year, when new experiences might be especially difficult. Student members at Winthrop had been in contact with the two new students who were enrolling there for months prior to the actual enrollment, and have been most helpful during these first months. The one additional student at Clemson, with the assistance of Mr. Gantt and friends there, has gotten along very well indeed and is enthusiastic about Clemson . . . The day after registration at USC a get acquainted open house was held by student members of the Council for a number of prospective mem ers of SCSCHR, including all the newly enrolled Negro students. This was done in order to make it possible for student members to get acquainted quickly with the newly enrolled Negro students and to follow their first days at USC with friendly interest. SCSCHR members at Wofford were likewise helpful to the new Negro student enrolled there.

The degree of integration of the Negro students into campus life has been outstanding in a short period of time; one student at Clemson has received top awards for creative work and has been elected to membership in the highest professional honorary society in his school; two students are members of the band--one at Clemson and one at USC; one student at USC is a member of the debate team (a team which has been accorded national awards for many years) and in this capacity represents the University at regional or national debate tournaments; two students have become members of a drama group and appeared in the first production of the year; two students are reporters for the campus newspaper; a number are active participants in the various church student groups; a large group belongs to the International Students Club; three students at USC are members of the choir; at least one student is participating in the intra-mural sports program of the college. This indicates a wide range of student activities and also normal acceptance among fellow-students. The great need at present is for a much larger number of Negro students. It is only as desegregation moves "beyond tokenism" that genuine integration may become a reality. This is the goal we seek.

REPORT OF THE BY-LAWS COMMITTEE

The By-Laws Committee recommends the following changes in the By-Laws of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations.

1. The chief elected officers of the SCCHR be known as President and Vice-President, instead of Chairman and Vice-Chairman.

   This change would effect Article 1V, Section 1; Article V; Article V1; and Article V11, Section 4.

2. Officers of SCCHR shall be elected at the annual membership meeting instead of within 30 days after the meeting.

   ARTICLE V to read as follows:

   The officers of the organization shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary and a Treasurer. They shall be elected at the annual membership meeting or voted upon by mail in such manner as may be provided by the Executive Committee. Officers shall serve for a term of one year starting January 1 and ending December 31, or until their successors have been elected and have assumed office.

   The president-elect may call a meeting of the Executive Committee-elect for the purpose of approving appointments and making plans for the coming year.

   Nominations for officers shall be made by a committee on nominations, from the floor, and/or upon petition of any ten members filed with the Executive Director two weeks before the annual membership meeting.

3. Add out-going President to the Executive Committee.

   ARTICLE V11, Section 1 to read as follows:

   Executive Committee. The affairs of the organization between meetings of the Board of Directors shall be in charge of the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee shall consist of the officers of the organization, the President for the preceding year, and two Board members elected by the Board.

QUARTERLY REPORT

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

TO: Southern Regional Council

FROM: Katherine Jones

QUARTERLY REPORT: September, October, & November, 1964

This past quarter has been similar to the previous one, with the first priority of all Council members given over to political activity. Everyone was a candidate, managaging a campaign, or working actively for a candidate. The entire state went wild in its complete absorption in the campaign. Perhaps the most important election in the state for its long-time effect was that of George Grider of Memphis for Congress, replacing Cliff Davis, old-time conservative Democrat. George Grider is past president of the Memphis Chapter of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations. As with his predecessor, Hunter Lane, Jr. who is now a Memphis City Commissioner, Mr. Grider did not give adequate time to the Chapter, as he soon became involved with political activities. However, he is a good, genuine liberal, and his influence on Memphis from his Congressional seat will be beneficial. According to press releases, and a conversation I had with Russ Sugarman, the Negro vote accounted for 57% of President Johnson's vote in Shelby County. We are pleased about the outcome of a number of other races including the successful bid of A. W. Willis for the Tennessee General Assembly, Ross Bass for Senate, and the return of Richard Fulton to Congress from Nashville. In most of these races it was more a relief that the opponents were not elected, than an all-out approval of the candidates who won. (See Memphis clippings enclosed).

BAXTON BRYANT AS NEW COUNCIL DIRECTOR

One of the positive accomplishments of the quarter was the consideration of a new executive director, and the eventual appointment of Baxton Bryant. Because this activity came during the period when the Council leadership was so politically involved, it did not result in the genuine consideration of Council goals and activities. During Mr. Bryant's visit to Nashville, he met with George Barrett at the airport, prior to George's leaving on a political trip, with President Willis at a Nashville hotel, while he was preparing for a political meeting, and with some of the other members of the Commission at my home later in the day. Vasco Smith from Memphis had planned to be present, but did not come because of a last-minute change in some political activity which held him in Memphis. We are looking forward to Mr. Bryant's presence in Tennessee and believe that he can elicit the sort of support from our own members and from potential allies which we have not had recently. His arrival here and immediate plans remain uncertain. We are especially grateful to Paul Anthony and Southern Regional Council for their leadership and financial support in this quest for staff.

TENNESSEE ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO U. S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

Considerable time and effort has been invested in the meeting which was held in Nashville on November 20. The Council recruited most of the volunteer staff which helped in preparation for the meeting, and in the actual registration and operation. The U. S. Commission sent in one staff member two days before, and Sam Simmons arrived the day previous to the meeting. Mrs. Martha Ragland carried most of the load. There was some positive participation in the planning by Buford Ellington (former Governor of Tennessee) who helped in obtaining lists of members of business associations, and evidently made a good supportive speech at the meeting. Other Tennessee members of the National Citizen's Advisory Committee gave tacit approval, but as far as I know they did not actually assist except for Greenfield Pitts, a Nashville department store executive who appeared on one of the panels. I did not get to hear the addresses or participate in the workshops, but certainly the partication in terms of numbers was rewarding. There were nearly 300 registered, and obviously 400 or more in attendance. There is considerable frustration in business and other circles because of the delay in the Federal Government's promulgation of the rules and regulations under which a number of the titles will operate. We are losing considerable momentum by this delay, and there is a growing concern that the Federal government is using this delay to water-down the implementation. This comes from the business community as well as civil rights leaders. Since the bill was before Congress for 11 months before its passage, and five additional months have elapsed, there appears to be ample reason to question the genuine intention of administration leadership. I might add my personal frustration in being unable to obtain responses to requests addressed to Federal officials who are not reluctant to ask us for immediate assistance.

VISITS TO INDUSTRIAL PLANTS

The one bright spot in assistance from Federal officials has been the work of John Heneghan, Navy Compliance officer, who eventually received some of the complaints I filed in May, 1964. His visit to Hardeman County in West Tennessee and additional visits to firms in middle Tennessee has been most helpful. He has also furnished valuable guidance in relation to some Council activity. His visits to this office resulted in our discvoering some firms which have Federal contracts but were unknown to us. During this quarter, I have visited Waverly, Dickson, Bolivar, and Jackson in regard to job opportunities. Without already established contracts, this takes an inordinate amount of time, but is effective. Hardeman County (Bolivar) is a classic example. The increase of approximately 100 jobs, and the upgrading of Negro employees resulted from the initial visit I made to firms, the filing of complaints, the visit of Mr. Heneghan to the firms, the passage of the Civil Rights Bill, and the unrelenting pressure of a small group of determined Negro citizens. In addition to the industrial jobs has been an increase in Negro employees at Western State Hospital (mental) including the addition of a Negro secretary. The largest firm in Bolivar continues to refuse employment to Negroes(except for 5 out of a work force of nearly 800), and evaded any discussion during my November visit there. They deny any Federal contract involvement, although it is difficult to believe this. Mr. Heneghan is trying to determine this from some additional information forwarded after my last visit.

The increase in job opportunities is having its effect in demonstrating the inadequacy of education in Tennessee schools, and especially in the inadequate Negro schools which are still operating. Their faculties, both Negro and white, are passing on their own ignorance, and local county and city officials are both frequently poorly educated and degenerate.

NASHVILLE

With the installation of a new Director of Education for the combined city-county school system in Nashville, I have hopes for real improvement. He is blunt, frank, and honest. He has exhibited little of the charm and pacification which characterized his predecessors as they covered up the inefficiencies of the system. A delegation from the Nashville Council visited him on October 7 to ask for the complete desegregation of the school system, including extra-curricular activities on school property, plus teacher integration. They found him cordial, and already concerned about the mass transfer of white children out of school districts with Negro schools. From his public appearances, and meetings with his staff, there is a new enthusiasm and hope for both a real integrated school system, and a general raise in the level of public school education. It is certainly needed. One all Negro junior high school in a depressed area of Nashville has a population of 750 children; 600 are reading below grade level.

Under the co-sponsorhsip of ADL and TCHR, Miss Gertrude Noar was in Nashville on November 16 for meetings with Dr. Harris, director of education and his supervisory staff of 35, then with Felix Robb, president of Peabody, and lunch with the Peabody Education faculty. In the afternoon she was at A&I and Fisk. I made the appointments for her Nashville schedule, but did not accompany her to the meetings. She is a former junior high school principal and national authority on education at the junior high level. She is now devoting full time to the incorporation of human relations values into the school curriculum. From my brief report from Mr. Schlactus that evening, it appears that she found receptive audiences. Peabody has not exhibited leadership in any area of human relations in the past, but the quest for additional foundation and federal funds is evidently changing their hearts. There are faculty members at Peabody who are genuinely trobled about the situation there, and it is hoped that they can begin to see a commitment in terms of teacher training.

On October 16, I chaired a middle Tennessee meeting of Negro guidance teachers in Nashville. (Teachers still meet segregated in these area meetings.) There was some realization of the relation of guidance to the community, but most of the teachers did not recognize the changes already in effect as a result of the civil rights law, and were still making little effort to guide young people into industries.

HOUSING

There is increased recognition that housing is the key to the continuing problems of discrimination. We have had several incidents in Nashville of either notices to vacate or refusal to give leases to white tenants who entertain Negroes in their homes. In trying to assist a professional musician who had come to Nashville as a member of the Symphony, I talked to several apartment house landlords. In the urban renewal area where large luxury apartment houses were built on the cleared land, I was told they were open; the rents in these apartments were beyond his budget. Other apartments were not open. Eventually he did find housing at Peabody where he is a part-time music student.

A United Church Women's committee is working on housing here. Nashville is in the process of adopting a new housing code, but until it becomes effective it will not stop the crowding of tenements on small lots with no facility for off street parking, no plya space, etc. North Nashville, in the Fisk area is rapidly increasing in density and slum conditions.

Memphis housing is generally better than in most cities, but rigid lines of segregation prevail. The whites have fled to the suburbs.

MEMPHIS

The Memphis chapter is still inactive. During the fall there was little opportunity to work there because of the political involvement. Just after the election I went to Memphis, having notified them ahead that I would be there, the president was cordial on the telephone, but announced he would be out of town while I was there. There is considerable misunderstanding about the role of TCHR. (See previous report.) Vasco Smith, Jr., is trying to get together some of the white and Negro leadership for informal meetings through his office as vice president of TCHR. Movement in Memphis is still on a token basis. For example, there are 16 Kroger stores, and only one of them has a Negro checker, but the business community considers that "we are making satisfactory progress".

ANNUAL MEETING

Now scheduled for January 28 and 29. Initial plans are in last two Newsletters. Whitney Young will be meeting with some business civic leaders while he is here in order to consider the establishment of a Nashville Urban League. We are setting up the contacts. We hope that there will be representation from Southern Regional Council.

VISITORS

They still arrive from everywhere. Young college age students hitchiking across the country to "find out about the race problem" invaded us this summer. Today, a state Department guest from Southern Rhodesia. Labor union officials come asking for contacts in rural areas. A minister from east Tennessee arrives to inquire about a visitor he has had whom he fears is a communist. Students write and visit for term paper materials.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROBLEMS

This is a continuing problem. The Nominating committee to come up with a slate of officers and board members has not met. No amount of goading on my part works. The annual meeting had to be rescheduled twice because of delays on the part of members who agreed to carry through and did not do so. We have been unable to establish any effective regular communication with other parts of the state, such as clippings or reports. I believe that Mr. Bryant can help on this and I look forward to his arrival.

Respectfully submitted,

Katherine Jones

REPORT OF PROGRAM DIRECTOR

September - November, 1964

The Membership effort, which was reported briefly last quarter has continued, concentrated in the Columbia area. A total of 2,235 names were compiled in a prospect list for the greater Columbia area. During September and October letters of interpretation and invitation and a copy of the publicity brochure, "Reach for Tomorrow", were mailed to this number of persons. Cultivation of this group has continued, through invitations from the Columbia Council on Human Relations and to the annual meeting of SCCHR on November 12.

Six informal coffee hours were held in September in homes of members for a discussion of the work of SCCHR. A member of the staff or an officer of the Council was present at each of these events to give factual information and to help in interpreting the role of the Council at the present time. It is hoped that the coffee hours, which gave evidence of a growing interest in SCCHR and the need for a broader interpretation of the present program, may continue and increase in number. On the basis of the evaluation of the hostesses and the participants this was one of the most effective methods of public relations.

The actual increase in the number of members is not spectacular, but shows a steady gradual growth. Since September 1, 68 new members have been added in Columbia, bringing the present total of adult members in all categories in greater Columbia to 258.

The Columbia Council has continued to offer an outstanding public meeting once a month featuring the following discussions: "The Changing Face of the South," at the September meeting; "The Role of the Church in Human Relations," with the Rev. Henry McKenna of the National Council of Churches as the speaker in October; "The Meaning of the Election" was the theme at the November meeting; The various committees of the Columbia Council in the areas of education, community affairs, economics and job opportunities are being reorganized and it is hoped that these will become more effective working committees in the coming year.

The Columbia Council has maintained close contact with parents and students who desegregated Columbia schools this fall. Two special meetings for this group with parents and students from the schools which these children attend, were held during September. At the end of the first month of school a positive report of progress was given. The transition has been made quite easily. Administrators and teachers have been very helpful. In one Junior High school Negro students have been elected to a class office and one on the football team. Some fellow students in every school have made real efforts to demonstrate their friendship for the new students.

The Committee on the Church and Human Relatio ns of SCCHR has held several meetings during this quarter and has organized a number of sub-committees to carry out the various phases of its program: a speaker's bureau, Youth Work, Young Ministers' Group; Literature Distribution, and Convocations for Churchmen. The convocation committee, using Columbia as a pilot area, is projecting its first meeting for February. Since there is no Council of Churches in South Carolina, it seems that a committee such as this one, sponsored by SCCHR, is continuing to meet a need.

The program of the SC Student Council on Human Relations has been of major importance during this quarter and has consumed a major block of time of the Program Director, who carries special responsibility for the student program of the Council.

September saw two new colleges admitting Negro students for the first time and two formerly all-Negro colleges, Benedict College in Columbia and Claflin College in Orangeburg, admitting one white student each, the first to be enrolled in any of the Negro colleges of the state. Since the whole process of college desegregation has been of major concern to SCSCHR and has constituted one of its important projects, a special report on college desegregation is attached hereto.

A meeting of the Steering Committee held on September 27 projected program plans for the fall semester. The Conference Planning Committee confirmed the plans for a conference to be held at Camp Gravatt, December 4-6 and suggested that this be a genuine working session with Workshops on Panelist Training; Tutorials, Politics, and Poverty Programs in South Carolina. Speakers recommended were Mr. Randolph Blackwell of Southern Christian Leadership Conference and Mr. Joseph Hendricks, Dean of Students at Mercer University. The Citizenship and Projects committee recommended that Tutorials in communities in which colleges were located be urged and that help be given in setting these up. It was also suggested that Panels of Student Speakers be trained to be available for campus, church or community groups. It was hoped that training would be given on Religion and Race and on educational needs in South Ca rolina. The Outreach and Public Relations Committee crystallized plans for the organization of districts and suggested that local groups in the various colleges be organized or strengthened.

Subsequently, a conference sub-committee in Columbia and the Program Director finalized plans for the conference to be held December 4-6 and sent out numerous mailings to student members and campus leaders. (Exhibits attached.)

A visit to Winthrop College in Rock Hill in November to share inoutstanding meetings on Race Relations, sponsored by Westminster and Wesley Foundations, brought an opportunity to interpret the student program of the Council and to confer with key students there concerning an intercollegiate program in the Rock Hill area.

It was valuable for the Program Director and student groups from the University of South Carolina and Winthrop to attend the first general conference of SSOC (Southern Student Organizing Committee), held in Atlanta, November 12-14. This group first come together last spring to seek ways whereby students, especially those from predominantly white colleges, might channel their efforts in the area of Civil Rights and other pressing problems of the South. SSOC is seeking its identity and unique role and is now in the process of structuring itself to serve all the colleges of the South as a Southern Student movement for human rights. It seems highly important that already existing councils such as SCSCHR keep abreast of these developments in order to have a voice in determing the role of SSOC in the future. SCSCHR will be represented at the Planning Committee meeting of SSOC in December.

--Elizabeth C. Ledeen (Mrs. T.J.)

Report of Activities of the Field
Representative of the SCCHR during the months
of September, October, November 1964

The activities of our Field Representative during this period have included the following four projects:

I. Holding monthly and bi-monthly leadership meetings.
II. Assisting with recruitment of trainees for STEP schools.
III. Encouraging progress in community development and better relations.
IV. Interpreting and preparing for the implementation of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

I. Bi-monthly Leadership Meetings

Our Field Representative is still carrying on regular bi-monthly meetings with groups of six neighborhood counties. At these meetings he puts special emphasis on local leadership training. Three of such meetings have been held during this period. One was held Sept. 11, 1964, at St. George, S. C. This meeting was devoted to a study of how to organize a Development Corporation Company.

Dorchester, Colleton and Orangeburg Counties have organized Development Corporations. These Corporations are recommended by the Small Business Administration. They include the opportunities offered in Credit Unions, Cooperatives and Small Business Enterprises. After incorporation with the State, they have the power to carry out all the activities suggested above as well as encouraging self-help and self-reliance. (A copy of the suggested form of certificate of incorporation for a local development company is attached.)

Another bi-monthly meeting was also held at Barnwell, S.C., on Sept. 25, 1964. At this meeting, which involved Aiken, Bamberg, Barnwell, Allendale and Hampton Counties, special emphasis was placed on the following topics:

1. What we should know about Social Security.
2. How to organize a Development Corporation Company.

A well organized development corporation company has already started in Bamberg County. The progress of this company was discussed by leaders from Bamberg County.

A third bi-monthly meeting was held at Pageland, S.C., on October 9, 1964. This meeting included Chester, Chesterfield, Kershaw, Lancaster, Marlboro and Darlington Counties. The meeting was held in the plant of the Chesterfield Garment Corporation. This Corporation is the result of a Development Cooperation of Negroes assisted by the white local community and the Federal Government through the ARA. This company is now employing 30 power-machine operators and producing house-coat garments under the supervision ofa near-by large white garment factory. The meeting here was an inspiration for all who attended from other counties.

II. Recruitment of Trainees for STEP Schools

The managers of Employment Offices throughout the State are still requesting our Field Representative to furnish aid in recruiting trainees for STEP schools. He has been called for such service to Florence, Abbeville, Greenville, and Chesterfield, S.C., during this period.

There are now a total of 35 STEP schools in our State with an enrollment of over 3,000. He is expected to continue this service even when recruiting of disadvantaged youth ages 16-21 begins.

An article appeared in the August 1964 issue of The Employment Service Review, published by the Department of Labor, entitled "South Carolina Gets In STEP" by Paul D. Jarvis. This article appears on pages 36 and 37. The following statement is made on page 37: "Various groups in the community help reach those in need of training. These were the South Carolina Council on Human Relations ... and members of the Chamber of Commerce."

III. Community Development and Better Relation Progress

Mr. James has been able to encourage the people of St. George to begin the foundation of a community center. The people have accepted the responsibility for organizing a community activities center that will emphasize the following services:

a. Day care for small children with pre-school training opportunities.
b. A community health clinic including dental service.
c. A study hall and recreation rooms for school children.
d. Adult night school and home-making training.

The community has already secured a location for these activities. The area is a block long and one-half block wide. A home for the leaders has already been built and furnished. There is a nine room abandoned school building on the front of this area. This is being repaired so it can be used for the activities planned above. A swimming pool has already been constructed and can be used during the summer months.

Dorchester County, of which St. George is the county seat, is one of the two counties to which Negro Supervisors of FHA have been assigned this year. This makes a total of six Negro assistant supervisors in our State.

Mr. James has also been reliably informed that the extension service of S. C. is reorganizing on a completely integrated basis. All county agents will be required to work with all rural people in their areas without regard to color.

IV. Interpretation of the Anti-Poverty Bill

Our Field Representative has made a careful study of the opportunities and requirements of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. He has made a special effort to explain this Act to all of the people who attend the bi-monthly neighborhood county meetings. He has been called to the following places for interpretation addresses on this Act.

Aiken -- by the local Council on Human Relations
Greenville -- by the local Council on Human Relations
Bethune -- by the Kershaw County Community Development Association
North Charleston -- by the local NAACP mass meeting
Charleston -- by the bi-racial advisory committee for community improvement
Columbia -- by the S. C. Youth Conference of the NAACP.
Camp Gravatt -- by the annual conference of the S. C. Student Council on Human Relations.

He is also beginning to receive calls from the county chairman of the S. C. Voter Education project. His services have been strongly recommended by the Field Director of the V.E.P. (See copy of letter sent to county chairman by Field Director of V.E.P. attached).

Dear County Chairmen:

All of you are aware of the passage of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, popularly known as the Anti-Poverty Bill. Some of you are already involved in the implementation of key provisions of this program, and others have asked for additional information. The VEP is concerned primarily with the registration of voters, but as its name implies it is also concerned with their political education. Whether they are aware of it or not, Negro citizens of every financial standing are involved in the anti-poverty program. The results of this program will be of benefit to the Negro for many years to come, but we will not obtain the maximum benefit unless we act. You as a community leader must take responsibility for putting this program before the people in your county.

Senator Olin Johnston has been kind enough to provide the state VEP office with 50 copies of the Economic Opportunity Act. I am sending one of these to each of you together with a short summary of the Act. Read and re-read this literature. The program is a complicated one and cannot be understood without hard study. If you have any questions, I will try to be of assistance. I would strongly recommend that you contact Mr. L.S. James, 1330 Laurel Street, Columbia, South Carolina, for detailed information. His number is AL6-8808, and he knows more about the program than any man in South Carolina. He will be glad to speak to your county organization, just let him know of your interest.

Sincerely,

Richard Miles

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

REPORT OF PROJECT DIRECTOR

SEPTEMBER - NOVEMBER, 1964

Young Ministers' Discussion Group

As part of the Columbia Council membership drive and of the outreach of the standing committee on "The Church and Human Relations", a young ministers' group was organized, meeting every other week with about fifteen being reached by the group. So far as is known it is the first interracial discussion group meeting regularly for clergy of all denominations and faiths. The interracial nature of the group naturally gave rise to discussion on race and its implications in the church in the light of Will Campbell's book, Race and the Renewal of the Church.

Visits to Communities in the Interest of Possible New Local Councils

Field visits were made during this period to Orangeburg, Sumter, Clemson, Anderson, Due West, Greenwood, and Charleston. "Closed" situations made possible only individual visits in Orangeburg and assisting efforts to the small local council in Sumter.

In the Clemson-Seneca area where previous interracial groups had been started and later been discontinued, several contacts were made with individuals who were still interested in such groups and who might in due course be part of a nucleus to start a permanent group. It seemed however, that it would take some time for this deeper foundation to be developed, since the local thinking that had gone into these earlier efforts had been largely along the line of "meeting crises or emergency needs."

In Anderson there seemed to be no major developments, except that a mayor's bi-racial committee that had been appointed some time back, again to cope with crises, had not been functioning recently.

Visits in Due West, seat of an A. R. Presbyterian college and seminary, were made to the Negro school principal, several college and seminary faculty members, and three of the ministers in the county. The project director addressed the seminary faculty and student body during the visit, presenting the work of the South Carolina Council. These contacts produced some interest and individual memberships, all of which accentuates the possibilities of eventually developing an Abbeville County council.

In Greenwood a functioning Chamber of Commerce-appointed bi-racial citizens' committee has been working at the problems arising from last summer's Civil Rights Act, and has what might be called a somewhat progressive climate. Industry in this area seems to be leading the way, but how much real progress in race relations this kind of committee can accomplish remains to be seen. The chairman of the committee reported that much of his time and effort had gone into tracking down rumors and dispelling fears during last summer's crisis period.

In Charleston several capable people are interested in starting a local human relations council, and follow-up from the visits made on this trip produced enough response to schedule a preliminary discussion meeting to study the formation of a local council in January. This seems the most promising situation in terms of actually organizing a new council. In order to assist groups planning to start new councils some basic materials were compiled and mimeographed (see attachment).

Directories of Ministers and Religious Leaders in South Carolina

In order to develop contacts already existing and to expand efforts to enlist and awaken churches and churchmen of the state to action in matters of social justice and civil rights as well as the inherent responsibility of the church, a mailing list of major denominational leaders in South Carolina was secured, as well as up-to-date listings of ministers in the Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran, and Presbyterian churches. At least one use of these directories will be that of circularizing each clergyman with pertinent literature regarding race and human relations, offering the S.C. Council as a channel of action for concerned churchmen.

Monthly S.C.C.H.R. Review Newsletter

Three issues of the Review were mailed out in this period, highlighting the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, the annual meeting and dinner of the S. C. Council, and announcement of the Student Council conference. With one issue, a form for reporting implementation of public accommodations use by Negroes was included. Resulting from this, a call for further volunteers for both public facilities use and equal employment opportunities was made at the annual meeting. A questionnaire for the staff, executive committee, and other local council leaders, regarding the Review has been prepared to secure some reactions and concensus for improvement of the newsletter and more explicit policy guidelines.

Preliminary Work on a Leadership Training Project

Spadework on a grass-roots leadership training project which might be sponsored by the S. C. Council has been done, aiming at two groups: 1. Community leaders, business, professional and others, desiring to serve as volunteers in community action programs and to acquire more skills in interpersonal and intergroup situations. 2. Neighborhood block leaders, leaders with native ability, and other key indigenous leaders, who desire leadership training in basic organizational skills, and procedures and techniques in democratic group process. It was felt that the success of E.O.A. community action and other programs of self-help would stand or fall on the quality of local leadership developed. Hence the priority on such a project as this. Further work will depend on a project like this being able to qualify for approval and funding with the Office of Economic Opportunity in Washington and the state coordinator's office.

George A. Bowdler

Report of Activities of the Field
Representative of the SCCHR during the months
of September, October, November 1964

The activities of our Field Representative during this period have included the following four projects:

I. Holding monthly and bi-monthly leadership meetings.
II. Assisting with recruitment of trainees for STEP schools.
III. Encouraging progress in community development and better relations.
IV. Interpreting and preparing for the implementation of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

I. Bi-monthly Leadership Meetings

Our Field Representative is still carrying on regular bi-monthly meetings with groups of six neighborhood counties. At these meetings he puts special emphasis on local leadership training. Three of such meetings have been held during this period. One was held Sept. 11, 1964, at St. George, S. C. This meeting was devoted to a study of how to organize a Development Corporation Company.

Dorchester, Colleton and Orangeburg Counties have organized Development Corporations. These Corporations are recommended by the Small Business Administration. They include the opportunities offered in Credit Unions, Cooperatives and Small Business Enterprises. After incorporation with the State, they have the power to carry out all the activities suggested above as well as encouraging self-help and self-reliance. (A copy of the suggested form of certificate of incorporation for a local development company is attached.)

Another bi-monthly meeting was also held at Barnwell, S.C., on Sept. 25, 1964. At this meeting, which involved Aiken, Bamberg, Barnwell, Allendale and Hampton Counties, special emphasis was placed on the following topics:

1. What we should know about Social Security.
2. How to organize a Development Corporation Company.

A well organized development corporation company has already started in Bamberg County. The progress of this company was discussed by leaders from Bamberg County.

A third bi-monthly meeting was held at Pageland, S.C., on October 9, 1964. This meeting included Chester, Chesterfield, Kershaw, Lancaster, Marlboro and Darlington Counties. The meeting was held in the plant of the Chesterfield Garment Corporation. This Corporation is the result of a Development Cooperation of Negroes assisted by the white local community and the Federal Government through the ARA. This company is now employing 30 power-machine operators and producing house-coat garments under the supervision of a near-by large white garment factory. The meeting here was an inspiration for all who attended from other counties.

II. Recruitment of Trainees for STEP Schools

The managers of Employment Offices throughout the State are still requesting our Field Representative to furnish aid in recruiting trainees for STEP schools. He has been called for such service to Florence, Abbeville, Greenville, and Chesterfield, S.C., during this period.

There are now a total of 35 STEP schools in our State with an enrollment of over 3,000. He is expected to continue this service even when recruiting of disadvantaged youth ages 16-21 begins.

An article appeared in the August 1964 issue of The Employment Service Review, published by the Department of Labor, entitled "South Carolina Gets In STEP" by Paul D. Jarvis. This article appears on pages 36 and 37. The following statement is made on page 37: "Various groups in the community help reach those in need of training. These were the South Carolina Council on Human Relations ... and members of the Chamber of Commerce."

III. Community Development and Better Relation Progress

Mr. James has been able to encourage the people of St. George to begin the foundation of a community center. The people have accepted the responsibility for organizing a community activities center that will emphasize the following services:

a. Day care for small children with pre-school training opportunities.
b. A community health clinic including dental service.
c. A study hall and recreation rooms for school children.
d. Adult night school and home-making training.

The community has already secured a location for these activities. The area is a block long and one-half block wide. A home for the leaders has already been built and furnished. There is a nine room abandoned school building on the front of this area. This is being repaired so it can be used for the activities planned above. A swimming pool has already been constructed and can be used during the summer months.

Dorchester County, of which St. George is the county seat, is one of the two counties to which Negro Supervisors of FHA have been assigned this year. This makes a total of six Negro assistant supervisors in our State.

Mr. James has also been reliably informed that the extension service of S. C. is reorganizing on a completely integrated basis. All county agents will be required to work with all rural people in their areas without regard to color.

IV. Interpretation of the Anti-Poverty Bill

Our Field Representative has made a careful study of the opportunities and requirements of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. He has made a special effort to explain this Act to all of the people who attend the bi-monthly neighborhood county meetings. He has been called to the following places for interpretation addresses on this Act.

Aiken -- by the local Council on Human Relations
Greenville -- by the local Council on Human Relations
Bethume -- by the Kershaw County Community Development Association
North Charleston -- by the local NAACP mass meeting
Charleston -- by the bi-racial advisory committee for community improvement
Columbia -- by the S. C. Youth Conference of the NAACP.
Camp Gravatt -- by the annual conference of the S. C. Student Council on Human Relations.

He is also beginning to receive calls from the county chairman of the S. C. Voter Education project. His services have been strongly recommended by the Field Director of the V.E.P. (See copy of letter sent to county chairman by Field Director of V.E.P. attached).

I. WHAT IS ONE CONSTRUCTIVE CHANNEL FOR MEETING TODAY'S CHALLENGE IN S.C.?

The South Carolina Council on Human Relations, an interracial organization working for a better South Carolina since 1919.

The first organization, brought about largely through the efforts of religious leadership in South Carolina and notably that of the late Bishop Finlay of the Upper Diocese of the Episcopal Church, was known as the Commission on Interracial Co-operation. Later this group became the South Carolina Division of the Southern Regional Council, and in 1954 the S. C. Council on Human Relations. The Council is not an affiliate of the Southern Regional Council, although the two groups work co-operatively.

The S. C. Council on Human Relations serves as a channel for bi-racial communication in order that through understanding and constructive effort solutions to pressing problems of the day might be sought.

II. HOW DOES THE S.C.COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS CONTRIBUTE TO SEEKING SOLUTIONS?

By providing speakers and consultants, methods and materials, "seeing-eye", clearing house, and other program services.

By assisting local council and other groups in bettering community relations and in promoting community development, urban and rural.

By working for equal vocational and political opportunities for all citizens of the state, and urging full participation of all persons in the responsibilities of citizenship.

By encouraging informed participation in producing educational progress at local and state levels.

III. WHAT ARE THE PRESENT AREAS OF WORK OF THE COUNCIL?

1. Education and the Schools
2. Economic Development and Employment.
3. Community Relations and Development
4. The Church and Human Relations
5. Civic and Political Participation and Education
6. Recruitment and Training of Leadership
7. High School and College Students

IV. HOW DOES THE COUNCIL SEEK TO MEET THE NEEDS OF THE HOUR?

It provides a channel for constructive communication through local Councils on Human Relations, conferences, workshops, and committees.

It serves local Councils on Human Relations in Aiken, Beaufort, Cheraw, Columbia, Greenville, Hampton County, Jasper County, Rock Hill, and Sumter; and works with concerned individuals in other communities attempting to develop local councils and/or requesting program services.

It provides state-wide workshops, conferences, and membership meetings which focus upon: Leadership and Program Building, Education, Economic Growth and Job Opportunities, Community Development, Non-Violence, and Religion and Human Relations.

It brings outstanding speakers and leaders to South Carolina for Council programs and for the use of other groups, such as the Rev. Heslip Lee, executive director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, Dr. Samuel M. Proctor, former Deputy Director of the Peace Corps, and others.

It gathers data, prepares and distributes material to members and friends of the South Carolina Council as well as to local Councils and other interested groups.

It publishes the monthly SCCHR Review, dealing with progress and problems in Human Relations, distributed to members and others.

It urges attendance of all citizens at such events as the Congressional hearings held annually in Columbia and other public meetings, which deal with pressing problems of the state.

Alerts Negro citizens in various communities to Federal programs developing in local communities such as the Rural Area Development (RAD), the Area Redevelopment Administration (ARA), the Manpower Development and Training Act (MDTA), the Special Training for Economic Progress (STEP), and the Economic Opportunity Act (EOA).

It develops and sponsor s a Student Program in which students from 20 colleges and two theological seminaries have participated and which is now organized as the South Carolina Students Council on Human Relations.

V. HOW IS THE SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL FINANCED?

The S.C.C.H.R. is a non-profit, tax-exempt private organization, which is supported by individual memberships and contributions by some 1,000 South Carolinians. Recently Field Foundation grants have made possible an expanding program for the Council. These grants and other grants-in-aid are contingent upon a strong and growing support within South Carolina.

A Few Guidelines for Councils on Human Relations

1. The group is biracial and interfaith. It is no collection of persons of one group working for or concerned with others. Rather it is genuinely representative of all of the people concerned with the problems which all share.

2. A major program emphasis of a Council is education in the broadest sense of that term.

(a) This process of education begins with the members of the Council itself, getting to know each other and bringing to a central Council the particular information and insights from each group in the community. The Council constantly works to enlarge its membership to give an increasing number of people the opportunity of sharing the experience of working in a democratic group.

(b) Ideally this process reaches beyond Council members to any persons of good intent within the community, offering through literature, conferences, public meetings, and cooperation with other groups an opportunity for an ever increasing number of persons to share in the intellectual and emotional processes which are necessary for understanding.

(c) The process includes interpreting to the larger community the grievances of a minority or the reasons for unpopular actions or demands.

(d) Where facilities permit the process includes the collection and dissemination of factual and interpretive information to correct misunderstandings and misinterpretations.

3. Frequently, and properly, disadvantaged minorities will take the responsibility for initiating change. Where this occurs, unique opportunities are presented to a Council on Human Relations to:

(a) Interpret the situation in its broadest perspective, indicating the ways in which the majority shares in the problem and benefits in the solution;

(b) Offer the skills of its members in resolving the conflict of crisis which may arise.

4. Whether change comes at the initiative of the minority, or through the leadership and persuasion of a Council on Human Relations, or from other community elements, a primary role of the Council is securing the practical implementation of change, seeing that desirable change comes, is understood, remains and grows.

5. A Council on Human Relations is a non-partisan non-political body. It may educate the community concerning legislation but does not lobby. It never supports or rejects a candidate.

6. The Council on Human Relations involves itself deeply in the life of the total community, expressing concern for all phases of community life, including such specifics as employment, education, health, housing, recreation, and the like. It would frequently emphasize the problems of minorities as they relate to these areas.

Finally, a Council would return to the point of its origin and purpose, a group representative of and concerned with all of the community: people of good will dedicated to establishing the decent and good society.

FOR RELEASE: Wed., Dec. 9, 1964

Call: Frances Pauley

The Georgia Council on Human Relations today announced that it would participate in the first public meeting of the Georgia Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights to be held in Augusta on Friday, December 11 in the City-County Municipal Building.

Mr. Joseph Hendricks of Macon, President of the Georgia Council who will represent the organization at the meeting, said today:

"We in the Georgia Council regard this first open meeting of the Georgia Advisory Committee as a significant event. For it will give private citizens and organizations, as well as public officials, an opportunity to speak their minds on the civil rights law: - to answer questions about it, to dispel misapprehensions about it, to report on how it is working or not working, to find out what more needs to be done to make this period of transition in Georgia smooth and trouble-free. We salute the Advisory Committee for giving this opportunity to the people of Georgia.

"For our own part, the Georgia Council will continue to work not merely for acquiescence with the civil rights law, but for a new spirit of understanding and good will among all Georgians of both races and all religions. Certainly, this new spirit - which we are reminded in this Christmas season is not new at all - can only be achieved under the rule of law which gives justice and equality to all."

to
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
Sept. - Oct. - Nov. - 1964

The last three months have been of great interest in the Georgia Council on Human Relations.

As usual there are all sorts of conflicting patterns throughout the state. The tremendous feeling of freedom that came to Negroes and whites with the passage of the Civil Rights Act, was marred by the heated political campaign where race seemed to be the predominant issue. Activity on the part of members was centered in voting and in many places getting out the votes for Negro candidates. The Council, of course, could not enter into political campaigns. None of the councils have worked as a group in registration. We look forward to the day when more councils will enter into this program activity, when voter registration will cease to be 'Negro' and 'white' and our council is working for the total good of the community.

Our newly elected executive committee in discussing program for the coming year brought out some of these kinds of ideas. It was an encouraging meeting. Joe Hendricks is giving sound leadership. He enjoyed the SRC annual meeting and we look forward to a good year under his guidance.

The end of the fiscal year always means much time spent in gathering the annual reports and attending to the business of the organization. The annual report as well as the quarterly financial report is attached. The new budget is $50,000. This is a little frightening considering how difficult it is to raise money in Georgia. But we believe it is a realistic budget. We need more than that to do the necessary expansion.

The membership is growing. We have 30 new members this quarter and two new councils to report. It is too early for memberships from these groups to have been received. The Statesboro group voted in October and the LaGrange group in November, to become affiliates of the Georgia Council.

Statesboro is an interesting group, a fairly good cross section of the community. It is said that this is the first group to hold an interracial meeting in the city. With the college there, we have a chance to attract some good leadership. We have found some courageous Negro leaders.

LaGrange is a strange town, a mill town, under the complete domination of the Callaway family. However, they are seeing the necessity for change and are hiring Negroes in the mills. (They have government contracts). Although the Callaways will probably not participate in the group, we believe they will allow it to exist. The town has lived so long with a paternalistic society it will be difficult to have a particularly active program at this time. There is no active Negro group in this town. There is a feeble Voters League and talk of organizing a NAACP. The League of Women Voters failed here.

The NAACP needs state leadership in LaGrange as in many places in Georgia. In many towns the Negroes want help and hesitate to take any from our Council. We hope the NAACP will soon hire a state organizer. We also hope that Mr. Holmes will soon be well and back with us. His illness this fall has been a great loss to our group.

Mrs. Winifred Falls is working in Covington. Mrs. Falls, after a summer of working for open schools in Mississippi, joined our staff October 1. Negroes in Covington feel a hesitancy to push ahead with the Council. There are few independent business men and women and they are not willing to include the lower income Negroes in their activities. They want Negro leadership to help in working with a Negro group. This is needed, but experience has confirmed our ideas that it is essential to form more interracial groups. The job simply cannot be done separately. It will take time and patience and persuasion.

We have made a first trip into Thomasville this fall. The town seems ready for a Council. We found concerned and reasonable political and religious leadership. Thomasville has had an effective biracial committee for some time. There is no harsh resistance as in Albany or Americus.

We are still unable to find white people in Albany to join our council there. We have decided to make no further effort to invite whites until we can find a meeting place on the white side. We are working in employment, both on the military bases and in the industries. We have had some good results.

Americus is more hopeful, not of having an organized council, that will be some time in the future. A good job can be done in this troubled community. There is a handful of whites who are working desperately to improve the situation. We are helping them and keeping in close touch with the four children in the white school. Beatings by police are still the order of the day. There should be some non-violent method of replacing the sheriff.

Perry is the town that concerns us the most at the moment. I will not go into detail since I have talked with you in person about this solidly segregated town. Plans are under way to desegregate the county school system -- but only by having tokenism in Warner Robins and nothing in Perry. Worse than that, there is a plan led by the most prominent businessmen in town to establish private schools. We hope we will get some Federal help as well as help from the Legal Defense Fund and the Friends Service Committee in this locality.

One disturbing problem that our executive committee is facing is how we might improve communication and cooperation with the Atlanta Council. We would like to be of help in the situation that has developed over the publication of their plans for activities in the field of housing. Many of our members live in the Druid Hills area and feel at a loss to combat the well organized opposition of those who oppose open occupancy and those who will spread panic for their own financial benefit.

Much time has been spent this quarter in working with other organizations. It seems our office has become a center for clearing notices of meetings and helping with activities for the Georgia Committee of the Civil Rights Commission, the American Civil Liberties Union as well as the local NAIRO group. This has actually been too time consuming for the staff and will have to be curtailed to some extent. However, we are exceedingly happy to see these groups becoming more active and hope they will spread their influence out over the state rather than adding another frustrated organization that is interested only in metropolitan Atlanta.

The Civil Rights Committee will have its first open meeting on Friday December 11 in Augusta. The News Release is attached. Our president will speak at the hearing. (Almost every member of the committee is an active member of the Council). We hope this meeting will have good news coverage and great value.

Immediately after the signing of the Civil Rights Act, there was testing over at least the major towns of the state. Then there was a calm as people turned their attention to elections. Now we are disturbed that more testing and more use of open facilities is not taking place. We hope that many of our councils well see this as a needed program and make more active plans to enjoy the new Freedoms. The one facility that seems to really be being used is the neighborhood movie. All over the state theaters are not only open but being enjoyed. Too long the dirty building with poor pictures have been the only place available for this type of inexpensive entertainment.

We are forming some definite ideas about the use of the Mayor's biracial committee in the state. We hope to get some of these ideas in writing and in a form that might be helpful to these bodies. We also plan to invite these groups (and they exist in many towns now) to our Spring Conference which will be held (at long last) in the Continuing Education Center at the University of Georgia. The Center has the facilities for us to have a large meeting with different interest groups.

We hope also to have our Georgia Students meeting with us at this time. The organization and affiliation of Georgia Students for Human Rights was a major event of the fall. Over 60 representatives from 17 colleges were present at the conference. Local council leaders from Rome, Macon, Albany and Augusta were present with students from these towns.

We plan to have our Spring Board meeting at Callaway Gardens!! Or should we wait until we can all go swimming!!

Our initial effort with "Women for Progress" has reached an end. Mrs. Hamilton's work is over. 3000 women from over 70 towns signed the statement which has been given to the Governor. The group decided not to form a new organization but to work through other groups and to stand ready to unite on individual projects. They expressed the desire to stay in communication with each other, swapping techniques and program ideas.

And so the work moves along. Please point out where you think we could cut the unnecessary work and increase the essential. We need an overall look at ourselves...The problem is as always -- too little time and money for too large a job...With more councils we will have to increase our mailing because we cannot increase our field work without either a new field person or a new office manager.

GIVE US ADVICE.

We have examined the balance sheet of the Georgia Council on Human Relations as of September 30, 1964, and the related statements of operations for the period October 1, 1963 through September 30, 1964. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests of internal control and of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion, the accompanying balance sheet and statements of operations present fairly the financial position of the Georgia Council on Human Relations at September 30, 1964, and the results of its transactions for the period then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles for religious and educational organizations and applied on a basis consistent with those of preceding periods.

Arkansas Council on Human Relations
Narrative Report
October-December, 1964

I. Significant Events

A. In the Schools.

1. The Arkansas Gazette reported "about 51 Negro students" in Arkansas' six colleges and university. It reported, "The colleges do not keep records by race and, except for the declaration that they are desegregated, they furnish little information." A & M College, Monticello, reports no Negro students.

2. The Arkansas Education Association for whites and Arkansas Teachers Association for Negroes decided "several months ago" not to merge but to work together through a joint committee, Hal Robbins, white, former principal at Conway, who has been director of the joint committee since July, reported in a speech, November 16, to the State Department of Education. "We are not designed to promote integration or to resist integration. We are here to offer better educational opportunities to all children, to remove disparities that exist between the white and Negro system."

3. The school board at North Little Rock has named a Citizens Advisory Committee of 74 including seven Negroes. This seems to have been prompted by the failure of the Board's request for a millage increase for the schools.

4. The University of Arkansas has had a great ferment over academic freedom of speech occasioned by the appearance on November 19 at the Wesley Foundation (Methodist) of an official for cultural relations of the Bulgarian Legation in Washington, after the University refused to permit him to speak at the invitation of the Foreign Relations Club of the University.

Governor Faubus and Bishop Paul Galloway of the Methodist Church supported the University. Students, student organizations, Senator Fulbright, a strong segment of the faculty supported Rev. James Loudermilk, Director of the Wesley Foundation. Committees of faculty and students are still "out" over the issues. (Rev. Loudermilk was almost fired last year because of his support for integration of housing on the campus. A strong faction at Central Methodist Church led by Coach Broyles of the University sought to oust him.)

B. In Organizations.

1. On October 15 the office of the regional office of the Conference of Christians and Jews was officially opened in the Tower Building, Third and Center Streets, Little Rock. William Pharr is the Executive Secretary.

2. As an aftermath of the meetings on housing in Little Rock late September and early October the monthly luncheon of ministers at Little Rock on October 20 heard Dowell Naylor, Executive of the Housing Authority and the Steering Committee of the Conference on Religion and Race conferred with School Superintendent Parsons and school board member, Warren Bass, on November 3 on the relation of school integration and housing.

3. The Pine Bluff Junior Chamber of Commerce had a public debate on the Civil Rights Act of 1964 between Medford Evans of the Citizens Council, Jackson, Mississippi, and Attorney Winslow Drummond of Little Rock on October 22.

4. Panel of Americans in Little Rock received news and magazine notice during December. The December issue of Ladies' Home Journal has a story on the movement beginning in Kansas City. It gives almost a full page to the Little Rock unit. The Arkansas Gazette on December 27, Sunday, gave a full page spread to this program in Little Rock headed by Mrs. Sara Murphy. Units are functioning also in Fort Smith, initiated by leaders of the Fort Smith Council on Human Relations.

C. In Communities.

1. On November 9 the annual honors luncheon for senior members of the high school honor societies of Little Rock was held for seniors of all high schools by the city's Chamber of Commerce. Congressman Wilbur Mills was the speaker. All schools without regard to "race, religion, national origin" were cordially included.

2. On October 21 news reports indicated the Metroplan Commission for Pulaski County would be enlarged by addition of Negro members to each commission of the constituant governmental units and that Little Rock's commission then would serve as the citizen's committee for the Housing Authority to meet the federal requirement for citizen participation in housing programs.

D. In the Courts.

1. After two delays a "hearing on the merits of the case" has been set for January 5 on the complaints of five Negro students to the Little Rock School District. The case is a full-scale attack on the operations of the schools, charging that the board is operating a segregated system still, that employees are assigned by race, and that the Arkansas Pupil Assignment Law is being used to preserve segregation. On November 18 John Walker, one attorney for the plaintiffs, submitted a 32 question interragatory to the school board. These questions make clear that the issue is whether the Little Rock School Board can use the Arkansas Placement Law as a "plan" to effectuate a non-discriminatory system.

2. A new school desegregation suit, the sixth ever filed in Arkansas, was filed October 15 by the parents of six Negro children in El Dorado. It asks the court to enjoin the school board from assigning students, teachers or principals on the basis of race and to require the board to submit a plan for reorganization of the school system on a "unitary, non-racial basis."

3. A suit and countersuit have been filed to determine winner in the Dollarway School election September 29. Mr. Arthur H. Miller, professor at A.M.& N. College, received 602 votes to incumbant Bob Bryant's 542 according to the certified results.

4. Most of the 170 sit-in cases pending in municipal and circuit courts of Arkansas have been dismissed since the ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court, December 14. On request of Attorney George Howard, State President of the NAACP, 150 cases in Jefferson County Circuit Court were dismissed. At an unknown date the six cases pending in the municipal Court in Little Rock were dismissed.

On December 15, Circuit Judge William J. Kirby, Pulaski County, refused to dismiss the 13 cases before him until he receives the mandate from the U.S. Supreme Court. Attorney General Bruce Bennett announced on December 15 that he would seek a rehearing of the cases before the Arkansas Supreme Court and that "as a courtesy" he would confer with Judge Kirby before seeking a rehearing.

E. In Politics.

1. Mr. Sutton, on leave from ACHR for October, worked energetically in the campaign for a large vote by Negroes, especially for Amendment #54, permanent registration. SRC's special election report summarizes, thus: "The Arkansas voter-drive increase in excess of normal Negro registration from 1962 to 1964 was 19,200. Without this extra increase, Democrats would not have carried the state." Mr. Sutton thinks Governor Faubus went back into office on the coat tails of the national Democratic ticket. Faubus forces circulated the misinformation that if a voter voted for Johnson he would have to vote for Faubus.

The Democratic National Committee, against the disapproval of local Negro citizens, sent one former Arkansas Negro, Harry Bass, to work in Arkansas for the Democratic candidates "all the way." He added to confusion over split tickets. Mr. Sutton thinks that with all this Faubus received no more than 20,000 Negro votes.

2. Rockefeller's press aid, John L. Ward, pointed out that his candidate's some 272,000 votes would have been a landslide victory in 1960 when the total number of voters was only 422,000. More than 600,000 voted in 1964.

3. At Little Rock on October 27 Mrs. L. B. Johnson and her entourage attracted about 5000 mildly enthusiastic citizens. The affair at all levels, except platform, was thoroughly integrated.

4. Attorney General Bruce Bennett said December 15 that he had conferred with Governor Faubus about setting up a fund to pay legal expenses of small business men incurred because of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. "If the federal government is going to furnish legal counsel for one side, we should do something for our people who cannot help themselves."

F. In Federal Agencies.

1. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights through the Arkansas Advisory Committee sponsored an informational meeting of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, on December 7 at Hotel Marion. Almost six hundred persons from across the state at 10 a.m. heard Mr. Brooks Hays and other platform speakers calling for affirmative response to the law. At least half that number stayed through afternoon workshops to hear the closing address by Leslie Dunbar of SRC at 4 p.m.

As secretary of the Advisory Committee, Ruth Arnold, of ACHR staff, did much of the detail work in promotion of this workshop. A breakdown of attendance by invited groups - schoolmen, motel and restaurant owners, etc. - is not yet available.

2. The U.S. Civil Rights Commission through the Arkansas Advisory Committee has done a sampling of nine cities as to compliance with the Civil Rights Act, Title II. Ruth Arnold of ACHR staff, as Secretary of SAC, did the survey in seven cities. A report has not been compiled.

3. Mr. John Macy, Chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, pursuant to the recommendations in 1963 of the Federal Fund-Raising Advisory Council composed of the presidents of the major voluntary agencies, issued on December 16 a "Nondiscriminatory Standard for the Federal Fund Raising Program." This standard revises elegibility requirements for fund-raising in the federal service "so as to limit solicitation privileges to those voluntary agencies which follow a policy and practice of non-discrimination." The United Fund of Little Rock is already making a study of the meaning of this new requirement.

II. Activities of ACHR Related to Events

A. In Schools.

1. ACHR's board, in recognition of the anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, December 10, instituted a contest for best essays published in Arkansas high school newspapers on the general theme of human rights, with prizes of fifty and twenty-five dollar bonds. Essays to be submitted by January 5, 1965.

2. ACHR has reported complaints of Pulaski County School District in regard to unredressed harassment and violence by white students of Negro students at Fuller schools, south of Little Rock. These have been relayed to HEW, the Attorney General, and the Civil Rights Commission after conferences with the County School Superintendent and the U.S. District Attorney in Little Rock.

B. In Organizations.

1. ACHR continued as an adjunct to the Little Rock Committee on International Hospitality. Visitors from Ceylon, Poland, U.S.I.A. office, the Phillipines and Pakiston came for conferences and materials.

2. As a result of ACHR's part in the hassle over housing, monthly meetings have been held in November and December with the staff of the Housing Authority, the Urban League, the NAACP, and Council on Community Affairs.

3. The directors help arrange meetings for the ministers' luncheon group and the Steering Committee of the Little Rock Conference on Religion and Race with staff members of the Housing Authority and of the Little Rock schools to discuss segregated housing patterns in the city.

3. Affiliates of ACHR at North Little Rock, Conway, Fort Smith had effective program meetings during the quarter. Vice President Walter Clancy and the directors were involved in the programs at all these councils. Conway and North Little Rock are focussing on school segregation. Fort Smith has established committees in several areas of concern.

4. A committee to establish a Little Rock affiliate council met on December 10 and made plans to establish working committees.

5. On October 15 with 85 participants the Fayetteville Community Relations Association held its annual meeting and workshop around the theme, "Residential Problems of Fayetteville Negro Citizens." Guest speakers were Mr. Wagner Jackson of Philadelphia and Mr. Samuel Hudson of Fort Worth, both intergroup relations officials for HHFA.

6. With assistance from Father Walter Clancy of ACHR Board and Mr. Kelly of the Little Rock Catholic Interracial Council, Fort Smith Catholics formed a CIC with twenty active members in November.

C. In Communities.

1. ACHR was involved in October and November with some other human rights groups in Little Rock in current aspects of programs of the Housing Authority. (See attached news story.)

After Mr. Duncan's investigation of the University Park Project and report back to his Washington office Mr. Weaver wrote ACHR delineating his understanding of the changed posture of Little Rock Housing Authority. Fundamentally no change has been made. Two Negro families of the some 100 probably will arrange to continue to live in the project. All others will be removed.

2. On October 14 ACHR held two meetings in Little Rock focussed on "Housing and Human Values" with Mr. Wagner Jackson of HHFA in Philadelphia and Mr. Samuel Hudson of Fort Worth as resource persons. Some thirty-five city officials, housing officials, and citizens had lunch with them. That evening Mr. Jackson spoke at a public meeting in the auditorium of Philander Smith College. Housing and other officials together with human rights leaders were platform guests.

3. Mr. Sutton, Associate Director was one of the platform speakers at the Civil Rights Informational Meeting on December 7.

4. All members of the staff have been associated in the beginning activities of the Economic Opportunities Program in Arkansas, attending meetings for information, initiating with human rights groups some strategy as to responsibility for community action programs.

On December 17-18 the Urban League of Little Rock held a workshop for the state on this program. The associate director and Fr. Walter Clancy assisted as panel members.

5. The Committee on the Annual Meeting met on November 14 and proposed a two-day session with emphasis on the tenth anniversary of ACHR.

6. On December 14 a committee of faculty members of Philander Smith met with the Director to plan for a sustained program of frequenting of restaurants in Little Rock by Negro patrons with a record of treatment.

7. On November 23 ACHR mailed all mayors of first class cities the pamphlet, "Americans are Law Abiding Citizens", published by Potomac Institute to focus on compliance with the Civil Rights Act.

REPORT FROM THE STAFF TO: The Board of Directors

This report covers the year since the Chattanooga Annual Meeting of the Council in October 1962. It is based on a review of our office calendars where notations may have been somewhat careless and/or illegible. We have attempted to use the NEWSLETTER for information of significant events across the state. We could improve the communication value of the NEWSLETTER if we could obtain reports, summaries, clippings, etc. from members. Rarely do we receive one; regularly none.

1) Economic opportunity workshops - beginning Friday evening and continuing until mid-afternoon Saturday; Dr. V. W. Henderson, leader. Held in Memphis, October 1962; Chattanooga, March 1963; and Jackson, May 1963. Minutes summarized, mimeographed and sent to all participants.

2) Organized women's committee from United Church Women, National Council of Jewish Women, AAUW, and TCHR to call on Governor Ellington regarding the School for the Blind - November 1962. Conference with Governor followed by acceptance of first grade Negro children at Donelson School and re-opening of the Negro school until additional facilities constructed.

3) Arranged accommodations, food service, etc. for South-wide Conference of Religious and Community Leaders, Nashville, December 27-29, 1962.

4) Participated in "Open City" Committee - Nashville federation of organizations with civil rights function; Nashville Christian Leadership Council weekly mass meetings - as speaker and audience; met with newspaper editor, publisher and public officials urging Nashville progress.

5) Nashville Community Relations Council - assisted in local chapter's arrangements for meetings, theatre pressure, etc. throughout year. TCHR provided Council with secretarial services, including assistance with membership meeting in December and community meeting in May.

6) TCHR provided all clerical and secretarial services for Tennessee Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, including publication of Health Survey.

7) TCHR also provided secretarial service for the Inter-Group Coordinating Committee including recording and mimeographing minutes and notifying members of meetings.

8) Filled speaking engagements at churches, civic groups. Medical auxiliary in Nashville area, including week-long workshop leadership at Belmont Methodist Church.

9) Arranged itineraries, transportation and hospitality for a delegation of African nationals of new countries - with assistance of Mrs. Molly Todd, Mrs. Jack May, Mrs. E. Perry Crump, and Mrs. Burton Pogell of Nashville.

10) Talked with reporters from Newsweek, Washington Post, New York Times, Kansas City Star, U. S. News & World Report, regarding development throughout Tennessee. Arranged all interviews for Lillian Smith during her three-day visit to Nashville in May 1963.

11) Assisted summer college students with Nashville project of American Friends Service Committee. Bi-racial group in Nashville for seven weeks. Talked to group twice. Also part of staff worked as one of the co-chairmen of another summer project, co-sponsored by the Southern Region of the National Student YWCA and National Student Christian Federation, in Nashville for eight weeks consisting of college students from 11 states. There were 13 participants.

12) Meetings with other groups, including United Church Women - meeting on "Drop-Outs", Tennessee Conference of Churches, etc.

13) Visits to Bristol, Kingsport, John City, Athens, Cleveland, Knoxville, Chattanooga, Cookeville, Sparta, Livingston, Waverly, Jackson, Lebanon, Memphis. Most of these places have had two or more visits. Visits have been planned by Council, or made on special request. Follow-through with state officials on requests from local groups or individuals on return to Nashville.

14) Accompanied Vernon Jordan of Southern Regional Council to Bristol and Johnson City in August for stimulation and support of local leadership and guidance for state staff.

15) Follow-through on use of state parks, by individuals and groups. (Example: Student group refused reservations at Montgomery Bell, followed by acceptance after several telephone calls from this office.)

16) With leadership of President Barrett, visited Governor and Administrative Assistant regarding Governor's Commission on Civil Rights. Later, presented Governor with list of proposed candidates for appointment to Governor's Committee.

17) Conversation with Nashville business and governmental leadership prior to establishment of Nashville's Metropolitan Human Relations Committee.

18) Conferences and meetings - Participation in State Human Relations Councils staff meeting at SRC in March (Jones & Webster). June meeting in Blue Ridge, North Carolina (Jones). Human Relations Workshop - NEW WAYS FOR NEW DAYS - Tuskegee Institute, Alabama in October (Webster).

19) Special Council Projects -

Jobs & Color - mailed to all members and 200 others
"Benchmark" - survey of local communities
Structure Committee - excellent report still requiring implementation.

20) Memorandum and notice of Time-Life Spots on Civil Rights to all TV and radio stations in major cities and to as many other TV and radio stations as we could locate. We have received no direct response.

21) Considerable local information giving on availablility of local accommodations, employment, training, etc. Letters of appreciation in response to public statements, letters to the editor, etc.

22) The Council staff has worked with a member of the Metro Human Relations Committee in securing qualified clerical workers for three local banks. This responsibility included interviewing and setting-up appointment schedule and follow-through. Each bank has hired a clerical worker.

23) Participated in and led discussions at West End Methodist Church for United Church Women in March - three-day meeting on "Claiming our Heritage-Under God." This led up to May Fellowship Day on May 3, 1963.

24) Worked with program committee in setting up Retreat at Bethany Center (UCW) on May 29, 30 and 31. Helped to find local resource persons for participation.

No Tennessean will question that "the winds of change" blew across Tennessee during 1963 - occasionally reaching tornado strength. In school desegregation and public accommodations, measurable gains were made. Initial employment breakthroughs were recorded - not as impressive in number, but perhaps more significant in eventual office in modifying discriminatory practices.

In reviewing Tennessee's clear progress, we cannot point to a single instance of change to say that the Council accomplished this. It is difficult to establish our role in the changes. Did we contribute anything?

As we review our own activities, we believe we are investing too much office time on routine mempership renewals, follow-up letters to Board and general members. On the community audit, we sent three rounds of letters, plus telegrams for an eventual response from 14 persons of the original 20 members in as many communities. The initial letter, return post card enclosed, had asked that we be notified if member would complete the survey.

It seems to us that the Council must consider itself an organization dependent on its own membership for functioning, and must decide on that basis its program and goals. A staff of two persons (much healthier and wiser than we) cannot carry the total program for a state-wide Council. What do you want us to do? What activity in membership, fund raising, organizing new councils, mediation, initiation of new local activities, communication, etc. justly belongs to Board and what to staff? A review of the report of the Committee on Structure, accepted at May Board meeting, may serve as a springboard for practical discussion at the November 2 Board meeting. Perhaps you will decide on a change of staff personnel. We are prepared. We'll go quietly, officer.

ALABAMA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS
Quarterly Report
October, November, December, 1964

THE ALABAMA COUNCIL

The difficulties of this quarter began on September 30, when our president, Dr. Lucius Pitts, suffered a heart attack. Dr. Pitts was confined to the hospital without visitors for about three weeks, and was unable to function normally for two months. This was doubly unfortunate, from the standpoint of council leadership, since our treasurer, Mr. Nat Welch, was working with the Democratic Party in Washington until the first week of November.

Simultaneously, difficulty was experienced with regard to the office arrangements in Huntsville. Although space was promised in the 2109 West Clinton Building in Huntsville, and was indeed prepared for our occupancy, and although a contract had been offered us and was signed by us, the Cross Country Development Corporation overruled their leasing agent at the last minute and refused to sign. We were told that the officers of the company feared "bombing" of their building. (See attachments to SRC copy of this report for details.) As a result, the executive director was unable to find quarters until November 17. He reported the circumstances surrounding this difficulty at an open meeting of the Alabama Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission on November 12. There was an unexpectedly excited reaction in the press and by other news media.

Although Harry Golden, Editor of the North Carolina Israelite, had agreed to be final judge in our annual essay contest, the executive committee directed that it be postponed indefinitely due to lack of funds. This action was taken at the meeting of the executive committee November 7.

All during this time, when normal operation was drastically curtailed, financial situation grew steadily worse, and membership enlistment was at a virtual standstill. Had it not been for the efforts of a few individuals in three or four chapters, we probably would have run out of funds. In mid-December, however, a fund-raising and membership campaign was begun, and some results were realized before the end of December, so that the year was finished with a small amount of money in the bank.

THE LOCAL COUNCILS

Information about the activities of local councils is rather spotty for this quarter. The executive director has worked out a one-page report form which he hopes will facilitate the gathering of information on a regular basis.

The Birmingham Council holds monthly meetings. On November 24, about 35 persons were present to hear Alfred Cowles, executive director of the Grand Rapids Human Relations Commission. On December 22, Dr. Herman Long, president of Talladega College, spoke on psychological aspects of racism. About 60 people were present. The Birmingham Council (like all the others) seems to do very little as a council. On his November report, the president noted: "Council's main contribution is to create contacts which make for other creative contacts."

Huntsville Council had 15 members present at the November meeting. Entire meeting was taken up with a discussion of projects proposed by the American Ethical Union for next summer. No decision was reached. At the December meeting, which was the annual dinner meeting, officers were elected and installed for 1965. Thirty-five people heard a talk by David Vann, a Birmingham attorney. Under "special concerns" the president lists "appointment by mayor of bi-racial committee."

Mobile. On October 26, the Mobile Council heard an address by John McConnell, local attorney. He spoke about the upcoming election, especially the unpledged elector problem. A meeting planned for December with Louis L. Mitchell as principle speaker did not materialize because the speaker did not. The chapter president lists organizational problems as a special concern.

Muscle Shoals. The November and December meetings of the Muscle Shoals chapter had 40 and 50 persons present, respectively. The new executive director spoke at the November meeting on a general subject. The December meeting was the annual Christmas party for children.

Talladega Council meets only quarterly. The new executive director was principle speaker at the meeting on October 31. This group seems very weak and demoralized.

Tuscaloosa, Montgomery and East Alabama Councils sent no reports during the quarter. The executive director attended one meeting in Montgomery, but Tuscaloosa apparently had no meeting, and East Alabama had only one. (They have always met only quarterly, but plan monthly meetings from now on.)

THE STAFF

The executive director's calendar included the following:

> A meeting convened by the Association of Huntsville Area Contractors, and attended by a large group of Negro leaders for the purpose of airing problems in housing, education, employment and public accommodations in Huntsville.
> Three meetings in Birmingham with denominational leaders who were conducting a "Christian Mission to Southern Cities" (or something to that effect.) They succeeded in getting a bi-racial group of ministers and laymen started meeting together.
> A meeting with Henry Herman and Walter Lawton of the American Ethical Union concerning their project in Birmingham last summer and prospects for expanding to other Alabama cities this summer.

Spoke to the women of St. Thomas Episcopal Church, Huntsville.

Sermon at Providence United Presbyterian Church, Huntsville.

Speech to ecumenical students' group at Florence.

Speech to Muscle Shoals Chapter, ACHR.

An executive committee meeting in Birmingham.

Testified at the open meeting of the Alabama Advisory Committee, U. S. Civil Rights Commission. (See above)

Sermon at the Unitarian Church, Birmingham; remarks were picked up by television newscasters and the papers.

First birthday observance for Association of Huntsville Area Contractors. Hobart Taylor was the speaker.

Meeting of state council staffs in Atlanta, prior to SRC Board Meeting. Secured LeRoy Collins for speaker at annual meeting.

Issued first newsletter soon after securing office space.

Attended SCLC consultation in Montgomery (December 28) at which plans for voting drive in Selma were announced.

We had no secretary during this quarter, of course. This necessitated a lot of office work by the executive director, especially in December while preparing the first newsletter and preparing for membership-funding drive.

COMMENTS:

1. The director was asked to be a member of the Civil Rights Commission Advisory Committee and tentatively consented. But upon contrary advice from the executive committee, he withdrew. (The plan was for him to conduct a survey on Title II compliance in about 12 Alabama cities. The executive committee felt that this might adversely affect subsequent efforts.)

2. Again and again, the executive director has heard comment to the effect that our greatest need is program, both at the state level and at the local level. Many people have commented that we need something in which people can get involved, if we are to get and keep members. Not a few have said that they could see little purpose served by the human relations councils.

3. On the other hand, the overwhelming reaction to ACHR in Alabama is, of course, hostility--on grounds that it is too controversial or too radical! This polarization of opinion--too mild for some, too radical for others-- makes it appear that the ground left for ACHR to occupy is very little indeed!

JACKSON 6-1829

January 12, 1965

Mr. Paul Anthony, Field Director
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

Sorry to be so late with this report. We have moved offices around, we're changing our filing system and Charles was gone for a week. He finally got the rest of his vacation.

Financially, the statements speak for themselves. If I have time, I'll enclose the last one for the Battaglia Project.

Guess you have a pretty good idea of some of the things we're doing, even though your visit was brief.

Our school board last night decided to defer and refer back to a committee any requests for cooperation with economic opportunity programs--this really means long delay. In fact one of the letters asking for cooperation from Neighborhood Centers was dated November.

Besides regular activities you know as usual the numerous appointments and we had a goodly number of extra ones with students home writing papers on subjects in the various fields of human relations--some we could help and some we couldn't. Where we couldn't we usually knew where to refer them.

If I haven't given you enough information, please let me know and I'll dig it out.

Sincerely,

Ethel

REPORTS FROM EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING (December 1, 1964)

ANNUAL MEETING - Mrs. A. E. Dukler, Chairman of the Committee

The Fifth Annual Meeting of the Council, held at Kaphan's Restuarant, November 10, 1964, was very successful--in that the food was good, the Master of Ceremonies, Mr. Ben Ramey, was excellent, the atmosphere and excitement of being together so soon after the election also added to the stimulation of the evening.

Income from the meeting was $2,143. and expenses amounted to $1,940.82 leaving a balance of $202.18. All total 487 persons were served, about 150 more than last year. The sale of Mr. Young's books amount to $363 for 88 books and helped with the meeting expenses.

The committee responsible for the dinner arrangements were: Mrs. Paul Baer, Mrs. Charles W. Pemberton and Mrs. Thomas Griffin. Additional help was used for addressing invitations. In addition to the above this also included Mrs. Shalom Vineberg, Mrs. Sidney Cleveland, Mrs. Chris Ianucci, Mrs. Joe D. Finley, Mrs. Sarah McMillan, and Mrs. Jack Haller.

Recommendations for next year are made as follows: 1) Need for better outside publicity; 2) Need for larger quarters; and 3) Music will have to be cut.

HEALTH COMMITTEE - Miss Elizabeth Kimmel, Chairman

Attached is a copy of one fee schedule used by Ben Taub Hospital. The Health Committee is investigating fees charged by the hospital with at least the following information coming out of the study: 1) no one among the hospital administration knows who established the rates, 2) according to the current standards of poverty (that is, below $4,000.00 family income per year) many persons with less than minimal incomes are not eligible for service at the hospital and 3) a family of 4 with an annual income of $2,900.00 is charged fees comparable to private care. The study is incomplete and other data is being gathered by the committee. Last Friday there was a report on one family with income of $270 per month (when the father is working). The mother has a chronic condition which requires frequent care. She was recently hospitalized at Ben Taub and sent a bill for $470. Within a few weeks she had to return for clinic care and was charged $5.00 for registration fee.

YOUTH COUNCIL - Mr. Ty Joubert reports that the Senior Highs are meeting next Sunday, December 6, 1964. Mr. Jan de Hartog is to be the speaker to add to the business of the Council. The meeting is open to any Senior High interested and will be held at St. James Episcopal Church, 3129 Southmore Blvd. at 4 P.M.

HOUSING COMMITTEE - One feature of the Housing Committee is a Sub-Committee chaired by Mrs. Marie Maxwell which conducts bus tours for interested groups showing Variations in Houston Housing. The latest of these tours was for about 100 Lutheran ministers. For three hours the groups not only get an eye full, but also an ear full. The committee not only provides the bus service but also trained (by the committee) interpreters. The cost of each tour is paid by the group at the rate of $50.00 per bus. Interested?

BATTAGLIA COMMITTEE - It appears at times that the Battaglia Committee might wind up in the position of "the tail wagging the dog" with regard to the HCHR. This committee does so much so fast it tends to overshadow much else going on in and by the Council. The most important announcement of the Committee is the appointment of Mrs. Bess Attwell as full time director of the project. Mrs. Attwell is presently with the Houston Independent School District as counselor at Kashmere Gardens School, a graduate of Talladego College (B.A.), Columbia University (M.A.) and Texas Southern (M.Ed.) She will officially assume the director's job on February 1, 1965.

PROGRAM REPORT

September 1, 1964 - January 1, 1965

PRINTED MATERIALS AND PUBLICITY

A brochure was prepared with membership development as its object --(see attached). The brochure has been used at a number of meetings around the state and it is beginning to be an effective instrument for securing new members and renewals from others.

Its latest use has been in a mass mailing to the membership with a "holiday" letter from the staff suggesting that present members give new memberships as a holiday gift to friends (letter attached).

An official newspaper, "The North Carolina Council Comment," was published -- an eight page tabloid (attached). This was mailed to 3000 persons. The paper was well received, judging from many letters coming to the editors.

A printed announcement of my appointment as Executive Director, of Betty Jo McMakins' appointment as field worker and of Roberta Blackwell's promotion to office manager was also mailed to more than 3000 persons both in the state and out. State wide publicity on staff changes went out early in September.

The Charlotte Observer printed a long interview with me; a story on Miss McMakin and a prominent story on the Charlotte Council annual meeting. We have also had good coverage in the Charlotte News.

The annual meeting of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council had top local coverage on TV and radio.

Stories of my appointment and in connection with the formation of local Councils have appeared in papers around the state.

LOCAL COUNCILS

A new council was organized in Wilmington under the leadership of Mr. Lisbon C. Berry, a young attorney.

The Durham Council was active in preparation of a report on Negro employment in that city and has made plans to develop this project. I had a meeting with Mrs. Semans (of the Duke family) and I believe she and her husband, Dr. Semans (faculty of Duke) will support this program with funds.

Goldsboro leadership is prepared to organize a council. We will attempt to assist this group in preparation of a project to secure funds for a housing development.

Greensboro has an organized group, The Greensboro Fellowship. I spoke to a meeting of about forty members of this group and I feel confident they will affiliate with the state council. The state Council has a project under way with A & T College for a summer institute on Human Relations. The Greensboro Fellowship has pledged to raise $1,000 to help sponsor this institute.

The Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council has been inactive for many years. I entertained the entire executive committee at my home for supper in October. We got off to a good start with plans for a dynamic program. Since then there have been two meetings of the executive committee and one annual meeting.

The Annual Meeting was a dinner at Christ Church (invitation and program attached). One hundred and ten persons attended and elected new officers and executive committee. Mrs. Martin Cannon, Jr., is the new chairman.

The Charlotte Council, through our office, has prepared a presentation to the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation asking for support for a School Readiness Program. This will be regarded as a fund to be matched by Charlotte citizens. We hope to receive $2,500.

STATE ORGANIZATION

Following an initial planning meeting in September and an executive committee meeting in October, Dr. Williams, chairman, has begun an organization of sub-committees.

I sent a questionnaire to the membership designating areas in which they might be active. From the responses to the questionnaire we expect to develop the members of these committees.

Chairmen for the following committees are being appointed:

(1) Committee to Assist Communities to Implement the Civil Rights Law
(2) Special Projects Committee
(3) Speakers Bureau
(4) Publicity
(5) Finance

We have made it a practice to serve lunch in the office for state meetings held in Charlotte. We have had two such meetings.

Through the efforts of our staff, we brought about a cooperative project with the Intercollegiate Council on Human Rights (an organization of Negro and white college students set up by Governor Sanford) and the National Student Association representative in North Carolina.

College students throughout the state have been organized for the purpose of conducting tutorials and supervising study halls.

A two-day interracial meeting, the first of its kind, was held on the campus of Wake Forest College. Our staff played a leading part in planning and executing the meeting. We also helped with the financing. The North Carolina Fund assisted in this also. Experts from other parts of the country were brought in to hold workshops on techniques for conducting tutorial programs. The two young ladies on our staff, Miss McMakin and Miss Blackwell, have been responsible for the success we have had in this work. They continue to be active in actually working in tutorial sessions in Charlotte and in organizing and staffing study halls. They cooperate with other groups who are also working to assist elementary and high school students falling behind in academic work.

FINANCES

Believing that an outstanding program is necessary before an organization has the right to ask for funds, we have delayed extensive fund raising to give the new staff time to function effectively.

We believe now that we have made some forward steps--the newspaper, the student project, the new local councils, the state organization moving --so that we can contemplate a fund raising plan and schedule.

We expect to have a Finance Committee ready to work by mid-January. I hope to devote a good part of my time to fund raising from February through June.

Meanwhile, we have carried on some minor fund raising, securing many renewals of gifts and memberships since September. One gift of $500 was made for a special project, and we have had several in the neighborhood of $200 and $300. We shall also have part of the expense of our newspaper subsidized.

We are making a special appeal to the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council members for a year-end gift.

We have also completed the lengthy presentation to the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, mentioned above.

ANNUAL MEETING

Plans for the annual meeting to be held in Greensboro on January 23, have been in the making. Dr. Otis Singletary, Director of the Job Corps, Office of Economic Opportunity, and formerly chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, is to be our speaker. We shall give an award to Miss Gertrude Weil, an 85 year old lady who has long supported the Council and has been a leader in better race relations throughout the state (she was recently given an award by Smith College, her alma mater). Our award is to be named for Howard Odum.

Respectfully submitted,

ON HUMAN RELATIONS

"THE ROAD AHEAD FOR CHARLOTTE"

City of "Accelerated Gradualism"

Speaker: Dr. L.S. Cozart, President Emeritus, Barber Scotia College

Introduced by Mr. Charles Lowe, Chairman of Program and Policy Committee.

A long time citizen of North Carolina, Dr. Cozart is a newcomer to Charlotte. He recognizes that Charlotte has achieved much in human relations and he looks to the road ahead with a fresh and exciting point of view. Where will Charlotte be on this road next year---in ten years?

You MUST wish to think about this--Charlotte is YOUR city. We invite you to be with us and to bring your friends.

Folk songs by Jon Mullis, guitarist and singer.

Human relations, which we of the Council by definition are interested in, are nothing if not personal: human beings relate to each other as individuals, not as masses or groups. Steps to improve human relations can be taken through group action—educational efforts, conferences, laws, etc.—but ultimately there is needed direct, personal communication and understanding between individuals.

Supplying opportunities for such personal relationships to develop between people of the various vocations and races in our state is thus an important function of our Council. In fact, that is an important part of the program being developed by Mrs. Adams, our new Executive Director, her staff, and the executive committee: our goal is the setting up of local councils in as many communities as possible, made up of local people working together on specific local problems. The same approach is being taken among college students. Experience has already shown how well this helps to improve communities as well as to develop personal friendships and understanding.

And what better example of the power of personal concern and involvement could we offer than Mrs. Adams' own distinctive, personal approach to her work with us? Members and friends who have already had a chance to meet her note this and respond; her letters to members are praised for their warm personal quality by individuals from all over the state.

We are all going to have more and more opportunities to be creating good human relations in general through our own personal relations with each other; let us each take part to the fullest.

On The Road To Damascus

When Did You Know?

By Marion Cannon

I sat at a dinner party and looked around the table. It was not an ordinary party for it was in the South, and there were Negroes at the table. We were old friends, who had worked for years together in our common cause: equality of the races. We had gone through much together; starting with those trivial heart-rending things like no rest rooms in the downtown stores for Negro shoppers, and on through abolishing Jim Crow on the buses, opening the public libraries, through intregration in restaurants, theaters, and "token" though it is in the schools. All of us had had the same experiences; hate letters, midnight telephone calls, loss of old friends. But our common cause had held us together. and I wondered about our starting points. Why had we committed ourselves to this cause? Certainly we were a disparate group —lawyers, doctors, merchants, and that bane and blessing of the South, liberal housewives.

So I threw out a conversational gambit: Why, and when had each one decided that this equality was worth working for; had committed himself to an idea that was not popular, that alienated the past and promised a difficult future? I asked those people to tell me this. and they did.

One day in 1925, a fifteen year old school girl got on a bus in Birmingham, Alabama. She was doming home from high school, a white high school. She was tired and the bus was crowded. She saw a seat in the back of the bus, went to it, and sat down. No sooner had she shifted her heavy load of books to the floor than the bus stopped, and the driver came back and told her to move up front. She looked at him in bewilderment: She had come from up front and there were no empty seats there! But his voice had the ring of authority, and she picked up her books, went up front, and stood there

The bus driver had said something about the back of the bus being for "'niggers." At the next stop she got out and watched the

SMITH PROJECT
By Betty Jo McMakin

With crisp little banners bear-in the legend "GO VOTE" fluttering on their shirt fronts, the Johnson C. Smith University Student Council conducted a house-to-house canvass urging registered voters in the University community to vote. Alarmed by the fact that many registered voters never bother to vote, the students selected this "Get Out to Vote" survey as their initial Council-sponsored project.

Most of the students gave enthusiastic reports of their reception and the response of individuals queried. One young man canvasses 120 homes, and was greeted with a — "Yes, I'm going to vote!" — in nearly all! Still others encountered a few persons who were reluctant to comment. And one young lady was told by a laughing voter, "Yes Ma'am. I'm going to vote for Governor Wallace!"

The survey's purpose was two-fold: The first objective, of course, was that of getting out the vote. The second was to better acquaint the Smith students with the community — their neighbors. The students were asked to observe neighborhood conditions, and to suggest areas in which they might work in the neighborhood based upon their observations. After having visited in the neighboring homes, several students restated an interest in the Council's proposed project of tutorials. This will be discussed further at the next Smith Unit meeting.

After the survey, the students were served a spaghetti dinner, with trimmings, at the home of Miss Roberta Blackwell, staff member.

INTERCOLLEGIATE COUNCIL AFFILIATES

In February of this year, Governor Sanford suggested that the predominately Negro Colleges in the Raleigh Area might find ways other than demonstrations to express theirstruggle for equality to the people of North Carolina. Initially, eight colleges met to consider the Governor's suggestion. They called their group the Intercollegiate Council for Human Rights.

The fledging student council decided to enlarge their numbers and include white schools. The combined forces of the resultant larger group made six films, two of which are ready for release. These two films are "A Knocking at the Gate," produced by the students of North Carolina College, and "Good Bye to North Carolina," produced by the students of A & T College. When the remaining films are edited they will be shown on various television stations throughout North Carolina. This is North Carolina history in the making! Never have the Negroes of this state (or any other state) been given a means of self-expression in quite the way these films will present.

Because of the challenge of their undertaking, the films were last year's sole project for the new intercollegiate group. The project voted on for this school year is a tutorial program to be carried out through the individual members schools under the overall planning of the Intercollegiate Council.

The oficers elected for this year's program are:

Social Action Holds The Stage

Meeting Of The North Carolina Council Of Churches

The meeting of the Commission on Christian Social Action of the North Carolina Council of Churches on November 4 in Grensboro drew clergymen and representatives of social action groups from all parts of the state.

They came to discuss mutual problems, to hear a report from their Director, Rev. Jack Crum and an address by Mr. D. S. Coltrane, Chairman of the Good Neighbor Council.

Rev. Vernon Tyson, a member of the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations, served as chairman.

Mr. Coltrane began by praising the work of both Rev. Tyson and Rev. Crum. He said that due to Vernon Tyson's leadership there is a much better racial climate in the Sanford-Jonesboro community today. He spoke of Mr. Crum's "invaluable assistance" to the Good Neighbor Program, saying that Jack Crum has developed good relationships with many groups with one exception, namely the Ku Klux Klan, "who seem to have his number."

Grievances of Negro Citizens Are Real! !

It is a fact that a wide social, economic, and educational gap separates the majority of Negro citizens from other citizens, Mr. Coltrane told his audience that in many communities of the State and nation some of our citizens are consigned and confined but not resigned to minimum jobs, poor housing, inadequate food, inadequate clothing, and in general to a sub-standard type of living."

"It must be recognized that our Negro citizens, after receiving the minimum in health, education, welfare, housing, economic and cultural opportunities, cannot conceivably compete equally for a share in the full rights and responsibilities of our society smiply by the announcement that now a state of equal opportunity exists. How wonderful it would be if we could erase so quickly and painlessly the problems accummulated over the centuries.

"What are the Negro's chances today in our society? The Negro begins life with odds against him. He is more likely to die in infancy than the white baby. In fact, in 1958 the rate was 92% about that of white infants. This is largely because Negro women receive less prenatal care. More Negro babies are born prematurely or without hospital care, and more likely would be delivered by midwives rather than doctors. If the Negro baby lives, the chances of losing his mother in childbirth are relatively high. The Negro maternal mortality rate was four times as high as the white mothers in 1958.

"The Negro baby comes into a family that is larger than the white counterpart and in many cases is jammed into housing that is dilapidated, structurallyy unsound, and unable to keep out snow, cold, rain, wind, and rats.

UNEMPLOYMENT

The unemployment rate among while workers in North Carolina is 2.9%. Among Negro workers it is 7.6%.

I invite you to go with me on a trip to downtown Raleigh in the area of the employment office. There six mornings a week you will see a group of 30 to 40 Negro men not working, standing on the street corner talking idly. They are at a labor "pick-up' station. From time to time during the morning a few are hired for a day or part-day job. The others drift away. If you should pick up one of these laborers for a day's work, you will find that he does not have sufficient money on his person to buy his lunch at a country store. These are some of North Carolina's 80,000 unemployed — 4½% of our labor force.

cal, office and sales workers than as manual workers, rapidly changing from a blue-collar to a white-collar society. 97% of the increase in employment since 1947 has been from the white-collar jobs.

"How can the Negro secure his share of jobs in North Carolina and in Amercia? There is no magic key to this problem. We cannot put our finger on one barrier and say, "Remove that and the problem is solved." The effort to help the Negro citizen earn his bread and pay his way must be multi-directed and simultaneous across a broad front. Here is a list of urgent needs: Vocational training —the best.

Despite boasts of devotion to principles of democracy and equal opportunity ,America has never been free from dissension over differences of race and religion. Organized movements have arisen among us to divide majorities from minorities.

They became a great nationwide racket and did incalcuable harm to the cause of religion and to the integrity of our national life.

Fortunately, such absurd movements go as well as come. Unfortunately, they sometimes come again. A particular organization which had its little day in the nineteen twenties has never really come into respectable prominence again. Yet there have been and continue to be efforts at some sort of revival. A sense of humor and a feeling for the perspective of history reassure us as to the trancience of such movements. The noise they make is usually greater than is justified by the number of people they influence.

We need not really fear that they will sweep their foes before them. Yet they can do something truly devastating to those enamored of their doctrines. They can poison the minds of their followers and damn them to a littleness of soul and narowness of outlook for which remedy is tragically hard to come by.

LESSON OF WARNING

From a sermon by Dr. J. W. Buckner, Former Editor of World Call. And Interum Pastor of St. Paul's Church Raleigh

Human relations have long been marked by some degree of racial, religious or group prejudice. This is apparent in the Bible and in church history. In ancient Israel the Book of Ruth was evidently written to remind the hundred percenters of the times that David, their most distinguished warrior, poet and king, was an "eighth-breed"—the great-grandgrandson of a Moabite peasant girl. Jesus consistently crossed barriers of men's bias and held them up to ridicule. In his best known parable he contrived with consummate artistry to strike ugly bigotry to the ground by making the story's hero a man different from himself and has hearers, in religion and race, a man known through the centuries as the Good Samaritan. The early church had scarcely started when it became necessary to appoint deacons to minister to the poor among the Greeks because they complained that the Jewish Chris-

THE BLESSINGS OF WAITING

From a sermon by Rabbi Israel J. Gerber Temple Beth El Charlotte.

Wherever we look, we find very little evidence that God was ever in a great hurry. On the contrary, everything we see indicates patience and planning and waiting. The most delicate flower, the sturdiest tree, the tallest mountain, each testifies in its own eloquent way that God knows how to wait.

Each of us needs large quantities of this ability to wait for so much of our lives is spent waiting. We wait for ambitions to be fulfilled and dreams to be realized. We wait for our hurts to be healed and our sorrows to be softened. We wait for evil to be crushed and goodness vindicated. We must learn how to wait. This is not a popular doctrine today. We are addicted to speed. "Instant" is the key-word in our vocabulary. We have instant coffee, instant pie mixes, instant starch. and so on. To carry this idea to rediculous absurdity, a cartoon recently showed a woman examining a jar of coffee in the supermarket, and she says, "I think it's misleading to call it instant coffee when you still have to boil water."

We are descendents of a people which taught humanity how to wait, and we need desperately to practice it ourselves if we are to achieve some of life's most abiding rewards.

Education requires waiting. We are concerned today with dropouts and the impatience which promps so many students to terminate their education with the completion of high school. These are the young people who will contribute little to the growth and development of our country,, who will find themselves among the unemployables in an age which is progressively requiring more and more knowledge and training. These young people must be persuaded that there is no short cut to a worthwhile career—there is no instant powdered form of education. When James Garfield was the president of Hiram College in Ohio, a father once came to him and asked whether the curriculum could not be simplified so that his son might be able "to go through by a shorter route." Some parents will do this you know. "Certainly," Garfield replied. "But it all depends upon what you want to make of your boy. When God wants a sturdy oak tree he takes 100 years. When He wants to make a squash He requires only 2 months."

Having said this, I must add, that there are vital areas where waiting, is fatal to human aspirations and progress. There are crucial domains, in our collective and personal lives, where we have waited too long.

Consider the thorny problem of civil rights—the most decisive issue that confronts America, not only internally but also in its aspiration to lead the free world in its march toward a more secure tomorow.

We wait too long to do what must be done today.

We wait to long to show kindness.

We wait too long to show kindable.

We wait too long to discipline ourselves.

Let us each say to ourselves, "I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good thing, therefore, that I can do, or kindness I can show to any fellow human creature, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

"What are the Negro's chances today in our society? The Negro begins life with odds against him. He is more likely to die in infancy than the white baby. In fact, in 1958 the rate was 92% about that of white infants. This is largely because Negro women receive less prenatal care. "At another place, some farm workers have finished 13 weeks of harvesting and preparing tobacco for market. 39 weeks of odd jobs and idleness lie ahead. In stilll another instance, a father, mother, and several grown children struggle to survive on the income from a 40-acre farm that could be worked by one or two of them. These are a part of our unemployed who number well over 100,000 and who are struggling to exist.

The North Carolina of Tomorrow—Industrial Economy.

"In the same cities where the men stand on corners waiting for odd jobs and in the same state where farm workers wait until next year for work, North Carolina industry has sent out an urgent call for workers. There are jobs begging for people to fill them. An employment security survey shows that in the 5-year period from June 1961 to June 1966 industry expects to have openings for at least 233,000 workers, for skilled workers and for technicians. This indicates that the North Carolina of tomorrow will belong to the educated and trained man. This State is rapidly changing from an agricultural economy where Negroes have been employed, to an industrial economy where competition is keen and where well trained workers are demanded. Underemployment is our big problem and lack of education and training the barrier to overcoming it. The Negro unemployment rate is approximately 7.6%. So far as the Negro is concerned, there is a depression on and depressions are usually accompained by unrest.

"This poverty and insecurity are particularly appalling to the Negro,, who sees the white society that surrounds him grow increasingly afluent while he remains tied to his slum and without a job. The future is even bleaker than the present because automation, new management techniques and other changes are all reducing the demand for unskilled and semiskilled labor.

"More people are now being employed as professional, technining from a blue-collar to a white-collar society. 97% of the increase in employment since 1947 has been from the white-collar jobs.

EXPERIENCCES OF MAJOR EMPLOYERS

"'A question frequently addressed to the State Good Neighbor Council has concerned the employment practices of major employers and the experiences they have had in integrating their plants. Generally, the council has replied, the major employers have led the way and have been pleased with the results.

"Western Electric, for example, has employed on a merit basis for several years. Today Negroes can be found as engineers, draftsmen, chemists, clerk typists, electronic technicians, machinists, inspectors, librarians, and bench production operators. 'We give all qualified people the same examinations, 'reports Mr. W. O. Conrad, general manager of the Greensboro and Burlington plants. 'The Negroes' efficiency follows very much the same pattern as that of the white people'."

Links Will Raise $75,000 For Legal And ED Fund

The Charlotte Area chapter of the Links held a gala luncheon on November 7 at the Club Poinseana in celebration of Link Week, which was being observed by the national organization of Links throughout the United States.

Mrs. Drayton P. Graham, in the Department of Student Guidance at Johnson C. Smith University, presided. Mrs. Graham said that her club would contribute a minimum of $25 per member to the Legal and Educational Fund of the NAACP. Nationally the Links will raise $75,000 for this fund in three years.

In addition the members assist young people to attend college and participate in many civic activities for the betterment of human relations.

Helen Adams, Executive Director of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations, told the group of the work being undertaken by the council this year to further equal opportunity for all citizens in the state.

Officers and members of The Links have agreed to coonerate in the Council's efforts.

Current Programs And Policies Of The North Carolina Fund

The North Carolina Fund was established in July, 1963, by Governor Sanford, Charles H. Babcock, C. A. McKnight, and John H. Wheeler. Governor Sanford is chairman of the Board C. A. McKnight (editor of The Charlotte Observer) is president of the Fund, and George H. Esser, Jr., is its executive director.

The Fund is operating under a grant of $7 million from The Ford Foundation, $1,625,000 from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation and $875,000 from the Mary Reynolds Babcock Foundation. The four-year program calls for other resources to be contributed by participating communities and state agencies, that will bring the Fund's total backing to at least fourteen million dollars.

A PLAN FOR SELECTION

Officials of The North Carolina Fund, soon after the Fund's formation, announced a plan to select a number of communities in North Carolina that not only have significant problems arising from poverty, but aslo have the imagination and the conviction to find ways to help people break out of poverty.

The Fund established the county as the basic community unit for submission of a proposal because county government is the local governmental agency responsible for the financing and administration of health, education, and welfare programs. However, the Fund encouraged counties —especially those in sparsely populated areas—to band together into multi-county communities, submitting proposals that would make use of central community services serving large geographic areas.

At the proposal cut-off date, February 3, 1964, the Fund had received proposals from 51 communities, involving 66 [illegible] ment grants to help prepare for broad-scale efforts under federal and local support.

In August, 1964, the following communities were named:

Rowman County; Macon County; Buncombe County; and a five-county area in Northeastern North Carolina consisting of Bertie, Halifax, Northampton, Hertford, and Gates Counties.

With their selection, a total of eleven communities, representing 21 counties in the state, have been designated to receive major Fund financial support.

HELP FOR 39 COMMUNITIES NOT SELECTED

To the other 39 communities not selected for initial grants, the Fund will make available services of its professional staff and its aiding those communities that decided to start their programs without financial support from the Fund.

Further aid in sight for those 39 communities not getting initial grants, is a grant of $400,000 made by the Welfare Administration of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The grant, administered by the North Carolina Board of Public Welfare, will finance 25 community-service consultants, to be hired and trained under the guidance of The North Carolina Fund, then placed in 25 of the communities that originally submitted proposals to the Fund.

These Consultants will work for three years (the grant provides $400,000 per year for three years), coordinating and improving existing community services in the 25 communities.

The eleven comprehensive experimental projects form the main stream of the Fund Program, but the Fund also is supporting a number of additional programs whchi tie in with these efforts at the community level.

Of The North Carolina Fund

The North Carolina Fund was established in July, 1963, by Governor Sanford, Charles H. Babcock, C. A. McKnight, and John H. Wheeler. Governor Sanford is chairman of the Board C. A. McKnight (editor of The Charlotte Observer) is president of the Fund, and George H. Esser, Jr., is its executive director.

The Fund is operating under a grant of $7 million from The Ford Foundation, $1,625,000 from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation and $875,000 from the Mary Reynolds Babcock Foundation. The four-year program calls for other resources to be contributed by participating communities and state agencies, that will bring the Fund's total backing to at least fourteen million dollars.

A PLAN FOR SELECTION

Officials of The North Carolina Fund, soon after the Fund's formation, announced a plan to select a number of communities in North Carolina that not only have significant problems arising from poverty, but aslo have the imagination and the conviction to find ways to help people break out of poverty.

The Fund established the county as the basic community unit for submission of a proposal because county government is the local governmental agency responsible for the financing and administration of health, education, and welfare programs. However, the Fund encouraged counties —especially those in sparsely populated areas—to band together into multi-county communities, submitting proposals that would make use of central community services serving large geographic areas.

At the proposal cut-off date, February 3, 1964, the Fund had received proposals from 51 communities, involving 66 North Carolina counties. Or receiving these proposals, the Fund started a two-month selection process. First, teams of two members and two staff members made personal visits to sponsoring committees in all 51 communities. Then the Fund staff made careful analysis of each community proposal both as an independent document, and as a proposal in competition with 50 otheres.

SEVEN COMMUNITIES SELECTED

On April 20th, the Fund Board of Directors announced seven communities as those selected for initial grants:

Robeson, Richmond, and Scotland Counties; Craven County; Nash and Edgecomb Counties; Durham County; Mecklenburg County; Forsyth County; Watauga, Avery Mitchell, and Yancey Counties.

These seven communities represented those with both urban-and rural-orientated problems. And they represented problems peculiar to each of the four geographic areas of the state.

After selection of the seven communities, the Fund began a series of conference with community representatives, making specific plans for helping them get their programs under way.

The Fund has made a small initial grant to each community for organization and administrative costs. This grant finances a project director and his office plus consultants to provde special advice on specific phases of the action program.

Once the community's organization has been perfected and a firm budget agreed upon, the initial grant will be followed by a four-year grant for administrative expenses only.

OTHER FINANCIAL SUPPORT

As each community, on advice of its consultants and director, adopts a specific program, the Fund will examine each of the program to determine whether money or other support for it is available from local, state, federal, or private sources. If no other support is in sight for a needed part of the program, the Fund Board will consider requests for grants to finance these portions.

FOUR SELECTED FOR PLANNING GRANTS

In addition to the seven major comprehensive projects receiving support, the Fund has selected four other communities as the recipients of Fund planning and development grants to help prepare for broad-scale efforts under federal and local support.

In August, 1964, the following communities were named:

Rowman County; Macon County; Buncombe County; and a five-county area in Northeastern North Carolina consisting of Bertie, Halifax, Northampton, Hertford, and Gates Counties.

With their selection, a total of eleven communities, representing 21 counties in the state, have been designated to receive major Fund financial support.

HELP FOR 39 COMMUNITIES NOT SELECTED

To the other 39 communities not selected for initial grants, the Fund will make available services of its professional staff and its aiding those communities that decided to start their programs without financial support from the Fund.

Further aid in sight for those 39 communities not getting initial grants, is a grant of $400,000 made by the Welfare Administration of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The grant, administered by the North Carolina Board of Public Welfare, will finance 25 community-service consultants, to be hired and trained under the guidance of The North Carolina Fund, then placed in 25 of the communities that originally submitted proposals to the Fund.

These Consultants will work for three years (the grant provides $400,000 per year for three years), coordinating and improving existing community services in the 25 communities.

The eleven comprehensive experimental projects form the main stream of the Fund Program, but the Fund also is supporting a number of additional programs whchi tie in with these efforts at the community level.

A. The Comprehensive School Improvement Program of the State Board of Education: designed to experiment with and develop better ways of teaching reading, writing, and arithmetic in the primary grades, more than 100 experimental classes in selected schools in the state began operating in Fall, 1964. At least one of these classes is located in each of the Fund's community experimental projects.

B. Pre-School Program: Another program tying in with the community projects is a pre-school program started in the summer of 1964, in which approximately 100 classes of no more than twenty children each were given training and instruction to prepare them for entering the first grade. At least one of these classes, made up primarily of children from culturally-disadvantaged homes, was located in each of the experimental communities. Both the "Three R's" program and the pre-school program are administered by the Board of Education of the State of North Carolina, and financed with a $2 million grant from The North Carolina Fund, matched by $2 million in state funds.

C. The North Carolina Volunteers: this Peace-Corps style organization for college students is another Fund-supported effort to attack the problem of poverty in North Carolina. From a total of 750 applicants for the Volunteers program, 100 outstanding students were chosen and began work in the summer of 1964 in six of the Fund's experimental community projects. The volunteers conducted and participated in a variety of programs designed to reach children and adults in low-income areas. Contributing to the support of ths program was a grant of the Office of Education of the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

D. Community Action Technician Program: Anticipating passage of the anti-poverty bill of the Federal government, in recognition of the need for trained personnel to help with the development and carrying out of community action programs, The North Carolina Fund initiated, in August, 1964, its Community Action Technician (CAT) program. Following completion of a formal training period, these technicians—drawn from returning Peace Corps applications, college graduates and other young men and women sensitive to current social problems—serve in sub-professional capacities as resident trainees in those communities where poverty programs are being established.

E. The Learning Institute of North Carolina: The North Carolina Fund also is serving as one of three sponsors (with Duke University and the University of North Carolina) of the newly-established Learning Institute of North

North Carolina Council On Human Relations Executive Committee

"There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct or more uncertain in its success than to take the lead in the introduction of the new order of things."

Machiavelli wrote these lines in his famous work "The Prince" before 1527. This could be a description of leadership today. There are men and women who will acknowledge the difficulties, the dangers and the uncertainties and who will still accept leadership in efforts to bring about improvements in their society and to develop communities where all men are certain of equal civil and personal rights. These are the men and women who provide the North Carolina Council with leadership—members of the Executive Committee.

HARRY GOLDEN, EDITOR, CAROLINA ISRAELITE

"Colorful" is an inadequate word to describe the career of Harry Golden. To the sizable number of devotees to the Israelite, the story of the years before the birth of the newspaper is well known: For the uninitiated, the story is always heard with interest.

As a boy Mr. Golden sold newspapers on the Lower East Side of New York City. He says today that the memories of the faces, sights and sounds of this "world long vanished" coupled with "an inventory of nearly a half- century of uninterrupted reading" were the "two assets" with which he began the Carolina Irselite some tweny years ago.

Today, Mr. Golden has parlayed these "two assets" into an internationally known newspaper with a paid circultion of "roughly 45,000." He has written several books which have been best sellers: His latest book is entitled So What Else Is New. — the name alone is enough to intrigue any buyer!

Mr. Golden has traveled throughout the world, and has met—in the course of his travels —many internationally known figures who have been reduced (or elevated) to the Golden denominator on the pages of the Israelite.

One of the main areas Mr. Gol-

NATHANIEL WHITE

Mr. White is a dedicated member of the Executive Committee of the state Council and has also worked untiringly in the relatively new Durham Council on Human Relations.

As president of the Service Printing Company, Inc., Mr. White has provided the Council with expert advice on printed materials.

Having earned his B.S. from the Hampton Institute, Hampton, Virgina, in 1947, he was selected for the honor of being Nortn Carolina Hamptonian in 1956.

Another honor was the Silver Beaver Award from the Boy Scouts of America, which is the highest Council award for a volunteer. He was the recipient of the City of Durham Recreation Award in 1958.

With two boys, Nathaniel Jr., 19, a sophomore at Duke University, and Josepn, 17, a senior at Hillsdale High School, it is not surprising to find that Mr. White has been a Scoutmaster since 1942.

He is a Trustee of the White Rock Baptist Church; a member of Board of Directors and Past President of Durham Business and Professional Chain; member of Durham Chamber of Commerce.

DR. VERNON C. TYSON

Pastor of the Jonesboro Heights Methodist Church, Dr. Vernon C. Tyson is one of the younger members of the executive Committee. He is also enthusiastic about the contribution the Human Relations Councils can make in local

Councils At Work

Councils In The Making

The Durham Council is young. It has youthful enthusiasm coupled with mature judgement of its officers and executive committee. This council was fortunate. It had the assistance of a young couple who voulnterred to spend their month's vacation working on a project specified by the council leaders.

Virginia and Ed Barber were born in the South. They wanted to be a part of the human relations movement in North Carolina. Ed has an important position in the text book division of Harpers Publishing, and Virginia is working on he Ph. D. degree.

For part of June and July Ed spent his days interviewing public officials, business leaders in banks, real estate ofices, super markets, utility companies, the telephone company, hospitals, auto sales rooms, restaurants, drug stores and industrial plants o nthe amount of Negro employment, the types of employment available and the general attitudes.

Virginia had a good experience and made a worthwhile contribution through her work in a school readiness program where there were many small children from disadvantaged homes.

At the conclusion of their vacation period the Barbers made a full written report for the Durham Council.

Recently Delores R. Marvin prepared an interesting summary of the report under the title of "What's Ahead for the Negro Job Seeker in Durham." The tittle is superimposed over a very large question mark.

Except in the case of tax supported institutions, Mrs. Marvin report on the program at an open meeting sponsored by the Charlotte. Council.

The Council then plans to help and hopes it will be inter-racial and will be available to many more children, who are so seriously in need of this preparation in order to have a successful school experience.

The Council will work with the public schools, the Charlotte Area Fund, and with church and student groups.

A second service which the Council hopes to perform is in the area of career guidance. A city wide "career clinic" for all high school students is in the discussion and planning stage at press time.

Mr. Charle Lowe, County Commissioner, has accepted chairmanship of the Policy and Program Committee of the Council under which these projects will come.

Officers of the Charlotte Council had a small supper meeting for Mr. Lee Muth of Washington. Mr. Muth has been assigned to North Carolina to implement Title 1B of the War on Poverty Program. This title deals with Operations for the Neighborhood Youth Corps. (work training), Directors of the Charlotte Area Fund were invited to meet Mr. Muth and to learn details of his activities.

WILMINGTON

Wilmington is a city of extremes in the area of human relations. It is said to nave the largest organixation of KKK in the state, but on the other hand there is little racial disturbance and a large measure of cooperation between many persons of good will.

by Mr. Lisbon Berry, a Wilmington lawyer. A nominating committee was appointed and will report to the group which will form the executive committee.

GOLDSBORO

The Chairman, the Executive Committee and the Staff of the State Council hold out a helping hand to local organizations whether there is a local council or not.

Goldsboro does not as yet have a local council although there are plans to organize such a group. However, Goldsboro leaders have worked with untiring zeal to develop a project of sweeping proportions.

Many years ago, a Chicago architect, Daniel Burham, became concerned with urban renewal and city planning. His admonition to cities throughout the United States was "make no little plans."

"Operation Bootstrap" in Goldsboro puts the responsibility, as the name implies, on the people of the community, but it is not a little plan.

"Bootstrap" was an idea nourished by Mrs. Geneva Hamilton, a member of the Community Bi-Racial Council. It goes without saying that Mrs. Hamilton is and has been a tireless worker in community projects.

She points out that poverty is not limited to Negro communities, and that the cycle of poverty must be broken for people of all races.

"This is no time to be worried about the race angle since it does not exist here," says Mrs. Hamilton.

"Colorful" is an inadequate word to describe the career of Harry Golden. To the sizable number of devotees to the Israelite, the story of the years before the birth of the newspaper is well known: For the uninitiated, the story is always heard with interest.

As a boy Mr. Golden sold newspapers on the Lower East Side of New York City. He says today that the memories of the faces, sights and sounds of this "world long vanished" coupled with "an inventory of nearly a half- century of uninterrupted reading" were the "two assets" with which he began the Carolina Irselite some tweny years ago.

Today, Mr. Golden has parlayed these "two assets" into an internationally known newspaper with a paid circultion of "roughly 45,000." He has written several books which have been best sellers: His latest book is entitled So What Else Is New. — the name alone is enough to intrigue any buyer!

Mr. Golden has traveled throughout the world, and has met—in the course of his travels —many internationally known figures who have been reduced (or elevated) to the Golden denominator on the pages of the Israelite.

One of the main areas Mr. Golden has kept constantly under fire is that of prejudice: His paper has championed "the fight of the Negro for first-class citizenship" since its inception. Harry Golden was speaking out on the absurdity of segregation long before it became the-thing-to-do!

WILLIAM S. PAGE

Mr. William S. Page is currently president of the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters and secretary of the North Carolina Television, Inc., (WITN-TV, Washington, North Carolina).

He was employed by the United States Bureau of Customs as a Special Technical Assistant while doing special studies and preparations for foreign services.

He has wide experience in radio and television in many parts of the country. He said that he acquired major interest in the Farmers Broadcasting Service, Kinston, North Carolina (WELS), to which he was elected preident in 1945, a position which he still holds.

He has been President, Kinston Rotary Club; Vice Chairman, Kinston Redevelopment (Urban Renewal) Commission; President, Better Advertising, Inc. As president of the Service Printing Company, Inc., Mr. White has provided the Council with expert advice on printed materials.

Having earned his B.S. from the Hampton Institute, Hampton, Virgina, in 1947, he was selected for the honor of being Nortn Carolina Hamptonian in 1956.

Another honor was the Silver Beaver Award from the Boy Scouts of America, which is the highest Council award for a volunteer. He was the recipient of the City of Durham Recreation Award in 1958.

With two boys, Nathaniel Jr., 19, a sophomore at Duke University, and Josepn, 17, a senior at Hillsdale High School, it is not surprising to find that Mr. White has been a Scoutmaster since 1942.

He is a Trustee of the White Rock Baptist Church; a member of Board of Directors and Past President of Durham Business and Professional Chain; member of Durham Chamber of Commerce.

DR. VERNON C. TYSON

Pastor of the Jonesboro Heights Methodist Church, Dr. Vernon C. Tyson is one of the younger members of the executive Committee. He is also enthusiastic about the contribution the Human Relations Councils can make in local communities throughout the state.

Dr. Tyson was educated at Guilford College and Duke Divinity School. He served as chaplain at Oak Ridge Military Institute, Oak Ridge, North Carolina.

He was a member of the Churchman's Study Tour to Europe and Russia in 1962 and a delegate in 1964 to the Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference of the Methodist Church. He serves as chairman of the Commission on Christian Social Action, North Carolina Council of Churches.

Dr. and Mrs. Tyson have two sons and two daughters.

Some members of the Executive Committee were excessively modest. We hope to have their pictures and biographies in the next issue.

Two New Books Out This Month

Prolific and provocative as always, Mr. Harry Golden has a new book coming out this montn. Even the title brings a smile— "SO WHAT ELSE IS NEW"

Joseph Wood Krutch said in the Saturday Review that the book is typicallly Harry Golden — "an agile, wide-ranging mind, much good humor and a fresh, easy free-flowing style."

Publishers are G. P. Putnam's Sons.

James McBride Dabbs past president and member of the executive committee of the Southern Regional Council, has a new book, WHO SPEAKS FOR THE SOUTH , published the end of October.

Mr. Dabbs, who now lives in Soutn Carolina, devotes his full time to writing and lecturing about the South and its problems and achievements.

Mr. Dabbs points out that just as the Negro has always been the "Southern Cross" he may well be the South's salvation. His book prophecies that "from today's maelstrom a 'new Southerner' will emerge."

Councils in the Making

The Durham Council is young. It has youthful enthusiasm coupled with mature judgement of its officers and executive committee. This council was fortunate. It had the assistance of a young couple who voulnterred to spend their month's vacation working on a project specified by the council leaders.

Virginia and Ed Barber were born in the South. They wanted to be a part of the human relations movement in North Carolina. Ed has an important position in the text book division of Harpers Publishing, and Virginia is working on he Ph. D. degree.

For part of June and July Ed spent his days interviewing public officials, business leaders in banks, real estate ofices, super markets, utility companies, the telephone company, hospitals, auto sales rooms, restaurants, drug stores and industrial plants o nthe amount of Negro employment, the types of employment available and the general attitudes.

Virginia had a good experience and made a worthwhile contribution through her work in a school readiness program where there were many small children from disadvantaged homes.

At the conclusion of their vacation period the Barbers made a full written report for the Durham Council.

Recently Delores R. Marvin prepared an interesting summary of the report under the title of "What's Ahead for the Negro Job Seeker in Durham." The tittle is superimposed over a very large question mark.

Except in the case of tax supported institutions, Mrs. Marvin used no names of businesses or persons in her summary. However, the Durham Council is sending a copy of the report to all those interviewed. Members of the council will make themselves available to answer question about the report or to go into further discussion. Plans are under consideration to make the report public, and perhaps to hold a city-wide meeting to discuss its implication. The names of those interviewed, however, will be held in confidence.

CHARLOTTE-MECKLENGERG

The executive committee of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council has held two meetings this fall. New oficers nominated are Mrs. Martin Cannon, Jr., Chairman; Mr. Fred Alexander, Vice Chairman.

The Charlotte-Mecklenburg is one of the older local orgainzations, and its leaders have been working in human relations projects together for some time.

Charlotte has been recognized nationally for its many achievements in integration especially in public accomodations. According to those who have been active in the Charlottle - Mecklenburg Council through the years, the council was one of the strong catalyst in bringing these developments to the city in a peaceful, cooperative environment. The council gives much credit to the late Harry S. Jones. Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Council from 1954 to 1963.

The Charlotte - Mecklenburg Council plans two projects this year in cooperation with other organizations already involved. The school readiness program begun in Charlotte last year by Mrs. Bertha Maxwell, a special teacher in the public school system, received minor financial support from the Council and major interest in the acomplishments of Mrs. Maxwell and her cooperating groups of teachers.

Vacation time was given up and volunteer service was performed by these teachers for eighty-five pre-schoolers — all from homes where poverty is the rule.

In January Mrs. Maxwell will report on the program at an open meeting sponsored by the Charlotte. Council.

The Council then plans to help and hopes it will be inter-racial and will be available to many more children, who are so seriously in need of this preparation in order to have a successful school experience.

The Council will work with the public schools, the Charlotte Area Fund, and with church and student groups.

A second service which the Council hopes to perform is in the area of career guidance. A city wide "career clinic" for all high school students is in the discussion and planning stage at press time.

Mr. Charle Lowe, County Commissioner, has accepted chairmanship of the Policy and Program Committee of the Council under which these projects will come.

Officers of the Charlotte Council had a small supper meeting for Mr. Lee Muth of Washington. Mr. Muth has been assigned to North Carolina to implement Title 1B of the War on Poverty Program. This title deals with Operations for the Neighborhood Youth Corps. (work training), Directors of the Charlotte Area Fund were invited to meet Mr. Muth and to learn details of his activities.

WILMINGTON

Wilmington is a city of extremes in the area of human relations. It is said to nave the largest organixation of KKK in the state, but on the other hand there is little racial disturbance and a large measure of cooperation between many persons of good will.

Some of these persons have been members of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations for a number of years, but Wilmington has not had its own Council.

Approximately thirty civic leaders including Mayor O. O. Allsbrook are now interested in the formation of a local council to work on projects which will directly benefit Wilmington. A voluntary membership organization brings in many types of individuals in a community and gives them the opportunity to join their efforts these leaders believe.

While the bi-racial councils in North Carolina and the Governorr's Good Neighbor Council provide much needed leadership at the top, the North Carolina Council on Human Relations opens the door for active participation on the part of people of all races and creeds and every economic level.

Wilmington, in the eastren part of the state, will be among the first of the new councils to set up an organization and to make decisions on whicn local projects the members will work.

Thise who expressed an interest in the new council are: Mayor O. O. Allsbrook. George Alper, Seymour Alper, Charles Bekaert, Atty. L. C. Berry Jr., W. E. Bess, Mrs. Herbert Bluethenthal, Mrs. W. G. Broadfoot, Atty. Robert Calder, Dr. Charles M. Cherry, Dr. Harry W. Chandler, Atty. George T. Clark, Mrs. Daniel Darrow, Dr. Hubert A. Eaton, Rev. Hunley Elebash, Dr. R. H. Fisscher, Mrs. Alex W. Fonville, Dr. S. James Gray, Hubert L. Harris, Mrs. Emma Howell, Mrs. B. E. Huffine, T. C. Jervay, Rev. Richard Johnson, Robert Kallman, Rev. Edwin E. Kirton, Dr. M. N. Leary, R. F. Lee, C. H. McDonald, Herbert McKim, Atty. Wallace Murchison, Flagg Newcomb, George Norman, Dr. D. C. Roane, Bishop H. B. Shaw, Mrs. W. E. Sission, Walker Taylor, Jr, Fred B. Tnompson, Dr. L. W. Upperman, Dr. William Wagoner, Dr. James Wethern.

A number of these civic leaders attended the first organization meeting on October 15 in the board room of Carolina Savings and Loan. The meeting was called by Mr. Lisbon Berry, a Wilmington lawyer. A nominating committee was appointed and will report to the group which will form the executive committee.

GOLDSBORO

The Chairman, the Executive Committee and the Staff of the State Council hold out a helping hand to local organizations whether there is a local council or not.

Goldsboro does not as yet have a local council although there are plans to organize such a group. However, Goldsboro leaders have worked with untiring zeal to develop a project of sweeping proportions.

Many years ago, a Chicago architect, Daniel Burham, became concerned with urban renewal and city planning. His admonition to cities throughout the United States was "make no little plans."

"Operation Bootstrap" in Goldsboro puts the responsibility, as the name implies, on the people of the community, but it is not a little plan.

"Bootstrap" was an idea nourished by Mrs. Geneva Hamilton, a member of the Community Bi-Racial Council. It goes without saying that Mrs. Hamilton is and has been a tireless worker in community projects.

She points out that poverty is not limited to Negro communities, and that the cycle of poverty must be broken for people of all races.

"This is no time to be worried about the race angle since it does not exist here," says Mrs. Hamilton.

Approximately 22 civic leaders helped to develop the "Bootstrap" proposal:

Ray Armstrong, Hugh H. Alexander, Mrs. Scott B. Berkeley, Jr., Dr. H. F. Cofield, Lemuel Z. Craft, Walter Foster, Mrs. Geneva B. Hamilton, Mrs. John Henderson, Dr. Osceola Jackson, W. P. Kemp, Jr., Rev. M. W. Morgan, A. B. Reid, James N. Smith, Mrs. Zeno Spence, Jr., Neal A. Stitt, Earl Whitted, r., Dr. Kenneth Wilkins, J. G. Campbell, Rev. J. E. Arnett, George Vann, Mrs. Jewell Weathers, Mrs. Gertrude Weil.

The following statement is taken from the proposal which was prepared for the North Carolina Fund.

"We have taken the attitude that these underprivileged or culturally deprived citizens are not helpless, neither are they altogether responsible for their situation or condition Our aim is to improve the entire community, to the extent that all of our lives will be enriched and there will be a better understanding and better relationship throughout the city.

"This dynamic drive to break the cycle of poverty, we think, can be accomplished by two methods. First, to encourage and inspire poverty victims to become self-relying, and two. where apathy or complacency exist, and our motivations fail, we propose to go into the area or community, house-to-house and door-to-door. In short, we will use the direct as well as the indirect approach simultaneously.

"Our conclusion is that poverty, among other causes, breeds disrespect for law and order. illegitimacy, disease, poor housing conditions and dependency upon public and private charities When this exist, the motivation, self-respect and the worth of the individual is diminished, if not destroyed.

Our objectives and ideas were correlated and are now a part of our Articles of Incorporation."

The plan envisions special guidance of inustrial education centers and technical institutes; an extensive paint-up, clean-up and

Why A Newspaper?

Why not a newspaper?

There is so much to report on the development of human relations in North Carolina, so many related matters of interest from publications you may not see, so many personal experiences to provide fresh inspiration that we shall be plagued with "decisions, decisions" on "we must use this" and "how can we possibly not include that."

We do hope and plan to make the Comment a real newspaper with news, features and editorial opinion so labeled.

We do not plan to compete with the many fine newspapers in North Carolina, and we would like to assure the editors of the New York Times that they need not worry just yet about competition from us.

A PANORAMA

Our purpose will be to bring before you a panorama of achievements and failures in many of the areas of civil and human rights.

The emphasis will be on reports from all parts of North Carolina, especially on the activities of the local councils which are a part of the state organizaton.

We want to communcate to you what is happening in these amazing times of new human rights LAWS.

The doors are just ajar, having been unlocked by the Civil Rights and Anti-Poverty legislation

Grants To The N. C. Council

By Helen Adams,
Executive Director

It is a wonderful coincidence for me that grants made to the North Carolina Council in this, my first year with our organization, have stemmed from two women I knew in my work with Roosevelt Universtiy in Chicago. ,Beyond the usual benefits of a career there are sometimes priceless extra rewards such as meeting and knowing great human beings, It was my good fortune to know both Eleanor Roosevelt and Anita McCormick Blaine. I cherish my memories of both.

Mrs. Blaine was a Founder of Roosevelt University. It was natural that she would have been since this was (and is) an institution of higher learning that practiced integration long before the Supreme Court decision.

Mrs. Blaine was a member of Chicago aristocracy — among the few in her time with steadfast convictions about equal opportunity for all men. In support of these convictions she never lacked the courage to speak and to act.

I can remember — it is almost 20 years ago now — when Mrs. Roosevelt, newly widowed, came to dedicate the new school in memory of her husband. Mrs. Blaine, not in the best of health, was in Florida. She wanted every member of the faculty to be present at that historic dinner, so she wired President Edward J. Sparling that all were to attend with husbands and wives as her guests. Her check for $10,000 followed. This was but the beginning of her interests.

The NEW WORLD FOUNDATION was incorporated in November 1954 "to effectuate the testamentary objectives and purposes of Anita McCormick Blaine."

"The connection between our domestic conflicts over racial seems approproate that we are assisted by the foundation bearing her name.

The Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, headed by The Honorable Adlia E. Stevenson, made a grant to NAIRO (National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials) for the development of an "intern" program. Young people from all parts of the country were selected for a training period in Tarrytown, New York last summer, their living expenses being paid for by the American Jewish Committee. Several were Peace Corps returnees.

These young people were then assigned to selected agencies for active field work, for practical learning experience under supervision. Half of a year's salary comes from the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation through NAIRO. The Agency pays the other half.

Your Council is one of the agencies selected. We are fortunate to have Betty Jo McMakin on our staff. Miss McMakin was born in Spartanburg, South Carolina. She is a graduate of Winthrop College, and entered the Peace Corps immediately upon graduation. For two years she taught elementary school as a member of Philippines Project I. Last year, she taught in an Atlanta elementary school.

Miss McMakin is young, enthusiastic and dedicated. Her work with student groups is attracting atention on college campuses, and her achievements are already outstanding in the two months she has worked with us.

All state Councils on Human Relations are assisted by the impressive parent organizaion — The Southern Regional Council, with headguarters in Atlanta. Mr. Leslie Dunbar is the Executive Director.

The financial assistance given by the Southern Regional Council is important in the implementation of our program. However, the Council gives us many other services. We depend on guidance from Mr. Paul Anthony, Director of field activities; on the research department for help on printed materials, and on leadership from Mr. Dunbar.

Carolina (LINC), an important state-level research and program development agency working in the field of education.

With the enactment of the Economic Opportunity Act by the Federal government in August, 1964, the activities and possibilities of The North Carolina Fund were at once broadened and increased. A conference sponsored by the Fund in mid-August, brought together members of the Task Force of the new Office of Economic Opportunity, representatives from the Fund experimental communities, state officials, and consultants expert in the social-services field. More than 140 representatives met during the three-day session, for the purpose of examining and defining plans for communty action in North Carolina.

The North Carolina Fund also is developing plans whereby it might give assistance to those communities not orginally selected for comprehensive experimental projects, as well as those whch were not among the 66 counties initially submitting 51 proposals for Fund assistance. The Fund is sponsoring a number of regional conferences in different parts of the state to help all North Carolna communities take advantage of federal aid now available under the Economic Opportunity Act.

"The connection between our domestic conflicts over racial justice and our role in international affairs is clear. The relationships between people of different racial and national backgrounds within the United States must be harmonious and socially productive. Only as this condition is fairly achieved can we expect a world that is two-thirds nonwhite to respond positively to our expressed desires and contributions to world peace. Because of this belief, The New World Fondation's interest in "the relationships between peoples and nations and the avoidance of war" is interperted as the promotion of mutual understanding among persons of different racial and national backgrounds as a means toward the elimination of intergroup and international tensions and conflicts," from THE NEW WORLD FOUNDATION REPORT,, 1962-1963.

In June of this year, Mr. Vernon Eagle, Executive Director of the New World Foundation, sent a check for $10.000 "in support of the development of the program of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations with the acquisition of a new executive director."

In appreciation of this grant and to accelerate the program the STATE Council Finance Committee, chaired by Dr. Raymond Wheeler of Charlotte, will seek matching funds from North Carolinians.

"All of uor boys are cary about Bullock," Coach Charlie McIntyre said. "He's a take charge guy, and he's going to help us 100 per cent. I saw him three times last year, and he impressed me greatly.' The young man of whom Mr. McIntyre is speaking so enthusiastically is Lawrence Bullock, a senior transfer student at Mount Airy High School. Young Bullock is Mount Airy's First Negro athlete, and judging by Coach McIntyre's attitude, their team is headed for Victory — in the richest sense of the word.

At Reidsvill Senior High School, Dostor Logan, the only Negro in the student body, plays football for his school. And at Appalachian High School. John Moore, is playing football for the first time . . . the Negro school there does not have a football team.

Thus, in athletics a barrier is tumbling, and a true team spirit is beginning.

CHILDREN FREE TO WORK AND PLAY TOGETHER

In Durham, the Carolina Friends School opened a half-day kindergarten program as the beginning of a long-range project which will eventually include all six grades. Mrs. Peter Klopfer, chairman, said, "It is hoped that students will come from a wide range of religious, racial and social backgrounds."

Again, a barrier tumbles and children are free to learn, work, and play together.

RESPONSIBILITY

In Charlotte, Bethune School. a predominately Negro school, has operated two years with white children enrolled and taught by an all-Negro faculty. Dr. A. Craig Phillips, superintendent of the Charlotte - Mecklenburg system, spoke to its more than 100 principals: "This will be the most significant year so far in the integration of our youngsters . . . More Negro children will attend formerly all-white schools this fall than ever before. I want you to be aware, to work with parents' groups and teachers as you have in the past. I emphasie the need to carry this responsbility and carry it well." (As many as 58 of the city's 112 schools may be desegregrated during the 1964-65 school year.)

Responsibility — a key word in this time of transition.

REASON AND LOGIC

Yet another barrier fell with the opening of the Winston-Salem-Forsyth school system. The newly desegregated Hanes Junior High School opened with a faculty of 12 white teachers and 7 Negro teachers under the supervision of a white principal. The principal, Larry Graham, expressed hope that the new arrangement will succeed: "If we can hold the white students, our operation will be unique." Raymond Sarbaugh, associate superintendent of schools in charge of instruction, said the white teachers made "a wonderful response" to the idea of working with a biracial faculty. And Marvin Ward, superintendent of schools, stated "We-ve not had any mass exodus (of white students) yet." He called the faculty desegregation "the only reasonable and logical thing to do."

Reason and Logic — two key words in the relatively smooth transition now operating in the state.

SEGREGATION REMAINS

These are examples of genuine desegregation newly occuring in public school systems throughout North Carolina. This gives a total of 61 school dsitricts with biracial schools leaving 110 segregated districts.

RACE FORGOTTEN

As for desegregation in special education — last summer in Salem the Governor's School, now in its second year of operation, as a special impetus to gifted students in academics and the fine arts, employed Miss Thelma Cumbo, a Negro counselor. as assistant director of guidance. According to Miss Cumbo, "Race was long forgotten before the two months were up." The school had 400 students, including 28 Negroes in al phases of the program. They were not segregated.

"Most of my work was with white children," Miss Cumbo continued. "If they were concerned about my race, they never showed it. This is the most pleasant and rewarding experience I've ever had!"

The Governor's School, she said, is a 'grand experiment" in what happens when young people of both races are left to work out their problems with no outside influences . . . 'Although being with members of another race or of different ethnic groups was new to practically all these students, race was not mentioned as a dislike in a survey we took of the young people. Instead of animosity, the young people gained a healthy knowledge and respect for people unlike themselves. This integrated situation affected both the staff and the students. Race was not a problem o nthe campus. It was unbelievable that this could happen in the South. It is really fantastic! Students have expressed it in their actions although they did not know each other when they came here."

1964 Civil Rights Act

And so with the Public Accomodations Title, under which it has been and will continue to be) quite complicated and difficult to take enforcement action.

In effect, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is a blueprint for the future. It relieves the non-racist resident of the South, for instance, of the burden of personal choice. He can point to the law and declare that he has no choice but to comply. As for the racists, two or three years of enforcement probably will take care of that problem.

For now, the federal government has the initiative in adjudicating civil rights cases. This is the end of the begnning, at least, in the journey toward a pluralistic society in which all native-born citizens can move untrammelled and unimpeded.

HR 7152—the Civil Rights Act of 7964—bears enough amending scars to make it practically unreadable. Nevertheless, pending court action on any one of the 11 titles offered in the law, this is what the provisions mean:

Title I pumped up the voting rights of all citizens by barring unequal application of voting requirements (that is, making a Negro citizen read or do something not required from white citizens); prohibited the denial of the right to vote because of immaterial errors in application, required that all literacy tests be administered in writing and made a sixth-grade education (if in English or general studies) a "rebuttable presumption of literacy." This is a gut title, applicable especially attorney general's right to take action against a "pattern of resistance" to these provisions when he belives the complaint is "meritorious" and when he certifies that the aggreived persons are unable to initiate their own suits for financial or social reasons. This is the so-called "protector" title which, so far as the desegragation of public facilities is concerned, makes the attorney general the most important office-holder in the nation. His initiative alone will put teeth into the provision.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title IV promises oficial federal examination of the progress of desegregation in the public schools, with built-in ways for hastening this progress. Again the attorney general is authorized to file suits for desegregation of public schools and colleges if he believes the complaint is meritorious and that his participation would "materially further" orderly school desegregration.

Title IV also makes clear that the law does not authorize attempts to balance the schools facially, nor does it effect the existing powers of the courts to insure compliance with constitutional standards.

Title V extended and broadened the duties of the Civil Rights Commission as a national "clearing-house" for civil rights information, but prohibited the Commission from investigating membership practices of fraternal orders and college fraternities.

is to be given Indians in areas near or adjoining Indian reservations. Non-profit private membership clubs are also exempted, as well as state, local and national governments — it being understood that the policy of the federal government is the insurance of equal employment opportunity for all citiens.

This title does not outlaw seniority or merit systems or the establishment of different standards of compensation or terms of employment, so long as such systems and actions do not rest upon racial or religious discrimination.

An Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is created under the title to assist in getting voluntary compliance. If the EEOC cannot get voluntary compliance after 60 days of conciliation. the aggrieved individual can bring suit in court, and the court can order cessation of the unlawful practice and/or reinstatement of the individual(s) involved. All judicial proceedings are subject to normal appeal and, again, the attorney general can request a three-judge court to hear such a case if he believes it to be "of general public interest."

The codes to be followed by employers are exhaustive and complex, but the heart of the matter is an attempt to establish such hiring practices that will allow the Negro minority, religious minorities, etc., to get an equal break at the jobs the business world long denied them.

bus drive away. It was not where she had intended to get out, and she walked home. That street in Birmingham was her road to Damascus. All the way home she was angry — angry at the bus driver who made her move. but mostly at herself for moving. Today that girl is a woman who has devoted most of her life to the cause of racial equality.

Not long after the beginning of World War II, a bright young Southerner went to Harvard Un-i versity to enter medical school. His father was a doctor, and he had been brought up in the tradition of serving his fellowman. He had also been brought up as a Southerner, and he was proud of it. He had carried to Harvard, along with his homesickness, a great pride in the South. The first week he was there, in the cafeteria a Negro student sat down beside him. His first thought was that this shouldn't happen to him, and that he should get up and move. Then, he thought that he was a stranger in a strange land, and he had chosen to come here, He ate his lunch and never spoke to the man beside him. But when he left he did not go to his class or the library. but to his room where he wrestled with himself all afternoon. When he left his room later that night he had seen the blinding light and he had heard a voice. He practices medicine now in his home town, and has worked quietly and efficiently to see that the city hospital is intregated, that Negro doctors may practice there, and he is an oficer of the local Council on Human Relations.

There is another side to this picture: Intolerance thrives on both sides of the color line. Little Negro children have to learn the hardest lesson any children are taught; that they are black and therefore shut out from much they see around them. They learn this early, for their own protection, and it is hard to unlearn. One man, a Negro, a college graduate, a leader not only of his own people, but of our interracial group, had. until about ten years ago, a problem. At every meeting he attended there was an "Invocation" or a "Grace" said. If the minister who prayed was a white man, he got up and left the room. Oh, he came back, and worked with the others, but he could not, as he said, "let a white man prayed over me." But he is a Christian, and if there is anything harder to be in the South than a Negro Christian, what is it? That there are so many of them is a miracle! He wanted to be a good Christian. and he realized that what he was doing was denying just what Christianity means: the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. He sits now, and bows his head with everyone else.

Early in this century the order of things was set and rarely shaken, Negroes had their place and that place was very close to the white people. Children of both races palyed together on the dusty streets of little Southern town. There were a lot of Negroes and very few Jews. But, strangely enoguh, the Jews were not despised as a minority. They had a role to play: they read books and worked to get public libraries; they served on school boards. They could even be members of the country club! One day a Jewish girl from a little Southern town went North to college, not only North but to New York City. Here she met prejudice for the first time, and for the first time she was labeled, not SMART, as they called her back home modations Title, under which it has been and will continue to be) quite complicated and difficult to take enforcement action.

In effect, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is a blueprint for the future. It relieves the non-racist resident of the South, for instance, of the burden of personal choice. He can point to the law and declare that he has no choice but to comply. As for the racists, two or three years of enforcement probably will take care of that problem.

For now, the federal government has the initiative in adjudicating civil rights cases. This is the end of the begnning, at least, in the journey toward a pluralistic society in which all native-born citizens can move untrammelled and unimpeded.

This is a gut title, applicable especially to those states and areas where wholsale denials of voting rights have kept Negro registration low.

Title II, the most controversial of the titles but certainly the most logical,, bars discrimination in the following public accommodations: Restaurants, cafeterias ,lunch rooms, lunch counters, soda fountains, service stations, motion pictures, theaters, concert halls, sports arenas, stadiums and any hotel, motel or lodging house except owner-occupied units of five rooms or less. Not specifically covered (except when located in restaurants or hotels) are barber shops, retail stores, bars, bowling alleys, etc. Specifically exempted were private clubs.

Relief under this title is suit through the courts for "preventive relief" by injunction (action which promptly closed, for example, the Pickrick Restaurant in Atlanta, Georgia.) In some cases, the courts are permitted to refer the complaint to the Community Relations Service for 60-120 days, if there seems a reasonable chance of voluntary compliance.

Under this title, too, the attorney general of the United is authorized to bring civil action when he 'has reasonable cause to believe" there is a specific pattern of resistance to granting those rights guaranteed under this provision. Action could be brought by him against a chain of resturants, for instance, or a local or state restaurant association practicing segregation for injunctive relief.

The attorney general can also request that a three-judge court (rather than a jury) hear the actual enforcement case; and the courts themselves are directed to expidite suits brought by the attorney general.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title III merely emphasizes the he believes the complaint is "meritorious" and when he certifies that the aggreived persons are unable to initiate their own suits for financial or social reasons. This is the so-called "protector" title which, so far as the desegragation of public facilities is concerned, makes the attorney general the most important office-holder in the nation. His initiative alone will put teeth into the provision.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title V extended and broadened the duties of the Civil Rights Commission as a national "clearing-house" for civil rights information, but prohibited the Commission from investigating membership practices of fraternal orders and college fraternities.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title VI bars discrimination under any program or activity receiving federal assistance — although is was made clear that Title VI could not be used to enforce equal employment practices. Enforcement of this title can be gained through the courts only after federal agencies have unsuccessfullly sought voluntary compliance. Any action involving the reduction of federal assistance as a means of enforcement is subject to judicial review. This is a sleeper title, and much more important in its future ramifications than most people believe.

Title VII outlaws employment practices based on the grounds of race, color, religion, sex or national origin. This is a confusing provision, difficult to understand and, probably, even more difficult to enforce. Generally, it prevents failure or refusal to hire or fire any person for reasons of race, color, religion, etc., or to discriminate against him with respect to pay or terms of employment. In the case of (union) hiring halls, failure to refer a worker for the above reasons is also outlawed.

There can be no segregation, classification or any limitation of an employee in any way whatsoever that would depriive him of equal employment oportunities. Unions cannot exclude potential members on these grounds; there can be no discrimination in apprenticeship or training programs; and no job notices published indicating racial or other preferences. Exempted are religious groups employing individuals to carry out specific religious missions, hiring for educational activities, hiring when religion, sex or national origin are bona fide occupational qqualifications (as in the case of a female secretary or a foreign alien employed for his language facility.)

Private schools are also exempted; preferential treatment bership clubs are also exempted, as well as state, local and national governments — it being understood that the policy of the federal government is the insurance of equal employment opportunity for all citiens.

This title does not outlaw seniority or merit systems or the establishment of different standards of compensation or terms of employment, so long as such systems and actions do not rest upon racial or religious discrimination.

An Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is created under the title to assist in getting voluntary compliance. If the EEOC cannot get voluntary compliance after 60 days of conciliation. the aggrieved individual can bring suit in court, and the court can order cessation of the unlawful practice and/or reinstatement of the individual(s) involved. ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title VIII directs the Census Bureau to gather registration and voting figures throughout the country on primary and general elections — and, by 1970, to do this on a national scale. This is for the benefit of the Civil Rights Commission in getting full compliance with the law.

Title IV deals with legal procedure in the adjudication of civil rights cases. The provisions make "reviewable in the higher federal courts" the action of federal district courts in remanding a civil rights case to state courts. Put simply, the passage of a civil rights case through the courts is not only swift, but direct.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title IX also authorizes the attorney general to intervene in private suits where persons have alleged denial of equal protection of the laws under the 14th amendment — a general right designed to cover civil rights cases in which the attorney general is not specifically allowed to take an interest.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title X establishes a Community Relations Service to aid communities in resolving their civil rights difficulties.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Title XI is a miscellaneous. "catch-all" title, which sets the maximum sentences that can be given offenders under the Act for criminal contempt— six months imprisonment, $1,000 maximum fine. Defendants in such cases are also entitled to jury trial upon demand. No person may be subjected to criminal prosecution and criminal contempt proceedings fo rthe same act or failure to act. Title XI also states that no one may be convicted under the act unless it is proved that act or failure to act was intentional. An appropriations provision also was written in to cover government expenses in carrying out the Act.

One board member was chosen from Fayetteville State College, leaving one board membership to be filled.

The students voted to affiliate their organization with the North Carolina Council: The Council, in turn, welcomes the opportunity to work with this group of young men and women on their current and forthcoming projects. We are certain our union will be beneficial to both Councils.

Two Permanent Columns To Be Featured Monthly

On page two and three of the COMMENT the editors plan to have two columns, one on the activities and plans of the North Carolina Fund and its relations forward in the state—the other to other programs being carried will be a Religious Review whch will be, in essence, a report of religious activities in human relations work and quotes from opinions expressed in sermons and in articles prepared by religious leaders.

The material we use this month on the North Carolina Fund may be well known to some of you but your editors have discovered that there are still many North Carolina cititzens who know of the Fund in a general way but are not completely informed as to its origin, purposes and programs.

In months ahead we hope to report to you on the Funds' relationship to the Economic Opportunity Act, on progress in the various communities where Fund projects are being undertaken.

fix-up campaign involving high school students as block or area captains. Art councils, neighborhood theaters, children's drama groups, literature and writing classes, festivals, exhibits and lecture series are all spelled out in the plan.

It is believed that at least parts of the program will qualify under the Economic Opportunity Act, and that these dedicated Goldsboro leaders will be rewarded for their many long hours of unselfish effort by realizing part of the dream.

The most difficult phase of the plan is housing. Housing projects, as such, will not be eligible for assistance through the anti-poverty legislation, and Goldsboro does not have urban renewal.

There is a serious need for a housing program in Goldsboro. Following a meeting of the Good Neighbor Council in that city, a group was taken on a bus tour to be shown a number of entire blocks where housing rehabilitation is a grave necessity.

Further study on this part of the "Bootstrap" plan will be made. The staff of the State Council will make every effort to be helpful to Mrs. Hamilton, Mr. Craft and all the others who are eager to make life better for at least 500 families.

Dear Member:

The staff of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations wishes to extend Holiday Greetings to you.

There is no better time to express our gratitude than in this season when men feel the power of good will and recognize the benefits of brotherly love.

True, this is also a season of lists; of buying and worrying--Is it right? Will it make them happy?

It is also a season for thinking. We think of those who will not be happy and those who are not free.

Your Council on Human Relations is not a vast organization, but perhaps because of you and others like you we add here and there to the well being of the people of our state.

With another year just ahead of us we realize the exciting opportunities we have to broaden and deepen the scope of our work. We have new laws, new attitudes and new hopes, and we need new people working for good human relations. Therefore, may we suggest a very special and meaningful Christmas gift for your friends? Namely, the gift of a membership in the North Carolina Council on Human Relations.

It will be our pleasure to inform your friends that you have honored them in this way and to wish them a joyous holiday on your behalf.

A year ago, Frank Sullivan wrote a long poem which appeared in the New Yorker. This is the last stanza:

> At this new Season, like no other,
> Let us call each man our brother,
> And now resolve that from this date
> We'll learn to free our world from hate.

For the holidays and for the New Year, our best wishes,

Sincerely,

Helen Adams

February 2, 1965

TO: Paul Anthony, Director of Field Services, SRC

FROM: Edwyn E. Lewis, Jr., Executive Director

SUBJECT: Quarterly Report - October through December, 1964

During the final quarter of 1964 the Executive Director traveled approximately 7,000 miles in his normal duties throughout the state. He made approximately 30 speeches, appeared on a number of radio and television programs, and attended innumerable committee and board meetings both of councils and other organizations engaged in similar work. He also appeared on the program in leading a discussion seminar and made a speech for the state convention of the NAACP.

During this period the Executive Director was appointed to the Commission on Civil Rights for the state of Florida and has surveyed approximately 15 cities. The Council is being reimbursed for these duties.

A chapter of the Florida Council has been established and petitioned for membership in DeLand, correctly known as Western Volusia Council on Human Relations. The Director met with the St. Petersburg Board of Directors and a closer relationship has been established than we have been able to achieve in many years. He has continued his work in Vero Beach, St. Augustine, Ocala, and Dunedin with the possibility of establishing chapters in at lease several of these locations. Membership has grown from the approximately 1,400 at the time of the presentation of the George S. Mitchell Award to slightly over 1,700.

During this period the following additional projects have been taken on: 4 new Wider Horizons, 2 Employment Survey and Placement projects, 2 Employment Preparation projects, 6 banquets of which four were held for the first time.

Enclosed you will find our financial report prepared by a certified public accountant for the year 1964.

QUARTERLY REPORT

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

TO: Southern Regional Council

FROM: Baxton Bryant

Quarterly Report: December, January, February, 1965

The first few months in Tennessee were spent in getting acquainted. Just the geography and a little understanding of the three sections of the state was essential to understanding the scope of the work to be done. Tennessee could be three states in political, economical, and cultural patterns, west, middle, and east. Schedule of travel-how far to go and be able to return to home base for the night? How best to use travel money to touch as many points as possible when in East or West Tennessee became part of our orientation the first few months.

Where was the membership located? Where were we strongest? Where were we weakest? What area needed help most? What areas did I need to learn first. What was past history? What direction should we start for future programs.

The first few days were spent in the office going over some of the records. Kay Jones was most helpful. Many of the people that I needed to see in Nashville were very busy. There was some frustration as to what to do with the new man. The old Director felt that it wasn't her job to introduce the new Director to the community. I am sure that leadership in the Council felt that since the old director was still in the office that it wasn't necessary for them to interrupt a busy schedule to give the new director an introduction. All of this was very cordial, just left the first few days hanging.

The Annual Meeting was fast approaching and most of the arrangements had been made. I felt that the Annual Meeting was properly the responsibility of the old director. It was the closing out of the year and it gave me time to think about the new one.

The Council had wanted to broaden the base of their interest when I was employed. This I set out to do. I was distrubed that we had only one live, active, fully affiliated Council in four Metropolitan areas of the state, Nashville. Memphis was wanting to disband, we were loosely tied to Chattanooga and didn't have a chapter in Knoxville. It seemed to me if we were to operate as a state council we must have strong, fully connected chapters in the four big cities. Memphis seemed most critical. There we had a chapter that was wanting to quit. This attitude had come about because of poor leadership in the local chapter and the feeling that the passage of the Civil Rights Bill had bannished the main purpose of our existance. I decided to start in Memphis. But before Memphis, the Anti-poverty Program started calling from Sewanee.

Sewanee

My first field trip was to Sewanee to visit the campus of the University of the South. There I met one of the members of our Council, Rev. David Collins, Chaplain of the University. He told me about the integration of grades 1-8, of their school, made up of three hundred fifty (350) whites and fifty (50) Negro students. Thirty five (35) of the Negro children needed tutoring in order to keep up with their fellow white students. The University had conducted a summer school session in 1964 to aid the students. With the help of adult directors and student assistants, a tutoring school was being conducted in the afternoon in the Episcopal Parish House. I attended this school with Mrs. G. B. Meyers the director. Rev. Charles Winters, Professor of Theology in the Seminary, seemed to be one of the Natural leaders. In the evening a meeting was held in the Parish House of the Social Action Committee of the local parish and the school was discussed. I told them help might be available through the Community Action Program just getting started in the state. I promised that I would contact the State Coordinator, Mr. Harlan Matthews, for information from them. My first trip was very enjoyable, met a lot of fine people many of which are now members of the Council.

In contacting Mr. Matthews, I found that the program was dormant in the state. Many things were talked about, out very little being done. Mr. Matthews referred me to Mr. Ed Angus, one of his young assistants in the Office of Finance and Administration. Mr. Angus gave me some information on the program and told me that Mr. Matthews was only serving to channel Federal information to the state and that a State Coordinator would be appointed in the near future.

Dr. John Dyer was appointed State Coordinator in January. This was one of the finiest things that have happened to the program in Tennessee. He is not a political hack. He has his PhD. in the field of Finance and Administration. He has a keen mind and a dedication to the aims and objectives of the Economic Opportunity Act. I got acquainted with him early inJJanuary and planned a field trip with him to Sewanee. The trip was very informative to me and I am sure of much help and information to Sewanee. Plans were made for them to make application for Headstart and assistance to their tutoring program.

Memphis

The first trip to Memphis was on December 21-22. I started talking about a live growing chapter in Memphis and never gave any hint that I knew that they had been thinking about closing shop. Ready allies for this kind of talk were found in the persons of Dr. Vasco Smith, Mrs. Ray Allen, David Caywood and soon the president, James Gilliland. Good solid visits were had with several of the members including Carl Carson. I accepted a date to speak to the Memphis Chapter on January 13th. Some forty (40) people were in attendance. The need for the Council was stressed and a pledge that we would give full assistance from the State Council. New committees (program, community needs, hospital, swimming pools, and membership) were appointed by the president. Each committee was to have a report for the next months meeting.

I attended the meeting in February and was very encouraged by the reports of the committees. The membership committee planned a campaign for March and April. They hoped to increase their membership from 75 to 300. Mrs. Ray Allen and Rev. James Lawson are Co-chairmen. Professor Harry Minatree of Memphis State, new program chairman, promised some dynamic speakers for future programs. He announced that the Memphis Chapter of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations was joining with the Urban League to sponsor Brooks Hays in March. Things had began to look up in Memphis. Jim Gilliland had turned from a pessimist to an optimist. He was leading the Chapter.

WEST TENNESSEE

Somerville

I made my first trip to Somerville on January 15th. Carrying out one of the conditions of the Field Foundation Grant, that we aid small communities, I wanted to check on the Economic Opportunity Program. I went to the office of County Judge Virgil Luck. He was nice, but a little skiddish. We got no where talking. I asked him who had shown any interest in the program in the white community. He referred me to a forty year old Lawyer, John Wilder. My first meeting with John Wilder, a few minutes later, proved to be more productive than the one concluded with the Judge. His father had been a large land owner and had passed the estate on to a brilliant son. Segregation had been a way of life to the entire community, but here was a man beginning the slow process of becoming a new son of the South, ready to live with and in some way help bring about the needed change.

We talked about Tent City and the bitterness of the past. Only a short visit with him revealed, despite his intention of becoming a part of the New South, his total ignorance about the militant Negro community. I thought here our Council might help. I told him I was going to visit the militant Negro community. Here started a practice I have continued all over Tennessee. I never visit a community without letting my contacts with the power structure and the militant Negro community know whom I have visited in each community.

I returned to visit Wilder and members of the Negro community on February 20th to speak to a meeting called by the Original Civic and Welfare League. I visited the community before the meeting, met and liked John McFerrin. In my talk to the group I urged them to continue to be militant, but also responsible. There was good rapport and response.

The Poverty Program offers a good vehicle, through its requirement of a representative committee, to bring hostile groups together. This was to be my goal-to get the militant Negro community and the local government personnel sitting together on Poverty.

John McFerrin is a pathetic case. The battle has left its mark. In my opinion he is a sick man and his name has become a symbol of the fight the Negroes are carrying on. I found Mrs. McFerrin to be a very sane, cool, clear thinking person. I wanted to get to know her better.

There are two Civil Rights Workers in the community, Debbie Rib, plump, Jewish (turn Quaker) girl from New York by way of Fisk University and Danny Beagle, a stay on from the Cornell Project last summer. We had a little difference of approach to the problem. Both Civil Rights Workers were completely hostile to the white community.

I also made contact with Rev. B. L. Gaddie, Pastor of Somerville's Methodist Church, I asked him to write Bishop Ellis Finger, of Nashville for a letter about myself and the Tennessee Council on Human Relations. I felt we had a little foot hold in the community and was anxious to see what could be done.

Bolivar

Mrs. Bernice Miller, beauty operator, member of our Council, and a battler for Negro rights in Bolivar, has been our Council's main contact in the Negro community for some time. Kay Jones had already done a great job here in opening employment for Negroes. I also got to know, quite well, Mr. McCoy Ross, Superintendent of County Schools. Short visits were made to them in January and February. We are looking forward to working with them on the Poverty Program.

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

FEBRUARY, 1965 | 1106 19th AVENUE, SOUTH | NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE | VOL. 6, NO. 2

SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING

January 28 & 29, 1965 — Nashville, Tennessee

WHITNEY YOUNG SPEAKS AT DINNER

The Andrew Jackson Hotel ballroom was packed with Council members and guests for the dinner meeting. The necessity for close seating arrangements contributed to the friendliness as persons from different parts of the state got acquainted over the passing of plates and shifting of silver. The presence of thirty-one (31) newsmen from African countries added a cosmopolitan touch to the occasion, and they were warmly applauded following their introduction by President Willis. Equally enthusiastic was the welcome given the ten persons in attendance from Fayette County, the six from Haywood, and a delegation from Bolivar.

Mr. Young opened his address by saying that "these meetings leave me with a feeling of hope and show America at its best. There is a blending here, the melting pot concept, teamwork, and optimism. . . . There is a need to see beneath the veneer, beneath the layer of skin, to the human heart that breathes for freedom". In tracing the civil rights revolution to its earliest beginnings, he considered that it began with the creation of man himself "and with the creation of qualities that disturb men." The resentment against inequality is in the American tradition with the Boston Tea Party as our first concerted act of civil disobedience. Street demonstrations in our country were led by Susan B. Anthony and Carrie Nation. Early leaders in the labor movement used boycotts and picketing until they obtained recognition for their cause.

Negro protests are real, not superficial. Some of the realities of 1965 are: 25 percent of the Negro labor market is unemployed; Negroes yearly income is only 53 percent of that of whites; 50 percent of Negro students are out of school; Negroes have 3½ years less education, and they die 7½ years sooner. The basic citizenship step of voting may mean loss of job or death for Negroes.

Tennessee cities, especially Nashville have made comparative progress, but violent confrontations may have been postponed. "Nashville has bought time, not immunity. The same tensions are here as elsewhere . . . It is not enough to say that we are better than Jackson or Philadelphia, Mississippi. The only criteria are equality and justice. Peace is not enough; it should be the presence of justice, the absence of tension and prejudice . . . People who passed the Civil Rights Bill were certain that the Negroes could not take advantage of what the Bill would allow". Integration should not be seen as a problem but as an opportunity. Integrated areas are signs of sophistication and maturity. The test of humaneness is to look beyond oneself and family and seek the cause of another human being. "Otherwise we are robots . . . To leave a name of courage is the best heritage."

President Willis presided at the dinner meeting, and introduced the Honorable Beverly Briley, Mayor of Nashville-

Mr. Whitney M. Young, Jr., Executive Director National Urban League and our Annual Meeting Dinner Speaker, talks to our new Executive Director, Baxton Bryant, and our former president, Mr. William R. Willis, Jr.

Davidson County. Mayor Briley recalled his participation on the panel of Tennessee Mayors at the meeting a year ago. He welcomed the conference to Nashville, and said that such meetings as ours are credits to the community. Dr. V. W. Henderson, head of the Department of Business Administration and Economics at Fisk University, and our Council's board member introduced Mr. Young who is Executive Director of the National Urban League. The invocation was given by Rabbi Randall Falk and the Benediction by the Rev. Leo Seiner.

THE POVERTY PROGRAM

Mr. Christopher Weeks, Special assistant to Mr. Sargent Shriver, Economic Opportunity Program spoke at the opening luncheon session of the Annual Meeting. It was an overflow audience which listened intently to his address entitled, "The Poverty Program: New Ways To Involve The Poor".

The first thirty Job Corps enrolees are now in a Maryland camp. Selection criteria includes deprivation factors, as: overcrowded housing, parents formal education less than eighth grade, father unemployed for more than two years, broken home, etc. Priority given to applicants with largest number of strikes against them. Goal is to train the victims of poverty to help others who live in poverty. Recognition is given to the need and desire of the poverty dwellers to participate in the planning and programs of the Economic Opportunity Act. Poor people can verbalize their needs, although their mode of expression may seem strange to the outsider. "Rural areas need the conviction that poverty is a problem which something can be done about."

A community action organization, a local level group, can apply for help through the Office of Economic Opportunity if it represents a cross-section of organizations in the community, if it has ideas, and if it is in direct involvement with poor people in deciding what should be done and who to do it. It may be a tax supported organization or a private nonprofit one. The possibilities range from pre-school facilities, through junior high school student projects into young and mature adult groups.

Mrs. Martha Ragland presiding at the luncheon expressed the appreciation of the Council to Congressman Richard Fulton in persuading Mr. Weeks to come to Tennessee for our meeting. Dr. W. T. Crutcher of Knoxville gave the invocation. Questions from the audience at the end of the address indicated enthusiasm and some skepticism about the poverty program. Later in the afternoon Mr. Weeks met with the delegation from Fayette County.

Mr. Christopher Weeks was the speaker at our Annual Meeting Luncheon and he is from the Office of Economic Opportunity, working with the War on Poverty Program.

TENNESSEE MOSAIC

With Mrs. John C. Hull presiding, the Thursday afternoon session put together a fascinating picture of progress and discouragement in undertakings in Tennessee communities.

Employment Progress in Jackson*

Mr. Albert Porter, reporting

Although Jackson has a high percentage of teachers and college educated persons, in comparison with many West Tennessee communities, there is a considerable pool of Negro citizens who are unemployed or underemployed. Under Negro community leadership, Negroes seeking better jobs filed applications, giving their qualifications, and job preference. Business and industry did not respond to invitations to discuss employment. The ensuing withdrawal of Negro trade from Jackson businesses proved effective in bringing about communication with Chamber of Commerce and industry. Eighteen retail establishments started training programs and Negro clerks were hired. Industry began with token employment of Negroes, but has moved cautiously toward non-discriminatory employment. Industry considering a move to Jackson now meets with Negro leadership groups to discuss and settle matter of Negro employment before locating. Monthly meetings are held in Negro community and with Chamber of Commerce representatives. Hopeful about future as Jackson business knows that action will follow if negotiations fail.

Sewanee: A Community With A Plan*

Rev. Dr. Charles Winters, Reporting

This is a community of 1,400 with a college as its core and the village around it. Local public school recently integrated by court order, following petitions signed by Negro and white citizens with children of school age. The school integration confirmed that the two-teacher-eight-grade school formerly available to Negro students did not equip them to compete successfully in the new school setting, composed in part of children from college faculty homes with pre-school and kindergarten experience. Tutorial program established, and now operated by PTA, using college students with professional teachers as supervisors. Hope is to expand the program for broader remedial work and adult education through a poverty program grant.

Voluntary Desegregation and Established Integration in Chattanooga*

Dr. M. J. Jones, reporting

"Segregation is a barrier, an estrangement, legal and non-legal separation, a way of looking at a Negro and the way a Negro regards himself". There are 200 eating places in Chattanooga. Except for larger ones and those with national franchise, the exact number which are genuinely open is unknown. All tax-supported places are open as are theatres, most cultural programs in city. Tax supported hospital not wholly integrated. City-county schools are bound by non-discriminatory pledge, but are engaged in a gradual desegregation pattern to be fulfilled in 1969. School board has a Negro member; Negro appointed coordinator of schools; a Negro teacher in Educational TV. Vocation-technical schools are open. University of Chattanooga has signed pledge to desegregate. Ministerial and bar associations have Negro members and two Negro doctors are members of county medical association. "We still have far to go."

Oak Ridge—Uncle Sam, the Promised Land and Cupid*

Rev. Roy Colby, reporting

Oak Ridge was built and supported by the Federal government, and segregated housing was built into it. While fair employment opportunities have increased through the efforts of local human relations groups, and the insistence of the Federal government, there has been no real break in segregated housing pattern. Fair Housing Council began in summer of 1964 to develop coordinated service on open occupancy housing, gather case data on discriminatory practices, assess attitudes in different neighborhoods, and approach real estate agencies. (No response from realtors.) FHC compiles names of persons willing to live in integrated areas and collects information on empty dwellings, trying to match the two. Housing tours arranged for Negroes to acquaint them with market in currently white areas. Federal agencies are willing and interested in helping. Summer is time of greatest turnover in housing. Real estate opposition is latent but real. Uncle Sam built in segregation, Oak Ridge was the promised land of a new day, and the Fair Housing Council is playing cupid.

Nashville Seeks Good Housing For All*

Mrs. Neil Stein, reporting

United Church Women interest in housing has led to concern with zoning and housing needs in the city. A bus tour of low income areas, led by Nashville Housing Authority officials and welfare workers personally knowledgable. The Housing Committee of UCW has visited City Council in regard to proposed new zoning code, presented names of responsible citizens to Mayor for consideration in appointment to new committees considering housing and zoning, and discovered and publicized the unsuitable, unhealthy, and dangerous multiple family dwellings recently constructed and characterized as "instant slums". Direct communication with all city councilmen is being developed. The goal of United Church Women in this undertaking is "Good Housing for All".

Knoxville Experiments with Tutorial Programs*

Mrs. Thelma Present, reporting

"Knoxville voluntarily became an open city, and everyone sat down and forgot problems of integration!" Negroes needed improved education to take advantage of employment possibilities and facilities now available. First year tutorial program organized for high school juniors and seniors, and was a great success. Board of trustees was improved and Knoxville College sponsorship obtained. Survey made to determine needs and cost; budget of $5,500 set. Professional coordinator employed which school board paid for along with books and necessary supplies. Funds raised locally ($1,500) with foundation grants completed budget. Thirty teachers volunteered services; 9 Oak Ridge scientist drove to Knoxville to teach. Eventually teachers were given small stipend. Two hundred fifty students helped. Year-round tutorial program needed and federal grants being sought to make this possible.

Johnson City: In Education There Comes A Time*

Mrs. Eugene Kilgore, reporting

Johnson City school system has 6000 pupils and less than 600 are Negro. With small segregated schools it is impossible to have well-rounded school program. "We slept until 1961, so we were wel-rested". The city had offered an alleged desegregation program which involved zones in zones, so that in reality there were two segregated zones for Negro pupils. Negro children who enrolled outside of these zones were later eased out of white schools. It took two years to get people aroused. All parents of junior and senior high school Negro students were contacted and asked this question, "Will you go along with desegregation?" There were 340 parents signatures to petition for full desegregation. Negotiations with the City Commissioners, School board, Superintendent failed. One hundred students presented themselves at elementary and high schools in September. Most were rejected. Legal advice sought, and suit filed in Federal court on December 31, 1964. Show cause hearing set for School Board on January 15 at Federal Court meeting in Greeneville. Court decision instructed school board to admit immediately certain children who had been denied, but the status of students seeking admittance to junior high schools is uncertain. Full integration ordered for the coming school year. "We will not stop until complete desegregation is achieved in our schools".

Federal Contract Reviews and Equal Employment Opportunity*

Mr. John Heneghan, reporting

Mr. Heneghan is industrial employment specialist of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. Each of the 36 agencies working under the Committee employs own staff and sets rules. Make complaint investigations and compliance reviews. There are 35,000 contractors and less than 100 such specialists. Technical compliance involves passive obligations such as display of posters, desegregation of plant facilities, overt practices in comformity with law. Affirmative action is a contractor seeking means to inform Negroes of opportunities and a willingness to employ including possibly setting up training programs. The President's Committee seeks to act as a catalytic agent to get something moving in the community and then move on to allow voluntary human relations groups to take over and follow-up. "We need human relations organizations to do this job with us."

New Life In The Memphis Chapter*

Mrs. Ray Allen, reporting

Recognition that Chapter characterized by apathy, no action, and no plan for action, leading to demoralization. In June, 1964, 80 persons attended meeting to hear legal staff of Mississippi summer project speak. This stirred us. Political campaigns of summer and fall helped to activate members, and helped chapter build on gains. At a November meeting of key people an analysis made of role of chapter—to bring everyday citizens to an awareness of what was needed in the area of human relations. Regular meetings now scheduled and we hope to continue building on it.

Mrs. Martha Ragland is the new president of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations. She was elected at the Annual Board of Directors Meeting.

DON'T JUST SIT THERE! DO SOMETHING!

Monroe Schlactus of the Anti-Defamation League led a workshop Friday morning pointing up the tasks still before us and practical ways of achieving the goal of real equality. The passage of the Civil Rights Act has given us the opportunity to attack conditions that required the passage of the Act. It is a means to attack the problems which still exist, it did not abolish them. There is still poverty, prejudice and discrimination, and lack of information and knowledge. We must buckle down to the unglamourous work to bring about compliance with the letter and spirit of the law. Need is to examine ourselves to determine what stereotype we continue to harbor which lead easily to prejudice.

Mr. Schlactus then used film, role playing, and various audi-visual techniques for demonstrations of practical means of working toward heightened personal sensitivity, involvement, and better mass communication. A large display of materials was available for personal perusal. Lewis Sinclair chaired the session. (It is not possible to summarize this excellent presentation, but the Council will send lists of ADL films and pamphlets to members requesting them.)

ANNUAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING

President Willis described 1964 as a "revolutionary year for human relations in Tennessee. The year demonstrated the acceptance of the Civil Rights Bill, and the fact that liberal congressional candidates who supported this legislation could be elected or reelected. The Council's role is broadened and our program enlarged by the inherent opportunities in the War on Poverty. Mr. Bryant as new Executive Director described his enthusiasm for the Council's future, and his optimism about our achieving a broader base of operation and an expanded successful program. His remarks are expanded in the letter to members placed elsewhere in the NEWSLETTER.

Dr. Tarleton, treasurer, presented the 1964 financial statement of the Council; we are solvent! A budget of $31,195.83 was adopted for 1965. Mr. Paul Anthony of the Southern Regional Council urged Council members to take advantage of the new day which finds the Federal Government highly involved. "It is a time for responsible critics and responsible citizens."

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Martha Ragland, Nashville, president; Mr. Lewis Sinclair of Knoxville and Dr. Vasco Smith of Memphis, vice-presidents; Dr. G. J. Tarleton, Jr., Nashville, treasurer; and Mrs. Ernest Silver, Oak Ridge, secretary.

Four resolutions were passed by the membership. They are quoted in their entirety:

ABOLISHMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—offered by Mr. David Price, Jr.

"WHEREAS, capital punishment is the penalty with respect to a number of crimes in the State of Tennessee; and,

WHEREAS, numerous authorities in the field of penology have proven to their satisfaction that the death penalty does not act as a deterrant to crime nor has its existence on the statute books decreased the rate of crime; and,

WHEREAS, thirty-nine countries, nine states, and two United States territories have in recognition of the failure of the death penalty to deter crime abolished capital punishment from their statute books; and,

WHEREAS, since capital punishment is irrevocable, there is an ever present danger of inflicting the death penalty on innocent persons and there have been numerous cases of such miscarriages of justice; and,

WHEREAS, it has been conclusively demonstrated that all "abolition" countries and states have low homicide rates; and,

WHEREAS, it has been demonstrated that the death penalty has not been uniformly enforced and that those receiving such penalty have generally been underprivileged, mentally defective, and frequently unable to engage competent counsel upon arrest and trial; and,

WHEREAS, many enlightened persons do not accept capital punishment as an appropriate means of dealing with crime and are, by reason of their belief, excluded from juries in capital cases; and,

WHEREAS, many judges and juries are reluctant to impose the death penalty, thus resulting in a lack of uniformity in the application of the law; and,

WHEREAS, the death penalty is an "easy way" out for society, discouraging much needed reforms in the field of penology; and,

WHEREAS, retribution, which is a carry-over from a less enlightened period in the history of mankind, appears to be the only remaining argument in favor of retaining the death penalty; and,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Tennessee Council on Human Relations duly assembled on this 29th day of January, 1965, in Nashville, Tennessee go on record as favoring the total abolishment of laws permitting the death penalty in the STATE OF TENNESSEE.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Honorable Frank Clement, Governor of the State of Tennessee, to each member of the General Assembly of Tennessee, and to all daily newspapers, television and radio stations within Tennessee."

ADEQUATE TAX SUPPORT FOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN — Offered by Mrs. James Todd

"WHEREAS, The Tennessee Department of Public Welfare provides financial assistance to needy families who qualify under provisions of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program, and whereas the amount of financial assistance is based on formulas adopted by said Department, providing increasing financial assistance in direct relation to the size of the family; and,

WHEREAS, the Department of Public Welfare provides no increase for any family with more than five dependent children, without regard to the serious and critical needs of larger families; and,

WHEREAS, the result of this inadequate income often results in malnutrition, lack of adequate clothing, illness, and general level of living below a minimum standard of decency; and,

WHEREAS, children reared under these conditions often become school dropouts, juvenile delinquents, unskilled and unemployed citizens; and,

WHEREAS, in a country which is the leader of the free world, it is inconguous that any of our citizens should have to exist without the basic necessities of life;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the Tennessee Council on Human Relations go on record as supporting appropriate policy changes in the Department of Public Welfare which will provide that the grants under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program be adequate to cover the minimum subsistence budget items of families eligible for such grants; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the General Assembly of Tennessee be urged to appropriate sufficient funds to make possible a change in policy whereby a dependent child in a large family is afforded an equal opportunity for obtaining the necessities of life.

FAYETTE AND HAYWOOD COUNTIES—offered by Mr. Joe R. Moore

RESOLVED that the Tennessee Council on Human Relations urge the Honorable Frank G. Clement, Governor of the State of Tennessee to give special attention to the problem of alleged irregularities in voter registration, elections, and ballot counting practies in certain parts of Tennessee, particularly Fayette and Haywood counties, whereby many citizens are now believed to be deprived of their right to fair representation.

DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING—offered by Dr. M. J. Jones

WHEREAS, Dr. Martin Luther King in his word, his sacrifices, his personal dedication, his deep commitment, and his relentless work has contributed to human dignity, and individual and collective freedom; and,

WHEREAS, the honor that has come to him, and his acceptance on the part of the broad spectrum of organizations which now work for civil rights has so closely related him to the aspirations of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that we join in greetings and felicitating him in this time of his honor; and that we concur in the salute to him for the contribution he has made to the endeavor in which we, too, engage.

ACCOLADES TO: Mr. Matt Lynch and the State Labor Council for picking up the check for our special guests, the African newsmen, at our dinner meeting: Mrs. S. I. Alprin, Mrs. Fred Goldner, Mrs. James Glasse, and Mrs. John T. McCall who served so competently as our recorders; to Mrs. David E. Rogers who handled with such dispatch all local arrangements for the Annual Meeting and the additional hospitality for our guests; the many other persons who served as registrars and ticket takers; the reporters from radio, TV, and the press who covered the meetings, and attended the news conferences with Mr. Young and Mr. Weeks; the 36 quick witted persons who brought Mr. Young's new book, To Be Equal, following his address and left the late arrivals bookless; Mrs. Baxton Bryant for selling books, counting money and standing by in general.

While Mr. Whitney M. Young, Jr., was in Nashville he met with a group of business and civic leaders to explore the formation of an Urban League in Nashville. Mayor Briley was host to the meeting which was held in his office. Further discussion is now underway.

NEW DOORS TO NEW ADVANCEMENT

The Tennessee Council on Human Relations has a history in which every member can take just pride. It has been part of the State's conscience, speaking out against wrongs that society has either deliberately or through neglect, let attack its citizens. It has been a force that brought about needed legislation, both state and national, to give equal protection under the law to the total community. As one travels the state or reads the history of the Tennessee Council, its footprints can be found in the causes of human dignity and individual freedom.

The passage of the Civil Rights Bill has made us respectable—some have suggested too respectable. There have been suggestions that Human Relations Councils have served their day and should pass into history and out of existance. What do we have left to do? To those of us who are engaged daily in this work—just the opposite is true. We are a human relations council. Past circumstances dictated where work had to be done. We have been engaged in civil rights and race relations because that is where the need was most compelling. Yet civil rights or race relations has never been, or intended to be, our main concern. The passage of the Civil Rights Act eliminated discrimination by law. It gave to us the opportunity to attack the evils in society, not through the doorway of a minority race, but through the doorway of concern and compassion for all humanity.

I challenge the Tennessee Council on Human Relations to accept the new relationship and the new door this coming year.

What are the real enemies of mankind? Let's attack them; ignorance, poverty, delinquency, poor-housing, illness, unemployment, etc. These are enemies of all mankind. You cannot destroy them in a segregated society. Segregation and all of its kindred ills, has been the cess pool from which many of these draw their life's blood. In times past, circumstances gave us no choice. To fight these enemies we had to approach them through the door of a minority group. We will fight the battle where the foe is. If it takes us to the Negro community, and it most certainly will,—then let's fight there—but we will be there because we fight one of the ills of society and not because the ill exists in a minority race.

Segregation lives on myths—myths that can only thrive in a segregated society. Many of the myths die when communication as equals takes place between the races. Let's challenge all people to do battle against common enemies and have faith in what God makes possible between his children when we go about doing his business. There are in nearly every community the seeds, well germinated, to make the community a garden, a place of peace and goodwill, or a jungle, a place of hatred and violence. Which will it be? The future has not yet been determined.

The leadership in the Negro Community has come from people like the doctors, lawyers, ministers, etc. whose economic base is the Negro community. This is normal and is no different from any other movement of this kind. For the most part, with the exception of the public school teacher, this group is the best educated and informed. This small minority has tasted a few of their rightful privileges that the Civil Rights Act made possible. They are now under great pressure by the white community to slow down. The white community does not know the pressure that is building up in the average Negro for a change now. This minority leadership knows the danger of becoming "Uncle Toms". Yet, being human, they enjoy some of the normal relationships the Civil Rights Act has brought about. The temptation is to slow down. This informed, dedicated, and intelligent Negro leadership must continue to lead. If they should slow down and become the new "Uncle Toms" the vacuum opens and we invite the most radical leadership to come in and take over.

Our progress has been too slow, the danger is real. The potential dawn of a new day is thrilling, but the storm has not yet passed. Our human relations councils are a bridge in the community. We hold a unique and vital position. Our membership knows no political, religious, racial, or economic bounds. We have many good Negro-led groups, but ours is one of the few white membership majority racial groups. The white man must show leadership too. We furnish a place for many good church people to express a real and dedicated concern. We have access to the nerve of the body politics. We must make our influence felt for the sake of human rights and for the growth and prosperity of the total community. To strengthen our work this coming year, we proposed the following: (1) Strengthen the old and organize new local community relations councils. At least 20 new councils. (2) Increase our membership to 2000 with at least two live wire members in every county. (3) Make our state council, state supported. (4) To aid in every way possible the President's War on Poverty. (5) Find new ways to help people understand each other and to live together as fellow human beings, bound by a common dignity and believing in a destiny of peace and good will among all mankind.

In closing, may I say how privileged I feel to be a part of a Council which has such a warm and friendly list of members and a group of leaders who have the courage and conviction to lead in these trying times. I know that the foundation which was laid by the past Executive Directors has been one of deep dedication and love for the on movement of the Council. I also wish to thank the members of the Personnel Committee for their warm welcome and confidence in my ability to serve the Tennessee Council, I look forward to working with our new president, Mrs. Martha Ragland and our Associate Director, Miss Kay Jones. The coming year much must be done to help improve and strengthen our Council. Also I wish to thank Les Dunbar and Paul Anthony of The Southern Regional Council for their support and guidance to our Council and hope that their continued leadership will always be there for us to depend upon. We pledge to them our support.

SCSCHR REPORT ON THE ENROLLMENT OF NEGRO STUDENTS

The rate of increase in the number of Negro students enrolling in the recently desegregated colleges of the state this year has been 400 percent, an increase in number from 5 to 25 full time students, with some additional personnel enrolled for special courses. The increase in the actual number of Negro students is disappointing, but it does represent a gradual recognition that these predominantly white colleges are open and will accept q ualified Negro students. It also indicates the continuing need for a major emphasis upon recruiting Negro students for these colleges. It is safe to assume that for some time to come in South Carolina the colleges will make no effort to recruit Negro students. Factual information, interpretation of the existing situation, encouragement and psychological undergirding are greatly needed. For these reasons, the Student Council will continue "Operation Search" during this school year.

In September three new colleges received Negro students for the first time--all of them doing so voluntarily. Winthrop college, a state supported Woman's College, enrolled its first Negro students for residence in the college dormitories; Wofford and Lander colleges, private church-related and a municipally owned and operated college, enrolled one Negro student each.

Prior to enrollment, SCSCHR assisted in specific ways 14 of the 25 students now enrolled. This was done through informal guidance and counseling; through correspondence and/or personal contact with students attending the several colleges; and by student meetings set up especially for the purpose of recruiting. Eight of the new students entering recently integrated colleges had attended one or more of the meetings of the Public Relations Committee. Assistance on possible scholarship sources has been given to a number of prospective students and to guidance counselors in various schools.

It is now the policy of the colleges in the state to give no information on the number of Negro students enrolled, since this is no longer "news" and every attempt is being made to accept these students just as any other new student. This is undoubtedly a good policy, yet there is a need for those who are concerned to move "beyond tokenism" to know facts in order to evaluate the situation and to plan for future enrollment.

At the beginning of the fall term, SCSCHR attempted to get in touch with all the entering Negro students; to follow their enrollment with friendly assistance, and to help in various ways in the first weeks of the school year, when new experiences might be especially difficult. Student members at Winthrop had been in contact with the two new students who were enrolling there for months prior to the actual enrollment, and have been most helpful during these first months. The one additional student at Clemson, with the assistance of Mr. Gantt and friends there, has gotten along very well indeed and is enthusiastic about Clemson . . . The day after registration at USC a get acquainted open house was held by student members of the Council for a number of prospective new ers of SCSCHR, including all the newly enrolled Negro students. This was done in order to make it possible for student members to get acquainted quickly with the newly enrolled Negro students and to follow their first days at USC with friendly interest. SCSCHR members at Wofford were likewise helpful to the new Negro student enrolled there.

The degree of integration of the Negro students into campus life has been outstanding in a short period of time; one student at Clemson has received top awards for creative work and has been elected to membership in the highest professional honorary society in his school; two students are members of the band--one at Clemson and one at USC; one student at USC is a member of the debate team (a team which has been accorded national awards for many years) and in this capacity represents the University at regional or national debate tournaments; two students have become members of a drama group and appeared in the first production of the year; two students are reporters for the campus newspaper; a number are active participants in the various church student groups; a large group belongs to the International Students Club; three students at USC are members of the choir; at least one student is participating in the intra-mural sports program of the college. This indicates a wide range of student activities and also normal acceptance among fellow-students. The great need at present is for a much larger number of Negro students. It is only as desegregation moves "beyond tokenism" that genuine integration may become a reality. This is the goal we seek.

HIGHLIGHTS: A REPORT OF PROGRAM ACTIVITY

By Mrs. T. J. Ledeen

Two local program groups in Columbia have continued to grow in numbers and in significance: The Student Intercollegiate Group, now related directly to the Council, has been in existence for some eight years with Mrs. Ledeen serving as Advisor. This group brings together a small number of concerned students from two Negro colleges, two white colleges and one theological seminary for discussion and study of common problems. The role of the group has been to serve as a channel whereby communication might take place and understanding be deepened. We have been able to discuss together frankly the present Student Non-Violence Movementand role which it has in the process es of social change. Interest and attendance at the Intercollegiate Group has continued to grow. The last meeting brought together our largest number, some 50 students.

The Adult Study-Discussion Group is composed of a small number of younger professional people or homemakers in the community for a frank confrontation of issues which we face today. In this group there have been sharp conflicts in basic philosophy and thinking. There are evidences, however, that out of this encounter is emerging genuine respect and certainly a deeper understanding of the forces at work in our society.

In February the local Council in Sumter invited representatives of the Student Group in Columbia to present an informal panel discussion on the Role of the Student in Achieving Human Rights. Mrs. Ledeen, with two students from the University of South Carolina and two from Benedict College, along with several of the local students from Morris College, participated in a very lively and dynamic discussion with the local group.

A Seminar is sponsored each year by the S.C. Christian Action Council for students from the white colleges in the state. The meeting, held at Clemson College, was attended by a number of the student members of the Columbia Intercollegiate Group and by Mrs. Ledeen. The Seminar, in platform addresses and in workshop discussions, dealt very openly and constructively with the whole area of race relations in the context of the Christian Faith. There was a new spirit, a readiness and willingness to face the role as Christian students which has not been apparent in any conference of white students in South Carolina of which we are aware. The defenders of the status-quo were silent! This is a new phenomena among student groups in S.C. and is one straw in the wind which should give us hope.

Recently the Council staff has been assisting church student groups at the University in setting up programs in the whole area of human relations. Wesley, Westminster and Canterbury groups have had programs with Negro leaders, adult and student. In addition to the regular Intercollegiate meetings there has been at least one occasion when a small number of Negro students was invited to one of the student centers for an informal conversation by students who just wanted an opportunity to become acquainted and to know what the Negro student rea lly thinks.

In the light of recent events which are discussed in a separate statement, it has seemed wise to spend a good deal of time in individual counseling and small group conferences. We have worked closely with the University religious workers and shall continue to do so.

SUMMARY REPORT ON STUDENT WORKSHOP

The first Student Workshop sponsored by the S.C. Council on Human Relations was held on February 5 in Columbia with a total attendance of 75 persons as follows: 63 students from 14 colleges in South Carolina--

5 Negro colleges
8 white colleges
1 theological seminary (not related to a college)
12 leaders or faculty members accompanying delegations.

The student planning committee had selected as the general theme for the Workshop: The Role of the Student in Achieving Human Rights. The Conference opened with a worship service led by student members of the Columbia Intercollegiate Group. Mr. Paul Rilling of the Southern Regional Council gave an excellent analysis of the present situation in the South, with an emphasis upon the four areas for discussion: the economic situation; higher education; citizenship- the church and religious life. This was followed by an analysis of the situation in South Carolina presented by Gil Rowland of Greenville.

The four areas for discussion in small groups as indicated above gave opportunities for relevant questions to be r aised and for some factual data to be presented. The questions discussed are indicated on the enclosed sheet. The summaries presented by students at the afternoon session were very brief because of the limitation of time. In all cases further study, acquiring of facts and responsible participation in all phases of campus, community and church life by the concerned students was indicated as greatly needed.

The Workshop closed with a summary challenge for the present situation given by Miss Ella Baker and the Rev. J. Herbert Nelson.

The evaluations which have come to us from student participants indicate two reactions:

1. Opportunities for communication are essential if genuine understanding is to take place or if any processes are to be set in motion toward an ultimate solution of problems which all of us face. It is, therefore, suggested that the student program be a continuous one.

"The Workshop established a basis for communication but little real communication took place."

2. Any consideration of the racial problem per se should be done in the context of broad areas of concern, looking at all facets of the situation with honesty and forthrightness. Included in this total picture would of course be the areas which were discussed at the Workshop.

. . . . . Economic Problems

. . . . . Higher Education

. . . . . The Church and Religious Life

AREAS FOR STUDY AND DISCUSSION - STUDENT WORKSHOP

A student planning committee has suggested the following areas for study and discussion and is listing a few questions for your thinking.

I. HIGHER EDUCATION

What are the facts concerning colleges in S. C.? Accreditation? Standards, academic fields of study now available, professional schools, amount spent per student?

What is the role of a student? What is the role of college faculty?

Are we being prepared in college for responsible participation in a rapidly changing society?

II. ECONOMIC LIFE

What impact is the new industrialization making upon our state? Are all citizens participating in the benefits of the present industrial revolution?

What job opportunities are open to college graduates in our state? White? Negro?

Is S. C. utilizing its human resources wisely? To what extent do college graduates leave the state? Why?

III. CITIZENSHIP

What does "responsible citizenship" entail?

What are the opportunities for a career in political or public life at the state, national or international level?

What efforts to implement civic and political democracy can be realistically undertaken by students?

IV. THE CHURCH AND RELIGIOUS LIFE

Is the church relevant to Joe College, 1961? If so, why? If not, Why?

What is the role of the church in the achievement of human rights?

How can the gap between prouncement and practice be bridged?

Are there ways in which the varying student religious programs in all of the colleges of the state can be coordinated more effectively?

INSIGHTS GAINED FROM RECENT EVENTS

By Mrs. T. J. Ledeen

When sit-in demonstrations were resumed on a large scale in February in Columbia, a few of the white students at the University were apprised of the plans by one of the Negro student leaders. In the first two days of demonstrations three University students participated with the demonstrators. The first day two adult Advisors of the Columbia Intercollegiate group walked through two of the stores and stopped to speak to one of the Negro students who was standing outside the store.

In all of these cases the persons involved either as participants or observers were quickly aware that they were under surveillance and that their pictures were being taken. On these days the demonstrators were not arrested and the white persons were not interviewed or questioned directly by any representatives of the law enforcement agency. They were, however, followed and in one case as they left the downtown area they were aware that the "private eye" had written down their car license number.

It has been the policy of the local press in Columbia recently to ignore or play down the sit-in demonstrations. On the days mentioned above-- two successive days-- on the back page of the afternoon paper there appeared very small articles which contained the following opening sentences: "Three white persons today led an estimated 300 Negro students in a series of sit-in demonstrations;" on the second day, "Three white persons today led an estimated 200 Negroes in a series of sit-in demonstrations." A brief description of the white "leaders" by sex and approximate age left no doubt that the leaders referred to were the two Advisors of the Intercollegiate group and one of the students referred to above. The article on the second day, in referring to the three white leaders stated that the leaders today were not the same ones who "led" the demonstrations the day before. It identified the three on the second day as two young men and an elderly lady. The two young men are the additiona l two students mentioned above and the elderly lady is a long-time member of the SCCHR who happened to be down town, saw the demonstrators, spoke to some of them and wished them success in their movement.

On March 2, the largest of the demonstrations, focusing on the State House grounds, led to the arrest of some 190 students and two NAACP adult leaders. On that occasion, two University students just "happened" upon the demonstra tion, quite literally, felt that the cause was just and evidenced their concern by shaking hands with some of those being arrested. One of the students continued to identify himself with the group after the law enforcement officers had asked him to leave, and was arrested on the same charge as the others, "disturbing the peace." The other University student, who has been employed for two years as a page in the State Senate, immediately- that day- lost his job and the next day he was called out of class and interrogated by the State Law Enforcement Officers in a profane and ruthless manner. The case of the student who was arrested has already received publicity in the press. I think that a word of explanation should be made, not in defense necessarily of the University but in explanation of the action taken. There is a clear University policy that any student whose conduct leads to arrest and jail shall be subject to expulsion. In the case of Rick Hart there were evidences of instability in unrelated matters, which led the University Administration and his father to feel that it was best that he withdraw. Perhaps this is a fine line of distinction. He was requested to withdraw but he was not expelled. On the basis of information which we now have, we are led to believe that his interest in the cause of the Negro students was sincere and that his treatment by SLED, as in the case of the second student, was unnecessarily harsh.

The other student, referred to above, has within the past week withdrawn from the University much to the disappointment of the Dean of Students and other friends and Advisors who urged him to stay at all costs during this time of tension.

Since these events these persons and some others who have been participating in our Student Intercollegiate program have been aware of the fact that they have been under surveillance; in one case a student found that state officers had been to his home town to carry on an investigation of him. The pictures taken have been brought to the campus police for identification. The most recent action, within the past few days, which seems to indicate the possibility of political pressures upon the University, has been the notification in two cases of Graduate Assistants in the History Department that their Fellowships would not be renewed for the coming year. We certainly cannot state this categorically, since no such correlation has been or will be indicated by the University. In both cases, however, the students have been participants and leaders in the S.C. Council Workshop for College Students and in our bi-racial student meetings. One of them was a participant in the sit-ins described at the beginning of this statement. The academic work in both cases is of high quality and there has been no indication that the work which has been done as Graduate Assistants has not been satisfactory. Furthermore, in the past it has been customary to grant such Fellowships for a two-year period.

There is also evidence that the Law Enforcement Officers know about the various interracial groups which are meeting in town, though the information which they have about the groups seems to be incomplete. Apparently, participation in such a bi-racial group is enough to make a person suspect and possibly placed under surveillance. There is no legal basis in South Carolina on which charges could be made for participation in interracial meetings.

On the basis of all these facts, it is evident that the political forces of the State symbolized by the State Law Enforcement Division (commonly called SLED) will attempt to deal ruthlessly with white persons who challenge the existing system of segregation within the State; that they will attempt when possible to say that such persons are being influenced by the Communists or may be out-and-out Communists.

However, they are skilled enough to know that the implication of Communist influence and the smear technique are probably more effective than outright accusation. It is apparent also that the process of surveillance will continue and that in indirect or direct ways various pressures will be made on individuals. This is the pattern which has been characteristic elsewhere in the hard-core massive resistant South. We have had little of this to date because actually the voices which challenged or questioned the status-quo have for the most part been silent. No doubt as we move nearer the time of a possible break-through in desegregation, the more desperate will become the action of the resistance leaders.

The press, political leaders and probably the majority of the white citizens are consciously or unconsciously trying to persuade themselves and others that outside agitators, no doubt Communist inspired, are responsible for what has been happening here and elsewhere. This theme is constantly reiterated in the press, in conversations, in talks. The chief whipping boys at the present moment are CORE and of course NAACP, and less frequently the National Council of Churches. (Religious sympathizers are described, as was heard in a talk last Sunday night, as "Do-gooders who take their cue from the Communists").

The University of South Carolina, thoughout its long history, has genera lly been politically controlled. It has always been a conservative university in an even more conservative state. There are emerging evidences of greater "intellectu al ferment" now than has been true in the past. With this, of course, there come the great pressures to conform. Some of the members of the Administrative staff have been described as "frightened little men," and recent actions would certainly indicate the accuracy of this. Others are making every effort to protect the rights of freedom of the student and faculty.

There are at present two academically qualified Negro applicants at Clemson College. We have been told that if these are turned down, as no doubt they will be, these cases will be taken to the courts. If this is done it will be the first court case in the state at the higher education level. There have been applications before but no follow-up of these applications in the courts. Since the University of Georgia decision, it seems that most of the state colleges in South Ca rolina have been expecting applications and in informal ways (not officially approved by the administration) certain persons and groups have tried to begin processes which will eventually make for readiness and acceptance when Negroes do enroll in state colleges in South Carolina.

QUARTLY REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

General Conditions in Virginia

The school situation is again in the fore front in Virginia. It is being discussed because of the rather dramatic recent events in the Prince Edward case and because it is an issue in the campaign for governor. Mr. Harrison, seemingly had rather not discuss the schools but his running mate, Mills Godwin is anxious to charge State Senator Boothe with being an intergrationist. On the other hand, State Senator Boothe is contending that Harrison and Godwin are really co-authors of massive resistence, and that if Harrison is elected it will place the public school system in great jeopardy.

Over all this sound and fury emerges the rather obvious conclusion that the politicians think that the voters of Virginia are definitely interested in the preservation of public schools. This ~~bares~~ bears out early conclusions of the VCHR as early as September, 1958, when we were predicting the massive follies of massive resistence.

Civil Rights in Virginia

In Virginia, as in other areas of the South, the present Negro leadership is being challenged. An open break between NAACP and the PROTEST-movement in Lynchburg has erupted in a divided Negro community. Virgil Wood and other younger leaders have not tried very hard to conceal their dissatisfaction for the local methods of NAACP. Although this has not erupted at a state level, we believe ~~realtions~~ relations between NAACP and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to be strained.

The freedom riders went through Virginia unnoticed. No repercusions from this have occured in the state aside from two local groups, which have started to organize further rides.

The appointement of Oliver Hill as an assistant to the Federal Housing Administrator in Washington has been hailed by Virginia liberals.

Prince Edward County

The most recent news from Prince Edward County has been the direct intervention of the U. S. Department of Justice as a plaintiff in the Prince Edward school case. All the Virginia politicians on every side have made noises of protest over this action. In order to gage what they really think of this action one must simply analyze the noises. Governor Almond's statements were made with restraint and barely paid lip service to state's rights ideas, On the other hand, Attorney General Harrison has been riding on the crest of this issue. We find his public statements strongly contridictory to other information about his attitudes on the school question.

No further reprisals have been noted against Dean Gordon Moss of Longwood. Our early prediction that the schools would open in September in Prince Edward may have been premature.

On May 8 a luncheon meeting of interested agencies was held in which it was decided that some new attitudes were necessary for the preservation of the Prince Edward community. It was candidly agreed that the centers for Negro students were inadequate in every way.

It was brought out that they were operating under a deficit of $9000. This is the deficit of PECCA. Recent unfavorable publicity on a national scale has hurt Mr. Griffin's leadership in the county. We feel that criticism is inevitable and so believe that it could not have been avoided. The VCHR has been financing a recreational center in Prince Edward where as many as 60 people from Richmond have gone down on Saturdays to help with the recreation program. This program is under the direction of Mr. Ed Peeples, a social worker of the city of Richmond.

We would conclude that there is very little change in the attitudes of the white people in Prince Edward County towards public education. It now seems obvious that they will open the public schools when forced to do so by law. There is a rumor fairly well founded, that after the election in July Governor Almond will seek to open the public schools in Prince Edward. Any action before that time would probably affect the election.

The present Prince Edward suit will probably go to a three judge Federal Tribunal and may not be settled until this fall. The tactics are simply to delay this as long as possible. If the schools remain closed another year, it would be still more disastrous because more and more people are leaving the community.

Organizational Meetings of the Director

On March 5, the Director confered with Dr. Robert Stern of the College of William and Mary of Norfolk about the problems of the newly organized "clearing-house" of agencies in Norfolk. On March 9, the Director spoke to this group urging them to meet monthly. On March 13, the Director met with a group of University of Virginia students in Charlottesville who are planning to organize a University Council on Human Relations. On March 20, he spoke to the ministers of the Eastern Virginia Council of Congregational Christian Churches. On March 21 and 22, he conducted a retreat for ministers in cooperation with the Virginia Council of Churches. On March 23 he attended the annual meeting of the Fairfax County Council.

During April, he made two trips to Lynchburg confering with leaders and seeking to work out the differences in their leadership. He spoke to the annual meeting of the Alexandria Council; confered with Col. Wright of the Richmond Police on their employment policies; addressed the Richmond Chapter of the National Association of College Women; spoke to the student body of Virginia State College in Petersburg; confered with leaders in Prince Edward County on three occasions; attended the State Board Meeting on April 17.

In May he spoke to the Roanoke Council in which meeting they voted to become a part of VCHR. On May 11 he spoke to the Blacksburg Council. On May 12 he attended the Norfolk Council with Les Dunbar. On May 15-18, served as ~~council~~ consultant to the first inter-racial meeting of ministers of the Southern Convention and Convention of the Southern Congregational Churches. He spent two days with the new Director and also attended the state financial committee meeting in Fairfax County.

He spent Saturday, May 27, briefing the new Director for Alabama.

Many of the state councils have had picnics for the summer. This we have urged and it now seemingly is a reality. The Alexandria Council has contributed over $1000 to the state treasury during the past year. With a very small membership they have become the leading council, both in program and contributions.

Enclosed is the Fairfax County newsletter, which pretty well summarizes their activities.

THIS REPORT was prepared for the Nashville Community Relations Conference by Mr. Wallace Westfeldt, an experienced journalist on the staff of the Nashville Tennessean. The views and opinions expressed in this report are Mr. Westfeldt's and do not necessarily reflect those of the Nashville Community Relations Conference.

PREFACE

At 3:15 p.m. on Tuesday, May 10, 1960, small groups of Negroes, carefully selected by their leaders, calmly walked up to the lunch counters in six downtown Nashville, Tennessee, stores and sat down to an historical mid-afternoon snack.

Many of them sat next to white persons. Their orders for food were politely received and just as politely served—by white persons.

Despite the unseasonably cold weather and the time of day, the lunch rooms were crowded. Heavy detachments of plain clothes police were there to prevent trouble. A well-organized corps of observing United Church Women posted there by the Nashville Community Relations Conference, stood ready to lend encouragement to the Negroes and whites participating in the unusual sit-in and; if need be, to act as sharp-eyed witnesses to any untoward event that might develop.

This duty, incidentally, was so jealously guarded by the church women that one was heard to express shock and dismay when a Baptist minister wandered into the area she was observing.

"What are you doing in here?" she asked. "This room is for the Unitarians!"

By 4 p.m. the Negro groups had departed, and shortly thereafter so had the church women as well as the police.

Thus ended the tense struggle in Nashville between Negroes and merchants over the right of Negroes to eat with whites at lunch counters in stores where they were welcomed as customers for other goods.

Thus did Nashville become the first major city in the region traditionally known as the South to permit whites and blacks to eat together openly in public places.

For a couple of weeks after May 10, small groups of carefully selected Negroes continued these controlled sit-ins until by the end of the month, all controls were off and Negroes came and went as they pleased—and in any numbers they pleased.

By mid-June, the last downtown store which had been a sit-in target in preceding months, quietly decided to go along with the rest. All of this has taken place without a single incident of resistance.

BACKGROUND

The background, superficially at least, appeared conducive to anything but a successful settlement.

Sporadic violence and near-violence had swirled about the downtown area in February and early March when Negro students staged massive sit-ins and were arrested in massive numbers.

A report of the bi-racial committee established by Mayor Ben West was openly rejected by the Negro leaders and covertly rejected by the merchants. This committee recommended on April 5th that the merchants divide their lunch counters into two sections, one for whites and one for those who wanted to eat in integrated fashion. This was to be operated on a 90 day trial basis.

The committee also recommended that if no further demonstrations by Negro students occurred during the trial period all cases against them (well over 100) resulting from the February and early March sit-in period should be dismissed.

A final recommendation by the committee was the creation by the mayor of a permanent bi-racial committee with the function of studying and making recommendations on any racial problems that might develop in the community.

Principal objection to the recommendations from the student protest movement and the Nashville Christian Leadership Council:

"The plan . . . ignores the moral issues involved in the struggle for the realization of human rights. The . . . recommendation in actuality is a plan of segregation . . . Our concern is that segregation be removed entirely whether it is the segregation of the Negro or white customers. The suggestion of a restricted area involves the same stigma of which we are earnestly seeking to rid the community . . ."

The merchants put it this way:

"The merchants of Nashville have been placed in the unenviable position of deciding on a social practice which will be a radical change in the custom of our community. The very nature of our business is such that it is most impractical for a small group of stores to assume the role of leading such a social change . . . Obviously a decision of this scope cannot and should not be hastily made by the stores involved."

To anyone keeping up with reports of developments in the sit-in movement, however, it became clear the merchants' position was unenviable because of another, perhaps more important reason.

"ECONOMIC WITHDRAWAL"

On April 4, as a matter of fact, it was reported for the first time that Negroes in large numbers were boycotting all stores in the downtown shopping area, including those without lunch counters.

The Negroes had agreed to refrain from sit-in demonstrations during the period the mayor's committee was studying the situation but this did not mean they could not exert pressure in other ways. As one of the Negro leaders said later, "We had considered an economic boycott as a methodology and probably would have used it if it had not started elsewhere. But we were planning on this as our ultimate weapon. We still wanted to dramatize the moral issue through the sit-ins."

The first public notice of the boycott came from Dr. Vivian Henderson, professor of economics at Fisk University. Speaking to more than 500 Negroes gathered to discuss the sit-ins at the Pleasant Green Missionary Baptist church, Henderson asked:

"If there is anybody here who has not spent any money downtown in the last two weeks, stand up."

Almost the entire audience stood.

Referring to the boycott once as "our saving program," and later as "an economic withdrawl," Henderson identified for those who wanted to see, the basic strength of the movement. Referring to a hypothetical charge that economic boycotts are destructive, he said:

"This is not a boycott to club men down. This is an economic withdrawal against evil. To destroy radical evil, you have to be radically good. It is radical evil that rules this town and it will take radical good to break it."

Thus the leaders of the sit-in movement, which is solidly based on a moral concept in their eyes, threw the cloak of morality around their most powerful weapon.

The Rev. Kelly Miller Smith, chairman of the Christian Leadership Council and without doubt the most influential Negro in the sit-in movement, said the boycott presented a real problem of interpretation for the leadership.

"If you are fighting out a moral issue," he said later, "you have to stay on firm moral grounds. Our ground for the boycott was simply that it is morally indefensible for Negroes to cooperate with a system we consider evil and which we are trying to change."

Rev. Smith said quite a few Negroes did not grasp this point and used the boycott as a means of striking back at the white community for real or imagined trouble in the past.

No one wil say just exactly how or when the boycott started. The most persistent report is that it started as a result of conversation between four ladies at a bridge party. It was decided, according to the report, that each person present should telephone 10 friends and ask them to boycott the entire downtown shopping area until the sit-in controversy was settled in favor of the Negroes

Although the beginning of the boycott remains somewhat vague, its impact has been clearly defined.

Through daily and maximum use of "our wire service," as Negro leaders playfully call Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, the boycott was maintained for approximately seven weeks at about 98 per cent efficiency. This estimate is one the downtown merchants agree with wholeheartedly.

IMPACT ON DOWNTOWN

The impact on the downtown stores was a powerful one. First, the downtown shopping area in general has been plagued with a metropolitan area illness common to the nation—severe competition from suburban shopping centers.

On top of this, the merchants discovered customers from their shopping area, roughly those within a 75 mile radius of Nashville, were staying away as long as conditions downtown remained unsettled as a result of the sit-ins.

Said one of the city's top merchants: "This business from outside of Nashville represents about 20 per cent of the total. It is a business you cannot afford to loose."

Another factor compounding the plight of the downtown merchants was unseasonably cold weather.

"There is no business more sensitive to weather conditions than that of retailing in a department or variety store," said an official of a large department store. "If conditions are calm and normal, you can usually just get by when sales fall off because of weather. But when conditions are as they were during this period, you haven't got a chance."

The absence of Negro customers who spend about $7,000,000 annually downtown, had varying results. In one department store, Harveys, this represented 12 to 15 per cent of their business. At Cain-Sloan, a branch of Allied Stores, Inc., Negro customers represent approximately five per cent of the store's business.

With customers in general shopping elsewhere and those who did go downtown generally staying away from lunch counters, the variety stores were severely damaged.

Reliable sources indicate that the food business in such stores as Woolworth's, Kress, McClellan and Walgreen runs as high as 40 per cent of total sales and sometimes as high as 50 per cent of the gross profit.

The boycott also effected businesses not involved in the sit-ins.

The owners and operators of small stores which had no lunch counters and which had reputations of fine service for Negro customers discovered they were in the same economic boat as their colleagues at stores directly involved.

The transit company which relies largely on Negro customers for its successful operation, discovered its business dwindling seriously.

Parking lots, for the first time in months, were not posting their usual "Sorry, No Room" signs.

The city's two newspapers anxiously kept their eyes on advertising lineage figures which showed signs of dropping.

"The combination of the boycott and the effect of unsettled conditions and bad weather were just too much," said one merchant. "To most of us this whole business of sit-ins was an economic problem. We knew and admitted the immorality of segregation. But we also felt, and felt strongly, any integration would keep many of our regular white customers away. We felt integration would be more harmful to our businesses than segregation as long as the community apparently felt the way it did on the issue.

"But as time passed," he continued, "we had to balance off a known economic loss as a result of the sit-ins and boycott against an unknown and indefineable loss if we integrated. The known loss soon became too great. We had to change whether we wanted to or not."

The vice president of one of the two department stores involved in the sit-ins, who acted as chief negotiator for the merchants, said the merchants felt they could not risk integration until there was evidence the community would go along with it.

He and other merchants felt letdown by the city's white leadership during the crisis.

"The Chamber of Commerce will go all out to keep the baseball team here," said one of the merchants, "but they didn't do a damned thing to help this situation even though they knew we were having the economic hell being beat out of the downtown area."

Another merchant was sharply critical of the press for refusing to take any leadership on the sit-in issue as it did during the school integration crisis.

"Regardless of the differing editorial views the papers have," he said, "they did pave the way for acceptance of school integration."

The negotiator for the merchants put it this way:

"Suddenly, overnight, seven of the principal stores of this city found themselves put in the position of seeming to be immoral because of our segregated lunch counters even though the movie houses are segregated. We found ourselves alone."

NEGOTIATIONS

It was clearly up to the merchants and Negro leaders to get together and work out a settlement after both sides refused to accept the recommendations of the mayor's bi-racial committee.

This was quickly arranged and negotiating committees were established for both sides. The merchants made two conditions regarding future negotiations. The first was that the negotiators for the Negroes be representative of the Negro community as well as of the sit-in movement, and that no white persons be allowed on the sit-in negotiating team.

Said one of the merchants:

"We made these requests for two reasons. We discovered, much to our surprise, the Negro members of the mayor's bi-racial committee although both were university presidents, were not representative of the Negro community. We also discovered that whenever any white persons joined the Negroes in negotiation, they started preaching to us about the morality of the question. We didn't need anybody to orate to us about that."

This was readily agreed to by the Negroes. The result, a four member negotiating team was formed. On it were two student leaders of the sit-in movement, Rev. Smith and Mr. Coyness Ennix, a Negro attorney and the sole Negro member of the city school board.

It was also agreed that the report of the mayor's committee should at least be used as a starting point for the new negotiations.

The first talk was held in the second week of April. Two more formal negotiating sessions, each about 10 days apart, were necessary before the settlement was reached. These sessions were also supplemented by informal talks between Rev. Smith and Mr. Greenfield Pitts, vice president of Harveys and chief negotiator for the merchants.

Said Pitts: "We were pretty well agreed among the merchants that we would have to cooperate with the inevitable."

Said Rev. Smith: "When they expressed this view, we immediately suggested that if they recognized it as inevitable, wouldn't it be better for all to start planning for it now. They agreed. This was the big battle for we had finally gotten together on the what of the situation but now the how."

Pitts and Smith agree that the next major obstacle overcome in the negotiations was that of accepting the suggestion by the Negroes that the first sit-ins be executed under controlled circumstances by carefully selected, well disciplined Negro groups.

OUTSIDE EVENTS

The two negotiators also agree that two outside events at this time had a powerful influence on the position of each side in the settlement conferences.

The first was the bombing of the home of Mr. Z. Alexander Looby, an attorney and one of Nashville's two Negro city councilmen.

Perhaps the most respected and powerful Negro in Nashville, Mr. Looby made it clear he believed the bombing was "very definitely connected with the sit-in controversey," for he was the chief of the battery of Negro attorneys defending Negro students arrested as a result of the movement.

"I think this act did more to change the climate of community opinion than any other single factor," said Pitts. "It more or less eliminated any possibility of community acceptance, or tolerance, of violence in the downtown area as a result of integrating the lunch counters."

The second event was a speech delivered here by Rev. Martin Luther King which gave eloquent evidence of the strength of this sit-in movement, a movement that has united the Negro community here as never before. In a direct reference to the Looby bombing and other acts of violence against Negroes during the sit-ins, Rev. King said:

"We will meet the capacity to inflict suffering with the capacity to endure suffering. We will say, do what you will to us but we will wear you down by our capacity to suffer."

In the beginning, said one merchant, "we believed this was largely a student affair and quite possibly one that was led and organized by outsiders, students from the North and East.

"We learned differently after the boycott got underway," he said, "for our customers, were not the student types. They were the Negro men and women of Nashville who live here, work here. We got an inkling of how deep their feelings were when 4000 of them marched in Nashville."

COMMUNITY REACTIONS

During this time the merchants got a hint that community feeling might not be so opposed to the change the Negroes were seeking.

Although they are firmly convinced true community sentiment is seldom expressed in letters from customers, they felt that the absence of strong support in their stand for continued segregation from various local racist organizations was a hopeful sign.

They also took note of the fact that a reasonably large bloc of persons from the intellectual community were boycotting the stores in sympathy with the Negro cause.

And finally, they took note of a meeting sponsored by The Nashville Community Relations Conference on March 30-31 devoted to a study of race relations in general and the sit-in movement in particular.

This meeting brought out over 500 people two separate nights for speeches and discussions on the subject.

"You can't count on those things too much," said one of the merchants directly involved in the sit-ins, "but it does make you feel good to know there are at least 500 folks here who are willing to talk about it in public. And you do get some strength, as well as information, from this kind of meeting."

"THE NASHVILLE PLAN"

Toward the end of the first week of May, the negotiators met again and laid out the detailed plans for settlement of the sit-in crisis.

The plan was simple. The small groups of carefully selected Negroes, all well disciplined in the art of non-violent action, would enter the stores on a certain day known in advance to the merchants. The merchants would have their employes fully prepared for the event and also have adequate police in hand to take care of any trouble that might develop.

The sit-ins would continue in this controlled fashion for a couple of weeks and then all controls would be taken off. Representatives of the merchants and Negroes would meet to evaluate the integration movement.

Although one of the stores involved in the sit-ins declined to join the others in the settlement, the Negroes agreed to refrain from any further demonstrations downtown for "a reasonable period of time." The boycott on this particular store, Grant's, was maintained. Grant's opened its lunch counters to Negroes on an integrated basis on June 8th.

The press and other communications media was to be informed of the settlement and accurate, non-sensational coverage was to be requested. Apparently due to misunderstanding about this provision of the agreement, the press was requested by the merchants to ignore the development completely.

This request was honored and the only break in it came when the press service stories about the lunch counter integration was piped back into Nashville via network television newscasts.

The result: The only local notice of this massive social change in Nashville appeared in a brief story buried inside The Nashville Tennessean. Two or three other minor stories about the change appeared after that in The Tennessean but that was all.

LOOSE ENDS

Now that a successful solution of the sit-in controversey has been achieved in Nashville, only a few loose ends need to be tied up.

The question of the disposition of cases against Negro students involved in the sit-ins appears to be on the way to solution. On June 13, City Judge Andrew Doyle retired cases against 63 students, all arising from sit-in demonstrations. Most of these cases involved charges of refusing to obey a fire marshal's order when he told them to leave bus terminal lunch rooms.

There are 80 students still charged with conspiracy to obstruct trade. The district attorney general has said he will bring four of these cases before the grand jury "soon."

While no member of the attorney general's staff will be quoted by name, it is reliably reported these cases will probably be disposed of in a fashion similar to those that were before Judge Doyle.

SIDELIGHTS OF THE SIT-IN

One of the most interesting sidelights to the sit-in controversey in Nashville is the way it speeded up the hiring of Negroes as white collar workers in a few downtown stores.

This subject came up, Rev. Smith said, as the boycott was biting hard into the resources of the smaller merchants and those who had no lunch counters.

"Many of them came to us to see if we could do anything to relieve their situation," Rev. Smith said. "We asked each of them three questions. Had they done anything to help resolve the sit-in controversy? What had their policies been toward serving Negro customers? What were their policies about hiring Negro employes?"

The first two questions were easy to answer, said Rev. Smith, for most of them had policies of serving Negro customers and most of them had at least been talking about settling the sit-ins through integration. It was the third question that had the hooker in it.

One small merchant said he had a Negro employe who had waited on his customers for years and the only distinction between her and his other employes was that she wore a smock.

It was suggested the smock be removed. The suggestion was accepted and the Negro woman is now waiting on white customers in desmocked style.

Her employer is still somewhat disturbed over the whole thing, not because he objects to Negro employes but simply because he is afraid of the effect it might have on this particular woman.

"She is a friendly country woman," he said, "who is deathly afraid of such things as thunder. She runs to the basement when we have a storm. Lord only knows where she'll run if she ever learns she has become a social symbol!"

From all indications, the integration of the lunch counters has been entirely successful. At an evaluation session June 15, the merchants told representatives of the Negroes they (the merchants) had been wrong in predicting dire consequences to integration.

They reported food service had fallen off slightly in the stores and that a few employes had quit rather than work in an integrated lunch room.

They also reported, however, merchandise sales were booming and there was no indication the integration of the lunch counters was interfering with this most important source of revenue for retailers.

So the often fearsome, sometimes violent struggle of the Negroes for the right to eat downtown as well as buy downtown has ended —not with a bang or whimper but with the pleasing sound of cash registers ringing up sales.

ANALYSIS

It is doubtful if there has been any single development in the field of race relations that has caused as much confusion, and concern as the lunch counter sit-in movement.

Herewith follows a brief analysis of the reasons for this confusion and concern, based on interviews with both white and Negro persons intimately involved in the movement as antagonists, as well as interviews with members of both races who have watched from the sidelines.

WHITE SOUTHERNERS

If the white southerner is confused and concerned over the sit-in movement, he has every right to be. For what this movement has brought about stands in direct contradiction to everything he has believed or been told to believe about the Negro.

For example, the Negro student and the Negro adult who have participated in the sit-in movement has shattered (or is shattering) the mental image of the Negro held by the average white southerner.

This is confusing, because he has believed that the Negro is fundamentally a foot-shuffling, hat-doffing, always smiling person. He is happiest when allowed to roam undisciplined through his community, content with handouts (material, political and philosophical) from his white "boss."

This is what has been taught by his parents and, until recently, in his schools. This is the image implicit in the strictly segregated society.

It is understandable, therefore, that the average white southerner is puzzled when he finds himself confronted by the Negro of the sit-in movement—the neatly dressed, quiet spoken, articulate and determined person who is assuming leadership among southern Negroes in general.

The white southerner is confused also when he discovers that the local Negro is dead serious about the sit-in movement and his present effort to secure the right to eat in unsegregated style at lunch counters.

He has been told, for instance, that the Negro in his own community is fairly well satisfied with his lot in life and acts up only when he is stirred up by "outsiders."

If there is any single piece of evidence that has laid bare this fallacy, it is the success of the Negro boycott of downtown stores in Nashville.

This boycott was not started by outsiders nor was it maintained by outsiders. It was executed by the Nashville Negro for the Nashville Negro and any attempt to charge anyone else for its responsibility is indulging in wishful thinking.

"STUDENT MOVEMENT"

This boycott, incidentally, also destroyed another concept about the sit-ins widely held by southerners, the concept that the sit-in was purely a student movement, unsupported and unrecognized by responsible adults in the local Negro community.

It is not the students in any community who command the bulk of Negro purchasing power, particularly those students in any given sit-in movement who happen to come from out of town. This purchasing power is controlled, as in the white communities, by Negro adults and largely by the housewives.

The concern of the white southerner, particularly the person who prior to the sit-ins considered himself liberal in racial matters, is the Negro state of mind implied by the sit-in movement.

Until now, many white persons have been willing, indeed anxious to work for the rights of the Negro through the time honored procedures of a legal system.

Until now, many Negroes in the South that have been willing to go along with this method of securing the rights they feel due them.

But the Negro of the sit-in movement, and in the case of Nashville at least, this means the Nashville Negro, is not content with this system any longer.

In his eyes this has resulted in a philosophy which declares they will receive rights given to them by white persons in areas defined by white persons at times specified by white persons.

To illustrate this they point to the fact that although the United States Supreme Court declared racial segregation in public schools unconstitutional six years ago, white communities in general have done very little to implement this ruling.

As another illustration, they point to speeches by southern liberals which, invariably, use the verb "to give" in reference to Negro rights.

So in a real sense, the sit-in movement represents a challenge to the white man's system of order.

THE PARADOX

It is, paradoxically, a clash of two separate liberal movements, one white and one black.

The white movement has with few variations the same goal; that of seeing the Negro acquire full rights but by a legalistic method, at a time established by the whites, and in areas fairly limited to the public governmental field.

The black liberal movement has selected a revolutionary, social method to seek rights on its own speeded up timetable, and in areas which are public in the social sense as well as those which are public in the governmental sense.

This has disturbed the white liberal in the South, so much so that many of them have said, in effect "I've been with you people for years, tried to get you the rights you deserve, but I don't know about this thing you're doing now. I can see little difference between this sit-in movement and the civil disobedience it involves, and the way the segregationists caused trouble when they interfered with school desegregation."

To this, the Negro points out that those who have participated in the sit-ins have not once violated the order of a community, that disorder has been caused by white persons objecting to the sit-ins.

To criticize the participant of the sit-in in the same breath one uses to criticize the segregationist, say the Negroes, is to equate one who risks a community's order to seek justice with one who violates a community's order to preserve injustice.

THE FUTURE

Thus the impact of the sit-ins in the South.

What about the future?

There is every reason to believe the sit-in will become the Negroes' weapon of choice, wherever it can be applied, in their future efforts to secure social, as well as legal, rights wherever a public activity is involved.

For example, it will be the weapon of choice when Negroes extend their drive for eating facilities to restaurants and it will be the weapon of choice when they begin their effort to destroy segregation barriers in the movie houses and other parts of the entertainment field.

It is not beyond the realm of possibility that it will be the weapon of choice when the Negroes seek access to the major hotels in southern cities, access for purposes of lodging as well as eating.

Wherever the sit-in is used, it will always carry with it the threat of economic boycott. And there is no reason for any person to believe that the boycott, the Negroes' utlimate weapon, will not be used when it is considered necessary. It was used against segregated buses in Montgomery, Alabama, and against white merchants in nearby Tuskegee. It has now been used with decisive success against merchants in a large city, Nashville.

The sit-in and the economic boycott are the surest signs that a new era of race relations in the South is underway. They are signs that there is a deep conviction among Negroes that they can wait no longer in starting programs to achieve what they consider to be their rights.

The fact that the movement is church oriented gives it a rich spiritual quality and a solid moral basis in the eyes of the Negro.

The fact that the movement's leaders have been able to show the Negro he is an economic force in any community, gives the movement power.

The fact that the leaders of the movement are generally a younger, better educated group than the leaders of past years, gives the movement the knowledge of organizing and using its power.

The strength and success of the movement, in the long run, rests entirely on the strength, physical as well as moral and mental, of the Negroes who participate in it.

So far, they have shown an almost limitless capacity to endure harm and pressure of various sorts used to thwart their efforts. There is no reason to believe this capacity will diminish as time passes.

To the white person who still refuses to accept this movement as anything more than a student panty raid type affair on grounds that his house servant says she doesn't believe the sit-in is a good idea, it may be suggested that what the house servant says while on duty and subject to immediate economic pressure (being fired) is more often than not considerably different from what this person says away from work. The servant may not be able to participate in a sit-in but he is as adept as any other person in using the telephone.

These are the facts of the sit-in movement. Whether one likes them or agrees with them makes no difference. This is a movement that has deep roots and that is spread through the region.

THIS I BELIEVE

By: Van Buren Long, Chairman of the Chesterfield County Citizens' Committee*

God is a God of history. This I believe. The rise and fall of kingdoms, of empires, and of nations are decreed by God. Babylon, Media, Persia, Greece, and Rome were used by God in His divine plan. Feudalism, the "divine right of kings", and all other past systems of government declared the Glory of God. The present-day struggle between communism and democracy will show forth His handiwork. In this struggle, you, our elected representatives, have a grave and great responibility to our God, our World and our nation. In the Parable of the Talents (Matthew 25: 14-29), each was given talents according to his ability. Similarly, you are given talents according to your ability. I am given talents according to my ability, and you and I must, upon the return of our Master, give an account of the use to which we have put our talents. We will have to answer such questions as, "How did you use your talents in the struggle between management and labor?" How did you use your talents in upholding law and order as decreed by the highest court in the nation?" "What will our answer be?" Each of us must determine the answer for himself. By the Grace of God, may the Master upon His return say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant!" An account must be given the master upon his return. This I Believe.

Passive resistance must be on the right side--it won out in India, and it is winning here. Are we children of God if we cannot witness together? It is the Spirit Himself bearing witness with our spirits that we are children of God. In Romans 8:16, Christ commanded His followers to turn the other cheek. This is passive resistance. The "sit-in", the "kneel-in", the "swim-in"--all are decreed by our loving Father to bring His children to a better understanding of each other. This I Believe.

Prejudice and tradition demand that we all be American citizens but along two parallel lines. The line along which the white man moves is that of a master. The line along which the Negro moves is that of a servant. And just as parallel lines in mathematics can touch each other only at a point of infinity, so must the Negro and the white man come in contact with each other only in relation of servant and master. Natural human desires and reactions have at times forced the contact of these lines at points other than the traditional point, but with what tragic results! Kindred cannot claim kindred; fathers and mothers must deny and hate their own flesh and blood; neighbors cannot be neighborly; children of God cannot witness together in His name. Both the Negro and the white man are suffering in the vicious grasp of prejudice and tradition. This I Believe!

In courts, so-called justice is often dealt according to color. In employment, the Negro is too often hired according to his race rather than by merit. Under this system, white labor suffers also because there is always the threat of the Negro being given the white laborer's job. The denial to the Negro of a chance to develop his ability by means of a first-class education is causing untold harm to our nation. How often may our nation have lost the chance of developing other Negro citizens of the caliber of George Washington Carver, the peanut wizard, Booker T. Washington, the great educator, or Dr. Drew, father of the Blood Bank! Until the parallels set up by prejudice and tradition are removed and every man, woman, and child moves along the same line, there will be no peace and harmony. And God who gave His only Son that men might dwell together in love, will not rest upon His throne. This I Believe.

Since the Negroes of Chesterfield County have been taking an active part in politics, the county has been within the folds of the Democractic Party. However, the Negro in Chesterfield County has shared very few spoils of victory. His share of federal, state, and county jobs has been very limited. The Negro has had very little consideration in the obtaining of new industry for the state.

The Negroes of Chesterfield County will support the candidate who lives and deals closest to the precepts laid down by Jesus Christ. THIS I BELIEVE.

*Mr. Long, as one of approximately 50 witnesses, was one of two negroes who appeared before the annual South Carolina Congressional Delegation Meeting in the Senate Chamber of the State Capitol on Friday, November 10, 1961. This is a copy of the statement he made.

Since the Annual Meeting last March, many requests have been received for copies of the very stimulating speech made by Dr. R. Archie Ellis at the opening plenary session. Dr. Ellis who is minister at the First Baptist Church in Columbia spoke on "The Layman's View of Social Change".

Because of the many requests received, the Christian Action Council joins with the South Carolina Social Welfare Forum in bringing this speech to the public. Dr. Ellis has been for a long time closely identified with both groups.

A LAYMAN'S* VIEW OF SOCIAL CHANGE

When Adam and Eve were leaving the Garden of Eden, so unrecorded "tradition" has it, Adam said, "Darling, we're living in a changing world!" Modern decendants of Adam have summarized man's history in this phrase, "The only thing that is permanent is change."

In special, vivid and dramatic ways, men and women today are having to accept and adjust to changes more swift and extensive than ever before. As South Carolinians, we are part and parcel of these world currents and events. It is essential that leaders in our state today, and certainly the moral and social welfare leaders, strive to understand the facts and meaning of the "rapid social change" taking place about us and of which we are an integral part. We must help provide the leadership that will make it incorrect for it to be said of us in the future, as it has correctly been said in the past, that the Southerner has a "remarkable capacity for unreality, which still enables him to hold out against the logic of arguments and events." (quoted in Nicholls, Southern Tradition and Regional Progress, pxii).

I. Aware of the reality of our changing world, there are three assumptions about social change which are essential for our understanding of it.

FIRST, not all social change is good for human welfare or for a society. There is nothing "absolute" about it that says all such change is "progress."

---

* Layman is here used as distinguished from professional Social Worker.

Without exploring this in detail, we can be sure of the truth of this statement. For example, our state's efforts to "keep out" irresponsible, "fly-by-night" industries puts the finger on one kind of industrial change that is costly and detrimental.

SECOND, the direction of social change is not pre-determined. The changes in our state, and in the South, give a lie to the theory that "weather", as some have said, is the determining factor. Here it can be "ninety degrees in the shade". and men still produce economic progress. Nevertheless, we must understand that there is no one factor and no one goal to which change in human society inevitably takes us.

Illustrations abound of tragic human blunders, however, when this is not understood. For example, the Nazi Party in Germany interpreted "race" as the main determiner of change and "Jews" as the "race" undermining all human progress. Therefore, they "declare war on the Ten Commandments", a Jewish contribution to history, and sought to solve, once and for all, the "Jewish contribution to history, and sought to solve, once and for all, the "Jewish question" by killing all Jews. Adolph Eichmann, soon to be tried in Israeli, along with his boss Adolph Hitler, will be names in history as ignonmious as Judas Iscariot. They tried to re-direct life backward; to change the course of human ideals and history to a pre-Christian, pagan "jungle" of values.

Soviet Communism's challenge to the Free World today is based on the assumption that the world is not "free", that a man's stomach controls both his head and his heart. Khrushchev's "brag" that Communism will "bury" the rest of us is, in fact, based on a vital religious conviction: the religion of economic determinism. And here let us always keep in mind that Communism is dangerous, not because it is anti-religious, but because it is religious and because it worships false gods with a dedication, determination, and dynamism that put to shame our worship of the True God. Communists today, are in fact, involved in a religious crusade, winning "converts" under the guise of human justice while re-directing society to the conformism and the tight-control of a cave-man's world, believing that the only "god" is "economics."

Closer home is still another example. One hundred years ago our forefathers in the South, assuming that the "perfect" society had been achieved, endeavored to stop all change. As we anticipate, and gladly participate in, economic and social changes in our midst, we must realize that our American "cold-war," 1840-1860, and "shooting-war," 1860-1865, was to a large extent a fight for a static, unchanging society. On March 4, 1850, John C. Calhoun's speech to Congress, at a time of severe conflict, was concerned only with the safety of an "unchanging South based on slavery." (quoted by Clement Eaton. History of The Old South, p. 542).

No one factor controls history, no matter how sincerely or fanatically held; no one goal pre-determinedly beckons social change, no matter how "religious" its devotees; no "still" shot, taken from the moving pictures of change, will last forever even though patriots fight and die for it.

THIRD, social change is not all good. It is "generally agreed", according to those leaders who in 1956 took part in the first Southern Assembly, that the "only way per capita income in the South can be increased is through industrialization." And, we are seeing this come about; and it is good, for more of our people in the South are getting the financial means to obtain more of the material needs for a healthy existence.

However, a study of one Metropolitan area in the South, quoted in a mimeographed statement of "Carolinas United," Charlotte, N. C. indicated the following:

For an increase in population of 2,200 people each month, there are added to the community:

24 juvenile delinquents
7 divorcees
7 illegitimate children
156 emotionally disturbed
6 mentally retarded
35 alcoholics

Part of these changes also mean the break-up of our rural "way of life". In decline will be the close intimacy between neighbors, fierce sense of dependence, strong sense of "right and wrong".

New problems will be found on our "moral landscape," as is illustrated in the current stepped-up program for legalized gambling. Some people think this is an inevitable development in "tourism." Incidentally, this is one incipient problem in which social workers, I am sure, are and certainly should be most vitally concerned. This is pointed out in a study of parimutuel gambling at horse races in Rhode Island which said:

"When you get the whole story from social agencies, banks, loan companies, and police officials, this is gold that does not glisten. The other side of this golden coin is deeply engraved with personal tragedies, delinquencies, embezzlements, even suicides . . . . Embezzlements and defalcations from local banking and loan institutions were traceable to horse racing . . . . during the past ten years more than 20 per cent of the towns and cities of the state have suffered major embezzlements by officials either charged with collections or safe-keeping of public funds. Embezzlement is one of the commoner crimes in Rhode Island. The equally common explanation is "I played the races" . . . . Almost anyone you talk with in Rhode Island can tell you of instances where marriages have been shattered, homes and businesses lost by those infected with the deadly virus . . . The immediate effect of the racing season is felt more directly by the butcher, the grocery-man, the baker, who must "carry" many of his customers for months until they have made up their losses at the tracks . . . ." (Thomas E. Murphy in The Hartford, Conn., COURANT, quoted in "Information Bulletin," Va. Church Temperance Council.)

While accepting the proposition that social changes will be greatly stepped up in our current industrial development, that most of the changes can be beneficial though not all of them "good," it is also clear that there will be some conflict. We should not try to keep back change just because some people will be dismayed, some vested interests disturbed, or some deeply held prejudices violated.

Special change will affect the whole of our society: we cannot pick and choose what is to be changed. In "spots" it can be encouraged or hindered but the process will affect the total of society: its structure, its procedures and the values by which the people live. In these days. therefore, all of us need to learn "by heart" and comprehend in mind the AA Prayer: "God, grant us serenity so that we will have the courage to change what can be changed, patience to accept what cannot be changed, and the wisdom to know the difference."

II. As participants in these current social changes in our region and state, we might well ponder these words of a young journalist in the years following the Reconstruction era. These words of Walter Hines Page, though not "heard" by his contemporaries, might well be our "call to greatness" today:

"We look forward to a golden age that we may surely help to bring, not back to one that never was."

Yet in the depths which these changes will bring we are aware that we are the inheritors of two points of view from the days of Reconstruction:

That of Robert E. Lee, who counseled: "Abandon all these local animosities and make your sons American.," and that of another Confederate, General Jubal Early, who proclaimed this dictum of the "unreconstructed Rebel":

"The Confederate who has deserted since the war is infinitely worse than one who deserted during the war."

Just what is the current situation in regard to the "golden age that we may surely help to bring"?

A. "Industrialization" is the key to the underlying and basic economic changes now taking place in our state. This is a "part of the whole" of international and national, social and political changes, and in part, a response to some of them.

Essential aspects of these economic changes are seen in these factors:

1. Industries developing at the rate of nearly $5 million per week during the past fourteen years.
2. Balance of industry and agriculture; with 1958 showing for the first time in South Carolina's history as many people "gainfully employed" in industry as in agriculture.
3. Diversification of agriculture, with cattle and other rural crops replacing much cotton and tobacco.
4. Growth of an international seaport. This is vividly demonstrated in the fact that, on the average, one commercial vessel arrived at Charleston's South Carolina Port Authority every five hours, day and night, throughout the entire year. Of those 1,648 ships, 994 were foreign. Over the past ten years, the annual dollar value of imports and exports has more than tripled—from $66.8 million to $215.9 million, and ship arrivals have more than doubled.

The development of this South Carolina Ports Authority, moreover, is symbolic in two ways: (1) in the above facts, South Carolina is becoming more definitely a part of the world economic scene; (2) in the facts leading up to the $20 million bond issue necessary for developing the Ports Authority. there was "state" action in the legislature—no "up-country" versus "low-country" bickering. In this international development of our ports, each South Carolinian is symbolically becoming a "world-citizen."

These economic changes still leave us a long way to go. While there is some diversity in industry, South Carolina is still essentially a "one-industry state." For example, there was as much expansion in textiles from 1945-1960 ($462.5 million) as in all other products combined ($465.5 million). Neither does the diversification, as yet, include any "heavy" industry, in which one important criteria, value added by manufacture, is greatest.

Certain aspects of industrialization, such as automation, decreased working hours, early retirement, have not "hit" us as greatly, as yet, as in some other sections.

B. The economic changes have been closely related to population redistribution in South Carolina, as in other parts of the nation. While the details of the 1960 census are not yet available, there is little doubt that they will show that there are fewer tenant-farmers. more people moving to urban areas, a smaller per centage of Negroes in the total population and a much greater out-migration from the state of Negroes than whites. Basic to our situation is this population fact, which is a "connector" between economics and education: that South Carolina has a much higher ratio of "children to be educated" to "adults of productive age and sex" than the national average.

C. Education

Affecting immediately more people than any other aspect of social change in South Carolina have been the developments in public education. The primary thrust of this growth has been this: the state's responsibility to provide educational opportunity for all its children.*

This development has recently been "spelled out" by an official (Mr. Coley Seaborn) of the State Department of Education. In an informative speech he points out that the public school legislation of 1907 began state support for high schools; of 1924 guaranteed a seven-month term for every child in the state, first major step in direction of equalizing educational opportunity on a state-wide level; of 1944 saw expansion to twelve-year system begun; of 1945 set forth a new plan for certification of teachers, with teachers classified for state aid purposes. (Incidentally, at that time only 60.3 per cent of teachers were college graduates compared to 92 per cent at present.); of 1951 authorized the consolidation of school districts, financial assistance by the state for school building, and the state assumed total cost of public school transportation.

 According to a State Department report, February, 1961, are these statistics:

(1) 1959-60—610,099 children enrolled in South Carolina public schools (almost a 10,000 increase over previous school year).

(2) This is over one-fourth of total population in South Carolina.

(3) South Carolina has more school children per thousand population than any state except Alaska.

(4) Per capita income of our state near bottom, 58% of national average.

(5) South Carolina is near top in per centage of personal income spent for support of public schools: 1957-58 in South Carolina, 3.9% of national average 3.3%.

These developments are significant and our political leaders should be complimented for these achievements. The unfortunate thing is that our legislators did not have the support and insistence of the public to do over fifty years what should have been done in developing the schools for Negro as well as white. As Mr. Byrnes said when the 1951 bills were being considered, that we should do this now because it is right, and also because now we have to do what should have been done over the past fifty years in order to maintain a segregated public school system.

At three points the lag in educational opportunities for Negroes, now being overcome, has been very noticeable. First, state diplomas for high school graduates were established for whites in 1910, but it was not until 1930 that such diplomas were possible of being attained by Negroes. Second, transportation to schools was not available for Negroes on any extensive basis until after 1951. Previous to that time, there had been many one to four teacher schools for Negroes, many situated fairly close to where the children lived. Nevertheless. the local school districts made very little serious effort to encourage school attendance by Negroes and finally in the 1951 "equalization" program this service was assumed by the state. Third, higher education for Negroes still lags. One competent historian of the South has pointed out that in 1950-51 there was $10½ million allocated by all southern states for Negro higher education, which amount was less than that allocated for the state white university, Louisiana State University. In South Carolina we have now one state-supported Negro institution, compared with five for white students. In the 1960-61 Appropriations Bill were the following allocations:

NEGRO—State College	$ 1,527,000.00
WHITE—Total	$12,016,000.00
USC	$ 3,479,000
Citadel	$ 1,578,000
Clemson	$3 ,080,000
Winthrop	$ 1,389,000
Medical College	$ 2,490,000

There are "reasons" of course for this difference. Nevertheless, the fact is that nearly 40% of the high school students in South Carolina in 1960 were Negro, yet less than 15% of the state's contribution to higher education was for this group. Also while there is duplication of numerous special areas of higher education in the several white colleges, there are very few areas for special training at State College. We must confront ourselves with the great need to provide the advanced educational opportunities that will challenge and encourage the development of the most capable of all our students and provide ways for the employment of their skills and abilities to advance the welfare of all in our state.

We recognize, of course, that this consideration moves us to the point of our most crucial problem, both in the schools and in the state as a whole. What can we say of it?

Let us keep our sanity! For the most part, citizens of both races and officials of our state are to be complimented for their poise and calmness, but the days immediately ahead will determine to a large extent, how well we have planned for this period of adjustment.

D. Religion

There has been a phenomenal increase in recent years in the numbers of South Carolinians formally belonging to the churches of our state. Since World War II this has been matched by tremendous building programs, not only in the suburbs where new churches have been established, but also in many of the rural and down-town city churches. Making this possible has been the increase in stewardship. In addition to providing funds for buildings and missions, these contributions have been devoted to strengthening and creating new institutions for social welfare. The facilities of the children's homes have been improved and have, in some instances, provided increased services.

"Homes for the Aging" have been the most significant recent development. Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians have created new homes in the past ten years.

With new people moving into the state there has been growth in some of the smaller denominations, and aggressive programs by some of the Pentecostal and similar groups has meant considerable increase in their membership and churches. However, the old principle, "them that has, gits," has been noticeably operative in church membership, and the greatest actual increases have been in Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches.

Of particular relevance to the social witness and relevance of the churches has been the evolving and growing program of the Christian Action Council. This state-wide, inter-denominational agency not only makes possible some cooperation and "talking" together by leaders of the various church groups in the state, but also provides a liaison service between the churches and social movements in the state. Its legislative report which is called "YOUR STATE HOUSE," for example, is a unique service for public-interested citizens as it reports on matters of common concern to all.

The increased membership of the churches, however, has not necessarily meant an increased vitality or relevance of Christians, or churches, in public affairs. We recognize here that the history of Christianity in this state has not, in general, encouraged such concern. Many of us hope, and there seem to be some indications, that there will be a stronger prophetic voice of the churches on issues vital to the moral and spiritual welfare of our citizens in the future. Strong our churches have been in evangelism and social service and missions—and stonger yet in these areas we need to be, but we must also become strong in spot-lighting the needs of our "neighbors" in our midst, stirring the waters of social conscience until healing comes.

E. Politics

In the "stirring of the social conscience," South Carolina ministers today will not be doing anything new in Christian tradition, merely giving expression in our own generation to the demands for justice and righteousness as the prophets did so long ago. It has been said, "If Amos should come today, I do not know where he would preach, but I suspect it would be from the court-house steps!" Politics, symbolized by the court-house, has been and remains a most important aspect of the life of South Carolina. This power has been used many times for good, and we should know and compliment our leaders when this is the case.

Examples of beneficial political developments in recent years include the following: (1) the significant contributions of state govenment to the strengthening of public education, as has already been noted. (2) the maintenance of stability and solvency in state affairs is a source of gratitude to us all. (3) enlarging the scope of citizen participation in politics is of crucial importance, both in extending the ballot to the Negro citizens and in the potential two-party system.

It would be well just here to comment briefly on the last point. A Mississippi Congressman expressed the belief in 1955 that "one big change" in the politics of his state "is the increasing respectability of the Republican Party." This can also be said of South Carolina.

Continuing to list the favorable developments in South Carolina government will require noting, in the fourth place, achievements since Word War II in social welfare, such as the elimination of the "pardon racket" and the improvements in the state mental hospital. Governor Hollings' "State of the State Address" to the legislature this year gives very strong additional impetus to the further developements of this kind of social responsibility by our state government.

Fifth, also, in the operation of our state government there have been many studies for the improvement of various agencies, the Tax Commission and tax policy, Insurance Department, State Developement Board, and the Legislative Council has become a most helpful technical adjunct for the legislators.

Some of the weaknesses of "Traditional Politics," however, are still with us. These include the following legislative matters:

(a) "excessively" great power of the legislative body,

(b) lack of local autonomy on the county and municipal level,

(c) undue influence of a few key legislators and their co-workers,

(d) lack of response to public concerns in matters pertaining to social welfare,

Three related "general" weaknesses point the finger at each of us:

(a) continuance of "personal" politics, emphasizing the fact that we tend to vote on the basis of "person" without due regard to "issues";

(b) lack of a sense of social responsibility on the part of the public, interest in government or politics tending to be very weak and sporadic, except when some action or proposal hits a "nerve-center of vested interests",

(c) continued domination of the "race issue" in political and governmental affairs. A recent study of South Carolina politics states, sadly I think, that, "race has been, is and will be in the foreseeable future, the issue that dwarfs all others in the state."

The most crucial question in social change, in South Carolina, the South and the nation is reposed in this problem.

III. Well, "Watchman, what of the night?" Just as this question must be asked of the political and economic leaders of our world, it must be put especially to those of us in whose calling has been given the responsibility for social and moral leadership. We are, of course, all aware of the paradox of this moment in history: the time at which it is possible to provide for all men the material resources for healthful existence is the very time at which mankind has the destructive resources to destroy all men. As we live in a time which can be for us in South Carolina a prosperous new era, it can also be the time of increasing "darkness" in the world. Certainly, therefore, we want to be, and have been forced to become, "Citizens of the world". We must both understand all our problems and make all our decisions in light of the entire world situation. Yet, the point at which our decisions count most, where we can really exert our influence most helpfully, is right here in our own community and state.

As inheritors of the Judaic-Christian heritage, we take history with the utmost seriousness. We believe that it ultimately makes the greatest of difference as to how we use our influence and what decisions we make, RIGHT HERE, JUST NOW. We do believe that God is at work in our world, that He can be doing a "new thing", and that we can be His Servants and instruments of His hands.

Four suggestions this "watchman" would suggest to you other "watchmen" as we would seek to guide our state's social changes to that "golden age that we may surely help to bring."

FIRST, be aware of and sensitive to the impact of all changes upon the social and moral welfare of each and every citizen in our society. This is, of course, more than any one of us can do. But it does focus on a most important criteria by which to judge all changes. It does, also, point to a significant contribution that can be made by the fellowship of those in Social Work, whose collective contribution can be just this kind of appraisal of the changes that take place in our midst.

SECOND, recognize the necessity for, and do everything possible, to create a "climate of opinion" that will make possible a continuing critical appraisal of the changes that occur. This will require both "facts" and the ability and freedom to discuss them. The modest allocation by the 1960 General Assembly for economic research is a beginning for factual and objective study that is direly needed by our citizens. The Christian Action Council, Carolinas United, and other church and civic groups are beginning to make needed surveys and studies that will point out the needs for and impact resulting from change. It is singularly unfortunate that in the early nineteen twenties the opportunity to establish an "Institute in Social Research" was turned down by our state university. Essential for an area of changes are the resources and facilities to study the facts of, and to plan for the needs of, social evolvement.

More important than knowledge of the facts of change, though, is the "climate of opinion" in which it is possible for such facts and their implications to be freely and frankly discussed. It is childish and irresponsible for the vocal protectors of local conditions to say, "Well, if you don't like things here, move somewhere else. This is a free country!" Yes, and just because it is free, there should be the condition of freedom in which responsible persons can discuss together the changes that are being and ought to be made. As one of the writers in the recent anthology, THIS IS THE SOUTH (edited by Howard, p. 272), said:

> "It is a Southern contradiction that a region which prides itself, and rightfully, upon the individualism and independence of its people has never-the-less demanded of them a nearly blind conformity . . . "

It is this contradiction that must change!

Some of the leaders of this SOCIAL WELFARE FORUM eagerly hope, if I am rightly informed, that this annual conference can become one of the means through which this contradiction may be removed. With leaders from Social Work, church, business, government and all other areas of concern meeting together, hearing discussed the changes taking place all about us, and thinking together with honesty and frankness about what they mean for social welfare, in this way this Forum can make an immensely important contribution to real progress in South Carolina.

THIRD, Social Workers, who are the "technicians of social welfare", if you will permit this humble suggestion from an ally, should never be content with being "just technicians". The minister of necessity and desire spends most of his time in his priestly role of helping those in trouble or need of body or mind or spirit. But the pastor's prophetic role is also important and essential, not just in helping to cure the sick but in identifying the "swamps" that need to be drained and motivating people so to act. Social workers also are essentially "helping persons." But, if you are working with a person who faces reality by "sticking her head in the sand", your role is not just to provide clean sand into which she can stick her head. That would be adjustment, but not to reality. Your role is to help persons face reality. In doing so you frequently find and identify conditions that need changing. Thus, like the minister, you also have both a "priestly" and "prophetic" function. And like the minister also, you never fulfill your responsibility by just contentedly "doing your job"—doing what you have to do by 5:00 p.m.

FOURTH, assume the burden of doing all in your power to strengthen the moral foundations of our society. Without a basic moral consensus, life in society is impossible, except as driven and guided by a Gestapo. The moral structures of our society are historically based on the Judeo-Christian faith and the democratic credo. They emphasize personal integrity, a sense of human dignity for all individuals, and the importance of social responsibility. Today these are being challenged, even in places they have become objects of scorn. Some of the "entertainment magazines," for example, are openly crusading for what we traditionally would term "pagan immorality". The motivational researchers, in advising the advertisers, frequently play on the theme of making "the consumer" feel right about doing and buying what the consumer "feels" he ought not to do or buy.

Some of the changes taking place about us undercut, and some push forward, the values of personal integrity, human dignity, and social responsibility. However, these moral values are essential and must be preserved if the results of social change are to be of value or worth to the common good.

CONCLUSION

"Change and change, and never rest;
Not what we are, but what we hope for is best."

This couplet indicates our present condition—if fact and morale. In the midst of this changing world, we hope to make it better. The author of a recent significant book about economic progress in the South dedicated it in these words:

> "To my son, David, in the hope that he may know a better South because I lived, as I have known a better South because my father lived before me,"

Just as the Bible begins with creative change, with God creating order out of the elements, so the Bible ends with the happy anticipation of God's creating a "new heaven and a new earth." God is continually at work in the world for us, and He can be working in us and through us. As His servants, in hope, we can "look forward to a golden age that we may surely help to bring, not back to one that never was."

SOCIAL WELFARE FORUM

The Social Welfare Forum is a successor organization to the South Carolnia Conference of Social Work which grew out of the South Carolina Associated Charities and was founded in 1909. Dr. A. T. Jamison, prominent Baptist Clergyman and Superintendent of Connie Maxwell Children's Home, was a principal founder and first President.

On the occasion of the 50th Anniversary, the entire membership of the Conference participated in planning for the future. It was decided to change from a Conference-type organization to a Forum. The work of the Forum is carried on by volunteers. A Board of Directors guide this Forum's activities between Annual Meetings and a number of standing Committees carry out the specialized undertakings.

It is a matter worthy of note that Dr. Jamison's successor at Connie Maxwell Children's Home, Dr. Sam Smith, also a prominent Baptist Leader and Social Worker, was President of the organization during the 50th Anniversary year.

The Forum, each year, provides an opportunity for the people throughout the State to discuss together some of our more pressing social problems and to bring to the appropriate authority recommendations for meeting these social needs. Topics featured at the 1961 Forum were: Care of the Aged; Protection of Children and Youth; Adequate Mental Health Facilities; Improved Adoption Laws; and Community Planning.

CHRISTIAN ACTION COUNCIL

The Christian Action Council is the "working arm" of the evangelical Protestant churches in South Carolina in the area of public affairs. Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Church of God, Pentecostal Holiness, Wesleyan Methodist, A.R.P., Disciples of Christ officially support and cooperate in this inter-church agency.

Dr. Neil Truesdell of Newberry, currently president, is in a succession of distinguished churchmen who have given leadership to the Council in the 30 years of its existence. The Rev. Howard G. McClain is the Council's Executive Director. Its office is at 1420 Lady St., Columbia, S. C.

The Christian Action Council serves the churches and Christians in the state in the following ways:

(1) promotes educational programs relating to moral and civic problems;

(2) provides information about ethical issues involved in public affairs;

(3) assists churches and Christians through providing films, and other materials on Christian action;

(4) stimulates cooperative action by the churches on social and moral issues;

(5) aids denominations in the development of and promotion of their own programs of Christian Action.

A council that seeks—through fact-finding, discussion and action—to attain equal opportunity for all people in Virginia.

PLEASE READ EVERY WORD OF THE FILTHY OF HATE LITERATURE THAT IS BEING DISTRIBUTED AGAINST NEGROES IN CONNECTION WITH THE FEBRUARY 25 ELECTION. THIS ALONE SHOULD MAKE YOU ANGRY ENOUGH TO GIVE FULL SUPPORT IN CARRYING OUT OUR SUGGESTION BELOW.

From : THE RICHLAND COUNTY CITIZENS COMMITTEE

To : Every Columbian Who Should be Alerted to the DANGER THAT THREATENS OUR CITY

R E A D AND A C T !

(A CALL FOR SERVICE BEYOND THE "LINE OF DUTY")

Dear Fellow-Citizen:

On February 25, Columbia voters have a DATE WITH DESTINY .... when it becomes the duty of each one to help elect two members of City Council. FAST ACTION is in order now. We do not have time for CHIN MUSIC.

By telephone (PLEASE CALL TEN PEOPLE AND ASK THEM TO TELL TEN MORE), by contact with organized groups, word of mouth, we must roll the vote out to the polls.. Canvas your block, or help canvas your neighborhood with the appeal to "BE SURE TO VOTE ON FEBRUARY 25."

For all farsighted Columbians, this is the most important local election - bar none - held in this generation. While we are to elect two councilmen, we are more importantly - to make a choice between sound, stable government in the hands of men of vision, forthrightness, high intelligence, and proven performance or the LAYING OF THE FOUNDATIONS of a government of intense hatred, threats, burnings, bombings, trigger-happy policemen, vicious police dogs, and every other earmark of rabid political leadership.

DON'T SAY, "IT CAN'T HAPPEN IN COLUMBIA!" It can! The healthy seeds are planted here. We must not let them sprout.

Let's not move one step backward toward a situation where our homes may be blasted, our churches bombed, our children mangled as they worship the Living God, or killed by snipers as they move through city streets.

Columbia has been a peaceful city. We are a people of peace, even under oppression and denial. In connection with our long range objective to exhaust all legal means to insure our enjoyment of our civil liberties, we must carry out our immediate objective of voting wisely now to keep the peace. We must support political leaders who are inclined toward peace and efficiency rather than those who are inspired by hate and rabble-rousing.

We B E G all ministers and church leaders serving within the Columbia city limits to make Sunday your kick-off day to spread our message which we know carries the burden of your thoughts and your prayers. Ministers in rural areas are asked to urge their membership appeal to relatives in friends in the city limits to be sure to vote in this election. EACH PERSON MUST VOTE FOR 2 MEN.

After calm and careful consideration of much information at hand, our organization has voted to support RUBIN(Hyman) and HYATT(Troy L.). We trust that you, your friends and followship will join us in this choice, and V O T E !

Very sincerely yours,

I. WHAT IS ONE CONSTRUCTIVE CHANNEL FOR MEETING TODAY'S CHALLENGE IN S.C.?

The South Carolina Council on Human Relations, an interracial organization working for a better South Carolina since 1919.

The first organization, brought about largely through the efforts of religious leadership in South Carolina and notably that of the late Bishop Finlay of the Upper Diocese of the Episcopal Church, was known as the Commission on Interracial Co-operation. Later this group became the South Carolina Division of the Southern Regional Council, and in 1954 the S. C. Council on Human Relations. The Council is not an affiliate of the Southern Regional Council, although the two groups work co-operatively.

The S. C. Council on Human Relations serves as a channel for bi-racial communication in order that through understanding and constructive effort solutions to pressing problems of the day might be sought.

II. HOW DOES THE S.C.COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS CONTRIBUTE TO SEEKING SOLUTIONS?

By providing speakers and consultants, methods and materials, "seeing-eye", clearing house, and other program services.

By assisting local council and other groups in bettering community relations and in promoting community development, urban and rural.

By working for equal vocational and political opportunities for all citizens of the state, and urging full participation of all persons in the responsibilities of citizenship.

By encouraging informed participation in producing educational progress at local and state levels.

III. WHAT ARE THE PRESENT AREAS OF WORK OF THE COUNCIL?

1. Education and the Schools
2. Economic Development and Employment.
3. Community Relations and Development
4. The Church and Human Relations
5. Civic and Political Participation and Education
6. Recruitment and Training of Leadership
7. High School and College Students

IV. HOW DOES THE COUNCIL SEEK TO MEET THE NEEDS OF THE HOUR?

It provides a channel for constructive communication through local Councils on Human Relations, conferences, workshops, and committees.

It serves local Councils on Human Relations in Aiken, Beaufort, Cheraw, Columbia, Greenville, Hampton County, Jasper County, Rock Hill, and Sumter; and works with concerned individuals in other communities attempting to develop local councils and/or requesting program services.

It provides state-wide workshops, conferences, and membership meetings which focus upon: Leadership and Program Building, Education, Economic Growth and Job Opportunities, Community Development, Non-Violence, and Religion and Human Relations.

It brings outstanding speakers and leaders to South Carolina for Council programs and for the use of other groups, such as the Rev. Heslip Lee, executive director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, Dr. Samuel M. Proctor, former Deputy Director of the Peace Corps, and others.

It gathers data, prepares and distributes material to members and friends of the South Carolina Council as well as to local Councils and other interested groups.

It publishes the monthly SCCHR Review, dealing with progress and problems in Human Relations, distributed to members and others.

It urges attendance of all citizens at such events as the Congressional hearings held annually in Columbia and other public meetings, which deal with pressing problems of the state.

Alerts Negro citizens in various communities to Federal programs developing in local communities such as the Rural Area Development (RAD), the Area Redevelopment Administration (ARA), the Manpower Development and Training Act (MDTA), the Special Training for Economic Progress (STEP), and the Economic Opportunity Act (EOA).

It develops and sponsor s a Student Program in which students from 20 colleges and two theological seminaries have participated and which is now organized as the South Carolina Students Council on Human Relations.

V. HOW IS THE SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL FINANCED?

The S.C.C.H.R. is a non-profit, tax-exempt private organization, which is supported by individual memberships and contributions by some 1,000 South Carolinians. Recently Field Foundation grants have made possible an expanding program for the Council. These grants and other grants-in-aid are contingent upon a strong and growing support within South Carolina.

A Few Guidelines for Councils on Human Relations

1. The group is biracial and interfaith. It is no collection of persons of one group working for or concerned with others. Rather it is genuinely representative of all of the people concerned with the problems which all share.

2. A major program emphasis of a Council is education in the broadest sense of that term.

(a) This process of education begins with the members of the Council itself, getting to know each other and bringing to a central Council the particular information and insights from each group in the community. The Council constantly works to enlarge its membership to give an increasing number of people the opportunity of sharing the experience of working in a democratic group.

(b) Ideally this process reaches beyond Council members to any persons of good intent within the community, offering through literature, conferences, public meetings, and cooperation with other groups an opportunity for an ever increasing number of persons to share in the intellectual and emotional processes which are necessary for understanding.

(c) The process includes interpreting to the larger community the grievances of a minority or the reasons for unpopular actions or demands.

(d) Where facilities permit the process includes the collection and dissemination of factual and interpretive information to correct misunderstandings and misinterpretations.

3. Frequently, and properly, disadvantaged minorities will take the responsibility for initiating change. Where this occurs, unique opportunities are presented to a Council on Human Relations to:

(a) Interpret the situation in its broadest perspective, indicating the ways in which the majority shares in the problem and benefits in the solution;

(b) Offer the skills of its members in resolving the conflict of crisis which may arise.

4. Whether change comes at the initiative of the minority, or through the leadership and persuasion of a Council on Human Relations, or from other community elements, a primary role of the Council is securing the practical implementation of change, seeing that desirable change comes, is understood, remains and grows.

5. A Council on Human Relations is a non-partisan non-political body. It may educate the community concerning legislation but does not lobby. It never supports or rejects a candidate.

6. The Council on Human Relations involves itself deeply in the life of the total community, expressing concern for all phases of community life, including such specifics as employment, education, health, housing, recreation, and the like. It would frequently emphasize the problems of minorities as they relate to these areas.

Finally, a Council would return to the point of its origin and purpose, a group representative of and concerned with all of the community: people of good will dedicated to establishing the decent and good society.

Editor The Item:

In reference to the letter published last week revealing the failure of the Sumter Junior Chamber of Commerce to invite the participation of Negro bands and churches in the Christmas parade, we wish to state the Rev. Nelson and the Negro ministerial alliance are not the only members of the Sumter community who are appalled at the constant, obvious, and degrading discourtesy of the Sumter commercial interests.

We who are here in military service also comprise a large part of the community. We support it with substantial payrolls, with contributions of our time and money to civic organizations. We pay rent or utilities; and the money of the taxpayers of all the nation pours into your city schools with the enrollment of every child from a military or civil service family.

In order to enroll our children in these "white" schools, it is now requested that we present birth certificates for all ages in order to prove no taint of Negro blood. Still, Japanese, Turkish, Mexican or any other descent is acceptable. Only the Negro of long American ancestry and distinguished service in our nations' defense from the revolutionary war forward, only these citizens are slighted and slandered. It is in these same schools that meetings are permitted of the White Citizens Council which has as its aim the frustration of the national laws which our husbands are sworn to uphold.

We look to the "white" churches for the teaching of the brotherhood of man, but we hear only the consent of silence to these indignities. We can and do work within the churches; but we can and shall do as many Negroes are doing and take our business elsewhere.

Sincerely,

An Essay On The Economic Ramifications of Racial Discrimination In Little Rock

I. Desegregation And The Investment Crisis

II. A New Negro Market For Little Rock

John A. Thompson
Harvard Student - summer employee JACHR

The moves to resist the school desegregation process in Little Rock have constantly been challenged by the argument that such opposition is "bad for business." This proposition, however, has usually been stated so imprecisely and in such sweeping terms that a number of clarifications are necessary in order that Little Rock businessmen can properly understand how racial discrimination and economic well-being in this community are related and what positive role the business world can realistically assume in this area.

I. Desegregation And The Investment Crisis

"This Is The Last, This Is The Last...."

At this point there can be little doubt that resistance to desegregation of the public schools was the major factor in the sudden death of Little Rock's highly successful industrial development program. It is simply not possible that the recession which gripped the national economy during 1957 could have caused such a great stoppage of new investment as has occurred in this city since that year. Surely, the violence at Central High School in September of 1957 and the closing of Little Rock's public high schools the following year made the community an extremely unlikely prospect for new industrial expansion by firms that have an entire nation to choose from.

Figures released recently by the Little Rock Industrial Development Company show that in the past two years and since the occurence of the two events outlined above not one new industry has decided to locate in the city, whereas in the preceeding seven-year period no less than forty major factories moved into the area.

Similarly, the state as a whole suffered, as new capital expenditures in Arkansas decreased 80% in two years. Here, no doubt, the effects of the recession were more pronounced; even so, it was during this time that the political leaders of North Carolina (especially Governor Luther Hodges) brought their state's economic expansion along in grand style.

There are still hopes of regaining the early success of the industrialization program, both in Little Rock and in Arkansas, but this cannot be accomplished without positive action on the part of those businessmen who are interested in such a re-establishment.

Since 1957 the Little Rock story has been told principally by the national news media, and it is because of the virtually unanimous emphasis these reports placed on the lack of positive community leadership in crisis that Little Rock came to be thought such an unlikely risk by companies looking for a new home. There was no offically organized responsibility assumed by business leaders during the violence (in 1957) nor was school closing ever fought with any great vigor in 1958-59. The national press looked in vain for something good to say, and, indeed, they did look, and will continue to do so. It remains for those business men who have a financial interest in providing good publicity to make unmistakable this city's will to fair play for Negro citizens.

Guidelines

It is the assumption of this essay that, generally speaking, those businessmen who would be both directly and secondarily interested, financially, in reviving Little Rock's industrialization hopes have to implement the following policies.

Violence

While the Little Rock police have developed a more professional attitude toward law-enforcement since the advent of the city-manager form of government, it is still true that law officers generally will render better service to a community when supported by local leaders. In this city there is a definite need to secure from all law enforcement officers a strong statement regarding crowd behavior on the day school opens and these should be concurred in by local business and community leaders. If this is not done, there is every chance that once again the national press will present Little Rock as totally unconcerned about the acts of the mob that will gather, and once more the door will slam shut on new economic growth.

There are only a few simple steps that need to be taken:

1. Obtain public statements that all unusual and dangerous situations will be reported to police headquarters.

2. Show citizens that the police force is quite capable of speedy mobilization to halt even the most extreme form of crowd.
3. Insure that plans exist well in advance to prevent curiosity seekers or potential rioters from entering a high-tension area.
4. Encourage police not to use excessive force but to be firm, impersonal, and diplomatic in their handling of "spectators."
5. Obtain official assurance that large reinforcements are in reserve and are quickly available if necessary.
6. Request that civilians be used as police auxiliaries, if needed.

It is important to announce publicly that law and order will be preserved and that breach of the peace will be dealt with as sternly as law itself allows. Taped "spot" broadcasts on radio and TV by both local government officials and community leaders could be used profitably to this end. Such announcements will put parents at ease and discourage the formation of violent demonstrations.

The direct economic interests of a considerable number of Little Rock businesses dictate the reason why they should stand firmly against illegal and violent obstruction to the desegregation of the public schools. In this connection it should be pointed out that this problem of violence will not grow less with the passage of time, unless forthright action is taken this year.

The desegregation plans of the school board may stretch over as many as ten years. Depleted investment in new economic installations during so long a period will cripple Little Rock almost irreperably.

II. A New Negro Market In Little Rock

The years between 1950 and 1960 will show Little Rock experiencing the largest increase in potential Negro buyers in its history. At present this customer is not seriously competed for by the majority of local businesses. With regard to the growing economic importance of the Negro this is not good business sense. It is to the financial interest of Little Rock businessmen to begin to treat the Negro as an important customer; not to do so will see economic profit for all go by default and out of the state.

By Prosperity We Are Corrupted

The increase in population in the greater Little Rock area may be interpreted economically as the cause of a mild boom. While the population--Negro and white--of Arkansas decreases, that of her urban communities is on the increase, and the leader among these is the capitol city and Pulaski County.

These facts in part show that the Negro population and, therefore, the Negro market has expanded considerably since the 1940's. Also during this period the purchasing power of this group has risen significantly as the Arkansas Negro has begun to desert the lower, common-labor positions for higher paying jobs. The Industrial Research Center at the University of Arkansas had this to say about the nature of this shift:

> "Among all employed non-whites there has been a continued drop in the proportion who were farmers and farm workers and a drop in domestic service workers, but there has been a rise in the proportion who were proprietors, craftsmen, and sales workers. The chief non-white employment changes by industry have been declines in the proportions of workers in agriculture and personal services and increases in the proportions in manufacturing, trade, professional and other industries."

[a] Does not include unemployed.

A further look at the statistical records of the U.S. Census will demonstrate that in addition to the shift upward of the Negro population the non-white Arkansan is better housed, better educated, and more healthy than ever before in his history. There is every reason to believe that during the next decade this group will not easily lend itself to economic differentiation from a large number of middle-class whites.

The impending economic arrival of this minority group dictates the reason why Little Rock businessmen should compete for their patronage. Negroes are now in a position to buy more goods and services than ever before and are becoming more so daily.

In addition to the local Negro market the Little Rock businessman would do well to consider the fact that with the improvement of the Arkansas highway system this economic area is a natural marketplace for all Negroes in central and southern Arkansas. Definitely, this business should be attracted.

The fact that selling is oriented to the much larger white market does much to alienate Negro business. The economic advantage sure to result from the removal of various handicaps to the Negro buyer in Little Rock is a good reason why an impartial policy with respect to all customers should be encouraged. For Little Rock businesses to put the Negro buyer on an equal basis with whites will encourage the patronage of the latter at the expense of other sections of the state. An Arkansas Negro would rather come to Little Rock to buy than to submit to discourtesy and second-class treatment close to home. A Little Rock Negro will spend more time and more money downtown if certain restrictions upon his economic activity are removed.

Though most firms are experiencing prosperity from the greatly increased white population in the Little Rock - North Little Rock area this will decrease, downtown especially, with the advent of the shopping centers to the suburbs. The central core will become more dependent upon Negro trade and this will not be unprofitable. Downtown seems to be booming now, but the future is not so certain.

A Business Deal With A Minority Group?

There is no known reasoning that has ever persuaded a person to endanger himself economically; but the removal of barriers to the increased economic activity of the Negro buyer is risk well worth the effort, for in the long run it will pay. This risk, however, can be minimized if all economic institutions which now discriminate against Negroes cease doing so in concert, quietly and quickly, and meet any complaints in a matter-of-fact, unconcerned manner.

In general, here are the barriers which need to be removed if Little Rock businessmen are interested in increasing their business and, over the long run, providing some favorable publicity for a city which is in dire need of it.

1. Facilities

A recent survey of a sample number of important downtown businesses has uncovered the following facts with regard to discrimination in store facilities.

A. Fountains. Segregated drinking facilities are operated by an extremely small number of the businesses investigated. Only 21% of the entire sample required Negroes to use a separate fountain while the remaining 79% made no stipulation whatsoever. The segregated drinking fountain is on the way out; it is no longer correct to conclude that it is numbered among a local mores which businesses must respect. Therefore, those businesses which have not yet revoked their discriminatory policy with respect to drinking fountains should expect no trouble if they do it quietly and unobtrusively (already they are in a small minority).

B. Eating. Virtually 100% of those firms which include eating facilities as a service to the customer had a definite, however inarticulate, policy against serving Negroes, or else required them to eat at a separate counter. This is without doubt one of the greatest limitations upon the Negro shopper in Little Rock. There is no place for such a person to sit down for a quiet, restful meal in pleasant surroundings. Those establishments where Negroes are able to eat are woefully inadequate, generally unattractive, and in most cases as much as a seven to ten-block walk from the heart of the business district. The only other choice is to be served, then eat on the sidewalk, or to be requested to go to the alley door for service. With such conditions prevailing Negroes tend to spend a minimum of time downtown and those from outside the city find a long shopping trip a treatment instead of a treat.

While it is probably not realistic to suppose that restaurants in the heart of the downtown area will soon begin to serve Negroes the economic opportunity of establishing at least one which had no racial policy at all, was clean and attractive, and served medium priced meals, is so tempting as to be almost irresistible. Such an institution would encourage the Negro shopper to remain downtown longer and would do a large business, even at night as there is virtually nowhere for middle class Negro families to "go out for dinner" in pleasant surroundings. A great number of out-of-town shoppers would also be attracted to Little Rock by this incentive.

C. Rest Rooms. All firms which included rest-rooms as a service to their customer required Negroes to use a separate facility. This was found to be the case no matter of what vintage the construction of the building. Like the separate water-fountain, the separate rest-room is an insult to the dignity of the Negro shopper. It is less so perhaps because it is usually less apparent, but probably far more so because it is commonly located in the basement or some other equally inaccessible place, and is filthy, and connotes to the customer that the management believes him some sort of peculiarly contagious being. The removal of such a condition for the Negro shopper would definitely improve the store's chances of separating more such customers from more of their money.

2. Transportation

The desegregation of the public transportation system in Little Rock is often acclaimed as a major step in the improvement of race relations in the city, and quite justifiably so. The non-segregation policy operative at the Municipal Airport and at both of the city's train stations is a less talked about, but a similarly important achievement. Despite this success there are other areas in the transportation industry in this city that are a public eyesore and amount to just another contribution to the bad publicity of which Little Rock has had so much. Here are the facts regarding public transportation the great users of which are Negro.

A. Train Stations. Both have a policy of non-discrimination with respect to sitting and eating and rest-rooms; though at the Missouri Pacific Negro travelers voluntarily segregate themselves according to custom.

B. Air Port. A policy of non-discrimination covers all areas of customer service.

C. Bus Stations. Here the good record is spoiled. The Negro waiting rooms of two bus stations in the heart of the city (Main Street area) are uncomfortable because they are cramped, dirty, poorly lighted, poorly ventilated, and have no eating facilities. The inter-intra-state ruse by which Negroes are segregated is a public demonstration of lack of fair play and a completely unnecessary burden upon the Negro who must come to Little Rock via this mode of transportation. These bus stations and the other, located on Broadway, should be pursuaded simply to remove all signs and, thus, to join the other terminals of the city in a policy of non-discrimination.

3. Employment

The most difficult economic problem which faces the Negro today is his seemengly slim chance of sharing in the wealth which new industry will bring to Arkansas. Eli Ginzberg in The Negro Potential concludes that "as long as there remains a large surplus of white workers in the South employers will have little incentive to challenge local tradition by hiring Negroes for more industrial jobs." This conclusion applies accurately to Arkansas and also to the Little Rock Urban Area, and not only to industry, but to retail employment as well. There are too many whites looking for jobs to make the employment of Negroes in other than traditional white jobs economically imperative.

However, it is obvious that the hiring of Negroes will greatly increase the business of some retail firms among the Negroes, for a Negro saleslady or salesman will build up a personal Negro clientile.

It is not entirely realistic to suppose that this will automatically cause an unfavorable reaction among whites. The customer-salesman relationship is quite formally defined in the minds of all buyers and as long as one is treated with concern, honesty, courtesy and friendliness it is hard to find objection. In addition, the Negro now occupies similar position as waiter and waitress. The difference is not terribly profound. Moreover, managers should expect Negroes to be naturally more, not less, courteous to white customers, even more so than their white counterparts. Even to begin hiring Negroes in such positions on a trial basis would do more to create good publicity, good race relations and favorable customer attitudes than possibly any other move businessmen could now make.

STATEMENT ON THE CURRENT SCHOOL SITUATION

The following statement was approved by the state board of directors of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, meeting in Richmond Thursday, February 12.

The statement was issued by the Rev. Hubert Beckwith of Annandale, state president of the inter-racial group. Other officers of the Council include Dean Thomas Henderson, Richmond vice-president; Dr. Kenneth Morland of Lynchburg, vice-president; Mrs. B.A. Makielski of Charlottesville, secretary; and Jo K. Higdon of Richmond, Treasurer.

The Virginia Council on Human Relations is a statewide organization which advocates "the gradual desegregation of our public school system in accordance with the rulings of the national high tribunal".

"The Virginia Council On Human Relations is deeply gratified at the peaceful beginning of the adjustment of Virginia schools to federal court rulings, and commends the Governor, school officials and the people of the communities concerned for the admirable manner in which order and decorum were preserved. The difficult operation was carried out in the highest tradition of a great state.

"The public schools of Virginia can be maintained within the framework of Federal law and of state law. They must be maintained if our children are to receive educational opportunities equal to those available in the other states of the Union.

"Tuition grants and so-called private schools can never meet adequately the educational needs of our children. The use of public funds to support public schools in some areas and pay tuition grants in others would be a growing and excessive drain on public funds. Private schools cannot be efficiently supervised and coordinated so as to ensure proper educational standards. Tuition grants of $250 cannot maintain really efficient private schools.

"In the modern world, education must be primarily a public responsibility. The creation of our system of free, public schools has made American standards of literacy and educational achievement among the highest in the world. The Virginia Council on Human Relations believes that public education should continue to be a constitutional obligation of the State.

"The Council believes that the repeal of the state compulsory attendance law was a hasty, unnecessary, and ill-advised action. Education for all is an American tradition. The children and the public interest are best served if all children of the state are required to obtain minimal schooling, whether public or private.

"The Virginia Council is concerned over the continued lack of understanding and existence of tensions between and among the races over the school crisis. Consultation and understanding between the races is increasingly vital as we move through times of change and confusion. The problems confronting us today affect White and Negro Virginians alike. We believe that we must face these problems together across racial lines, and across the lines of honest, political differences.

"There is a growing need for frank discussion of current problems by white and Negro leaders at the state level. The Governor would make a significant contribution to peace and order if he were to initiate such high level inter-racial discussion.

"We must not sacrifice the basic values of our way of life during the current crisis. There must be free and open discussion of all possibilities. The rights and interests of all the people of Virginia must receive equal consideration. There can be no solution that does not maintain the principle of equal justice under law. Whatever the outcome the people of Virginia will continue to maintain dignity and order."

All State Organization Executive Directors

From: Fred Routh, Assistant Director

Re: Quarterly Reports requested by December 23rd.

The first quarter of the new grant period is drawing to a close. Under the terms of the agreement between us, state allotments are to be paid on a quarterly basis. The allocation for the second quarter will be sent for December 31st receipt to those state organizations who qualify.

The two conditions of the grant were (1) that the state organization show progress in carrying out the program proposals sent SRC in the request for financial assistance, and (2) that it also show ability to raise sufficient funds from non-SRC sources to meet its obligations.

Therefore, two reports are requested: a narrative report of what has been done in program and a financial report of what has been done in fund-raising and meeting obligations. Please include a current roster of Officers and Board members, and in future quarterly reports include any changes in Officers or Board members.

The Quarterly Financial Report should be made on the form supplied by SRC. This is the same form previously used for monthly reports. Your office is being sent additional copies of the form for financial reporting.

To assist in the preparation of the narrative program report, the following questions are suggested for inclusion in the report, when applicable:

1. What has been the "climate" in the state during the quarter?
   a) What helpful developments? b) What harmful developments?

2. What has been the chief program emphasis of the state organization?
   a) How is this related to question #1?

3. With what other agencies or groups has there been cooperative effort?
   a) In what specific program areas? b) What was the role of your organization?

4. Has effort been made to meet and cultivate "key" persons?
   a) What position do they represent? b) How did you approach them. c) What was their response? d) What, if any, material did you leave with them?

5. What program use has been made of Officers and Board members?
   a) Conferences with "key" people? b) Outside speaking engagements? c) Other?

6. To whom have you supplied information? What type of information was it?
   a) Southern School News Reporter? b) Local Press? c) SRG? d) "Key" people? e) Other agencies?

7. What have you done about SRC's request to document violence in your state?

8. What use have you made of program assistance from SRC?
   a) Consultant Service Program? b) Individual staff members? c) Other?

9. What organizational meetings has your group held?
   a) Annual Meeting? b) Board Meeting? c) Executive Committee? d) Special Committee? e) Other?

10. What decisions were made at these meetings?

11. What are the next steps in your program?
    a) What will be the main program emphasis, as you now see it, during the coming quarter? b) What is the rationale for this particular emphasis?

Please see that your reports reach us by December 23, 1957.

Re: Quarterly Reports

Several of the states have asked whether SRC now wants a quarterly report, a monthly report, or both.

SRC requires, of all state organizations, a quarterly report which must be submitted prior to the date on which the payment for the following quarter is due. This applies to (i) a narrative report on program activities and (ii) a financial report.

If the state office puts out a monthly report for its own Board or officers SRC would appreciate a copy. In the event that a monthly report is put out by the state organization and SRC receives a copy we still require a quarterly report . . . which could largely be based on the monthly reports.

The form of the quarterly narrative report is suggested by my memo of December 5, 1957 regarding the first Quarterly Report.

SRC will supply your office with a new and simplified Quarterly financial report form prior to the end of this quarter. You should, of course, keep a monthly financial record for your own use.

If you have any further questions about the matter of reporting please feel free to write.

Re: Second Quarterly Report

We are now in the last month of the second quarter of the current grant period. You will recall that each quarterly grant is dependent upon: 1) continued and expanded program activities on the part of the state organizations; and 2) demonstration that the state organization is raising a proportionate amount of its proposed budget.

The time has now come for the second quarterly report from your state organization. It is due in this office by Friday, March 21st, 1958. This provides two full weeks for you to prepare it; it also provides one week for us to review your progress.

Please use my memo, dated December 5th, 1957, outlining reporting procedures, as a guide for the second quarterly report. For further information regarding quarterly reports, see my memo dated January 21st, 1958.

Dear Les,

You made an excellent speech and contributed greatly to our meeting. Thanks for coming down.

I have read Edwin Randall's proposal with great interest. Here are my comments which you are free to pass on to him.

1. SRC has done a terrific job down thru the years in communications thru the printed word, especially in newspapers and national magazines. The thought ran thru my mind as I read Randall's document that SRC has done practically nothing thru radio and TV in the South. I can see that with Randall's Norfolk Story and the Dabbs interview that a good start has been made here but much more can be done here.

2. I like Randall's proposal very much. The man has terrific imagination, showmanship, and motivation. I think that it would be highly interesting to see what he could do on a years trial budget of $10,000.

3. Randall and I are in complete agreement in that in the communications field you never buy anything that you can get for free. Sometimes I would like to show you the 100 page scrap book of press clippings on Orr Industries that were promoted during my seven years as sales manager including articles in Time, Life, Business Week, etc.

4. I thought I knew every religious radio program producer in America but somehow Randall and I never meet. The big question in the field....Chas. A. Fuller, Lutheran Hour, Protestant Hour, Baptist Hour, etc. is whether to buy time and know you are getting prime time or to go for free time and hope to get good time rather than poor time thru the production of a fine show. I suggest that you contact Rev. James Sells in Atlanta one of the prime movers in the Protestant Radio Center. He can give you some excellent suggestions.

5. The "Human Relations Series" is going to have to be diplomatically produced. Apparently Randall seems to have a feel for this. I do know that the State of La. has boycotted Bell & Howell projectors in all their schools because of B&H's recent TV show. You have heard of Murrow's Show not being run in Montgomery and Birmingham. I speak of H.K. Smith's special documentary on Birmingham.

I like Randall's idea and suggest you proceed if you can get the money. Tell Randall my ~~bro~~ brother lives in Media, Pa and I'll look him up on my next visit.

Dear Leslie:

Your reasoning about Dallas appeals to me. Do you have an alternative suggestion? We've got money enough to plan another listing with integration leader for early November. Is Kansas City outside the field of interest? I've seen a couple more stories about primary as well as high schools there which bend me in that direction. But I want to do something that will be effective. Somehow I just can't see how to make the freedom rides something that would be widely used in the south, though I should certainly like to.

I'm glad you're still thinking about the M-L-A proposition. I very much hope something can be worked out. Perhaps in making the tapes for November I could spend a few days there listening to what they're getting now.

Please let me know your thinking on this as soon as you can conveniently since we've got to get going on it soon.

Incidentally, what ever happened to your primary election? I haven't seem a word anywhere. Is Lester G. Maddox now Mayor of Atlanta?

Hopefully,

Mr. Leslie W. Dunbar,
Southern Regional Council,

Dear Les:

It's good to hear from you and know that you are still overwhelmed with the magnitude of the job. When that condition no longer prevails something will be most radically wrong. Meanwhile it's exhilerating to do what we can.

It's difficult to know just what to say about the good father's proposition. It could be lightly dismissed on two counts. AsWelch points out, he doesn't have the slightest idea of the actual cost of a campaign that would have the least possibility of accomplishing what he envisions. In the second place he had budgeted considerable sums for buying time and only $2, 500 for part-time help about what to say in this expensive time - which is, I think, not the usual proportion. Like nearly all non-professionals he is taking care to have a place to say something before he knows what he's going to say. This, I surmise, arises from the feeling that what he is already saying is exactly what the listeners and readers need and it will take only a bit of part-time attention from experts to confirm the fact that all the bright new world needs is just for everybody to hear what he's been trying to say to everybody for a life-time.

But I can't dismiss the thing that lightly because it meets head-on with what it my entire philosophy of the use of this tremendous medium God has given us for some useful purpose we haven't even tried very seriously to discover as yet. So, put your feet up and be comfortable, while Uncle Ed gives you the real dope on the use of the "broadcasting media."

The basic fallacy is not the idea of buying time, but this is the first thing that shows. We want to buy time because we have tried to get our "message" on the air for free and we have failed. We are still sure the "message" is good, so we want to pay the price to get it listened to. This by-passes the real basis of broadcasting. All that the broadcaster, as a business man, is interested in is having the largest possible audience! This is what he has to sell! The reason he doesn't take the stuff we offer him is that he knows, usually from bitter experience, that nobody is going to listen to it and that, consequently, people will to that extent be discouraged from listening to his station at other times.

E. G., The Sam Francisco office of the AFSC got concerned about radio and TV (and couldn' afford TV) so they began to invenstigate. They discovered, to their great surprise, that they couldn't even buy time on the big stations. This they put down to evil intent, and looked about until they found a 1kw station (in a field of about thirty stations including three 50kw) that would sell them six fifteen minute spots for $115.00 each. These they purchased, added about $1500 for promotion, and filled their time with the best lectures and most convincing arguments they could think up - which they had been using in practically the same form with innumerable audiences of people who came out to listen to them. That San Fran is not now the world headquarters of pacifism is obviously a bitter disappointment to them and I am sure they have concluded that nobody listens to radio anymore anyhow.

When I heard about this I made the Philadelphia office a suggestion. I would take anybody they wanted me to, record him, make offer of the tape in areas where he was going to speak and cooperate with the regional offices in working with the radio stations. This would get us everything the SF office had to pay for, and quite a bit more. We recorded Donald Groom, an Englishman who has been with Vinova Bhavi. He's goog, but nothing extra. Certainly what could be done with him could be done with any articulate person. We also made the offer of this tape to our regular list. We have now distributed 46 copies of that tape, more than half indirect cooperation with those regions which accepted this proposition. Since this tape consisted of five spots totalling a little more than a half hour we could figure what we got for them without more than marginal expense to them was of a value of $10,580, in terms of what SF paid the 1kw station. It could also be shown that our stations averaged more than 1kw in power, and a higher rate for time and a larger coverage for their area. (One of them was WHO, a 50kw station that covers Iowa like a blanket.)

This is my entire point. If we will put our stuff in good radio form we don't have to pay for time. This is, in a way, a very great advantage. The radio people know better than we do what people will listen to. Their business lives depend upon being good guessers in this field. And what seems to me so basic, but is apparently never considered by the Fr. Foleys, is that we are even more interested than the radio station in having the largest possible number of listeners. The station can recover from one, or several, dull programs. Any listener will grant them the right to a few stubbs of the toe and still turn back for more. But if we create the impression that all our stuff is dull and unlistenable (as we very nearly have) then the tone of voice, or any other indication, will be enough for the listener to tune us out before he knows what we're talking about this time.

The reason we don't know these things is because we just won't see them. You see with what gingerly courtesy your friend Welch deals with Fr. Foley. Yet Foley will use his letters to persuade other people that members of the profession are deeply committed to the kind of thing he is promoting. I will admit to considerable impatience with this whole area of thinking on the part of churches and related organizations. I have been dealing with it for nearly thirty years and the paterns always run the same way. The really basic problem is that we preachers consider ourselves authorities in communications and we make up our minds about radio and TV in defiance of the experts (non-clerical). There's a tone of voice with which a preacher says, "I've been on radio," that makes any effort at reasonable discussion of problems out of the question. He's ready to tell you, but not to listen. And his judgement may very well be based on nothing more than a brief period of sermonizing during a segment of time the station couldn't possibly sell because a rival station had the available audience sewed up with an early morning farm program.

I still think my suggestion about Ala., La., Miss. could make the difference. Welch indicates in his second letter the importance of having a man in the field. All our success has been by mail alone, which makes me very sure that personal contact could greatly multiply our acceptance.

A series of programs should be specially prepared for this area to establish our usefulness to a number of stations, approaching the area of integration with great care - not with caution, but with great care. Remember we want to be listened to even more than the station wants listeners. We want to get to everybody with some facts and ideas with which nearly all of them are unfamiliar. Then we can build a solid foundation for talking about "controversial" subjects in ways which will build audience for the station and listeners for us.

This could be done for $10,000 a year. With such a modest budget we might very easily have the use of as much as $100,000 worht of time - not "free" time when nobody is listening, but good time, with large audiences. This would require a preliminary exploration of the area to plan the kind of programs which would make the most appeal and discover how rapidly we could move into the area of our special interest. We have a number of users in this area now, with our regular offerings, which seems to me quite remarkable and which suggests how reasonable is my expectation of further development with personal attention.

You have taken chances with larger sums than this, but never with one which had greater possibilities. The amount would cover the additional expenses for our operation, but we are not trying to make money out of it. I'd like to begin by spending a month in the area. By the end of the first year it would be easy to judge if the future looked hopeful.

What I'm saying is that we can establish a relationship with the entire population which will put us just a shade ahead of where they are thinking and create the possibility of helpful actions that couldn't take place without a wider understanding of the whole situation than can exist unless we devote ourselves to informing the entire population. I know you are not devoted to the idea that anything, no matter how good, can be rammed down the public throat. There just isn't any other way to do this - and even if you aren't as sure as I am that this is the way you can take a flyer at it without losing your shirt.

That I know what I'm talking about will be suggested to you by the opening paragraph of the listing enclosed. You will see that we are not only competing for audience in Richmond but beating the socks off of CBS, NBC, and ABC not even in sight. I'm offering you this kind of broadcasting. Your friend Welch is a TV man and underestimates radio. But we can use TV when we have money - which is very nearly just ten times as much for equivalent impact.

Thanks for your patience. I couldn't say it in a paragraph. If you'll give me a chance you'll be astounded by the results.

Merry Christmas,

Ed

This is a persuasive letter. I am inclined to explore the possibility of Randall's suggested approach in the Deep South states and to try to steer the Alabama Council in this direction.

What is the next move? Do we try to find Randall the money for this type of program, or do we arrange for him to confer with Foley et al. I notice, however, that all of his enclosed material relates to stations in the North or upper South.

Dear Ed:

We have given a lot of thought here to your suggestions for radio programming in the deep South and we are quite excited about the possibilities. I am enclosing a letter from Mr. Nat Welch, who is a leader of the Alabama Council on Human Relations, concerning your proposals. We shared your letter with him.

Our thinking is as follows. We would like to make one thousand dollars available to you for a pilot effort. It is our understanding that this would enable you to prepare two or three half-hour programs and a number of shorter discussions aimed at deep South audiences. It is our further understanding that these will be distributed under the imprint and through the normal facilities of Friendly World Broadcasting. After this pilot effort we will have specific data on the number of stations that have accepted the tapes and some estimates as to the audiences reached. We can then think further about future possibilities.

We are ready to move on this whenever your schedule permits, and perhaps the best next step is for you to spend a day or two here so that you and SRC staff can think together about subjects, areas, and so forth. Would several days during the week~~s~~ of March ~~19 or~~ 26 be suitable? Let us know your convenience. We tend to think that it might be best to concentrate this pilot effort in Alabama, but we can settle this when you can talk with us.

Les has suggested that your project correlate with SRC primarily through my office because of our close contact with people in the field and our local groups in the areas where you may be working.

We are looking forward to working with you.

This is a persuasive letter. I am inclined to explore the possibility of Randall's suggested approach in the Deep South states and to try to steer the Alabama Council in this direction.

What is the next move? Do we try to find Randall the money for this type of program, or do we arrange for him to confer with Foley et al. I notice,however, that all of his enclosed material relates to stations in the North or upper South.

Dear Paul:

Your willingness to undertake a bit of exploration in my idea is most gratifying, and a little frightening. I am still very sure we can make it work, but it will have to be done with a great deal of care and we will all have to work together very closely.

A couple of days during the week of March 26 should be just fine. As it looks now I could spend a few days in Alabama just ahead of that date, listening to broadcasting and talking to people so I wouldn't be entirely cold on the field. Then we could talk things over and make our plans and I could go back for a week or two more in Alabama before actually starting to work on new programs. We do have an opening wedge which I may feel may be of great value in the station at Tuscaloosa. You have doubtless seen the copy of their letter I sent to Les. This puts a long way ahead of a cold start. My confidence of the usefulness of our Bible tapes for this situation is also somewhat increased. I have some other ideas which are just beginning to hatch but which should be in discussable condition by March 26.

I am agreeable to the limitation to Alabama, if that's what you want. We ought to be able to get a very fair appraisal of the entire situation in that way since I don't think either of the other states would differ too much. We can decide for sure when we talk, but I shall prepare a study of that state alone with the idea of at least making our start there. If we should slop over a little no harm will be done, as by the fact that three stations related to the one in Tuscaloosa are in Miss.

I am delighted that you are I are going to work together on this project and do hope and pray that together we may be able to work out something of real value for this difficult field.

So as we sail now I shall plan to set out for Alabama around March 17 or 18 and be in Atlanta the morning of March 26 for as long as we need to take, returning from there to Ala., or following whatever other proceedure we may decide upon. Meanwhile will you send me copies of any reports you may have issued which relate to this general field

Paul

It's really tremendously thrilling to have the prospect of a chance like this and I am very deeply grateful to all of you for giving it favorable consideration.

Ed

Subject: Suggestions for Deep South Radio Programming

It seems to me that the best emphases for deep South audiences would be along such lines as law and order, the southern economic stake in peace and stability, the success and practicality of avoiding disruption and violence through negotiation and conciliation. On some occasions the discussions might well focus on subjects seemingly unrelated to race relations, but with clear implications. These might include discussions on southern economic growth in general, on southern educational trends, on American foreign policy, etc.

One type of discussion might feature discussions on success stories in other communities, emphasizing negotiation and so forth. These might include Columbus, Georgia, Jackson, Tennessee, Laurinberg, North Carolina; recent successes with school desegregation in Memphis, Dallas, Daytona Beach; constructive leadership by businessmen in New Orleans preparation last fall, in Atlanta.

Another approach might be interview-type discussions with prominent persons with special knowledge. These might include Ralph McGill; William Nichols, economist at Vanderbilt University and recent author of a book on the southern economy; James Dabbs; Les Dunbar; Will Campbell. Alabama persons might include Dr. Henry King Stanford, President of Birmingham Southern; Charles Morgan, Birmingham attorney; Joseph N. Langan, liberal city commission member of Mobile and recently state chairman of NCCJ Observance of Brotherhood week, or some such thing; Father Albert Foley, Catholic priest and faculty member of Spring Hill College;

The Rev. Carl Adkins, Methodist minister, Dauphin Way Methodist Church, Mobile; Lucius Pitts, President, Miles College, Birmingham; James Head, President, Head Office Supply Co., Birmingham (liberal white businessman).

I think the kind of pro and con discussion that you did here with Hill and Maddox would be useful in Alabama, perhaps through the use of this same tape. One might be done with a segregationist spokesman and the Rev. Powers McCleod of Auburn, President of the Alabama Council on Human Relations. You might do one on the Birmingham parks situation, titled something like "A City Decides," and noting the diverse points of view concerning the closing of the parks and projected sale.

Mr. Paul Rilling,
Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.,
Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Dear Paul:

My second week in Alabama was even more productive than the first and I was able, to my surprise, to accumulate plenty of material for the first two months of broadcasting. So I hurried home last week end and just last night finished the first two of the "Yankee in the Heart of Dixie" programs and have just mailed a copy to you, air mail. I hope you like them. However you feel, please listen at the first possible moment and then call me with your reaction, because I do not want to get any farther ahead until I am sure what I'm doing meets with your approval. My own feeling is that these first two make a good opening for what we have in mind. I am encouraged to believe that we can get into some important lines of discussion sooner than I had anticipated. I am amazed at the amount of good material available which is right down our street!

The only place I met any reluctance at all was at the University of Alabama, where they seem pretty timid - but I guess that is understandable, and I had some fore-warning of it also.

I do think we must be exceedingly cautious about our project. I found Nat Welch discussing with what I thought was unnecessary frankness some of the connections with other like-minded people. I don't like to be too timid myself, but we could lose a great deal with a little carelessness.

On the way home I had one of the really important experiences of my life. Most of the way from Tuscaloosa to Birmingham I listened to the broadcast of our program, "A City Changes it's Mind," from station WACT, in Tuscaloosa. As I listened I was so deeply moved that I could hardly drive my car. The idea of getting that kind of material on any station in Alabama seems so rewarding. To do it now, not in months or years, but right now, certainly makes the entire project sparkle with fulfillment as well as hope.

Some of the events of the second week are pertinent. I spent most of the time getting recorded material since I feel I have already made sufficient preliminary examination of the radio station attitudes, but we do have some progress to report. WACT has asked for thirty back number tapes, including all the important tapes that are not badly dated, and intends to program them rapidly. The totals, already, are impressive. WACT, 5 kw, has, or has asked for, 50 tapes since the beginning of this project. (This is in Tuscaloosa) WJDR (also in Tuscaloosa) has 21, (they are also 5kw). WJAM, 5 kw, in Marion, has 11 tapes, and WRWJ, 1 kw, in Selma, has 14. This is a total of 96 tapes, asked for in the "Black Belt," before we are actually off the ground. These are not the tapes which we hope will measurably increase the use of more difinitive tapes but include 24 of the most highly difinitive tapes! This was in some measure the result of personal contact. It does not, I am sure, indicate that we will meet with equal success in making contact with the rest of the hundred odd stations in the state, but it does suggest that we have got something started on our hands.

I am appalled at the ease with which this has been accomplished, but I am very anxious, at the same time, not to assume that we can go on this way without any such difficulties as we have anticipated. I think we need to be even more careful not to stub our collective toe.

The present plan is to devote the necessary time here at home to the completion of two months of YIHD shows and catch up with our other weekly program and then head back to Alabama. Meanwhile we will get out a letter to all the stations in Alabama and Georgia about YITHOD and back this up with personal contact with the larger stations and others in the black belt while collecting material for future shows. Meanwhile I am not sure it is safe to guess about distribution, but I still think we should have at least 20 stations in Alabama using YITHOD.

I hope you and the rest of the staff are pleased. I am more than ever positive of our basic assumptions. Things are as they are not because people are really wicked but because they just haven't given thought. There are many more people willing to talk than have been given opportunity. By helping people to talk to each other the people who haven't been doing any thinking will come to the right conclusions.

I got most of the people you gave me in Auburn, and a couple of others, but none in Birmingham or Montgomery. Things were going so very well I thought it best to cut and run for home so we could begin to get stuff on the air as soon as possible. When I go back I can do the cities more effectively. So if you have any further suggestions let me know.

And please do let me know by phone as soon as you are able to listen to the two shows I sent you.

As ever,

Ed

Dear Ed:

We felt the tapes were excellent. They are warm, entertaining, and interesting. They should help you considerably in your effort to open doors and win acceptance. They are good radio. Carry on with more of the same.

Congratulations on getting "A City Changes Its Mind" on the Tuscaloosa station.

Les Dunbar is out with a slipped disc this week. I will make the tapes available to him as soon as he is back in the office.

Dear Paul:

It is with no small satisfaction that I am able to report to you that we have, as of this date, received 18 requests for audition tapes of "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie." In fact, most of these requests were for the first four programs so they could begin broadcasting at once. Here are the stations:

WUOA FM (U. of Alabama), Tuscaloosa
WJRD, Tuscaloosa
WOWL, Florence
WHOS, Decatur
WWWR, Russellville
WAPI, Birmingham
WRWJ, Selma
WABT, Tuskegee
WAPX, Montgomery

WAHR-FM, Huntsville
WCRL, Oneonta
WDNG, Anniston

Red marks Not in Black Belt

WJHO

5 Blk Belt yes

It would seem to me that a gratifying number of these come from the "Black Belt."

The returns have not begun to come in from Georgia and I do not expect as many, but letters have been mailed out and there will probably be some, the number to be augmented as soon as there is material collected from Georgia.

It is more than possible that not all of these stations will finally decide to use the material, but I am not apprehensive about this because of the enthusiasm with which the idea itself has been received. I am sure the actual programs will be better than they anticipate and that virtually all of them will use the show. There will, of course, be more come in by mail - the largest number received in any one mail (6) came today. This number may even go to 30. But I am confident that by personal attention we can add a number at least equal to those received by mail.

In assuming that there will be at least 20 regular users from the present list and others to come in from the present mailing it would seem to me that we have now fulfilled the minimum of our original understanding. I am proceeding on this assumption.

I'm leaving tomorrow to go to Alabama by way of Columbus, where I will attend part of the conference on Education in radio-TV, where I am scheduled to meet a number of university radio managers, including the man from U. of Alabama, with whom we have previously done business.

I have an appointment a week from Wednesday with the Director of Agricultrural Extension in Alabama. I think we can work closely with him. With proper care there is every reason to expect we will be able to prodeed with only minor trouble from John Birch - but we will have to be very careful.

It will probably be well to spend at least three weeks in collecting material on this trip, including a little from Georgia and some from Mississippi, if you want to start work in that area. I'll need more money to complete this trip and to get out the tapes in the meantime. We'll be able, I think, to operate on the suggested financial basis up to a weekly distribution of fifty shows, which now seems to me a reasonable expectation within certainly not more than a year. This in view of the fact that the present response has all come from letters which were not mailed until on and after April 20, and that these are all from one of the four states being considered.

It is particularly hopeful that we can get good material into these shows. For example, in #10, Neil Davis, Editor of the Lee County Bulletin, talks about his having been advocating voting for all literate people regardless of race or any other consideration since he founded the paper in 1934.

So I'd like another conference about proceedure from here with reference particularly to involvement of other areas. I'd be a little inclined myself to spend a couple more months exploiting possibilities in Alabama, since we are already doing so well there, and then go into other states with a well-established program in the original area. I would expect to be able to have at least forty users in Alabama within a couple of months. We should also, by then, have some good reactions we could use in other areas and possibly even some actual survey results, though that would be soon to hope for good ones.

I hope you and Les are as elated about this as I am. Of course I thought it could be done, with enough careful planning and hard work, but it is strangely gratifying to see my expectations not only realized but slightly exceeded.

You can always get in touch with me, either by mail or phone, through this address as Clara will be here almost every day after four o'clock and I will keep in close touch with her.

Do you want copies of all the programs? I'd like for you to listen to them all, if you will. They get better!

As ever,

Ed

SOME OF THE NUMBERS of "A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE."

1. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Traylor, Sardis, how their house burned down and what happened after that, including how Joe rebuilt an old one with his own hands. Dr. Ralph B. Draughon, President, Aurora University, and how admiration and love for a teacher changed the course of his life. Also how an Alabama rainbow blessed the eyes of a Yankee.

2. Tuscaloosa Agricultural County Agent Holston and how the railroad started his family in the beef business and how others have done likewise, so that to say "Cotton is King" is to neglect the bull! And Home Demonstration Agent Mrs. Elizabeth Collings and how from a long way back she was called the "Tomato Lady," and why. Also about how Alabama fish can smell Yankee, and defend themselves!

3. Dr. Sam Allison, now 94, practiced for 70 years and used many means of transportation and primitive techniques of medicine. Mr. James A. Minter, Jr., of Tyler, with some words about his ancestors and also about John Glenn and all the rest of us. And also how a Yankee couldn't keep his windshield swiper in an Alabama rain.

4. Mrs. Ellen Taylor Cooper, of Burnsville, about the effectiveness of education in small schools, of which she has been an ornament since -- well, for a long, long time. Ike Martin, Auburn, forestry specialist and why a tree grows better in Alabama -- and why he is interested in trees.

5. About our Theme, "Greensleeves," which is also a Christmas hymn called "What Child is This," with renditions in several arrangements with a little chatter about its meaning for all of us.

6. Dr. Earl C. Beck, Tuscaloosa, world famous authority on the folk music of loggers (and cattle pokes) and the wondrous tale of what happened to the two smart city girls when they met the two old men from the woods -- and you are going to be surprised -- together with some interesting first hand experience in folksonging. Together with an example of Gullah Negro talk and how does a man answer "How many?" when he can't count?, by Mrs. O. D. Langston.

7. Babs and Borden Deal, Tuscaloosa, and the big round world, all about writing novels and Babs' grandmother -- who was really "great" -- and why Alabama is wonderful and how you can smell the salt sea air across the Black Warrior bottoms.

8. Dr. Draughon with encouragement to give thanks for what we have, some remarks about why Alabama is wonderful, and how much Vermont shopkeepers are like Alabama shopkeepers. And a dog story by Robert Smith.

#11 9. County Agent Lawrence Alsobrook, Selma, about how neighbors acted in the worst flood in history, and Mrs. Albert Thomas, Auburn, about her neighbors when her son was "Missing in Action."

"A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE."

WHY? There is a wide open place to tell the people of Dixie some of the wonderful facts about their State and let them meet some of the very wonderful people of all kinds who make up their citizenry. I'm no Pollyanna, but I do believe that there is often a tendency to overemphasize what we don't like -- particularly in times of stress and strain -- until it's easy to forget what a wonderful country we have. I find the people of Alabama know pretty well why they love their native (or adopted) state and very happy to explain the facts of life, even to a Yankee. This makes for exciting entertainment, of a type that has real novelty to recommend it.

WHAT? A series of weekly fifteen minute shows about the State -- but mostly about the people -- of Alabama. The basic material is easy flowing, casual, and completely unrehearsed conversation with all kinds of people who love their country. We use as a Theme the delightful English folk tune, "Greensleeves," which is a part of the great common heritage of all of us. There is occasionally additional musical material. There are stories of exciting events, personal experiences, funny happenings, historical memories, ideas and efforts which have gone to make Alabama the remarkable state it is. But you will, I am sure, find each number an authentic and exciting radio show completely on its own. Because we are doing something we feel is important does not at all mean that this is a dull show. It will get you a lot of listeners and hold the ones you have!

WHO? Anybody who loves his homeland and has a story to tell is our buddy! We'll be pleased to receive your suggestions for people in your own immediate area who would give us interesting material. We will assure you of our utmost effort to make this show of the widest possible appeal. Our record with hundreds of stations and with actual surveys establishes our ability to provide programs of audience-building power.

HOW? Just fill out and return the enclosed post card and we'll send you an audition tape. Give it a listen -- and if you want your listeners to have a treat -- just write and ask us to put you on the regular list. There is no charge and there will be no cost to you except for the return of the tapes.

WHEN? The first programs are ready. We will be prepared by the first week in May, we expect, to begin providing this show regularly. So get your request in promptly.

WHERE? Honestly this was a sudden inspiration that really ran away with us. Everybody we talked to liked the idea so much we really started in high gear and the sparks began to fly in every direction. We think you'll be amazed and that to hear will be to enjoy. We don't know where we will wind up with this project but everybody who has known about it seems sure it is going places and maybe you will, too.

Dear Paul:

Thanks for your kind and encouraging words.

I have now completed the first nine numbers and plan to do three more before returning to Alabama.

There is some indication that the John Burchites are slightly troubled about us, but I think this can be taken care of if we use a great deal of care.

I plan now to return to Alabama the first week in May for the collection of more material and to make personal contacts with the stations. Letters are being written now to all the stations in Alabama and soon will go also to all the stations in Georgia, as Les suggested. If there is any response at all we will need to buy more tapes, in view of the fact that we already have so many in the state, and this will mean that we will need more money for the trip down there.

Clara and I are both very sorry to hear of Les's trouble and hope it works out all right for him. He'll need to be careful for a while.

I'll try to see you again either going or coming.

Dear Ed:

I hope you will excuse our tardiness in responding to your letter of April 30. I was out of town all of last week and Les was out for much of it.

We are indeed most pleased at the response to the "Yankee in the Heart of Dixie" series. At least 11 of the stations you noted are definitely Black Belt and represent a real break-through. We have only heard the first two tapes here as yet, and like them. We do hope you will send on copies of the others as you can.

cont'd

You state that "we have now ufilfilled the minimum of our original understanding." I assume from this that you have carried through as far as the $1,000 makes possible and that you would need additional funds to proceed further. Is this correct? If so, it poses some problem for us. On the one hand, we are extremely pleased with your success in developing these programs and the considerable response to them. On the other hand, we had hoped that with the $1,000 we would be able to demonstrate, through one or two tapes, your ability to place helpful material dealing with human relations on these Deep South stations. On the basis of this evidence, we had hoped to go to various sources of support in an attempt to secure financing for additional programming.

I believe that until and unless we can place a tape or two in this series from that point of view we will have considerable trouble securing support. We were glad to note the comment on supporting voting rights for all by Neil Davis on tape #10.

I believe that your process of beginning with feature tapes and gradually moving in the direction of more pointed material is a sound one. It was probably unrealistic to think that we would be able to place more specific material this soon. The fact remains that we do not have additional funds on hand ourselves, and at this point, are not sure how we can move.

Let us, however, have as soon as you can data concerning which stations in Alabama have actually used the tapes and plan to run the series. With this information, we'll see what we can do about additional funds, if they are needed.

We feel here that this should continue to be an Alabama project for at least the near future. I would suggest that you not plan forays into Georgia and Mississippi for some time to come.

Congratulations on your achievements to date. Get the additional data to us as soon as you can and we will lose no time in determining future possibilities.

Sincerely,

Dear Paul:

Only now have I found a machine to use and I am afraid you won't get this tomorrow. There isn't too much more to say, in any event.

22 You have the list of the first twenty stations in Alabama to request audition tapes. To these should be added WWWB, Jasper, and WJHO, Opelika. Of these eleven have already either begun to use the program or have scheduled it. Since you have the list I'll just give you the call letters: WABT, WJHO, WAUD, WDNG, WEZB, WOWL, WGS WGSV, WCRL, WRWJ, WJRD, WHOS. Only two other stations had heard the tape when I talked to them. WAHR, an FM station in Huntsville, said it was not high-brow enough for them. WAPI, of Birmingham, hasn't set a time for it, yet, but they are talking about trying to get some of it used on Monitor. I am to confer with them about a time and other details. None of theother stations, as I said, had had time to listen. So it is a reasonable assumption that most of them will also use it.

6 We now have six requests from Georgia, the first fo r are WRBL, Columbus, WIIN, Atlanta, WPFE, Eastman, and WDWD, Dawson. There is also one in Decatur and another I do not have at present.

There is, I think, not the slightest doubt that we can have forty stations in this state, and a high probability we could have sixty. This would pretty well cover the state since there is a lot of doubling up of stations as you cansee from the enlcosed map. This same coverage can be repeated in the other states, particularly in view of the resp nse from Georgia on a purely Alabama show. This will, in a ver few months, give us statewide coverage in anything that can be broadcast at all. The possibilities grow brighter ever day, with a number of developments I'd like to talk over with you in person.

The amountsof specific broadcasting we can do are suggested by the fact that WACT in Tuscaloosa and stati ons in Marion and Selma have used so much of our stuff with more than satisfactory results. I do not mean to suggest that the field is wideopen, but it is open and there is, I am increasingly sure, no other means by which we can enter it for some time to come because of the grea t delacacy of the situation.

We do need money. The first trip cost me over $300. The letters cost 50¢ each, and we sent out 260. We have had to purchase $600 worth of tapes. These will take care of the servicin of thirty stations, which I now consider the minimum. This provides four sets of two tapes each for each station, One they have, one they are mailing back, one we are mailing to them, and the fourth we are working on. This trip will cost me something over $400, telephone will come to at least $75 and incidenatls at least another $200. What we are spending beyond what we have received is out of the projected costs of the next listing. These listings we must keep up if we are to have the full benefit of this project.

But I am not trying to hang this on you. Even if I hadn't t thought you wanted to go ahead I don't think I should have done differently. We had the thing at the poin where to ease up might have meant collapse - and I always think if you're going to have a collapse yo ought to try to make it abig one.

I've been thinking about the desirability of all of us sitti ng down aroun the sorpse again and it seems to me this m ght be done without too much extra cost at the end of m y visit here, which will co come toward the last of Ma . I can be in Hartsfieldtowne Monday and Tuesday, May 28 & 29. I'd rather do it Monday because I have to b home before Thursday noon, and I won't feel like too much rushing by then. Write to me at Tuscaloosa, general delivery, or at home and I'll get it over the phone.

I should add that, while there are still problems, the type of cooperation I am getting is most hearten ng. The state director of Agricultural Extension has not only given me a tape but has recommended the most experienced county agents in the state and other important members of his staff. It is hardly conceivabl now that we could be really blocked, if we keep our noses clean.

During the next two weeks I am not only going to collect more material but will also visit a n mber of the stations we didn't hear from. I think most of these just didn't read the letter and that most of them will get on board. I'll keep you informed.

You cannot over estimate this opening. There are things we will be able to do that none of us can ven dream of now. This is really the kind of thing the good Lord meant for us to do ith radio when hegave it to us.

Sincerely,

Ed

Dear Ed:

I'm sorry that I wasn't able to get together with you during your recent brief visit to Atlanta. Ben Muse very much appreciated the opportunity of meeting you and is quite excited about the work you are doing.

Ben and Les and I talked the next morning and the situation seems to be as follows:

1. We are making available to you and are enclosing in this letter a check for $1,300. We hope that this will take care of the deficit you have incurred to date and make it possible for you to carry on with the series.

2. It seems rather clear that this will be all the money we will be able to shake loose for this effort until and unless we are able to secure special foundation support for this project. The second $1,000, in fact, is abailable only because we transferred it from another purpose.

3. We are already exploring the possibilities of such foundation help, but as you know, we feel that this will be most difficult until we can demonstrate the acceptance of some human relations material in the next series.

Your results to date have been encouraging to say the least. Keep us informed as things develop.

Dear Paul:

We are sending you copies of #13 through #24, some of which may already have reached you. I am very happy about these programs, and hope very much that you and Les will be the same. With only a bit of strainigg I think we have included some very excellent material. In #14 you will hear Polly Ousterhout, who is a MIssissippi gal now teaching at ~~Spelman~~ Shilran. In #16 Buford Boone, of the Tuscaloosa News explains that heis in favor of admitting Negroes for all higher education they can't get as matters now stand. There could be objection to his hedging on elementary schools, but I still think he makes a strong point. In #24 we have an entire program devoted to a project among Negro farmers of Macon County (Tuskeegee) told by the Negro County Agent, as arranged and suggested by the owner and manager of the local radio station. This I consider a real plum.

There are a number of apparently very minor spots also. The County Agent of Marengo County says with great feeling that they don't want any Freedom Riders going out of their county, for instance. They intend to take care of everybody and need all their people.

There is another way in which the whole series is of definite service as it stands and asdie from simply making our other programs palatable. The more I see of the state at first hand the more I am impressed that opposition to de-segregation is virtually always part of a package which can very conveniently be labeled "John Birch." The people who are against integration are against the United Nations, the National Council of Churches, foreign aid, and a lot of other good things beside social security. This is manifest in the kind of things being broadcast so widely now. Any material which weakens their position anywhere along the line, therefore, weakens their hold on the people who go along with them on segregation. More and more thay are making the attack along the entire front and we will be seriously crippled if we make every response a piece-meal affair.

More and more, also, I am persuaded that our best approach is quite simply to let the people talk to each other. I am more certain than ever that the proportion of really good people who want a Christian solution is much larger than we have ever dared to hope. I think this is well illustrated by our own experience in Atlanta. When we made our first tape there on the school situation everybody thought we were crazy when we included the statement of Ralph Magil that 60% of the people wanted the schools to stay open. But subsequent events showed this a conservative estimate. I think we provided some help there simply by letting people hear what some other Atlanta people thought about the situation.

Now every one of these 24 shows makes it clear in some way that some people are not thinking with the John Birchers. This is true even when they say nothing pertinent at all. The thing they all do is to miss so many opportunities that any alert John Bircher would seize upon eagerly to make his own point out of. This is a subtle thing, maybe, but one which is bound to be impressive in the long run. If we continue talking to all kinds of people and none of them sound like John Birchers it's going to penetrate into the subconscious (where it will do the most good) that JBs are really pretty rare birds after all and mustn't be taken too seriously.

This is of tremendous importance because whatever else is done by due process of law the temper of the people as expressed in public acts has got to be changed. People of good will are going to have to take over from the haters! Fortunately we don't have to wait for this to happen for time to convert a lot of haters into people of good will. All we have to do is to let the people of good will discover how many of them there are and how completely they can have things in their own hands if they'll just act like they feel.

Clara and I spent a few days in your city at the invitation of James Sells at the seminar on the "communicative arts." Against my saner instincts I had hoped there might be some glimmerings of reappraisal of religious broadcasting there, but the satisfaction with the kind of tripe they are turning out and even with the almost non-existent audiences which attend to it was more than total. It was so depressing we had to hurry out of town without even seeing any friends. We went through Alabama on the way home and got some good stuff, including the pickle story and an interview with Dr. Alexander Nunn of "Progressive Farmer."

I would like to devote myself for the next couple of months to the extension of our program to more stations in Alabama. I would like to see how close we could come to real saturation.

Probably I have been deeply influenced by some of the reading I've been doing lately, particularly "The Mind of the South," which was given to me by Nat Welch, and "The Negro Revolt," by Louis E. Lomax. It seems to me he sums up the whole story in a single sentence. "The hope of sane men, black and white, is that white men will voluntarily change their ways before black men can make them change." Up to now most of our efforts have been devoted to the idea that some white men can make other white men change. This is undoubtedly true, as has been demonstrated in the courts. You've got, it seems to me, an even better instrument in your voting campaign. But even this depends upon change of heart - or change in the obvious expression of the will of the local community. As Lomax points out, no amount of action from elsewhere is going to make this work unless the people in the voting district will get out and vote. And in this the present emotional climate of the local white community is bound to have a very real influence which did not cease to be powerful when lynching lost its general appeal. Even the success of a voting campaign will requirea lot of change in local feelings.

This is where the kind of thing we are doing must be enlarged not alone because it looks like it might be effective but simply because it is our only present access to the minds of people not already devoted to what we are trying to do or aware of the large proportion of people around them who want to share in doing it in Christian spirit.

The real danger is going to be lack of patience. It took a long time to create the emotional atmosphere which now exists in so many places. It isn't going to be changed in a hurry. And it isn't going to be changed at all if we try to push too hard at the sore spots! It isn't southern people only who don't like to be pushed around, but there is no other element in the entire situation on whihh there is such universal agreement as the idea that we don't want people telling us what to do. I think we have been stymied by this because we don't want to slow down to the zero mark and we don't see the alternative. I think it is to let people talk to each other! I am not sure it wouldn't be good to have other people like Lester Maddox shooting off. If we can trust people enough to make up their own minds we can trust them to discern the truth about such people, as well as about the kind of people we like better.

Forgive me for taking up so much of your time, but it seems to me so terribly important to keep up with what we've got going, and I really don't think I feel this way just because I'm doing it. It is a means by which we can talk to a large enough proportion of the people of Alabama eventually to make a difference in the emotional climate. I am not sure how fast we can go but we can go as fast as is possible and that will always be in the direction of change. And there certainly isn't any other way visible for reaching the people outside our own unhappily small circle by means primarily persuasive rather than compulsive. It does seem to me that as Christians we are compelled to make the fullest possible use of the means of persuasion available to us.

Do let me know how you like the new shows in whole and in their various parts. The reactions that are coming in are most gratifying.

Say hello to everybody for me. At present I am planning to spend most of Septemebr in Alabama, mainly promoting the use of the show. I don't know yet how it can be managed, but I am hoping for the best.

Clara joins in best wishes.

Sincerely,

Ed

Dear Ed:

I have been out on vacation recently and am a little behind on developments. We are bringing in a tape recorder tomorrow and I will catch up on the back tapes. We were most impressed with the indications of success in key places such as Tuskegee. Your success seems to grow, even as you move into more touchy material.

Could you let us have a fairly complete summary of acceptances of the series from Alabama stations? We need to know how many stations are handling the material and particularly those tapes dealing with sensitive matter. We will need this by September 17 in order to report to our Executive Committee on the project.

You should feel a considerable sense of achievement about your work in Alabama to date, and we are proud to have some part in it.

We were extremely impressed with the interview with Polly Ousterhout on tape 14. This was a moving and effective interview and we will be interested in learning of any reactions to it. We also felt that the Pickle Project and Buford Boone were constructive. You are really moving into power structure circles with statements from Boone and Ralph Draughn. I hope that more of this type of thing will be possible as you go along.

Mr. Paul M. Rilling

Dear Paul:

I am very glad indeed that you are pleased with what we have been doing in Alabama. It does seem to me that we are entitled to a sense of real satisfaction in an achievement which, while it has seemed relatively easy, is based upon long experience and careful planning. I really look upon this as the culmination, not only of my experience in radio but of my widely varied experience in human relations. As I continue to work at it, the possibilities grow still more enchanting.

Of course, I wouldn't go so far as to say that this has been easy or simple. It was for a long enough period to be quite trying and a really touch-and-go proposition. I feel now that we are sufficiently well established to look upon the future with a high degree of hopefulness. Here is a report on the situation. We have lost two stations from the list I sent you previously: WEZB in Birmingham changed ownership and I have not yet heard from the new owners to whom I wrote. WTNX in Phenix City changed managers and I haven't yet heard from the new manager. We have added two stations within the last 10 days: WGWC in Selma, Alabama, which you will note makes two stations in Selma which I consider certainly a part of the very heart of Alabama, and WELR in Roanoke. This makes it a total of 18 Alabama stations, 4 of which, at least, continue to repeat the program twice each week, so that we have a total of 22 uses there and 4 stations in Georgia. For a considerable time, as you know, we have been concentrating on the material and quality of programs without a serious effort to extend our outreach. Recently, however, we wrote some letters and received requests for 19 audition tapes. On the basis of previous experience, we might well expect to have 9 or 10 of these added to our regular list. I think the time has come when we can well give some further attention to adding to our list of users and expect to devote a considerable portion of my time to this purpose when I make another trip to the state, as I hope to do next month.

I think the vitally important thing to notice is that we have not lost a single station on account of the material, including what you call "sensitive matter." I believe we can accept this as the clear evidence that I have done what I thought I could, that is, to supply a program of such great human interest as to make it carry whatever message we can find people to express. This doesn't, I am sure you understand, mean that we would be able to say just anything we took a notion to. But it does mean that when there are as many people as there are in Alabama who have anything of significance to say we can give them a platform or a sounding board or whatever you want to call it. I really think that I have something here pretty fundamental to the whole communication picture in spite of the fact that it is not universally recognized in the industry. I think the basic pulling power of radio and to an almost equal extent television comes from the yearning in the hearts of people to talk to one another. It's the spirit of the "bull session" or the old-fashioned gathering around the cracker barrel with which I am old enough to have had some personal experience. I think this is what the good Lord gave us radio for because I do believe that in virtually any area you might want to mention there are a large number of people whose convictions are well ahead of the common practice.

There are two other points I would like to make here which are in a sense repetitious. The first is that we must use extreme caution in our beginning as I think we have up to the present. At the same time, if we do use caution and are careful to make what we want to say simply a part of the total approach and not obviously out of proportion, we will all be surprised by the amount we will be able to say for long. I am now satisfied that we can say a great deal more in this basic series than I had originally supposed might be possible. I am still sure that this series will also enable us to expand the use of our more obvious material. This I expect to do by next spring, at least. The second thing I feel with increasing certainly as we move ahead. Practically everything we say is really effective against the position which we would like to take. This is clear from several angles, but perhaps most of all from the type of thing that is so generally broadcast in the South. The people who trouble us are against everything. They may start out by hating and suspecting the Russians, but that soon spreads to other foreigners, as well as other races, to people in other parts of the country, to people of other religion, until finally it gets right down to your next door neighbor with the not so subtle suggestion that you really ought to suspect him maybe more than you do.

Another consideration is by using the type of people we do and by making what is said simply the outgrowth of their own personalities and convictions, we are in a position that is very difficult for anybody to attack, no matter how much they didn't agree with the personal opinions expressed by any of our broadcasting.

I don't want to go off the deep end, but I really feel it is entirely possible.that we have made a discovery here of what the good Lord meant for us to do with radio and TV which may have as much power to bring freedom as the invention of the cotton gin had in welding the chains of slavery. At least, we have gone far enough to make it clear that the results may be far beyond our present understanding and I do not feel we could in good conscience quit at this point.

There is just one additional thing I want to make clear and that is that all the material which is put into this series is used by every station. That is one reasonwhy we have to exercise so much care and that's why we can provide a different kind of material when there is a chance for each station to choose for itself what it will use.

Again, I think it's impossible to overemphasize the importante of the highly gratifying fact that with the two exceptions already noted for reasons beyond our control, everybody who started out with us in May is still with us and happy.

If youwant any more details, let me know. I'll keep you informed as new stations are added. I look forward with great eagerness to a report on your reaction and the reaction of others to a most recent list of tapes, especially the last program number 24. You will be interested that I have just received another letter from Mrs. Wilder, the manager of WABC in Tuscagee in which she says: "I have listened to tape 24, The cucumber project and first let me thank you for the nice things you had to say about WABC and myself. I appreciate both very much. I thought your interview with Jerry Green excellent and was as keenly interested as if I had never heard about cucumbers. As a matter of fact, I learned a number of things that had not been brought out in my conversations with him. I just hope that this will be a pilot for future projects which will help the localpeople."

I can't help adding what, of course, we both know - that within a few days we will be sending out program for the sixth consecutive month. I am sure that last March when this thing first hatched as an idea nobody, including myself, would actually have believed that it could be done on such a scale in such a brief time and with such total absence of repercussions. If we can manage a way to finance it in terms of our original discussion, we will all be amazed by what will be possible. I think indications in several other areas are making us increasingly clear that more of this bedrock promotion needs to be done, out of the simple respect for the normal processes of the human mind and heart.

Clara joins me in regards and best wishes to you and Les and all the rest.

Sincerely,

Ed

Dear Paul:

I guess our letters crossed in the mail and it may very well happen again, but I cannot wait to give you what to my mind is the most significant possible reaction to the Polly Ousterhout tape. This has already been broadcast by most of the stations and we have heard absolutely nothing. This, to me, is the most gratifying of all possible results. It means quite simply that everybody took it entirely for granted, thinking nothing of it either up or down, back or forth, pro or con. It's just a normal part of the kind of report on the state of Alabama to the people of Alabama that we are offering to these stations. This is what I mean when I say that things like this can be done in such a way that we are not vulnerable. There is no place to take a hold to make a protest. This has happened frequently enough so that I am no longer as surprised by it as I used to be but it's what I'm aiming at. I think that the actual result or influence upon the listener is even greater because the idea is dropped quietly into the mind or heart at a time when no resistance has been built up.

Needless to say, I was deeply gratified by your letter of appreciation. There is, believe me, unlimited material of this kind available. I have not had to seek it out.

Incidentally, I think you missed the biggest dynamo of the power structure. My humble guess would be that this is Mr. Smith of the McQueen-Smith Farms, the first and perhaps the only "plantation" in Alabama to show an annual production of over a half million dollars. He is a member of the board of the Alabama Power Company, among the great number of other things. There seems to be no difficulty of approach in this area either and again the possibilities are unlimited.

It seems to me the more carefully you examine it, the clearer it appears that we have ahold of an instrument of tremendous power if we use it prayerfully and by the grace of God.

Sincerely,

Ed

This is just a note that we have recently added Jackson and Brewton to our list of stations in Alabama using a Yankee program.

You will, I am sure, be interested in a note we just received from WGWC, the second program in Selma to tape the Yankee and the CBS station there. I quote: "Dear Mr. Randall: We are pleased indeed with 'A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie' and the program is scheduled each Sunday afternoon at 3:30. We feel that this is the best time to reach more listeners. We would like to have number 1 and number 2.

"We are returning number 3 and number 4 and shall return your tapes as promptly as possible. Sincerely yours, Bob Martin, Owner-Manager. P.S. We especially like your theme and glad you did not use Dixie on this type of program."

We are making a very special effort right now to increase the number of users and expect to have something to report soon.

Subject:

The latest information on the Randall project, obtained by telephone, is as follows:

1. 49 Alabama stations are now using "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie" on a regular basis.

2. 4 of these are using the program twice a week, the others on a once a week basis.

3. We do not have the complete list of stations, although this is coming by mail, but at least 18 of them are South of Birmingham, mostly in Black Belt country.

4. This means that the programs are currently being aired for a total of 18 - 1/4 hours a week, or radio time that would cost $1,060 a week at normal commercial rates.

As of this time, Randall has not received a single cancellation or critical comment because of objection to program content.

Oneonta, WCRL
Opelika, WJHO
Piedmont, WPID

52 stations in 37 towns in Ala.; 5 in Georgia (names + number of towns unknown.) See next page. Also, see report.

Roanoke, WELR
Scottsboro, WCRI, WROS
Selma, WGWC, WRWJ,
Talladega, WNUZ
Troy, WTBF
Tuscaloosa WACT, WJRD, WNPT, WUOA
Tuscumbia, WRCK, WVNA
Tuskeegee, WABT.

This I make out to be 37 towns (out of a total of 71 in the state with one or more radio stations), and 53 stations, out of a total of 117 in the state. According to the report which has been other wise reliable there are nine other stations listed as "practically certain." At least four of these stations are using each program twice. There are, in addition, five stations in Georgia currently using the program. This adds up to 62 broadcasts (fifteen and a half hours of broadcasting) each week. If the nine others should come through (as I think they will) this would be 71 broadcasts weekly. There are, in addition, 26 stations giving some consideration to using the program. When they find out what is going on some of these will certainly be added to the list. You will notice, quite incidentally, that we have two or more outlets in ten cities.

You have taken note of the kind of material we can broadcast, encouraged by the astounding fact that we have had no cancellations from any users. This quality and quantity can be definitely developed and improved, particularly in a few months when we can begin to offer other material for optional use. (This, you will recall, was originally the point at which it was expected we might accomplish something.)

In other words I feel, and I am sure you do, that this is as complete and forceful a demonstration as could possibly be made in a not necessarily friendly atmosphere. It's cumulative influence over years of use would be impossible to estimate as I am sure this kind of broadcasting will build increasingly loyalty in a constantly enlarging audience. Incidentally, one station on our lists boasted of having 17 hours of "anti-Communism" on its air every week, so it's clear somebody believes in the effectiveness of this medium. (I am quite sure that all of that 17 hours is time purchased at commercial rates.)

So it seems to me we have all the necessary ingredients for some conclusion. The fact is, as I said to you over the phone, that we have so far extended ourselves to make this demonstration as complete as possible that we will have to find some quick financial relief or close up our entire operation. It seems to me the impact value of such a surprising demonstration as we have made will wear off in the course of time so that if we can't make a dent while the iron is hot there's little purpose in staggering on just a wee bit further.

We have uncovered new and even better resources of people and material. I'd like to go down and collect some of it for more programs in October. But we have no resources without borrowing, and this I can't feel would be justified without greater assurance of the power to repay. So please let us know the word, good or bad. If it's bad we can make it as painless as possible for everybody.

If it is any good at all I think we should begin at an early date to plan to extend into the rest of the area. The same kind of promotion could, I am sure, bring us relatively the same coverage as we now have in Alabama. We have, by the grace of God, an instrument for good the full power of which we can only dimply glimpse.

Sincerely,

Ed

Thank you for the data and list of stations. I think the involvement of around half of the radio stations in Alabama is a tremendous achievement.

We agree that you have demonstrated the value of this approach and we are eager to support your continued activities in this area.

Les is in New York this week looking into the problem of financing for SRC in general and for several projects, including this one, in particular. Upon his return next week we will be in a position to see where we stand and to give you an evaluation of prospects for the near future.

We are both inclined to continue to concentrate on Alabama for some months both because of financial limitations and our feeling that it is well to let the project operate over a considerable period of time in one state before spreading out.

The executive committee was most impressed with our report on the project and favors its continuation.

Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Dear Paul:

I hope you chaps understand how much this means to us - because I just can't quite find words to express it myself. Clara and I are, to say the least, delighted to be able to continue working with you.

Just to keep the record straight I should say that since writing you WJBB, Hayleyville, has written asking for the show. A couple of other stations that were considering have also written, turning it down. Both of them used the phrase, "just at this time." Of course I am very sensitive to things like this - but I cannot help being glad that we got everybody lined up at just the time we did. At the same time I am increasingly amazed that we have had no cancellations whatever.

With $5,000, if we keep the show in operation for another year, we will need to do all of the incidental work which we have been hoping that we could pay other people to do. This would have served both to ease the personal strain and to allow for some expansion. But there are two mitigating considerations. Certainly within this period we will be able to provide some actual demonstration of the results of such a "saturation" broadcasting. And it is not unreasonable to hope that some new sources of financial aid may open up, either to you or to us - or to both of us together.

I agree that we had better keep on cultivating Alabama for the present. That was a most excellent suggestion to begin with and is still operative. But there certainly is a strong temptation to extend ourselves into the rest of the area which is still so largely vacuum in our terms. I hope you will not object if we work in a little material now and then from other states in a kind of experimental way.

Enclosed is a copy of our new "A" listing. We missed one during the summer, what with all the excitement in Ala.

Definitely now I shall be in Alabama early next month to collect more material. Without concurrent responsibility for canvassing new stations I can do a better job in this respect. I'll get in touch with you as soon as I am in the state so we can plan to get together for conversations on the future.

At present I am working on the next set of programs. They will lack some things we will both wish they had first because I used the best material I had available from earlier recordings and haven't had opportunity to do as much recording as I should have. I'm not too distressed about this, however, because I think this is a time to be very thankful indeed that we can hold our own and also because I think I can get some really good stuff next month.

By the first of the year we can begin to offer other material to all of these stations on a carefully worked out program. I have an idea we are all going to be surprised by what we are able to do.

Thanks so veyr much for the check and especially for the confidence expressed by it. I don't know how much concerned you are by considerations of accident and design, if any. But last Sunday night Clara and I very carefully balanced our assets over against our liabilities, made out checks for everything due and came out so nearly exactly even that it quite took our breath away. With at least 200 tapes needing to be sent out this week, with the need for an almost immediate trip to Alabama, and with some other considerable expenses looming ahead we were still, somehow, able to get a good night's sleep - and then on the Monday mail came your check. On such an occasion it is very difficult indeed not to have strange ideas about an intervening Providence of a nature that was not taught in theological seminary.

At the same time a group of good people here in Philadelphia are increasing their concern with our project in terms of financial help that may very well take care of the costs of our other operations so that we will not loose the wider nature of our operation which I consider absolutely essential to our more specific operation.

After further careful consideration Clara and I have felt that it will be well to continue to say as little as is at all possible about our mutual involvement. I have a feeling you will concur in this.

You will see that we expect to be able to continue on our present level of operation with your present help, hoping to do some expanding when circumstances permit. It isn't going to be easy, but it is going to be a lot of fun!

Sincerely,

Ed

Dear Mr. Rilling:

I am enclosing a copy of our listing of the current set of twelve programs of the "Yankee in the Heart of Dixie," in which I think you will find considerable interest. I would like to point out the pertinent statement by Buford Boone and also ask your reaction to the forthright statement about the treatment of the Indians by Mr. Wadsworth. I think this is part of laying a solid foundation for enlightenment, shall we say?

You are well aware of my reasons for stepping lightly. However, I would like to call attention to the fact that we are beginning to distribute other material in Alabama. I am sending you with the Yankee tape a copy of our Al-XX. You will find a copy of that listing enclosed from which you will see that this is a program on a Negro slum school here in Phila. I think this is one of the best things I have ever done, both from the standpoint of providing an entertaining show and saying something important today. We have had the peculiar experience of having every one of the first 54 stations that returned our cards asking for the number 1 program, which is always an integration program. This program has been asked for by stations in Selma, Roanoke, Scottsboro, Tuscaloosa in Alabama. I think of equal importance with the fact that it will be broadcast from the stations is the fact that this will give us a reading of the temperament at this particular time to guide us for the future. I hope within less than a year to have all of the Alabama stations using Yankee, and there should be increase by then of those also receiving regularly a listing of other tapes.

There are a couple of questions I want to answer on the trip I am just beginning are whether or not to offer our David series. I am inclined toward doing it.and whether to promote our Friendly World series. We already have two stations in the state using it with considerable satisfaction.

I hope you like this stuff. I'll give you a call as soon as I get into Alabama and we'll plan to get together; that is, provided the phone service is still in operation.

As ever,

Ed

Dear Paul:

It was good to see you again. It always gives me a lift to be with you. It is exceedingly helpful, now and then, to be where movement is visible, after being for so much of the time by situations which seem so glacial.

I am sending you a couple of tapes. One is what I said at the Rotary Club at Scottsboro. I wasn't sure I had it in audible form because it was my first such use of my new machine. But I think you can tell what was said. Listening to it I was a little surprised at myself and more understanding of Jim Thompson's (the radio station manager) amazement that it was so enthusiastically received. I left sound on after I was through, so you can see the warm approval wasn't just formal. I would say at least half of them came up to say something. It was, in a way, a deliberate effort to see what I could get away with. Jim assured me that they all understood what I was talking about. I hope you like it. This is recorded at 3 3/4, which most machines will play back.

? Randall's speech, not tape, enthusiastically received -

The other is the two programs I have made of some of the material I got from Dean Pierce, of Auburn School of Education. He is a remarkable man - would be in any state. But that such ideas of basic democracy should be so forcefully advocated in Alabama seems quite incredible. I think this couple of shows illustrates the fact that we have a lot of allies, who may - or may not - be fully aware of their relationship to us, but whose progress involves the really common welfare. I expect to include one or two more shows with Dean Pierce and one of his men, Dr. Saunders, in the next twelve, on which I am now hard at work. I just thought you might like to hear these two at once - and I hope you may find it possible, as I'd like to have your reaction as soon as possible.

I'm writing also to Leslie, who asked me for some information on spreading our wings a little more widely.

Mr. Leslie Dunbar,
Southern Regional Council,

Dear Les:

I have just sent Paul two more tapes. One is my speech to the Scottsboro (of all places) Rotary Club, which you might find interesting, and the other is a couple of new shows with Dean Truman M. Pierce, Auburn School of Education. He's a tremendous person with wonderful ideas for educational advance in the state who illustrates the fact that any improvement in whatever field is bound to include some new pavement on our street.

Now about the costs of expansion. I must admit that, in spite of a great deal of thought and prayer upon this subject I still do not feel that I have the final word. But here is something to work on.

You know how little I have been concerned with money except to have enough to work on, at least to the extent of demonstrating what could be done. You know that we have been operating on the present level at not quite half of what I thought to begin with would be absolutely essential. I am not at all sorry that we have done this, because I know you have done your best to help and I am pretty sure it was either do it as we have done it or not do it at all! So we have been doing for five thousand what I told you couldn't be done for less than ten.

As matters stand now I do not think we could have provided a better demonstration if we had had $20,000. Your decision to concentrate on a single state was certainly wise. The choice of Alabama was so wide as to seem providential. The material might have been some better, but not too much. The electric and editorial quality could have been better - but not enough materially to affect the demonstration or make it more conclusive. So I think it is clear we have been able to absorb the slack by our own efforts.

Certainly the acceptance by radio stations, the acceptance by the listening public, the acceptance by people of weight in every walk of life, all taken together provide a demonstration of what can be expected in the future. I think when we begin in the spring offering our other types of material we are going to be deeply gratified by the results. But certainly the usefulness of our basic material has gone far beyond anything any of us could possibly have considered within our reach.

So anybody who wants to know what can be done has only to look and see what is being done. For this reason I am going to suggest actual costs on a somewhat larger scale. This does not mean that we have all of a sudden become greedy, or that now we want to begin "cashing in." We will go right on doing what we can do with whatever we have to work on. And I am just as uninterested in making money on it as I ever have been. But in considering expansion there are new factors.

This last trip was really a toughie. Perhaps the hardest part of all was the four or five days of steady driging required to get there and back. I'm sure some less strenuous method could be worked out with a little more money to work on. Now I'm hard at it getting the material worked into programs and Clara, who could help so greatly to take the pressure off of this job, is involved with long hours of tape copying, and other routine tasks that could be done just as well by somebody else - if we could pay for having it done. These instances suggest why any thought of expansion includes an increase in funds.

My original estimate that we could do a weekly show for twenty or more stations for $10,000 a year was a narrow figure. Costs have gone up more than I had figured on some of the items we have not paid for for several years. In addition we would have to include costs of additional programs of the nature of our regular material intended for circulation in the south in connection with the "carrierprogram." Sp to be ready for expansion into other states we would have to have a bsic $15,000 per year for our present operation in Alabama with "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie" and other shows offered to the using stations in our periodic "listings." This also takes knowledge of the fact that, instead of a minimum of 20 stations we are now broadcasting sixty times each week in Alabama (and neighboring Georgie).

With this production cost in hand projection into other states could be done on the basis of $10,000 each. This would include distribution of regular material as well as "Yankee," and the collection of material in the newly acquired states so as to give the programs local appeal. This would cover the costs of all the operations we could hire done and would leave Clara and ne free to devote ourselves to the collection of material and the production of programs. It would also provide for the kind of help - in case we add several states - which could be trained to take over some of the production work eventually. This would actually involve less sweat and toil than the present arrangement and so be well within the range of my present capabilities for (I hope) some time to come.

Thus if we were operating in ten southern states this would involve a cost of $105,000 yearly, all fourteen would be $145,000, Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia would be $35,000. This would contemplate between a minumum of 30 and fifty stations in each state. We might very easily find we had many more than this number, but that, I think, is a problem which can be left unsolved for the time being.

I think the amazing progress that has already been made indicates that there is at least the possibility that we have here the greatest instrument for enlightening public opinion that has ever been at the disposal of men of good will. It's ultimate effectiveness only use can determine, but it seems now incontestable that it could be relatively at least as effective as atomic bombs. Surely somebody with imagination AND money can see that it is worth a venture.

As ever, Ed

RADIO PROGRAMS AVAILABLE ON TAPE
(Each number has five 5 to 7 minute spots of conversation except where otherwise noted)

1962 - LIST A

A1 EVERY CHILD HAS HIS PRICE
Do our vast and flourishing slums produce a special kind of child, pre-damned to a life of delinquency, squalor, marginal living at public expense? Or are these gutter gangsters-in-miniature capable of growing up to compete with your children and mine for jobs in industry, science and the arts? Are they a load on our backs or can they take a vital part in the world struggle for the minds and hearts of men -- for freedom and democracy? This is the question which heroic people in and around the Chester A. Arthur School are confronting on the lowest human level in a great American city. You read about them in "TIME" (August 24). Now hear them talking about What? Why? How? The educational leader with the job he dreamed of as a lad - The principal, himself product of bitter poverty and deprivation - The fifth grade teacher who turned to teaching because the jobs he really wanted were all closed to him - The college grad who just wouldn't believe it when wiser and more experienced people told him what children couldn't do - (One of them had $800 damage done to his car while he was doing a special job of helping). Now children in grade five, who couldn't read up to their grade, are reciting Shakespeare by the hour, playing chess for fun, staying after school to learn Algebra, and making the truant officers forget their names. Whatever the price for a healthy child in an evil environment these people are willing and anxious to discover it - and to pay it!

A1XX Same material in half hour program, highly recommended if you can use it in this form. We'll send both if you wish. A number of stations use both forms.

A2 MARK AND DOROTHY VAN DOREN
This jumps to the extreme opposite end of the educational scale, where those of whom a very great deal is expected in one of our finest schools have been taught by one of the greatest American teachers. One of our most popular previous tapes was with these two fascinating people. This one is even better! This, like the TV show you saw recently, was made in their charming Connecticut home. The best people can be the most fun!

A3 RICHARD HAMLIN - RURAL MINISTER OF THE YEAR
This amazing man was selected by Progressive Farmer -- and you will see why. Hear how he buried a church - and had his life threatened in consequence. When he decided to enter the ministry he had to go back to finish high school - right beside his own children! There are things here you never knew about what it takes to make a country preacher.

A4 DR. JACQUES MAY
This doctor was French and is now American, all because he so much loved the people of Viet Nam and wanted to be helpful to them. Now he is helping train more doctors in a hospital in Saigon. The picture he gives of the land and the people, their needs and the way they themselves are rising up to meet them is at once unique and greatly encouraging. He's a very fascinating person.

A5 H. S. SWINGLE
Here's the man who has been said to know more about how to bring up a fish than anybody else in the world. Starting out about twenty-five years ago he raised 150 pounds in an acre in a year. Now he can raise almost three tons on the same acre in seven months. No wonder people from more than thirty countries come to learn from him how to save millions of people from starvation -- and eager sportsmen -- and ordinary human beings -- rise up to call him blessed, full of fried catfish.

A6 REVOLT IN THE JUNGLE -- GEORGE HAUSER AND MICHAEL SCOTT
Somewhere between ten and fifty thousand people have been killed in Angola in what, a generation ago, anybody would have called a full scale war. The Portuguese government won't let anybody in to look -- or much of anybody out to tell, for that matter. So George Hauser, an American with a great deal of knowledge and experience in Africa, decided to go and have a look for himself -- without any permission from anybody. It was an exciting experience. Michael Scott, an Englishman raised in South Africa -- and now refused permission to return -- tells some of his interesting adventures in the search for freedom in this nearby area and its relation to the rest of the world.

A7 CHIRENJE - NKOSI - KUHANGUA - THOLOE - MALINA
What would it be like to have four mothers all at once? What games does a small boy play in the African veldt? What's it like to be hunted like an animal in your native land -- with the borders closed against you? Here are men who feel they are preparing themselves to go home and play such parts as George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, John Jay, Alexander Hamilton played in the early days of our country. (And some of them know more about our own founding fathers than some of us do, at that!)

A8 BARBARA REYNOLDS
One of the most charming people I've ever met, she found herself and her family projected into a mess they didn't want and didn't make in national and international affairs -- just because they wanted to sail their own boat around the world. She tells a story of how the human spirit can rise to meet whatever situation comes with dignity and power. You'll be glad you've met such a person.

Just mark the enclosed card indicating the numbers you'd like to hear and we'll send them with no obligation, except that you will give a listen and return the tapes, either immediately or as soon as you have used them.

Our programs are designed to be audience getters, first of all. We believe that the basic human interest is in people, and we present interesting people from all over the world to satisfy this basic fascination we have, as human beings, for each other. We are not in the business of "enlightenment," "uplift," "lecturing," or "instructing." We are in the business of entertaining! And our wide acceptance, our awards, and surveys all indicate that we have been highly successful in this unique enterprise. Don't fail to give your audience the happy opportunity to share in the fun with this list of remarkable people. You are under no obligation whatever, except to return our tapes.

Dear Ed:

You probably have been in touch with SRC during the past two weeks, but it suddenly occurred to me that I did not tell you, during your last visit to the SRC offices, that I would shortly be leaving to assume new duties here. The new Field Director is Paul Anthony whom you know well and will enjoy working with.

In my new position I am Director of the municipal intergroup relations agency of the District of Columbia. I think that I will enjoy my new duties. I hope that you will call me from time to time when you are in Washington.

I enjoyed very much knowing you and working with you on your exciting new effort in Alabama. I know that SRC is extremely proud of its part in this project and that if the percentage of content matter dealing with human relations can be slightly increased over a period of time, they look forward to somehow finding the money to spread the effort throughout the deep South. Your achievements to date have been remarkable, and I hope that your efforts continue to be blessed with success.

Mr. Paul Anthony,
Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.,
Atlanta, 3, Ga.

Dear Paul:

It was good to hear from you and to know that you are taking such an alert and intelligent interest in our project. Please forgive me for being so slow to respond. Actually, just as you were writing, I was arriving home from a trip during which I expected to visit you but on which I picked up a rather more than usually vicious bug of what my doctor calls the Asian flu and is has kept me low - in fact very low - right up to the present. I was in Dothan, Ala., when I began to feel its grip tighten on me and I ran for home at once.

I do think we have something going here of a really amazing nature and I should like to adjust myself to whatever conditions make it possible to keep on at the best rate. We are now incorporated (under thelaws of Delaware) and have presumptive tax exemption - at least people can have it directly now.

We are so well established in Alabama now that we shouldthink of prewssing at once into other areas in the South and even if we could, in the North. As a matter of fact it looks as if we might be making an arrangement with the School of Education of Auburn University to work with some of their people without changing either the pattern or the content of our present showand without giving it any other label. They are the most intelligent group of educators I've seen for many a day and you have already seen some of the results of workingwith them, if you've listened to all I've sent you. If this works out, as it may well do, we could turn to the rest of the area with greater freedom.

Now for your reactions. I will be glad to give you a brief report of what has been going on which you may use at your discression. If I manage to get this done and have enough energy left I'll enclose it with this letter. Otherwise it will follow soon.

I do not believe we can find resources on our own to go on with this as it should be done. However we are willing to try anything and still go on looking for money. One possible resource has come to attention which I am completely unable to evaluate. Walter Voelker, who is a counsin of Dick Bennett, who used to be head of the AFSC "Community Relations" section, says Dick is now the factotum of a Foundation with two special passions, one for race relations and the other for anonymity Walter thinks if some organization with a program in race relations wrote to them about our proposition they might well take an interest. Would you be willing to write such a letter? It is the Phoebe Waterman Foundation, Room 422, 1701 Arch Street, Philadelphia 3, Pa. You might tell them what we are doing, that it was instituted under the guidance of your organization, and that we would like to spread out into the rest of the country, perhaps beginning with the rest of the South. Then, in case you get any kind of a reply, I'll make a contact with Dick Bennett and see what happens from there.

My only other real line of hope is with the Field Foundation, who flatly told us they wouldn't consider our request until we were tax exempt. Now that we are I think it might be better for you to approcah themwith the idea that we are already working together on this idea and that we'd like to continue it.

I think we ought to move as quickly as possible on this as time may very well be running short on us. I will be glad to make a trip to Atlanta as soon as I get my next set of programs produced, which will be the latter part of next month. I think you will like these and that they will be most helpful to us.

Incidentally, with nothing more than the intelligent preparation of programs I'd like to ask you a couple of questions. Is it generally known that in a place like Mobile, for example, the Negro teachers are paid, on the average, more than the white? The superintendent, Dr. Burns, told me at one time it had been as much as $200 per year. Is there any resentment about this anywhere? What is the attitude toward such facts? I know, in general, I think, the feeling about new Negro schools which are better than the white. Is this all laid to being scared? Is it ever taken as a sign of anything decent?

To my surprise I have discovered

* * * * * * * * *

March 22, 1963.

To my even greater surprise - this was the spot at which I began an interesting and most disagreeable relapse which has left me still very weak and able to undertake only the most limited kind of activity. I judge from the date at the beginning of this letter that I hadn't recovered at the time I started it as much as I thought - but I really am making progress now. I still had the January sheet on the face of my calendar and I knew it was the last Wednesday of the month. So really it was February 27 when I started this. Fortunately the work that has had to be abandoned because of this illness is a thing of itself, only very slightly affecting the general program, and I am already at work on the next Yankee programs, with plenty of time to make them good - if I exercise proper caution. I seem at present to be deeply devoted to the cause of caution.

To resume - with probably at least a slight increase in the number of accidents - I was surprised to discover that most of the responsible school people I met in Alabama are pretty well reconciled to the idea that integration (in something definitely more than token form) is in the not very distant future. For the most part they are minded not simply to refrain from resisting it but to make such plans as will make the transition with the least pain on all sides. Most of them are of the opinion - in which they have some element of truth - that the greatest present hindrance is the feeling on the part of the white people that the mixture of Negro children will inevitably lower the educational level of the school. The school people themselves seem painfully conscious of the fact that this comes from the inequity of education in the past. I found among educators surprisingly little remnant of the idea that Negroes can't be educated. In several places I discovered responsible supervisors hard at work (it seemed to me) to wipe out this result of discrimination as a prelude to a better future.

Of course the whole problem is so muhh more complicated in each of its angles than anyone not a professional in that particular angle can comprehend. For exampole - in one small city I saw the new Negro school building, definitely superior in every way to the white buildings (except that there was no paved road leading to it) and with equipment which seemed at least comparable in casual observation. The Home Economics room was conspicuously up-to-date, with the most recent models of electric ranges and a full complement of kitchen gadgetry. I asked one of the staff members (I think the assistant principle) if this was the kind of equipment the girls cooked on at home. He said he couldn't tell me about that specifically, but he had recently checked with fifty eight girls in that department and learned that exactly seven of them had flush toilets in their homes. How do you resolve a problem like that? It would seem clear to anyone that the girls at this moment would be helped more to be taught how to make the best of their woefully inadequate equipment at home. We have the same problem here in Philadelphia where thousands of people would be much better off if they had a little basic instruction in what to do with powdered eggs and how to use dried milk - which a lot of them throw away because they don't know how to use it. But how is this to be done without impugning their dignity and emphasizing the fact that they are on relief?

Of course I know I am no authority in this field. But all these factors are certainly involved. For me they place an additional emphasis on the simple fact that what we need is development in good willl even more than we need development in the outward evidences of equality.

For example. A group of more than usually well balanced kids in the white school in this same town - which may have been either Evergreen or Talassee - spoke with restrained feeling about the fact that the Negroes had a better building than their own. Thei pain, however, was (and I think this was quite sincere) that they didn't take good care of it but that it was already dirty and windows were broken. Actually, when we got there, it was scrupulously well cared for. The windows were bright and whole. The kids were, if there was any difference, more neatly dressed than the white kids and the place smelled fresh and clean. The superintendent explained to me that from the day the school had been opened he was sure more baths were taken by the children than ever had been before. "They walk differently through the corriders," he said. "They show their pride in their new school in innumerable ways." He admitted to having been a little bit surprised himself by the total reaction. Now I think it more important for the white people of that town to realize the reality of this situation than for them to be grudgingly willing to have as much money spent on each Negro child as on each white. Of course I think when this fact begins to penetrate it is going to have a tremendous influence on the whole situation. That is: There is relatively little resistance (now) to spending an equal amount on the Negroes, pupil for pupil. First of all this is going to bring about clearly observable results in comparison. Second, when the white citizens really begin to think (or to accept the ratiocinations of their neighbors who do think) they will realize that the real "indignity" was to destroy their ancient myth by compelling them to spend equal amounts on Negro children - "as if" the Negro children could be educated like white children.

Forgive me for running on so endlessly, but these matters seem to me very impprtant. I do not minimize the importance of any other action or type of action. I am very sure that laws are necessary and their enforcement required. But here even more than in most forward surges it is what is in the heart that will finally determine the effectiveness of everything else we do. If we had forever to wait we could wait for some of these simple facts to permeate the entire social structure by the same kind of osmosis that has worked since the days of the cave man. But we are working against a dead line we don't even know. And we much use the instruments God has given us to hasten the distribution of this kind of heart-touching stuff. Of course all of this is, in a way, an explanation of why it is so difficult for all but a few people to see not only the value but the stark necessity of the kind of thing we are trying to do right in the midst of all the more spectacular efforts, the results of which appear so much easier to observe and to measure.

This is about the story. I shall now proceed to give you a couple of pages on the background and current history of "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie," which you may use at your own discretion. I find we are constantly faced with the peril of explaining what we are doing because the more spectacular elements of it so easily catch the eye and their careless exposition could so easily prevent us from doing any more. Discretion is so often not a working part of the equipment of the more enthusiastic of us good people.

If I've raised any questions let me know. I'll send you copies of the new shows as soon as they're ready.

As ever,

Ed

Dear Ed:

As you know, Paul Rilling has left us and I am in the process of trying to take over his responsibilities. For some time I have had your correspondence to Paul and Les regarding your program. My sincere apologies for not having written sooner. There has been a matter of time and travel, but primarily it has been a matter of not knowing what SRC can and should do about continuing the assistance and of not knowing just how anything we might consider would fit into your plans.

There are several reactions at this point. (1) Your description of the success of the initial effort is a very exciting account. Could your prepare for us a one or two page report which we could use in reporting the results of funds spent and use as an introduction to any future planning?

(2) The effort certainly was successful and if Friendly World Broadcasting cannot find resources of its own to continue and expand we would like to try to work something out. Our recources and interests would call for a very limited program covering several deep southern states at most. Where stands your tax exemption and your efforts to find funds?

Is there any liklihood you will be in Atlanta at any time soon when we might explore this? Whenever time permits we must get about planning our organized and detailed programs for the Deep South and we must begin soon, especially if foundation requests are involved.

Again, my apologies for not having written sooner.

Best.

Sincerely,

Paul Anthony

Dear Dorcas:

During the past year and a half we have given modest financial support to Ed Randall of Friendly World Broadcasting for an experimental radio series: "A Yankee In the Heart of Dixie." The series has been used extensively in rural Alabama and by a number of stations in Georgia.

We think the series is well done but would like a professional opinion. In this regard, would you consider listening to the tapes and giving us your evaluation? I am making the same request of Harry Fleischman, Director of the National Labor Service, New York.

There are something over twenty of these 30-minute tapes, so this is no small request, though you might find it unnecessary to listen to all of them. Under any circumstances, we would be most grateful if you would consider this.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

Dear Paul:

It was nice to hear from you, and especially with regard to Ed Randall, whose World I've known and greatly admired for several years. I wasn't aware that he was a beneficiary of SRC, and I couldn't approve more heartily.

His interviews and documentaries are warm, well conceived, and well executed, with allowance for the inevitable exigencies of on-the-spot recording which can't be made to conform to ideal recording conditions.

I'd be glad to listen to the new series, though I can assure you in advance I'll approve!

It was a fine occasion, having Mr. Dabbs as our Urban League speaker this year. He did his usual quiet, brilliant job, and I hear there was more demand for his books than he could fill!

Cordially yours,

Dorcas

Dear Ed:

Our mills grind slowly and several matters of interest to you are still unresolved but I would like to share our thinking at this point and react to several matters in your last letter.

First, I hope you have completely recovered from the illness which must have drastically altered your plans.

The exploration with the School of Education at Auburn sounds very good. Has anything more come of this?

It is particularly good news that you now are tax exempt. We had hoped this would develop and that you could thereafter seek direct foundation support with assistance and endorsement from the Council and others. With Field, and especially with the Phoebe Waterman Foundation, it seems to us the better course of action that you make a direct request, citing the SRC supported venture. As an enclosure to your request, we could prepare a letter of endorsement or could be listed as a reference. What do you think of this procedure?

Other avenues exist and there remains the possibility of modest continued SRC support but we would be much happier to see you try something which would allow you an independent and expanded program.

Sincerely,

Paul Anthony

Dear Paul:

Ed is somewhere "In The Heart of Dixie" and I am here holding the fort!

Before he left, he told me to send you a complete set of the latest tapes. According to my records, I cannot tell whether you received 25-26-27-28, soooooooo I am sending them along with the rest.

If you already have them, please send the duplicates back. We need every tape we can get our hands on!

SOME OF THE NUMBERS of "A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE."

1. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Traylor, Sardis, how their house burned down and what happened after that, including how Joe rebuilt an old one with his own hands. Dr. Ralph B. Draughon, President, Aurora University, and how admiration and love for a teacher changed the course of his life. Also how an Alabama rainbow blessed the eyes of a Yankee.

2. Tuscaloosa Agricultural County Agent Holston and how the railroad started his family in the beef business and how others have done likewise, so that to say "Cotton is King" is to neglect the bull! And Home Demonstration Agent Mrs. Elizabeth Collings and how from a long way back she was called the "Tomato Lady," and why. Also about how Alabama fish can smell Yankee, and defend themselves!

3. Dr. Sam Allison, now 94, practiced for 70 years and used many means of transportation and primitive techniques of medicine. Mr. James A. Minter, Jr., of Tyler, with some words about his ancestors and also about John Glenn and all the rest of us. And also how a Yankee couldn't keep his windshield swiper in an Alabama rain.

4. Mrs. Ellen Taylor Cooper, of Burnsville, about the effectiveness of education in small schools, of which she has been an ornament since -- well, for a long, long time. Ike Martin, Auburn, forestry specialist and why a tree grows better in Alabama -- and why he is interested in trees.

5. About our Theme, "Greensleeves," which is also a Christmas hymn called "What Child is This," with renditions in several arrangements with a little chatter about its meaning for all of us.

6. Dr. Earl C. Beck, Tuscaloosa, world famous authority on the folk music of loggers (and cattle pokes) and the wondrous tale of what happened to the two smart city girls when they met the two old men from the woods -- and you are going to be surprised -- together with some interesting first hand experience in folksonging. Together with an example of Gullah Negro talk and how does a man answer "How many?" when he can't count?, by Mrs. O. D. Langston.

7. Babs and Borden Deal, Tuscaloosa, and the big round world, all about writing novels and Babs' grandmother -- who was really "great" -- and why Alabama is wonderful and how you can smell the salt sea air across the Black Warrior bottoms.

8. Dr. Draughon with encouragement to give thanks for what we have, some remarks about why Alabama is wonderful, and how much Vermont shopkeepers are like Alabama shopkeepers. And a dog story by Robert Smith.

#11 9. County Agent Lawrence Alsobrook, Selma, about how neighbors acted in the worst flood in history, and Mrs. Albert Thomas, Auburn, about her neighbors when her son was "Missing in Action."

"A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE."

WHY? There is a wide open place to tell the people of Dixie some of the wonderful facts about their State and let them meet some of the very wonderful people of all kinds who make up their citizenry. I'm no Pollyanna, but I do believe that there is often a tendency to overemphasize what we don't like -- particularly in times of stress and strain -- until it's easy to forget what a wonderful country we have. I find the people of Alabama know pretty well why they love their native (or adopted) state and very happy to explain the facts of life, even to a Yankee. This makes for exciting entertainment, of a type that has real novelty to recommend it.

WHAT? A series of weekly fifteen minute shows about the State -- but mostly about the people -- of Alabama. The basic material is easy flowing, casual, and completely unrehearsed conversation with all kinds of people who love their country. We use as a Theme the delightful English folk tune, "Greensleeves," which is a part of the great common heritage of all of us. There is occasionally additional musical material. There are stories of exciting events, personal experiences, funny happenings, historical memories, ideas and efforts which have gone to make Alabama the remarkable state it is. But you will, I am sure, find each number an authentic and exciting radio show completely on its own. Because we are doing something we feel is important does not at all mean that this is a dull show. It will get you a lot of listeners and hold the ones you have!

WHO? Anybody who loves his homeland and has a story to tell is our buddy! We'll be pleased to receive your suggestions for people in your own immediate area who would give us interesting material. We will assure you of our utmost effort to make this show of the widest possible appeal. Our record with hundreds of stations and with actual surveys establishes our ability to provide programs of audience-building power.

HOW? Just fill out and return the enclosed post card and we'll send you an audition tape. Give it a listen -- and if you want your listeners to have a treat -- just write and ask us to put you on the regular list. There is no charge and there will be no cost to you except for the return of the tapes.

WHEN? The first programs are ready. We will be prepared by the first week in May, we expect, to begin providing this show regularly. So get your request in promptly.

WHERE? Honestly this was a sudden inspiration that really ran away with us. Everybody we talked to liked the idea so much we really started in high gear and the sparks began to fly in every direction. We think you'll be amazed and that to hear will be to enjoy. We don't know where we will wind up with this project but everybody who has known about it seems sure it is going places and maybe you will, too.

25. Buford Boone, Publisher of the Tuscaloosa News, has some interesting words about progress and thinking positively. Earl "Little Beaver" Kennemer, Wild Life and Game Specialist of Auburn University, has some very wise words to say about "going along with" nature instead of fighting nature - it's about the balance of nature, which is a fascinating subject on which he is a real authority.

26. Dr. Alexander Nunn, sagacious and popular Executive Editor of Progressive Farmer, on how a third prize pig influenced the choice of his life work and how he wrote his way through college -- well, part way, anyhow. Polly Ousterhout, the Mississippi girl who has been teaching at Stillman College while her husband taught at U. of Alabama, tells about a classic spanking, and explains her present attitude toward corporal punishment.

27. Principal E. W. Wadsworth of Tuskegee Public Schools -- an authority on Alabama Indians -- about finding his first Indian arrow head -- and about an old time Philadelphian, William Bartram, who travelled in Alabama a long time ago when nearly everybody here was an Indian. Aunt Delia Hyatt, who lives high on Chandler Mountain not far from Oneonta, and whose people came to settle not too long after William Bartram -- about what it was like in the early days.

28. Will Martin, of not far from Oneonta, about spending five days a week hauling hardware supplies and other things with two and four mule teams in the days when an empty wagon could get stuck in the mud -- but it's better now. John Yarborough, County Agent, about carefully planned industrial development in Marion County, and how the farm people (and everybody else) benefit by it.

29. Dr. Earl Beck of Tuscaloosa, the real world authority on songs and stories of the Michigan loggers, about the devious road over which a man travels when he wants to have a thorough understanding of the English Language. Mrs. Richard Brough, well known artist married to another well known artist, about what it feels like to be an artist and what are the rewards of putting your thoughts and dreams on canvas.

30. Fred Robertson, Director of Cooperative Extension, with more of the fascinating story of his early life in Tennessee and the devious processes of education for a farm boy. Jack MacDonald, who makes friends for the Gas Company in Marion County, about what he likes best about Alabama.

31. Alexander Nunn (again) of Progressive Farmer, about the origin of the idea of picking a "Rural Minister of the Year" for each Dixie State, and why PF was interested in the first place. Faban Clark, "Rural Minister of the Year" for Mississippi, and some of the reasons why; the fascinating story of his own interpretation of the meaning of religion for rural (and other) people.

32. Polly Ousterhout, that charming Dixiegal, tells the romantic story of meeting him on the "Queen Mary" -- and of getting married in Switzerland all of two weeks later. It will warm your heart! John Yarborough (again) about improving the farm income in Marion County right while the industrial income for farm people is also improving vastly. It's one of the very important and wonderful things going on here!

33. Richard Brough (husband of the artist Mrs. Brough) who teaches art at U of A. on campus and in Birmingham and Huntsville (as he told us some weeks ago) talks excitingly about what it means to be an artist and what is an artist, anyhow. This is definitely for people who don't know anything about art. Will Martin (again) -- his exciting experience when the famous bandit roamed the woods entirely too close to his home town (he was ten at the time)-- but he had to drive the team and wagon home all by himself!

34. Frank Jones, Marengo County Agent, on why his county is the most wonderful place in the world -- and what a pity it is we don't always realize what we've got -- and we sure have got plenty here! Principal E. W. Wadsworth of Tuskegee (again) and how the Tuckabatchies followed the magic stick down from the Great Lakes -- and why -- and the shameful things that happened to them afterward -- an unhappy page of history from which brave and conscientious men will not turn their eyes forever away.

35. Ralph Norman, Sr., of Fort Deposit -- the man who never envied anybody (remember?) - about the fun of watching while things improve in your home town and knowing that you helped a little with the improvement. Aunt Delia Hyatt (again) and more of the fascinating story of what it used to be like on Chandler Mountain, with a life so rich with excitement there didn't seem to be any point in gadding about to anywhere else.

36. Cecil Miller, popular assistant County Agent in Marengo County, about what it was like growing up on an Alabama farm and how glad he is that peanuts aren't selling now for $20 a ton. It was a good life! Dr. H. S. Swingle and more about the interesting process by which he and his helpers have learned to raise catfish by the ton where once they could raise only pounds -- and about the advantages of developing good strains of catfish -- like Herefords and Jerseys!

49. The Yankee gets to Dothan, but comes up with a very sore foot and a number of miscellaneous troubles which send him hot-footing into even more troubles - and worse ones - about which we shall hear next week, Dr. Truman Pierce, Dean of the School of Education of Auburn University, discusses the idea that Alabama is a rich state - and how to be even richer.

50. Jim Matthews, Lowdnes County Agricultural Agent, tells about how difficult times have come and of how men of courage have undertaken to meet new challenges. Sherman Livings explains a program for meeting similar problems of unemployment in the little city of Evergreen. Oh yes! The Yankee does get home, but isn't too happy even after he does so.

51. Aunt Plumy Hiatt tells about the rugged courage of great old John Hiatt of Chandler Mountain. And Dr. Cranford H. Burns, Superintendent of Schools, Mobile, tells about a boy who was a drop-out and how, with the encouragement of a devoted teacher, he really made the grade. (I know there's background noise with Dr. Burns, but I think his stuff is so good I hope you can endure it. My new recorder (a "UHER") surprisingly picked it out of the air!)

52. This - by request - is a repeat of #5, which is all about our Theme, "Greensleeves," with bits of several arrangements. We celebrate proudly the completion of our first full year of broadcasting this program in Alabama! Thank you!!! More than fifty times each week!!

Mr. Paul Anthony,
Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.,
Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Dear Paul:

I am a bit at a loss about how to proceed myself. When there are so many factors unresolved it is particularly difficult when you have to do something anyhow.

Actually, I haven't completely recovered from the strange attack of what the doctor called Asian flu. He comes to see me only once a week now instead of once a day and keeps telling me I am getting better. I am, too, but it often seems a painfully slow process. I made my first out of town trip last week - to Washington for one day - with fairly satisfactory results. I had a good talk with Harold Fleming. He thinks what we are doing is good, but he doesn't see any immediate source for any considerable sum of money. I have, however, reached a condition where I can plan what I am going to do with reasonable hope of doing at least some of it. And I have kept my weekly programs going without a break - and with quality up to standard, I feel. I hope you've had a chance to hear the two sets of four programs we've sent within the last five weeks. You should, if you can't listen to them all, give special attention to #56, the last one. This, in which the voice of Mr. Eckl is used, is one of the best programs of the Yankee series. If we don;t get too many cancellations from this it will be most encouraging.

The School of Education deal is in status quo. They are doubtless busier than they expected with the two other requests for money which they already had in the mill. They may well be paralysed with the thought that I am doing it for nothing (almost) as it stands now and maybe it isn't worth any more than that. (One of my best friends in the AFSC warmed me against working for them without salary (as Ethel and I did for two years) because it would give them the idea what I was doing wasn't worth any more. I am not trying to be funny because I really think this is a factor with Dean Pierce - maybe not so much that it isn't worth anything as that since I'm doing something anyhow there isn't such an awful rush about doing something to get some more money. This seems to be a part of the pattern that while I have engaged in a number of promotional activities with reasonable success I've never been able to promote my own stuff with any degree of effectiveness. I am not sorry I did what I did either in the case of the AFSC or Auburn University. And I still think the Auburn deal will work out to something good - if not as good as I hope it will be.

I have to offer revision on the tax-exemption deal. I just don't understand lawyers. Now our attorney says that we can just tell people that we are going to be at the end of our year of application - which will be in a couple of months, I think.

However, Harold suggested that I go to the Field Foundation without waiting for that event on the ground of our project in Alabama and the obvious need for something more to be done there. So I think I shall write Max Hahn. I am sorry not to do so with more hopefulness because I think his demand for tax exemption was somewhat in the realm of the run-around. I know when James Dabbs and I went to see him we both thought that we had the money assured. Then something happened.

About the Phoebe Waterman Foundation - I don't know. Walter Voelker, who told me about it and made the suggestion SRC might approach them is a near relative of Dick Bennett who, I understand, it their big boy. But I shall proceed to see what can be done. I shall, at your kind suggestion, refer them to you for support. It seems to me this would be better than to offer a letter. But I don't know about foundations. As you know, I haven't had much luck with them. We have had $1,000, in two gifts, from the Payne Foundation, interested in pacifism, largely because of our interest in Martin Niemoller, when they brought him to this country. They just don't seem to know what we are up to. They can't put us in a catagory, and that seems to frustrate them. We aren't "educational" and we aren't "commercial." They don't know what we are. They've never heard of anybody doing what we are trying to do and they don't seem given to wild experimentation.

I have from the start had an undiscouragable faith that there must be s somewhere an avenue of approach to somebody with the interest, the imagination, and the money to give us an opportunity for the kind of expansion that would make a real demonstration of what could be done a possibility. To be able to do a five-a week show on fifty stations in Alabama would, for example, enable us to discover for sure whether there is anything in this project. I think it would enable us to ch change the emotional atmosphere of the state in a marked degree. But I have from the start been faced with an insoluble dilemma. I felt that it was necessary to keep the program going because I was sure that if it weren't actually being done nobody would believe that it could be done. Then you people came along with the vision to make it possible for us to provide this demonstration in Alabama. This is even more incredible than anything we ever did before. If you doubt this just try to persuade somebody that such a thing could be done without telling them that it is being done! I took some exerpts on the main theme out of the different shows and played them for Gov. Collins. It was difficult for him to believe that such material could be generally broadcast in Alabama.

Well, getting the shows on the air has been about all I have had the time and strength to accomplish and what I have been able to do toward raising money has been strictly limited both in terms of time and ofnenergy on that account. It isn't going to be any better now that I have gotten so far behind with this interminable illness. While there are happier indications of more help than we have had earlier there is still - to be quite realistic - the very real possibility that if we continue at all it will be because of the "modest" support of SRC, for which I thank God daily! This does not mean that I am not going to do everything I can - but it does mean that I consider my primary job is to get the programs on the air as long as I have anyore sources whatever to make this possible. I guess, in a way, I am almost superstitious about it. Radio and TV are my field of competence in which I have some small contribution to make. I can't help but feel that if I discharge this responsibility as faithfully as I can there will be somewhere someone whose competence is somehow related to money who can make it possible.

Of course one problem of rapidly increasing seriousness in this regard is that I can't keep doing this forever and if it is to go on - which is really the important question - I shall have to find young men who can do it and help them to develope their own competence. This will require some more money.

I know I don't need to sell you on the project (to use a term which I do not like) but I have been surprised myself by the warmth of comment both from radio stations and people who have participated as I asked for comment on the completion of our first year. I am going to use some of this stuff to make a new offer to stations not now using the show (and try to get Pierce to join me in this through the country school people) in the hope of increasing our outlets. At the same time I am offering them our other weekly show and the Bible show as an exploration of the possibilities of going to a five times a week distribution. The results have been good. We've had eight requests either for audition tapes or programs to start for one or both shows..

I'll enclose copies of some of these letters, as well as the one Harold wrote to answer an inquiry about our project. You will notice, among other things, that one station (WKUL in Cullman) repeats the show three times each week.

Of course all I am really trying to say is that it seems to me since we have the amazing advantage of an entire year of operation - with 45 stations still broadcasting us, at least 51 times weekly - and since we can certainly warm up steadily to the main job it would be most unfortunate to have to stop right when there is such abundant need for voices of reason an d that the only way we can be sure as of now that we won;t have to stop is for you to keep on helping. We do have a number of intensely concerned individuals and two or three Meetings giving us growing but still slight support. It isn't going to grow enough soon enough. Then, if the lightening strikes we won't be behind the barn.

Sincerely,

Ed

Dear Mr. Randall:

Thank you for your nice letter of May 2nd. I remember you very pleasantly from your visit to my office for an interview about a year ago.

I want you to know that I think well of the work you are doing with the program "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie". There is a great need for a better understanding and ability to communicate among all our people. These unrehearsed interviews seem to be just the ticket to promote better relations as well as being informative.

I am planning to leave Hamilton in the next few days to accept a job in Florida. Maybe our paths will cross again one day. Anyway, I hope you continue to find satisfaction in the good job you are doing. Every good wish for your continued success!

Dear Mr. Randall:

It has been some time since your most interesting visit with me here in my office. I remember this visit with great pleasure.

I wanted you to know that I often hear from people across the State about the interesting series, "A Yankee In the Heart Of Dixie". All of these people express real appreciation for this informative and interesting program.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Randall:

Please accept my congratulations on the completion of the first year of broadcasting of "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie." I have not, of course, heard all of the programs which you have broadcast, but have been most interested in those which I did hear.

I have heard nothing but good comments from the people here in Alabama about the programs. We have been most pleased to have you as a visitor in the Auburn University community on two occasions.

I hope that you will come back soon, and I wish you continued success with this series.

I hear many complimentary remarks from this university community about the program. The interviews I have heard over WAUD are first rate both from content and presentation standpoints. I am impressed especially by the perspective and understanding you bring to the series. You might be a Yankee but I must say that you see the Deep South in better perspective than do some of your colleagues who have spent all their lives down here.

Dear Mr. Randall:

Thank you for your letter of May 2. I did not realize it had been a year since you started the broadcast, "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie."

I personally have enjoyed the ones I heard as it is something completely different from the ones we usually get from the radio. I have heard a number of comments from different people and all of them have been favorable.

In discussing this with Mr. Jim Thompson, manager of the local station, he told me it was one of the most interesting programs that they had presented.

Trusting things are going nicely with you, I am

Dear Mr. Randall:

By this time you will have received a postal card bearing my signature requesting your new program "This is a Friendly World." You will perhaps be interested to know why I did not ask for my audition program. The answer would be quite simple. For some 26 weeks we have programmed "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie Land." Not only is the program informative and entertaining, but often-times humorous and always in good taste. It is with this knowledge that I intend to program "This is a Friendly World." I know it will be equally as good programming as "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie."

At this particular time I am unable to give you the exact broadcast times of "Friendly World." But our tentative schedule would have it programmed late Sunday afternoon and I know it will be well received.

Please accept my sincere thanks for having provided us with a fine program which we neither have the facilities nor the budget to produce regularly ourselves. I am looking forward to more and more contributions to radio from Friendly World Broadcasting. Rest assured we will use as many of these fine programs as possible. Best wishes for your continued success and growth.

WIXI has received many nice comments about the program "Yankee in Dixie". Most people say it is a well balanced program with real down to earth view point. They especially like the reminiscence which you sometimes do with the By-Gone Days. There is a lot thought and planning put in the production of this program.

WIXI is proud to have it as one of our featured programs each week for our public service program..

Dear Mr. Randall:

For the past year we have been scheduling your "Yankee in Dixie" series from 8:45 til 9:00 a.m. on Wed., Thurs., and Sat., directly preceding our "Reeper" program where we give the local news.

We have found "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie" to be very homey and down to earth, and presented in such a way as to be of great interest to our audience. We have had very favorable comments throughout our market on this program, and although we took it to help fulfill our public service needs, we have felt that it has done more than this and that it has attracted an unexpected audience.

We urge you to keep producing this type of program and know that the many other places throughout the country will want to add it to their program schedule.

Dear Miss Manderson:

We sent you shortly after receiving your request tapes with programs number 13 and 14, 15 and 16, and 23 and 24. I hope you received them in due time and in good order. There is no need for you to return these at any specific time since I am sure you can make just as good use of them as we could here. Whenever they are of no further use to you, we would like to have them back as they can be used elsewhere.

You might also find special interest in program number 56, a copy of which was sent about the same time to Paul Anthony. If it would be of any help to you, we would be glad to send you an extra copy of this tape.

If you're making use of individual programs, it might be a good idea for us to make these up together instead of in the regular sequence or possibly to put them individually on smaller spools. We certainly want to make it as easy as possible for you to bring this material to the attention of people who are or who ought to be interested. If you have a play-back machine that runs a different speed or if you want to have these programs on half tapes so that you can get more on a single spool, we'll be glad to do anything possible to contribute to your convenience to spread the good word.

Dear Paul:

I've just finished listening to the Randall tapes and find them excellent. I had intended to spot check them as you suggested, but found them so interesting as well as so significant that again and again I had to hear the entire program!

There are some inevitable shortcomings from a mechanical standpoint - a decided difference in levels occasionally as a result of random conditions under which recordings necessarily were made. Mr. Randall himself is occasionally off mike, especially in tape, or rather Program #56, but such defects are minor in comparison with the warm, varied and often searching picture he gives of Alabama, contrary to all of our stereotypes.

I should think in view of recent history Mr. Randall would find stations outside Alabama which would be glad to program say a 13-week series made up of such interviews as those with Buford Boone, Mr. Eckle of the Florence TIMES, the assistant county agent and his pickle project, the sacred heart concert, the one with drop-outs and educational assistance, the fish expert and President Draun (is it?) of Auburn, the member of the Spillman faculty and so on.

Shall I return the tapes to you or send them direct to Mr. Randall?

All of the best,

Dorcas

I am sending you copies of programs 57 through 66. I hope you get a chance to listen to them soon as I am very anxious to have your reaction and I hope your approval. This makes quite a pile that I haven't had a report on. I don't mean to burden you, but I do feel very strongly that I need your counsel and help.

The reaction to our first anniversary was really overwhelming. It seems to me it calls very decidedly for an expansion of what we're doing at a time when we don't yet have the financial assurance of being able to continue what we are now doing through next year. If you have any light on this subject, it would certainly shine most happily on us now.

Frances Rosenberg of our Radio-TV Division and I have listened to more than half of the Ed Randall tapes you sent us. They are interesting programs, but are such soft-sells and have so little about race relations in them that I cannot quite figure out how they can be effectively used.

September 25, 1963.

Dear Les:

I have just sent you two tapes with #73, 4, 5 & 6 programs. This should bring you up to date. I am enclosing additional copies of the lists of shows with marks in green for those which have some specific concern with the major issue. This was a bit more difficult to do than I anticipated because I haven't each one marked specifically anywhere and some of the people I have used repeatedly sometimes talk about other things. But I think this is fairly inclusive and not too many errors.

It was good to talk to you on the phone. I find myself feeling very low over the Birmingham situation, particularly with the mayor this morning taking a lily white delegation to meet the President's commission and repeating the old gag about outsiders. I think that feeling has influenced some of the people I have tried to get money from in Alabama. Any outsider is an outsider. I should have realized that from my experience as a boy in Texas, but one tends to forget as age seizes hold upon the faculties! At the same time it seems to me even more important to talk to the people about what are the real problems, and I think this is what motivates Rose in his interest in our project. If he weren't so badly strained to raise the additional money he has to have for the U. (30 million, I think) he might even break down and raise our modest budget for a daily show.

Pardon the delay but this small job took longer than I expected and it also took me longer to get the broken down machinery into production again and to catch up for the time we'd missed.

Plans are solid for my reaching Atlanta for October 9.

If you've any questions don't hesitate to say so.

Dear Les:

I received your check for $600 with great rejoicing. I am enclosing an expense account for transportation as we agreed to the amount of $199.97. We are hard at work on this project now and will let you have a copy as soon as there is one.

Of course, we will be pleased to let you know the stations that make the request.

In order to secure wider circulation in Georgia, we are including in the listing spots with the Rural Pastor of the Year. We don't have the current one but I don't think many people are going to bother about that. With this double appeal and with the help which you have already given, we will be able to offer the tape to every station in Georgia; at least, that's what we plan to do now.

As I told you, we got some encouragement in Alabama, but nothing has eventuated since and you know how those things are. I'll let you know if there are any developments.

Dear Les:

Enclosed are carbons of our mailing sheets, after the first one of which I have made copies of the carbons. You will see that we have sent out already some sixtyfive copies of the "Macon" tape in both forms. (I think most of the stations that ask for both forms use it twice.)

Usually we have almost half the replies in the first week. This represents a much larger response than we had anticipated from the letters sent out. I don't think we have ever had so nearly universal request for our lead integration tape before. This is very heartening, as is the fact that the next two most popular are #2 and #3.

I am also sending you a copy of the tape which I hope you can hear soon. In my judgement it is the most effective tape we've done on race and I would like very much to be able to offer it more widely. We have covered Georgia and Tennessee. I'd also like to do Mississippi and the rest of them, but it will stretch us farther than we can go to supply all that we are likely to get now.

In any event, let me know how you like the show, please. And many thanks for making this possible.

Thanks for the check for travel, which arrived with the promptness for which you are famous.

As ever,

Ed

RADIO PROGRAMS AVAILABLE ON TAPE
(Each number has five 5 - 7 minute spots of conversation except where otherwise noted.)

1963 - LIST B

B1 NOBODY'S MAD IN MACON!
While other communities are torn apart by violence, hatred, and suspicion, Macon citizens of both races are working together for a more prosperous community, better education, a better way of life for everybody. They are gratified by the past, proud of the present and confident of the future. They have no outside interference and do not expect any. To give an understanding of this situation here are conversations with the mayor, with educators, business people, housewives, a man who doesn't like what's happened but is proud of the city anyhow, and with leaders of both races who are gratified at having found ways of working together for the advantage of everybody.

B1XX Same material in half hour program, highly recommended if you can use it in this length. We'll send both, if you wish. A number of stations use both forms.

B2 LINUS PAULING
The only man ever to receive the Nobel prize in two different categories, in Chemistry some years ago, in Peace recently. Here he tells in fascinating conversation about his early life and his interest in chemistry and also about his interest in avoiding nuclear war which brought him into sharp conflict with McCarthy and some others but which has more recently brought him honor as many of the positions he has advocated have been accepted. (10 spots in this number)

B3 ROLAND WARREN
This man has represented the American Friends Service Committee (Quakers) for years in Berlin where he has worked freely on both sides of the wall. In these times of uncertainty he has a most interesting story to tell about what kind of people he deals with both in the East and the West. He had a distinguished record for valor in the War and his change of position is an interesting story, too.

B4 GUNILLA ARLINGER
A Swedish exchange student who had some unusually exciting experiences in the course of her year in this country and who liked everything so well that when she went home and got married she brought her husband back here with her to share the advantages of the U.S. of A., and he's now studying at the University of Pennsylvania before they return. This is youthful adventure! She's a Girl Scout!

B5 REV. CURTIS TILLMAN, Rural Minister of the Year for Georgia. Preacher, poet, friend to everybody in and near Lennox, one of the men honored by the Progressive Farmer and Chandler School of Theology for his outstanding work in a rural parish, you will be fascinated by the infinite variety of this man's personality.

B6 REV. ALBERT H. CROPP, Rural Minister of the Year for Tennessee.
Another of the men honored for outstanding work -- with his wife for many years missionary to Indians, for whom he came to have deep understanding and appreciation. His warmth and confidence in humanity are deeply appealing.

B7 TOM KESSINGER
Now a sophomore at Haverford College, he spent two years in India on a Peace Corps project where he was supposed to be advisor on economics and wound up teaching people how to raise more and better chickens, pigs, etc. Gives you the feeling of participating in his project -- as, after all, all of us are participating in Peace Corps.

B8 TOM COLGAN
Welfare worker, writer, Quaker worker, who recently visited Cuba as a news correspondent and made some observations which in some respects are quite surprising. Has some suggestions for future involving some changes of policy. Gives very refreshing atmosphere of telling exactly what he saw as he saw it.

We also produce a fifteen minute weekly program of conversations with people from all over the world and Americans who have been all over the world, with the cooperation of A.I.D. of the Department of State, the Peace Corps, the U.N., and many other church, governmental and private agencies. THE EXCITING STORY OF "A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE"

by
Edwin T. Randall

In March of 1962 I devoted a little more than one entire week to listening to radio programs in the deep south, mainly in Alabama. This grew out of fragmentary experiences which had roused an interest in this field. But I was poorly prepared for the veritable flood of "hate" material. Most of it, of course, started out hating Russians. But by the time it was over you were looking a bit askance at your next door neighbor. Tragically, most of this unspeakable bilge parades itself in the name of religion.

The sheer weight of it is difficult to comprehend. On at least three nights I was able to establish that there was at least one such program within reach of my pocket radio the entire time from 6 to 10 P. M. One of the stations which now uses our show had, according to the proud statement of the manager "twenty-one hours of anti-Communism," every week. This station would not be unique in this respect, I am sure.

I had several reactions, in addition to the sheer horror and revulsion which seem to me inevitable to anyone who believes in the dignity of the human spirit.

The great weight of all this talk must have some effect. Of course practically all of this stuff is broadcast on time that is bought and paid for. This means that none of it is really "good radio," in the sense that great numbers of people will listen to it because they enjoy listening. Presumably, therefore, the audiences for the different shows are relatively small, even though the total number of listeners (through the many repetitions) must be considerable. The fact that they must pay for their time compels them all to examine, in whatever ways they consider determining, the results of their work. These must include at least enough money as the result of the broadcasts to keep them on the air.

These people are against virtually everything that constitutes a part of the heritage and working basis of Democracy. They are against foreign aid, against the normal processes of the courts and of law and order, against the United Nations and any kind of diplomacy out of harmony with their interpretation of the "Big Stick." They hide their basic opposition to democracy by their frantic "anti-Communism," and by the vocabulary of special words into which they pour their own special content; e. g., the people who want to "hang Chief Justice Warren" talk wistfully of their devotion to our sacred heritage and their devotion to the Constitution. Of course they are strong defenders of segregation, but they seem to be anxious to make this phase of their program as incidental as possible. They are also, of course, opposed to the graduated income tax, to social security, to labor unions, to the Peace Corps, to the National Council of Churches and most of the denominational organizations, which might not unfairly be summed up by saying that they are opposed to about any general recognition of human decency or any order of social and economic life other than a completely uninhibited dog-eat-dogkind of free-for-all. This is not always immediately clear but once they have started out there seems no place to stop short of pure (?) John Birchism.

Unfortunately there is little, if any, direct opposition to this type of whatever you want to call it. Recent books pointing out its perils have used such terms as "The Extremists," or the "Sixth Column." "Treason" is a word which not in infrequently seems called for here, except that treason itself seems to have become somewhat of a variable. Certainly it is a danger. Certainly its success would mean the end of what the rest of us consider (when we think about it) the real essence of America, of democracy, of freedom. Unhappily much of what might serve as opposition is offered in terms of direct support of organizations with which they take issue. For example, religious programs which might well attack this problem at the very roots are too often offered as direct support of one denomination or another, or of the National Council. And they are, practically invariably, of such low radio quality as to attract only the slimmest audiences, particularly at the odd times to which they are relegated as "sustaining" or "public service" programs.

So I came to the conclusion that something ought to be done. It should be done in terms of good, professional radio - programming that could attract large audiences, thus making use of good radio time without great expense.

Since the chief result of the type of broadcasting to which we object is to degrate human values it seemed to me there was a very wide opening in the southern radio picture for a program which would say, basically, "You have neighbors, near and far, who are really wonderful people, doing amazing things. Let's get acquainted with some of them."

With no little shame I will confess I thought at first the real problem would be to find enough of this type of people in the south.

I talked with radio people, particularly with some who had already used considerable amounts of our programming and who knew, in consequence, what our methods and objectives are. In these conversations, where I found what I think can be called enthusiastic approval of the general idea, were worked out the details and the title for the program which became "A Yankee in the Heart of Dixie."

I began collecting material at once, finding an incredible welath of people willing to express themselves with forthrightness in important areas of life and thought. We had immediately the cooperation of radio people, of such organizations as Agricultural Extension, from the state chief to the county personnel, of Auburn University, editors, business people, farmers, leaders in all fields, the Alabama Power Company, and, in fact, leaders in every area where we have sought help. The University of Alabama president and staff have been most cooperative, Rotary clubs singly and in groups have been encouraging, the listening public have been highly appreciative.

By some fast work we were ready with the first numbers of our new program for use in the month of May. We started at that time with about twenty stations, most of which are still with us as we are sending out the last programs of our first complete year of operation. At present we are broadcasting through fortysix stations in the State of Alabama, at least five of which use the program twice each week.

We have, we believe, by someperspicacity, a bit of meditation, and a very great deal of sheer good luck, hit upon a technique for influencing the public mind which I think can best be characterized as giving the people a chance to talk to each other. Let me explain. There is a strong possibility that minds are not often changed by argument or by other forms of pressure.

There was a time when the general mind was made up by sessions around a very real cracker barrel when everybody had a chance to speak his piece and to hear everybody else do likewise. There has been no general replacement of this ancient form of coming to a general conclusion. The experts have thought that people could, instead, be "told," or "enlightened," or "educated," and they have tried valliently to perform these services without always being too sure that they were acting to fill a felt need. Maybe this is part of the reason why there is such a general distrust of "egg heads," and why "public service" programs which consist of experts giving off with the pure milk of the word are neglected with such enthusiasm by so many listeners.

Our answer to this is to offer the fellowship of interesting human beings, opening their hearts to the listeners. If you can see what makes a person "tick" you can draw your own conclusion about whether or not you would like to use the same method so you can tick with the same sound - particularly if he isn't obviously trying to enroll you among the sainted. Thus we talk about foreign aid in terms of the work of Dr. Swingle, of Auburn University, who found there wasn't good fishing close by. So he began with a pond where he could raise 150 pounds of fish per acre per year and kept at it until now he can raise three tons of fish on an acre in seven months. People from thirty countries - where raising fish that way can be not an improvement of recreational facilities but an actual life saver for thousands of people, come to Auburn to learn from him. There is no answer to this kind of persuasion - and it is persuasion. There is no built-in resistance to accepting suggestions which aren't really suggestions but just the explanation of how one particular individual gets some satisfaction out of life.

Of course this is based upon the very firm conviction that people all want to be better than they are and that their are qualities of the divine in every human heart. This gets the struggle with the Birchers (and the Communists) right down to the bed rock of our real point of difference. It is saying to the people who are asked to suspect their neighbors, "All right. Let's just take a close look at the neighbors and make up our own minds." We are also helped by the strange fact that people listening to a well designed radio program somehow feel themselves not only listeners but also, in some odd way, participants. This is the element in this gift we have from God which we have never really understood or used with more than marginal adequacy.

If we are right on our faith we have an obligation to give expression to it in the hearing of all people, maybe especially in the hearing of those so brutally exposed without any recourse to the programs to which I have offered objection. As a matter of fact, I think the freedom of the Birchites to express themselves without let or hindrance creates the best background in the world for the presentation of what seems to us true and honest and real.

We have not yet reached saturation in Alabama. Five, ten times as much of this type of broadcasting could very easily be done within this one state. All of it designed to be audience-building, attractive listening, the kind of program which renders a service first of all to the radio station itself. And if it can be done in Alabama it can be done anywhere. I say anywhere because it seems to me there is a place for this kind of program about the south in the north and maybe vice versa. The special need in the south comes from the altogether too wide spread feeling of inferiority or inadequacy, as if they were really at the bottom of the pile in every sense. Actually there are just as many good people in Alabama, for instance, as in Pennsylvania - people anxious to solve the baffling problems they face in terms of human decency and Christian standards and values. These people just aren't as aware of each other in some of the southern areas. They haven't had a chance to talk to each other, to be heard by the people in general. It seems to me far more important for us to give them an opportunity to be heard than that lectures and other forms of persuasion be offered by people from the outside who, quite obviously, have problems of their own crying for solution.

Perhaps the most important consideration is concerned with ultimate solutions. Good will and understanding are an essential part of the observance of common rights when all has been done that can be done by law and by protest. And the best way to develope this good will is to encourage the contagion from focal points where it already flourishes, no matter how modestly.

This is the reason for our hope that this type of program can be extended, particularly to other states in the South. The fact that an outsider is involved at all is, in this instance I believe, a help rather than a hindrance. The Yankee is there not to tell anybody anything, but to learn, to be instructed, to be enlightened. He finds, to his delight as well as his surprise, that it is a wonderful part of the world and of the United States, that it is full of good people working to make it better. I think it is possible for people to express themselves more freely to an outsider and there is none of the self-consciousness of talking to each other about their strong points and good elements.

We are now being broadcast 51 times each week for fifteen minutes. This means twelve hours and fortyfive minutes of broadcasting each week. At one time we were being broadcast 60 times weekly. So our average has been pretty close to 50 for the year, considering the stations that started less than a year ago. This would mean that we have broadcast 650 hours since last May when the tapes now mailed out have all been used. If we figure an average audience of 10,000 for each broadcast (which would be very conservative) this would mean that we have talked to 26 million people during 2,600 broadcasts in this one state during the current year.

ABOUT FRIENDLY WORLD BROADCASTING

WHAT IT IS

We make and distribute more than 10,000 programs a year to more than 350 radio stations all over the country, conversations with interesting and exciting people, documentaries about exciting events, professionally designed and executed programs which are found by hundreds of stations to be audience-building and at the same time of prestige value to the using stations. We invite inquiry of the NAB about our operation.

Recent material has been used on the Voice of America. Our users include a number of educational stations as well as more than fifty 50 kw commercial stations.

WHAT WE DO

Our basic program is a 5 - 7 minute spot of conversation designed as a guest spot on a variety program or between musical numbers on a commercial program. These usually come five to a seven inch tape so as to provide one spot a day with the same person Monday through Friday.

We also do a fifteen minute weekly program which goes presently to 57 stations called, "This is a Friendly World." This deals mostly with people from other countries and Americans who have visited other countries to bring the excitement and interest of strange lands and not-so-strange people. We cooperate in this with the Department of Agriculture, the State Department, the United Nations, the Pan-American Union, and with many other cultural and educational agencies.

We make occasional "documentary" type programs dealing with special interesting events in schools, human relations, etc., which are usually offered in both five minute spots and as half hour shows.

HOW WE DO IT

Private individuals have been providing the expenses of the project. Because the people working at it aren't being paid these are not large and anybody who could have fun this way is welcome to throw in with us. No charge is made for the use of our tapes and the only cost to stations is postage for the return of tapes.

WHY WE DO IT

We think people are pretty wonderful, when all is said and done. We've met some - and keep right on meeting more - whom we consider especially wonderful, and we would like to have as many others meet them as possible. Some of them have different kinds of ideas, but basically our interest is in their personalities and what makes them tick - and how their clocks are set. We find among them all that, as so many of the young people of the International Farm Youth Exchange have said, "People are people wherever you find them." This amazes us continually and we like to share our astonishments.

WE HAVE NEVER ASKED

any station to use one of our tapes. We do offer them for listening, though. Then if the people who listen want to use them - that's O.K. by us. We mean to offer a service to broadcasters, and we don't want our tapes used on any other basis.

If you've never heard any of our tapes
YOU MIGHT BE SURPRISED!

A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE

WHY? There's no more exciting entertainment than talking to your own kind of people with their hair down! The people of Alabama deserve to get acquainted with more of the wonderful people who live and work in the state -- so many of whom are known all around the world. After listening to radio for a solid week, during a visit in March, I felt sure there is a place for show-casing the fine and wonderful facts. There's entirely too much tendency -- especially in times of stress like these -- to emphasize what we don't like. This creates a real need for something solidly realistic, not at all soupy, but based upon the facts of life that show what a wonderful area this is, and especially what wonderful people are doing such fascinating things. This program is created to meet that need and it will certainly attract a lot of listeners who are just as proud of their state as you are.

WHAT? A series of weekly fifteen minute shows about the State -- but mostly about the people -- of Alabama. The basic material is easy flowing, casual, and completely unrehearsed conversation with all kinds of people who love their country. We use as a Theme the delightful English folk tune, "Greensleeves," which is a part of the great common heritage of all of us. There is occasionally additional musical material. There are stories of exciting events, personal experiences, funny happenings, historical memories, ideas and efforts which have gone to make Alabama the remarkable state it is. But you will, I am sure, find each number an authentic and exciting radio show completely on its own. Because we are doing something we feel is important does not at all mean that this is a dull show. It will get you a lot of listeners and hold the ones you have!

WHO? Anybody who loves his homeland is our buddy! We've got big shots and people you never heard of, but they're all exciting people! We'll be glad to use your suggestions for future programs. (Look on the other side.)

HOW? Just fill out and return the enclosed post card and we'll send you an audition tape. Give it a listen -- and if you want your listeners to have a treat -- just write and ask us to put you on the regular list. There is no charge and there will be no cost to you except for the return of the tapes.

WHEN? Right now! Some of the twenty-one stations now using the show have been broadcasting it since May (four of them using each number twice each week). You can use the audition tape we send you to begin your own broadcast, if you wish.

WAUD "I personally think you have an unique type of program. I feel that there are many listeners learning something about their own state that they were not before aware of. We enjoy the programs at the station and find them most interesting."

WUOA "The series sounds interesting."

WCRI "Comment from the women listeners has been most favorable. They like your choice of subjects and different approach."

WACT "Regarding the program itself I have been extremely well pleased. You have more than fulfilled my expectation. Audience comment, as usual, is slow, but what I have had has been highly favorable."

SOME OF THE NUMBERS OF "A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE"

13. Dr. Fred Robertson, Director of Extension, describes most memorable event of his farm boyhood -- with a mule! Aunt Plumy Hyatt tells of the heroism of the early days on Chandler Mountain.

14. A one time Yankee who knows more about raising fish than anybody else in the world tells how he changed from bugs to fish and the amazing consequences, Dr. H. S. Swingle. A full time southern gal, Polly Osterhaut, tells about freedom in a small Mississippi town and teaching at Stillman College.

15. An entire show devoted to that amazing folk music which is called Sacred Harp Singing -- as you have never heard it before, I am very sure. Made with the cooperation of L. D. Bentley, Jr., of WCRL and H. R. Woodward at the Mulberry Church. (This is one you'll want to air several times!)

16. An entire program with Buford Boone, Publisher of the Tuscaloosa News, his philosophy of editing, why newspapers are different from other business enterprises, and why he is glad that he has sometimes said unpopular things -- including some of the unpopular things he has said.

17. A couple of artists talk about how they add to the joy of life. Earl Kennemer, commonly known as "Little Beaver," encourages people to fish -- and to raise fish for other people's delight. Richard Brough, of University of Alabama faculty, paints pictures for the delight of many and teaches many to paint for their own amazement.

18. How County Agent John Yarborough got his start as a farm boy by raising more peanuts than anybody in the world had ever raised on an acre of ground -- and what it did to him. Polly Oslow on how grim was life in the early days in Tuskegee.

19. Mrs. Mable Cobb, who cried all the time when she was a baby until her mother found somebody very special to bring her up, and Howard Smith, of McQueen-Smith Farms, on why his father decided to give as much attention to raising his children as to raising his horses and of the amazing consequences of this decision in which he was "encouraged" by his wife.

20. On why Frank Jones, Agricultural Extension Agent of Marengo County, has had to be about as much of an industrial as a farm expert and of the strange results in what he thinks is the garden spot of the universe. And there is a man by the name of Ralph Norman who lives in Fort Deposit and who says he never envied anybody -- and who makes you believe it. (He also says we're all Yankees, but I wouldn't want to repeat anything like that!)

21. Miss Elta Majors, recently given national honors as an authority on family life and a leader in child welfare, tells about raising young 'uns in the south -- where everybody ought to have the privilege of being raised. There's a delightful story about a teen aged girl. Mrs. Pete Russell, with Pete's help, explains just why and how the man is always the master of the household -- and she likes it that way -- she says!!

(OVER)

22. Dr. H. L. Staggers, who was for years the only physician in Lowdnes County, lets you look at the heart of a physician as he makes up his mind what to do with his life. Dr. Swingle, the fish man, tells more about how he learned to raise fish by the ton in ponds -- and I'll bet you've eaten some of his cat-fish.

23. What makes life worth living? Well, here are two men who find it very much worth while, and each of them lets us understand a little about why. Jim Matthews has been Lowdnes Co. Agricultural Extension Agent since December 1933, and W. G. Little, who is the mayor of Linden, operates a pharmacy. Oddly enough they have a great deal in common.

24. Mrs. John M. Wilder, WABT, called our attention to the cucumber pickle project among the colored farmers of Macon County which has ~~obviously raised the~~ standard of living of some three hundred families and incidentally benefitted the entire county by many thousands of dollars -- described by Jerry Green, assistant County Agent. ?

25. Buford Boone, Publisher of the Tuscaloosa News, has some interesting words about progress and thinking positively. Earl "Little Beaver" Kennemer, Wild Life and Game Specialist of Auburn University, has some very wise words to say about "going along with" nature instead of fighting nature - it's about the balance of nature, which is a fascinating subject on which he is a real authority.

26. Dr. Alexander Nunn, sagacious and popular Executive Editor of Progressive Farmer, on how a third prize pig influenced the choice of his life work and how he wrote his way through college -- well, part way, anyhow. Polly Ousterhout, the Mississippi girl who has been teaching at Stillman College while her husband taught at U. of Alabama, tells about a classic spanking, and explains her present attitude toward corporal punishment.

27. Principal E. W. Wadsworth of Tuskegee Public Schools -- an authority on Alabama Indians -- about finding his first Indian arrow head -- and about an old time Philadelphian, William Bartram, who travelled in Alabama a long time ago when nearly everybody here was an Indian. Aunt Delia Hyatt, who lives high on Chandler Mountain not far from Oneonta, and whose people came to settle not too long after William Bartram -- about what it was like in the early days.

28. Will Martin, of not far from Oneonta, about spending five days a week hauling hardware supplies and other things with two and four mule teams in the days when an empty wagon could get stuck in the mud -- but it's better now. John Yarborough, County Agent, about carefully planned industrial development in Marion County, and how the farm people (and everybody else) benefit by it.

29. Dr. Earl Beck of Tuscaloosa, the real world authority on songs and stories of the Michigan loggers, about the devious road over which a man travels when he wants to have a thorough understanding of the English Language. Mrs. Richard Brough, well known artist married to another well known artist, about what it feels like to be an artist and what are the rewards of putting your thoughts and dreams on canvas.

30. Fred Robertson, Director of Cooperative Extension, with more of the fascinating story of his early life in Tennessee and the devious processes of education for a farm boy. Jack MacDonald, who makes friends for the Gas Company in Marion County, about what he likes best about Alabama.

31. Alexander Nunn (again) of Progressive Farmer, about the origin of the idea of picking a "Rural Minister of the Year" for each Dixie State, and why PF was interested in the first place. Faban Clark, "Rural Minister of the Year" for Mississippi, and some of the reasons why; the fascinating story of his own interpretation of the meaning of religion for rural (and other) people.

32. Polly Ousterhout, that charming Dixiegal, tells the romantic story of meeting him on the "Queen Mary" -- and of getting married in Switzerland all of two weeks later. It will warm your heart! John Yarborough (again) about improving the farm income in Marion County right while the industrial income for farm people is also improving vastly. It's one of the very important and wonderful things going on here!

33. Richard Brough (husband of the artist Mrs. Brough) who teaches art at U of A. on campus and in Birmingham and Huntsville (as he told us some weeks ago) talks excitingly about what it means to be an artist and what is an artist, anyhow. This is definitely for people who don't know anything about art. Will Martin (again) -- his exciting experience when the famous bandit roamed the woods entirely too close to his home town (he was ten at the time)-- but he had to drive the team and wagon home all by himself!

34. Frank Jones, Marengo County Agent, on why his county is the most wonderful place in the world -- and what a pity it is we don't always realize what we've got -- and we sure have got plenty here! Principal E. W. Wadsworth of Tuskegee (again) and how the Tuckabatchies followed the magic stick down from the Great Lakes -- and why -- and the shameful things that happened to them afterward -- an unhappy page of history from which brave and conscientious men will not turn their eyes forever away.

35. Ralph Norman, Sr., of Fort Deposit -- the man who never envied anybody (remember?) - about the fun of watching while things improve in your home town and knowing that you helped a little with the improvement. Aunt Delia Hyatt (again) and more of the fascinating story of what it used to be like on Chandler Mountain, with a life so rich with excitement there didn't seem to be any point in gadding about to anywhere else.

36. Cecil Miller, popular assistant County Agent in Marengo County, about what it was like growing up on an Alabama farm and how glad he is that peanuts aren't selling now for $20 a ton. It was a good life! Dr. H. S. Swingle and more about the interesting process by which he and his helpers have learned to raise catfish by the ton where once they could raise only pounds -- and about the advantages of developing good strains of catfish -- like Herefords and Jerseys!

SOME OF THE NUMBERS OF "A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE"
37 - 48

37. The Yankee visits the scene of the Battle of Horseshoe Bend and the new National Park being constructed there and we hear Mr. Thomas Martin, Chairman of the Alabama Power Company, explaining his own and his company's interest in the creation of that park by act of Congress. And Dean Truman Pierce, of the School of Education of Auburn University, who has been conducting an amazing study of the real value of the Alabama school system as it stands today, tells about his own early life and education -- and some of the teachers who influenced him.

38. Dr. Pierce explains how the children of any county can each add $800 per year to the income of the people of the county by taking better advantage of the Alabama schools as they are today -- and something of how they can be still better tomorrow. It's a story to fill every Dixie heart with pride in the present and joy for the future.

39. Mrs. Jake Gurley talks about how she and her family got into the cave business before she had ever even seen a cave -- and she'd do it again, too! And if you've never seen the incredible Cathedral Caverns at least you ought to hear how they affect other people. And on the way we run into the scene of the annual Kennemer Family swarming, and have David C. Kennemer, of Scottsboro, to tell us what happens there every last Saturday in August, and how it all started.

40. About how beautiful it is in Alabama in the fall and of the trouble this fact made for the Yankee. Dr. Frank A. Rose, President of the University of Alabama, explains how he made his way into high school working after hours in a grocery and through college selling shoes -- and learned about people. And J. Roy Hunt, of Florence, explains about lions and how to deal with them at arms length -- out of his own unique experience -- and I know you've seen some of his pictures.

41. Scottsboro -- on a First Monday: The sounds, the sights, the dogs and the people, conversation and excitement at a monthly festival that has no counterpart anywhere. Thomas W. Martin (again), Chairman of the Alabama Power Company, tells about before there was any Alabama Power Company, and what some of the early problems were -- and he knows. He was there!

42. About how the Yankee just happened to reach Dr. Pierce and Dr. Saunders, who are doing such a remarkable study of the present values and possible developments in public school education in Alabama. And Dr. Saunders explains a very significant shift in the thought processes of at least some educators who are determined to trust the good common sense of people and stand by the consequences. It's a story that will give you thrills. And more thrills will follow when you hear Barrett Sheldon, Editor of the Decatur Daily, tell about what TVA has done and how. These two men have in common a deep faith in democracy.

43. About the dumbness of Pennsylvania cardinals. Harry Campbell of Sand Mountain explains about how his business got started and the changes in agriculture and the importance of Sand Mountain. Cooper Green, Executive V-P of Alabama Power, tells about the early life of a boy who milked thirty cows of a morning -- and why so many farm people are such important leaders in the nation.

44. Jeff Bennett, Administrative V-P of Alabama University, explains what is an administrative vice-president and how he got his start toward being a lawyer before he began to teach. Hank Harris, of Hartzelle, who once confidently expected to replace Tom Mix when sound came to movies, tells about the fascinating life of a wanderer upon the face of the earth - who is now happy to have settled down in Alabama.

45. Jake Gurley, of Cathedral Caverns near Scottsboro, has a word or six about the majesty of his Cathedral Caverns which you can properly understand only if you see them for yourself. Dr. Robert Saunders (again) explains -- in terms of humans -- what Roy Hunt meant about you being afraid of the lion in his cage and he being afraid of you in yours.

46. The Alabama Power Company gets organized and Thomas Martin joins up, at the request of James Mitchell. They start getting ready for new things -- and are still at it. Jesse Culp, popular Farm Service broadcaster of Albertville, tells more about what Sand Mountain is really like -- and why!

47. President Rose (again) explains he considers his present work is a continuance of his work as a Christian minister. The University is not a prison. What does a president have to do? S. R. Mapes, of Tuscumbia, gets going on his trip (as a nine year old boy) by horse and buggy from Michigan to Alabama. He didn't stay so long -- but he came back!

48. Borden Deal, one of the really successful writers of the country, sings a folk song of his own construction, "The Writers' Talking Blues." Louis Eckl, Editor of the Florence papers, explains his philosophy of the newspaper business. It isn't easy. It isn't always fun. But the people who do it are really dedicated to their jobs.

SOME OF THE NUMBERS OF "A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE"
49 - 60

49. The Yankee gets to Dothan but comes up with a very sore foot and a number of miscellaneous troubles which send him hot-footing home into even more troubles -- and worse ones -- about which we shall hear next week. And Dr. Truman Pierce, Dean of the School of Education of Auburn University, discusses the idea that Alabama is a rich state -- and how to be even richer.

50. Jim Matthews, Lowdnes County Agricultural Agent, tells about how difficult times have come and of how men of courage have undertaken to meet new challenges. Sherman Livings explains a program for meeting similar problems of unemployment in the little city of Evergreen. Oh yes! The Yankee does get home, but isn't too happy even after he does so.

51. Aunt Plumy Hiatt tells about the rugged courage of great old John Hiatt of Chandler Mountain. And Dr. Cranford H. Burns, Superintendent of Schools, Mobile, tells about a boy who was a "drop-out" and how, with the encouragement of a devoted teacher, he really made the grade. (I know there's background noise with Dr. Burns, but I think his stuff is so good I hope you can endure it. My new recorder (a "UHER") surprisingly picked it right out of the air.)

52. This - by request - is a repeat of #5, which is all about our theme, "Greensleeves," with bits of several arrangements. We celebrate proudly the completion of our first full year of broadcasting this program in Alabama -- more than fifty times each week! Thank you!!!

53. We start our second year. Dr. Earl C. Beck, world authority on folk lore and music, tells another hilarious lumberjack story and explains how "Home on the Range" came to be written and became popular. (First man recorded for "Yankee.")

54. We continue celebrating by talking with the people with whom the show began a year ago, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Traylor of Sardis, who explain their way of life in fascinating fashion. -?

55. The story of the man who wanted to leave a million dollars to a university and changed his mind. Some more conversation with Sherman Livings, of Evergreen, who really believes in people -- especially young people -- and about why several girls decided to be nurses -- which always puzzles the Yankee.

56. A quote from the new superintendent of schools of New York and more conversation with an Alabamian who believes in education and in people, Editor Louis Eckl of the Florence Times, in which he touches carefully on a difficult subject along with a couple of the more hilarious incidents in the long and useful life of a country doctor, Dr. Isbell of Albertville. ?

(OVER)

57. Letters from nice people like Tillman Spear, La Pine, Mahlon Stead, Greenville, and W. A. Nelson, Prattville (with a piece of poetry!). Guy Kelley, Superintendent of Education in Evergreen for Conecuh County, tells about elections and county superintendents -- and some of the financial problems of schools.

58. The Yankee talks about really liking Alabama and about all of us being, so to speak, in the same family, where we can be proud of one another. And one of the great builders of modern civilization in Alabama, Thomas Martin of the Alabama Power Company, tells about some of the difficulties, in an international arena, of getting going with power in the state. It's an exciting and dramatic story of real heroism and hard work!

59. Dr. Nathaniel Welsh, of Auburn, talks about his personal ambition to help his native state and the way he is working it out. Dr. Crawford Burns, Superintendent of Schools in Mobile, talks about going to New York to complete his professional education with no other thought in mind but to return to Alabama to teach. This is a kind of loyalty to the state that can't be measured in cash values. It's the basic reason why there are so many fine schools in the state.

60. While Alabama moves from country to city it's best not to think too little of the farming business and the farmers, as Fred Rue, County Agent at Brewton for Escambia County, makes clear. Fred's father warned him against farming. State Agricultural Extension Director Fred Robertson grew up on a farm, too.

SOME OF THE NUMBERS OF "A YANKEE IN THE HEART OF DIXIE."
61 - 72

61. About jet flight from Nether Providence in Pennsylvania to Birmingham and an exciting conversation with Mr. Thomas Martin (who has been called by a great many people, "Mr. Alabama, himself) continuing the inside story of the organization and beginnings of the Alabama Power Company - with some side thoughts on destiny. Again we meet Dr. A. L. Isbell, of Albertville, who delivered most of the senior class.

62. Some remarks about what a fine school system Alabama has, with corroborating remarks by Dr. Robert L. Saunders, of the School of Education of Auburn University, who explains more about the amazing results of the study he's been making of education in Dixie and how the whole county makes money when kids stay in school. Hank Harris, of Hartzelle, tells about riding the bull - and sounds like just the man who could do it!

63. About how the Yankee got to be a newspaper man - when he was young - but enough to recognize the real thing - like Barrett Shelton of the Decatur Daily, who has, following the example of his father, had a great deal to do with the amazing development of his home town. And we meet again Mrs. Jake Gurley of Cathedral Caverns who, with her husband, has had everything to do with the development of that unequaled wonder of nature. And how people don't like to go into a cavern on a cloudy day.

64. How Alabama is the center of the world for so many people and Bragbit Kumar Sehgal came here to study, and that he doesn't think the British did anything at all for India - which is probably about what John Adams would have said for this country a couple of centuries ago. And Byron Nelson, one of the finest school superintendents anywhere, describes one of the very bright spots in Alabama Education with understandable pride.

65. About how much girls need to know about keeping house before they set sail upon the sea of matrimony, and a man who has helped hundreds of them start (The Rev. Dr. John Evans, Auburn Presb.) describes some of the problems of the young in setting up a life of their own - sometimes against parental opposition. Mrs. Albert Thomas, of Auburn, tells about schools in the old days and of how much they have been improving.

66. The Yankee finds a pancake palace in Montgomery - complete with jams and jellies from Portland, Oregon. President Frank Rose of the University of Alabama tells about what it takes to keep a university president busy - and incidentally makes it easier to understand why he is so rapidly becoming recognized as one of the really great educational leaders of the entire nation.

67. The Yankee is entranced by the possibilities of "Fun on Idle Acres" as set forth by his friend "Little Beaver." He is fascinated further by the story of the great snake (twenty feet long, yet - and "if that man said he saw it, he saw it." He's that kind of a man). Louis Eckl, of the Florence News, with a clear eye on the world of which Florence is such an important part, speaks some wise words about how to cope with the ever-present threat of Communism.

68. About the man who wanted to be kind to his wife - and his reward! Dr. Earl C. Beck, of Stillman College, Tuscaloosa, about why he came to Alabama from being practically on top of the heap in the State of Michigan - and that he's glad he did, and why. And Jesse Culp, editor and one of the most popular broadcasters in Alabama, tells me that Alabama is the world's first source of queen bees - and a lot of other fascinating things about Sand Mountain.

69. More about what the hopeful young bride should be able to do before her hopes are realized - and it's a good thing, too!! And Henry Anschutz, a former neighbor of the Yankee in Philadelphia, tells how to become a respected and welcome citizen of Dixie. Thomas Martin, though recently suffering a spell of poor health, continues the fascinating story of the beginnings of the Alabama Power Company, and faces the question of whether it was Providence or accident.

70. The Yankee meets his old friend, Bishop T. Otto Nall, who is soon coming to Alabama. And our friend Byron Nelson of Tallassee gives something of his philosophy of education - or of life, which in his thinking are inextricably confused. He doesn't want you in Tallassee if you'd rather be someplace else. And Hank Harris of Hartzelle continues the fascinating story of his career as Hollywood stunt man and general fun maker.

71. The Yankee reads a poem he likes and turns again to the Rev. Dr. John Evans for some wise words on a basic problem - with which he has been called upon to deal in a realistic way. Cooper Green, Executive Vice-President of the Alabama Power Company, in charge of industrial development, tells about the swiftly moving changes in the life of the people of Alabama - with hope for a wonderful future.

72. Some jokes from Progressive Farmer the Yankee thinks he read on its pages many years ago. But to be serious Dr. Robert Saunders explains why it is so important for the educator to know what the man on the farm and in the mill wants to do in education - which the Yankee feels is a real switch! And Babs and Borden Deal, the very famous writers, let the Yankee in on some of the secrets of the trade and the wonders of Dixie.

Dear Garry:

I will be delighted to see that Dr. Teikmanis receives 75 copies each of our literature list and of our two-page statement on "The Southern Regional Council - Its Origins and Aims." Unfortunately, we don't have a formal brochure describing our work at the moment, but we are hoping to prepare one within the near future. The copies of the two publications should reach Dr. Teikmanis well in advance of your upcoming conference in Florida.

Incidentally, if you get a chance either going to or from the conference, I hope you'll make a stop-over in Atlanta. It would be mighty nice to see you again. And, if the weather is not as balmy as that of Winter Park, neither is it as blizzardy as that branch office of the North Pole you now have the misfortune of living in.

We appreciate your concern in having people attending the Institute getting to know something about us, and we'll be happy to do anything else we can to insure the success of the meeting.

Best regards.

Dear Staige:

We are involved in an institute in Florida, February 11-13, 1963 (see enclosed brochure). I am wondering if the Council can send the following to Dr. Arthur L. Teikmanis, First Congregational Church, 225 Interlachen Avenue South, Winter Park, Florida:

75 copies of your literature list (To be sent)
75 copies of a brochure describing the work of the Southern Regional Council — sent 1/9/62 - BCC

I am concerned that the persons attending the Institute know of the resources available from the Council.

With best wishes for a New Year of hope and fulfillment.

Sincerely,

Garry

Dear Miss Buchanan:

Your letter concerning voting tests in the South poses some very interesting questions, and I am forwarding, by separate attachment, some materials which I think will be helpful in answering them and/or explaining the peculiar and sometimes perverse procedures of white registrars in the Deep South. I think the point to be emphasized is this: that while these tests do apply to all citizens, the way in which they are applied can very much depend on a citizen's color.

Besires the materials I'm sending you, I would like to refer you to Volume 1 of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission's 1961 Report. That volume is titled Voting, and it goes into considerable detail about the voting practices and procedures of southern states and the methods used by white registrars to keep Negroes off the ballot. I would also refer you to a book (which grew out of a series of 1961 New Yorker pieces) called Gomillion Versus Lightfoot. It deals not only with voting tests but also with racial gerrymandering, and should be very illuminating to you. Finally, I suggest you check the Congressional Record for Monday, February 4, 1963 (Vol. 109, No. 17), pages 1601-1604. Under the heading, "Safeguarding the Right to Vote," you will find both a new bill introduced by Senators Dodd and Cooper as well as an explanation of the bill. It, too, concerns voting privileges and the ways in which they are denied. I trust these references will answer your questions, but please let me know if we can be of further help.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Whitaker:

It is rather difficult for one to supply hard-and-fast answers to the "Professional and Cultural Leadership Losses" of the South which are incurred every year as a result of segregation. Certainly, it should be fairly obvious by now to anyone with eyes to see and ears to listen that by holding the Negro back, the South only succeeds in holding all its people back, only succeeds in losing so much over so little.

At any rate, I am enclosing a selection of materials which, in one way or another, I think are pertinent to the topic of your panel. I hope they will be helpful to you, and I also hope you'll feel free to call upon us for any further assistance you may require.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Blackford:

First let me thank you for sending us the copies of the Voters Literacy Test used in some of the southern states. I have a question or two and feel sure that you could help to clarify some things for me.

Frankly when members of our staff got to looking at these sample tests more closely we decided that they really didn't support the statement that "special tests are being used in these states to present a special restriction to the Negro voter". I'm assuming at this point, for instance that these sample tests you sent us from Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and South Carolina are ones which are given to all individuals of voting age regardless of race, color or creed. Is that right?

Also what about this practice of a "special voters quiz" which I have understood has existed for years in some states, used as a discrimnatory request directed to Negroes?

In raising this question let me add I realize that the educational, reading, writing and comprehension level of the registrant will determine the persons ability to even copy, read and answer such general questions as those on the Mississippi constitution. But, I'd really like help in clarifying with more specific data if you have it so that we can be more assured that we are explaining the situation as it exists actually.

My real concern at this point is that we just might "do more harm than good" if we were to send these tests out generally in response to our suggestion that to use a "voters quiz" in a church school class might help people to become identified with the problem faced by some Negro voters. For instance some people whose experience in the intricate ways in which discrimination can manifest itself, others not too interested in the problem anyway, but perhaps curious, might react to these tests with "Well, anybody should be able to answer these questions." I hope I've made my problem clear. I'll enclose a copy of the newsletter article we wrote and apparently there is some interest in the problem because we have had come in right after the mailing of the issue, about a dozen requests from eleven states,north and south. The thing we did in response was simply to write explaining that we had had some difficulty in gathering material in time to send it for Race Relations Sunday use and sent them a copy of Progressive Magazine's special issue on the Emancipation Proclamation.

Thank you very much any help you can give us to allow us to be more effective in a matter we consider of vital importance.

Dear Sir:

The Board of Christian Social Concerns of the South Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church is sponsoring a Consultation on Conservation on April 16-17, 1963. Subjects to be considered will embrace the conservation of both natural and human resources, with particular reference to South Carolina.

I have been asked to moderate a panel on "Professional and Cultural Leadership Losses." Inasmuch as the conference will be inter-racial, it will be necessary for us to consider losses from among our Negro citizens. It would be most helpful if the picture in South Carolina could be seen against background of losses from throughout the South.

If you have information which you feel might be helpful to us, I should appreciate your sharing of it with us.

My dear Rabbi Padoll:

Please forgive our long delay in replying to your letter of December 20th. In part, this delay was caused by our unusually heavy workload in recent weeks. More important, however, we have been hoping some way might be found for SRC to undertake the survey proposed in your letter. But we now find that we are confronted by the twin problems of too many commitments and too few SRC staffers to take on any more.

We are very sorry, of course, that we, ourselves, cannot conduct a survey in Charleston. But I would like to suggest that it might be possible for a group of interested citizens in your city to undertake such a survey themselves. It has been done by similar groups in similar southern cities. Moreover, we feel that a local group familiar with local people, problems and prejudices could get the kind of information you need (e.g., employment, salaries, housing, etc.) just as well -- if not better -- than a group of outside professionals.

Finally, I would like to say that our new field director, Mr. Paul Anthony, is very interested in the work you are trying to do in Charleston. He will be happy to offer whatever assistance and advice he can, and you might want to write him about arranging a meeting together.

Once again, I apologize for our long overdue reply to your good letter and regret that we cannot be of greater assistance.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

Perhaps this letter should, more properly, be addressed to Mrs. Spearman or Mr. Rilling -- and yet, if necessary, I am certain that you will turn the matter over to them or others.

I wrote to you about a year ago regarding our attempts in Charleston to organize a bi-racial committee to discuss common problems in our community. We failed, in March of this year, to receive endorsement by the city government for our work and, as a result, the Negro community began an economic boycott shortly thereafter.

We have now reached a point, however, of feeling that as interested citizens of Charleston we might be able to ease the tensions about us by open discussion and suggestion. Our goals stretch out in many directions (perhaps too many) but there is an enthusiasm and determination in the group to do whatever we can.

We realize now, as we did at the outset of our attempts, that our hands are tied in many respects. We do not know the nature of the Negro community about which we often speak and for which we try to act. We need much more vital information on skills, employment, salaries, education, housing, dependence on public transportation, private telephones, etc, For such information we require the services of professional people.

Our request, therefore, is for the SRC to undertake such a survey in our community. I have been authroized to ask you what would be required of us toward this purpose and whether or not you are in any position to meet our needs.

I look forward to hearing from you in the near future and extend my very best wishes for a joyous holiday season.

Sincerely,

Burton L. Padoll

Dear Mr. Blackford:

Thank you so much for having written in detail to answer the questions we presented in our recent letter to you around the sample "voter's literacy tests" you had sent us earlier.

I would heartily agree that certainly the point of emphasis regarding these is to make clear: that a discriminating practice can be used with these tests - based on color - when and if a local registrar wishes to deny or make difficult registration and voting privilege of a particular person. There's plenty of recorded and printed case record evidence that this happens - although the printed text of the test alone doesn't give the record of what's actually happening.

Some of the materials you refer to that give supporting references we do have access to in our library here, and it is quite helpful to have you call attention to them specifically in this way.

The other materials you sent arrived this week and we appreciated having the pamphlet by Margaret Price, "The Negro and the Ballot in the South". We had only one in our reference files here and a minister in California had written particularly wanting additional information this pamphlet could provide.

I'm turning our correspondence to Mr. Ian McCrae who has now joined our staff as our National Director of Race Relations, working also in the field of Civil Liberties and Civil Rights.

Thank you again for the resources you provide us whenever we come to you with a question.

Last week the New York Times carried a story about possible appointment of a Negro U. S. Attorney in Alabama. The story also mentioned other southern states in which there are now Negroes serving as U. S. Attorneys. One of these states, according to the Times is Florida. Our files show no record of a Negro U. S. Attorney being appointed in Florida. Could you please let me know if Florida does have a Negro U. S. Attorney, or is the Times story inaccurate.

I am so delighted to know, from Bishop Marmion, that you are to be one of our keynote speakers at our conference in Atlanta, November 7th to 9th. I know that there is a possibility that you may be away, but as the Bishop says, while we of course, would hope that you could have a vacation abroad, we hope it will not conflict with our conference.

At the Bishop's request, I am sending you a copy of the Minutes of our Planning Meeting, held last March. We asked the people who attended, because of their concern in the field of social relations. They were either related directly to a social agency through board or staff connections or were concerned through their work in a department of Christian Social Relations, or the Episcopal Churchwomen in their particular dioceses. It is an integrated group and every person that we invited accepted. The only three people who did not come were prevented by flying conditions or ill health. I am also attaching a copy of a memorandum we have sent to our Church-related agencies in the South and will send "For your information", all our communications on the subject.

Re: FALL REGIONAL CONFERENCE of CHURCH RELATED AGENCIES

Dates: Thursday noon, November 7 to Saturday noon, November 9, 1963

Place: Atlanta, Georgia

Theme: Christian Goals of Church-Related Institutions and Agencies.

Chairman: The Rt. Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, Bishop of Kentucky

PLEASE PUT THESE DATES ON YOUR CALENDAR

A planning committee of clergy and laity from the Southern dioceses has planned a conference to consider the question of Church-relatedness as it affects standards of services, staff employment practices, admission policies, and financing, as well as diocesan and community inter-relationships.

We would appreciate knowing if you can come, and if so, your suggestions as to subjects you would like to have discussed, would be most welcome.

More program information will follow.

M I N U T E S

Planning Committee for Fall Regional Conference of Church Related Agencies

March 5-6, 1963 Atlanta, Georgia

Chairman - The Rt. Rev. Gresham Marmion, D.D., Bishop of Kentucky

Present: Mr. Dexter Bates; Mr. Robert Burrowes; Mrs. John E. Dixon; Mr. O. T. Faison; Miss Katherine Guice; Walter Moore Hart, M.D.; The Rev. Robert McCloskey; Mr. James O. Moore; Miss Sue Spencer; Mrs. Robert Titzl; Mr. L. A. Voigt.
Also: Miss Flora M. Davidson; the Rev. Gregory D. M. Maletta; Mrs. Charles S. Monroe, and the Rev. Cornelius Tarplee of the Department of Christian Social Relations staff.

Absent: Mr. C. C. Melvin; the Rev. Samuel D. Rudder, and Mrs. R. C. Smith.

Bishop Marmion opened the meeting with prayer. He then reviewed the agenda for the planning meeting and asked Mrs. Monroe to speak on the background that led to the idea of a Fall conference. Mrs. Monroe commented that the Division of Health and Welfare Services was interested in holding conferences for groups of agencies and was now suggesting that a Fall conference be held on a regional basis to include homes for the aged, hospitals, child care and family services, settlement houses, and chaplaincy services. Current changes in the social scene marked by the changing role of the family, uprooted people, juvenile delinquency, desegregation, etc., made new demands on Church agencies and institutions. Agencies in re-evaluating their roles, might well look beyond their traditional or parochial setting. The conference would want to examine all aspects of Church-relatedness in the context of present day situations. With these points in mind, the present committee was formed representing agency, board and staff, Diocesan Departments of Christian Social Relations, Episcopal Church Women, and the field of social welfare.

The Bishop then asked the committee members to introduce themselves and with these points in mind, to describe briefly the program of their agencies, or dioceses.

Mr. Dexter Bates, Manager, William Crane Gray Inn for Older People, Davenport, Florida, described his program as having 65 percent indigent residents, and therefore, needed rather large subsidies from endowment income and Diocesan giving. Also assisting in the program, but not to the degree as in the one above, were vendor payments. Also were sizable gifts from parishes and missions to a Living Endowment Fund. Mr. Bates suggested that his institution was definitely "Church-related". However, the institution had no relationship to the Diocesan Christian Social Relations Department.

Mr. Robert Burrowes, Executive Director of Boys' Home, Covington, Virginia, related that oftimes the Diocesan agency was owned but not really supported by the Church. He related that a boarding institution should not take the client away from the community in which the institution is situated; that there should be thorough integration, where possible, into community life. The suggestion here was that the institution "was successfully adjusting boys socially". Mr. Burrowes suggested necessity of skilled services, in this case supplied by consultants brought in when necessity arose. He likewise depended upon outside agencies doing the intake casework. He further suggested that the skilled services could be supplied from the outside if within the institution there was an interpretive resident staff worker with bona-fide professional skills. Because the institution is owned but not supported by the Church, much of the money-making role calls upon staff and board time.

Mrs. John E. Dixon, Episcopal Churchwomen of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, related the example of an old line Negro orphanage program that oftimes was begun as a Church service and ended up after a period of years as a Church service in name only, perhaps with a venerable picture of a founding bishop on the wall of the institution. Where local services, or new services are begun, parochial support of these services are not firmed up. She cited examples of two or three local parishes going together to give support to local services that no one parish could afford or maintain. She felt that well-planned and Diocesan-oriented chaplaincy services can be effective.

Mr. O. T. Faison, Superintendent, Good Shepherd Hospital, New Bern, North Carolina, suggested that it was impossible for many Diocesan institutions to see the "Church-relatedness" of the Diocesan program in relationship to a local agency program. This affects local services, he said: "We do not know where we stand" - "We need the Church to determine policy" and "regular chaplaincy services should be provided--a volunteer chaplaincy system does not work".

Miss Katharine Guice, former staff member of Christian Social Relations and the General Division of Women's Work, stated that her Diocese had no agencies but she pointed out that the problem of "Church-relatedness" had come up again and again in the discussion so far. She also reported that many minimal and small services came and went within the life of the Church without the Church really knowing about it. She raised the question of whether the Church could really face up to the cost of services compared with state services.

Walter Moore Hart, M.D., President of the Board of Directors of Church Home for Children, York, South Carolina, represented an old line agency that also was planning to change. Question: "Who instigated the Survey?" Evidence was offered that the Church agency finds difficulty in following good casework practice; that children from broken homes are "disturbed" children. Dr. Hart emphasized that "Diocesan control" should be different than "Episcopalian control". Dr. Hart suggested that staffing of Church institutions has tended to involve unskilled primary staff members, or clergy staff that have divided interest with a local parish. They have a large endowment and their superintendent is now attending a school of social work.

The Rev. Robert J. McCloskey, Chairman of the Department of Christian Social Relations, Diocese of South Florida, described the Diocesan ministry to migrants and the establishment of a new Diocesan service to Cubans which included foster home placements.

Mr. James O. Moore, board member of Thompson Orphanage & Training Institution, Charlotte, North Carolina, described the re-evaluation of an old line service of a Diocesan nature involves a great deal of work, frustration, and insight. A regional institution supported by three dioceses, meant that board planning was fragmentary. Therefore, he suggested that Diocesan support on the one hand could be invaluable, and on the other hand, could be a hindrance. The fact that the institution was undergoing change, was going through the process of re-evaluation, and looks forward to future relevance, would indicate that a Church agency can change to meet changing patterns.

Miss Sue Spencer, Director, School of Social Work, University of Tennessee, stated two basic questions that should be considered: First - "How can we bring about the betterment of Church services?" and, "What is the real role of the Church in formulating and sustaining services to persons in the community?"

Mrs. Robert Titzl, member, Department of Christian Social Relations; staff member of Health and Welfare Council, Louisville, Kentucky, on reviewing Diocesan agencies, said that many old line Church agencies had been initiated to serve "Churchmen"; that traditional charters had not been amended; that many of these agencies were Church-related in that "Episcopalians" were members of the board. She felt the need for Diocesan-relatedness to assist local agencies in getting an overview; a Diocesan relationship extends the concern of a particular service.

Mr. L. A. Voigt, Executive Director, St. Martin's-in-the-Pines, Birmingham, Alabama, described how local parishes and missions in a diocese with a relatively unorganized Christian Social Relations program, established and maintains St. Martin's (skilled nursing care). He stated that maintaining such a service made it imperative that state subsidy, outside professional casework, and constant subsidy through special gifts, were necessary to maintain such services. The establishment of such services uncovered other unmet needs that the agency and board could not handle, such as the problems of the confused and disturbed client. It was inferred that these unmet needs might be dealt with if the agency had larger "roots" than a minimal number of parishes and missions in a given county.

The Rt. Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Kentucky, raised the following questions that he felt to be apropos: The question of incorporating Christian personnel practices in Church-related agencies. The question as to whether social pronouncements of the national Church are recognized by local boards and staff. The question of whether Church agencies really let the wider community know what they are doing. The question as to whether the Church-related agency recognizes itself a part of the total Church's offering. The question of the relationship between the agency and the Department of Christian Social Relations is healthy. The question of personal motivation of agency board members: are they fulfilling this role as part of their Christian vocation and conviction, or for other reasons. What effect does "Church-relatedness" of an agency have on people who work there; if there is racial discrimination, how is it being worked through?

Bishop Marmion then asked for comments from Mr. Tarplee and Mr. Maletta.

The Rev. Cornelius Tarplee, Division of Christian Citizenship, agreed with the importance of the questions Bishop Marmion stated, and added others. "What is the motivation in terms of the formation of a particular service"? "What is being done to keep a service flexible"? "What is being done with services that were started for a particular need when the need changes"?

The Rev. Gregory D. M. Maletta, Division of Health and Welfare Services, raised these questions: "Should the Church be in social work? If so, why"? "Can the Church do good social work"? "Should the Church be institutionally oriented"? "What is the Church's mission to the total person and community"?

Discussion of proposed conference followed:

Dates: First choice - November 7-8-9 (N.B. This date confirmed).
Second choice - October 24-26
Third choice - October 17-19

To start 1:00 p.m. Thursday through Saturday noon.

Place: Atlanta, Georgia. The Peachtree Manor to be considered for accommodations. (Check with St. Luke's and All Saints' Parishes asking for the use of their parish houses for meetings.

Conference Chairman: Bishop Marmion accepted the unanimous request of the group to be Chairman.

Purpose and Theme: After full discussion, it was decided that the Theme of the Conference would be "Christian Goals of Church-Related Institutions and Agencies. The purpose of the conference will be to discover the role and responsibility of these agencies; relationship to the Church, and to the whole field of social welfare.

Attendance: The committee agreed that attendance from institutions and agencies be unlimited, but that at least one, but preferably two, board members and one staff be urged to come. It was hoped that the bishops of the area would be interested in coming to the conference and they are to be invited by the national Department of Christian Social Relations. Christian Social Relations Chairmen and Episcopal social workers working in secular agencies would also be invited. For the latter, it was suggested that Departments of Christian Social Relations and Church-related agencies would know the names to suggest. At least one such person from each diocese should be invited. Their value to the conference was emphasized.

In the discussion it was brought out that the Church has a responsibility to individuals who are working in the field of social welfare and the nature of that responsibility needs to be explored.

The remainder of the time was spent in planning the general program of the conference.

Thursday afternoon, November 7th - 2:30-4:30 p.m. OPENING SESSION

1. Keynote: Someone to set the tone of the conference by a discussion of the theological implications of the Church's role today in social welfare. Some questions in this area: What is the meaning of Church-relatedness? What has the Church to say regarding Standards and Policies of agencies? What changes have taken place in the concept of Church responsibility for social services?

Speaker: First choice, the Rev. Raymond Ferris, Rector, Christ Church, Nashville, Tennessee, and member of National Council. Other suggestions: Bishop Louttit of South Florida, and Bishop Stuart of Georgia. (Added subsequently by staff, Bishop Carpenter of Alabama.)

2. The Community Profile - its implication for the Church in terms of services. What does the region really look like? What are some of the problems of its people? Examples: the urban slum family; the disinherited worker; juvenile delinquency; displaced older people; rural migrants, and minority groups.

Speakers: Dr. White, Hollins College, Virginia
Dr. L. Killian, Florida State University
Dr. Kenneth Moreland Randolph, Macon College
Added later by staff as #1 choice - Staige Davis Blackford, Research Director, Southern Regional Council

These presentations might be followed by one or two discussants or re-actors.

Dear Mr. Jordan:

On behalf of the United Church of Christ Youth Forum, I want to extend to you a personal word of appreciation for the contribution you made to our recent conference held at Clark College in Atlanta.

We are well aware of the pressures in your own daily schedule and realize that the hour set for the Seminars at Clark interrupted both your office and personal plans. Please know that your assistance was appreciated.

The youth and adults who shared in the Negro Protest Movements seminar spoke enthusiastically for this opportunity.

The entire Youth Forum experience was most enriching and we do want you to know that your help contributed to this meaning.

Most sincerely,

Dear Friends:

I note in your report of June 25th a reference to Charlotte which is inaccurate. I refer particularly to the statement: "A permanent bi-racial committee was formed by the Mayor in May." We have had a Mayor's Committee on Community Relations for over three years. I served as Chairman of the first committee appointed by Mayor Smith in 1960. The present committee under Mayor Brookshire has been active for the past two years.

The desegregation of hotels and motels, and later of theatres and a large number of restaurants, was greatly stimulated by the action of the Chamber of Commerce calling upon all public facilities in the city to desegregate.

The "mass picketing" to which you refer may have had some influence but was not a deciding factor in these considerations.

Sincerely,

J. R. Cunningham

CHURCH ASSEMBLY

Washington, D. C.

August 28, 1963

In cooperation with March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom

The General Board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America on June 7, 1963 formally faced the racial crisis and approved a report which has in it the following statements of conviction:

"The Church of Jesus Christ can make no compromise with discrimination against or segregation of peoples on the basis of race, and still be faithful to her Master. God came to make his dwelling among men in the person of a man. He went to his death and rose again for every man.

"Up to now there always has seemed to be time for gradual change, and modest tokens of progress in racial justice were accepted as the best we could do.

"But now in the providence of God, the issue is being sharply focused in every corner of the nation. Negro citizens, in action groups, and spontaneously, aided by some white fellow citizens, are moving quickly and with great commitment to action that often means suffering, harrassment and sometimes death.

"The basic issue has not changed, but it is becoming more obvious to the nation as a whole. It is one issue which the conscience of America must face as a moral challenge.

"In such a time the Church of Jesus Christ is called upon to put aside every lesser engagement, to confess her sins of omission and delay, and to move forward to witness to her essential belief that every child of God is a brother to every other.

"Words and declarations are no longer useful in this struggle unless accompanied by sacrifice and commitment."

In light of our convictions as Christians, we issue this call to all Protestant and Orthodox Church leaders to assemble in Washington, D.C. on August 28, 1963.

The purposes of this Assembly shall be:

1. To demonstrate our solidarity in support of racial justice implemented through Civil Rights legislation.
2. To witness to the fact that this is a national moral issue and not a regional problem.

Washington Assembly of the Churches In Cooperation with the March On Washington

The Washington March in the summer of 1963 promises to be an historic event. It will dramatize how deeply the conscience of the American people is troubled about racial injustice, and how determined it is to make a monumental effort to end it.

The churches have a stake in this march. The National Council of Churches mandate on religion and race in June called for such an assembly, before the civil rights groups had reached final agreement on the nature of the march. We are pleased to join in sponsoring this massive witness to the nation's most important commitment—racial justice now.

There are many areas where action is needed—the long, slow processes of legislation and community action.

But here is one time when simply by presenting our bodies—on one day—in the capital of the nation—in the company of thousands of our fellow citizens—we may express more eloquently than we can imagine the combined conviction of the nation.

We need thousands of Christians, white and Negro, in Washington on August 28. Put everything else aside and COME.

Robert W. Spike
Executive Director
Commission on Religion and Race
National Council of Churches

Your church can help by:

1. Explaining the purpose of the march and of our church involvement in it.
2. Checking with your local council of churches to see what their plans are and joining with them.
3. Organizing your church representation to come to Washington, D.C.
4. Cooperating with other religious (Catholic-Jewish) and civil rights organizations in your community.
5. Notifying your local press, radio and T.V. of your plans and interpreting the significance of the church relationship to freedom for all people.

6. Planning special prayers at your August 25 church service for the achievement of freedom for all men under God.
7. Asking the governor of your state and your city fathers to proclaim August 28 "Freedom Day."

What is the purpose of the March?

The purpose of the March is, by a massive, peaceful, and democratic demonstration in the nation's capital, to provide evidence of the need for the federal government to take effective and immediate action to deal with the national crisis of civil rights and jobs that all of us, Negro and white, are facing.

Who is sponsoring the March to Washington for Jobs and Freedom?

The official call for the March was issued on July 12 by the following national leaders:

James Farmer, National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality

Rev. Martin Luther King, President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference

John Lewis, Chairman of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee

A. Philip Randolph, President of the Negro American Labor Council

Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

Whitney Young, Executive Director of the National Urban League

Who is invited to participate in the March?

Politically the March is non-partisan; that is, neither funds nor organized participation will be accepted from political parties. We expressly reject the aid or participation of totalitarian or subversive groups of all persuasions. Organizational participation is invited from only the established civil rights organizations, from major religious and fraternal groups, from business, and from labor unions.

The March will focus on:

1. LEGISLATION

Passage by the Congress of effective and meaningful civil rights legislation in the present session, without filibuster.

Immediate desegregation of the nation's schools.

An end to police brutality directed against citizens using their constitutional right of peaceful demonstration.

2. JOB PROBLEMS

A massive federal Public Works Program to provide jobs for all the unemployed, and federal legislation to promote an expanding economy.

A federal Fair Employment Practices Act to bar job discrimination by federal, state, and municipal governments, and by private employers, contractors, employment agencies and trade unions.

Broadening of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act to include the uncovered areas of employment where Negroes and other minorities work at slave wages.

How will the March be organized in Washington?

All persons coming to Washington, whether by bus, train or plane, who are being sent by organizations, must be under the leadership of captains appointed locally before departure. (Private cars create confusion and traffic problems, their use is discouraged.) Captains will be responsible for the group en route and in moving around Washington.

The March will provide its own police to maintain order and internal security among the marchers in Washington. These marshals are specially trained and will be in constant contact with captains and marchers. The Washington police and the U.S. Government have promised full cooperation in controlling traffic, maintaining order, providing comfort and first-aid stations for the marchers.

Marchers from the 50 states and the District of Columbia will be assigned specific assembly points where they are to gather on arrival in Washington. Further information about these assembly points will be provided in due course. All persons are expected to report at the assembly points not later than 10:00 A.M. on August 28.

Meetings will be held at the Assembly points—in most cases they will be churches—for two purposes: (1) To meet with Congressmen and Senators, who will be invited to meet with the delegations at the Assembly points and to report their positions on pending legislation and to answer questions from their constituents. (2) To select representatives who will proceed to Capitol Hill seeing those legislators who do not respond to our invitation to meet with their constituents. These representatives will be accompanied by representatives of the six civil rights organizations sponsoring the March.

What arrangements are there for staying in Washington and for refreshments?

THIS IS A ONE-DAY DEMONSTRATION.

The size and scope of this March make it imperative that all participants come in and go out on the same day—August 28. All organizations are urged to see to it that participants come provided with box lunches and suppers, and especially that groups furnish themselves with ample water. You are strongly advised not to bring children under 14; children over 14 should be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Dear Friends:

I trust that the enclosed material will help you interpret the MARCH ON WASHINGTON and the relationship of the Church to this significant day Christians and others will spend together.

OUR CHURCH ASSEMBLY will be different in many ways. We will not be meeting in our customary church denominational homes. We will not be having the usual formal services.

We will be assigned to our State Assembly Points which will serve as our headquarters and from which we will receive instructions for the day.

At each Assembly Point, there will be other faiths and some of the general public who may never have been Christians or may have given up the Church.

Our presence and witness become more significant as we come into this larger community.

There will be churches (listed later) where those who would like to do so may stop in to pray for all of us and these (churches) we hope will welcome all who wish to pray regardless of faith.

Sincerely yours,

Robert W. Spike

Dear Mr. Blackford:

It is with great regret that I must let you know that the proposed Conference for Atlanta, November 7-9, is being cancelled. This action is on the basis of very thoughtful comments by members of the Planning Committee and a discussion by the whole Christian Social Relations staff.

There were many factors involved such as the costs of attending a conference and other meetings and conferences close to the time. There may be other reasons and in considering conferences in the future, we would hope to do much more groundwork before calling any conference.

We are very grateful to you for agreeing to be one of the keynote speakers and hope that in the future if an opportunity arises, you will be able to help us in a similar way.

Dear Mr. Rooney:

Your letter of last month to me, came by a round-about route, namely, via Chicago. This explains my delay in replying.

I have read over your statement describing a program on "The Spiritual Personality of Emergent Africa." I hardly qualify as an African expert, but on the whole, the statement strikes me as well thought out and well expressed.

I would quibble however, with its last paragraph (see page 5) about the class structure of American Negro Society, at least so far as that society is concerned in the South. The statement says, "Most of the leaders of this society come, naturally, from its upper regions and these are more out of touch with their following than, perhaps, any other popular leaders have been in the history of the modern world." Besides the fact that the last phrase is about as sweeping a generalization as one could make, I simply don't think this statement is true.

Certainly such leaders as Martin Luther King, Jr., Medgar Evers, Robert Moses, James Forman, of SNCC did not come from the "upper regions" (whatever that means). And certainly these leaders are in touch with their following, as the events of 1963 clearly testify.

Ltr., Rev. W. J. Rooney
Washington, D. C.
January 21, 1964

I would therefore, suggest that this paragraph either be completely re-written, or struck from the statement.

If critical, I hope these comments will proove helpful to you.

THE SPIRITUAL PERSONALITY OF EMERGENT AFRICA

The past decade has witnessed the emergence of a free and independent Africa. This emergence raises questions fundamental to the future of the whole world. Among these is the question whether the colored man has a role which goes beyond achieving independence and his rights. As a colored man does he have something to offer the white man in reasserting human values -- and among these religious values? By drawing the white man into genuine involvement with the lives of the colored population of the world, does the colored man have the opportunity of forcing the white people back upon their own white lives, helping them to break the chain of the dialogue of the mind with itself that has characterized white, European and American, civilization for so long?

The white people are a minority in the world; the future is, in the quantitative sense, at least, with the colored race. But may not the future in the qualitative sense, be also looked upon as with them? Should not, or could not the future be characterized by a genuine rapprochement between all that is good in what has been the tradition of the Caucasian world with the values and the new vitality of the rising people of Asia and Africa? But can this be effected by anything less than a rediscovery by Western man of what his tradition has been; and precisely here does not the colored man have a special role of leadership in helping the white man with this rediscovery?

With this in mind, we would like to raise the question of the spiritual personality of emergent Africa. We list below a set of headings, out of discussion of which something like a profile of the spiritual possibilities of Africa might be drawn. What will be the spiritual shape of the world which the emergent nations develop?

There are three principal divisions with similar subdivisions under each:

The African in Africa

The African and the World

The African and American Society

I. THE AFRICAN IN AFRICA

Social and Political

The "tranquility, happiness, spontaneity" of the African and the invasion of technology

The "classlessness" of African society; the position in African society of the African who has been educated abroad

Family life; the African woman: her status and role

The African public servant

"The African Personality"; "Negritude"; the definition, meaning, pragmatic value of these terms

The new nationalism; freedom and responsibility; the tribal factor; socialism; Marxism; a third position between Western capitalism and Marxism

The relation of social and cultural to economic development in Africa

African unity -- political, legal, ethnic, cultural, linguistic; the Federation; Pan-Africanism

Intellectual (Education)

- Is priority to be given to the development of elementary, secondary, or higher education?
- "Africanization" of curricula
- The role of the university in the development of the nation or of the continent
- The university and the formation of young leaders; spiritual and intellectual as well as social and political values
- The need for research and writing on African history, especially pre-colonial

Cultural

- The Arts
  - Art and the religious, moral, social life of the African
  - The merging of two cultures: the African heritage and the colonial period
  - Folk-culture and industrialization; innate artistic gifts and social and economic conditions
  - The phenomenon of the revival of traditional customs, organizations, ceremonies among educated Africans
  - Liturgical art:
    - The merging of Pagan art and Christian art
    - The assimilation of native design and colors in vestments, sacred vessels, etc.
    - Church architecture
    - Church commissions to African artists and architects
    - Ecclesiastical music
    - Social, linguistic, musicological problems of developing African church music
- Literature
  - Themes of African literature
  - The problem of multiple dialects, foreign languages, the vernacular in African literature
  - The responsibility and influence of various publications
  - Journalism; freedom of the press; politics and the press
  - The lack of native African publishing houses

Religious: Christianity

- The Church and society:
  - Christianity and the preservation, or erosion of African culture
  - Inter-relationship of the Church and the national government
  - Spiritual and ethical factors in the concept of social and economic development
- Education:
  - Catholic educational institutions and the government
  - Extent of success of Catholic educational institutions: on the primary, secondary, advanced levels? Are specifically Catholic institutions a mistake or a necessity?
  - The Church and the training of young leaders?

Mission Work:

"For every convert made by Christianity in Africa, Islamism makes three. In addition, Christian Africans often revert to Animism or switch to Islam; a Moslem almost never loses his faith."

Is the African deeply religious by nature; prepared to receive the dogmas of the Church? Has the Church fulfilled the religious yearnings of the African?

The depth of religious instruction of converts in the past. (For example, have they been taught mental prayer as well as ethics?)

Has there been the formation of an African elite? Specialized Catholic Action

Is the African personality a help or an obstacle to Christianization? Is tribalism favorable or unfavorable to Christianization? Mission work and keeping the African sensibility "pure."

The adaptation of African customs, rites, etc., to Christianity. What practical problems does such adaptation raise?

Has there been any conflict between (1) establishment of the Church solidly and (2) aid to the poor, the slaves, etc.

The formation of an African clergy, African religious congregations

The repression of Christianity in the Sudan

II. THE AFRICAN AND THE WORLD

Social and Political

The West:

African concept of "Western values"; Western concept of "African values."

Is Africa refusing "our civilization as a whole while accepting its details"?

Hostility toward advanced nations; aid to Africa on a national basis and strong feelings of anti-colonialism; Pan-Africa as a force against neo-colonialism

Can the West make any contributions to political revolutions in Africa?

The Cold War:

Is Africa a pawn in the cold war?

Western aid and protection against the threat of Communism in Africa; and strong feelings against neo-colonial interference

The emerging African nations as a bloc against the Soviet Union

The United Nations:

The quality of African leadership in the United Nations and the increasing number of African nations represented

The United Nations in Africa; economic aid, intervention in such problems as apartheid

Intellectual (Education)

Adaptation of European and American universities to the African environment

Intellectual (Education) continued

Teacher exchanges; student exchanges

The dissemination of Western publications in Africa; the dissemination of native African publications in the West

Scholarships abroad: in Europe, in the United States, in Russia

Cultural

Art as a means of communication among nations: as a method of shaping the image of Africa in other countries

The "purist" spirit in African art, compared to Western art

Africa's contribution to the world in the arts? Influence on modern art; is the influence waning?

Liturgical art:

Is African sculpture, painting, architecture, closer than Western products to the genuine spirit of religious art?

Do African poets and novelists truly represent their people?

The African personality, negritude, as a theme in Negro literature; the phenomenon of African consciousness in Negro literature

Is African culture a variant of folk-culture in Europe before the industrial revolution and before the spread of Christianity in the West?

Has there been any romanticizing of African culture among Westerns?

Cultural exchanges; seminars

Scholarships abroad for the study of art, architecture, and music (as compared with the number in engineering, medicine, economics, etc.)

Religious: Christianity

Is there an emerging African spirituality that has much to offer Western Christianity? a birth of a new Christian culture; the penetration of religious values in politics, economics, art, family life? ("There is much in Africa that has already been lost in the West through its materialistic outlook." "Civilization does not mean industrialization and culture does not mean constitutional democracy.")

The effects of anti-colonialism on the attitude of Africans toward Christian missionaries. (The Church "neither is nor feels herself to be, an alien institution imposed upon that people from without" -- Mater et Magistra.)

Seminary training -- African missionaries, American and European clergy

Ways of overcoming the scarcity of priests in mission territories (for example, volunteer diocesan priests from the West; lay African deacons)

Lay apostles and specialized missionary work (e.g. medicine, teaching)

What can the mission societies show the developed nations of the West about the changes necessary in pastoral work, liturgy, etc.

III. THE AFRICAN AND AMERICAN SOCIETY

Is the new mood of militancy among the American Negroes a reflection in part of the rise of the African nations. ". . . What the Negro desperately needs is not anything that we can give him. It is something he must take for himself, a pride of race... ." What can "completely restore his amour propre to the American Negroes"? "I heard an uneducated [Negro] woman say: 'Those Africans standing up there in the U.N., they make me proud."

Could the colored in the United States emerge as the leaders in a movement not just for their own rights, but for the rights of all the depressed in the United States, white as well as colored? Thirty-six million white and colored (Professor Myrdal's figures) constitute a new and growing American "underclass," -- "men, women, and children trapped at the bottom" -- "urban and rural slum dwellers, old people living in isolation, the mentally ill -- all of whom are politically inarticulate and therefore politically unrepresented -- share croppers, small farmers, unskilled workers, aging who are thrown out of work by obsolescence, those who fail to qualify for Social Security or other welfare schemes -- the ill-educated, the dependent, the bitter.." In so far as the social salvation of the new American underclass depends on awakening of the American conscience is the instrument for stimulating such an awakening in American society the aroused and militant section of this underclass -- the American Negro?

"The Negro became the most estranged, rejected, and alienated member of the American society... . Deep inside he lived as he could; at the outer gates he pushed and fought and performed prodigies of counter-assertion, pushing out and being pushed back again. This went on and on until only yesterday when, as he pushed with increasing force, the battered and quivering gates in front of him began to collapse, brought down finally by winds that had begun to blow from far away. Outside that gate waited no easy ascent, no goal clearly in view, but a steep cliff separating yesterday from today, a future for which he still had to fight step by step and which now faces him in a blur." Could this blur be focused by the assumption of leadership described above? Would this decrease the racial emphasis? Is the racial emphasis a principal part of the blur?

Has the new Afro-American militancy precipitated a crisis of the liberal conscience -- "the incredible, abysmal and really cowardly obtuseness of white liberals"? Is the failure on the white man's part to recognize his colored brethren as persons a reflection of his general failure to recognize his white fellows as persons? Is the "I/thou" dialogue of a Buber foreign to our white American world?

The reaction to Africa of the American Negro who has travelled there -- "Those of the panel members who had been in Africa and are light discovered (of all sad things) a mild color prejudice against them. And almost all discovered that Western technological civilization had molded them too strongly to accept or be fully accepted by the newly emerging countries of Africa."

The class structure of American Negro society: "Most of the leaders of this society come, naturally, from its upper regions and these are more out of touch with their following than, perhaps, any popular leaders have been in the history of the modern world. They are out of touch because they have accepted the values of white America. They have not only accepted them, but made adroit use of them in furthering their own personal ambitions and the larger aims of their race."

CONTINUATION COMMITTEE
GREENWICH CONFERENCE ON PRESERVING THE DEMOCRATIC PROCESS

October 15, 1964

Dear Friend:

Our conference on September 22nd discussed next steps in the fight against the radical right and urged the Continuation Committee to present specific plans to you. No matter how the November elections turn out, Committee members feel strongly that these extremists will continue to play an aggressive and disturbing role in our society - particularly on the local scene. (Note enclosed New York Times article of Oct. 11, 1964, "Campaign Stirs Bitter Passions.")

It is not enough for us to respond defensively to attacks by the right-wing extremists and to serve as firemen putting out the incendiary blazes. Instead, we must undertake a serious program of fire prevention by educating the nation on the real meaning of these groups. Years ago when the distribution of anti-Semitic and racist literature was disturbingly high, various agencies initiated educational efforts to reduce the nation's receptivity to such canards. A significant measure of success has been achieved in educating a large part of the public to recognize and reject such racist doctrines.

The same methods can be used to educate the general public on extremist doctrines and activities but only if we work in all areas of the nation in a coordinated educational drive to promote the democratic process. At its meeting on October 8th, the Continuation Committee agreed to ask you to send Rev. Dean M. Kelley, National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York 27, New York, lists of your field staff and/or key leaders in the fifty states. When Rev. Kelley receives the lists from you and from the other organizations that participated in the Greenwich Conference, a meeting of the Continuation Committee will be called to assign a person in each area to serve as a convenor to initiate a local coordinating committee for the Preservation of the Democratic Process.

It is also essential and urgent that you notify your field staff and/or key leaders that efforts will be made after the November elections to organize such local coordinating committees in their communities, and to cooperate with these efforts when called upon.

Enclosed are several items which we hope will help you in your activities against the extremists:

1. "What Is Extremism?" Ten Questions and Answers.

2. The W. W. Norton flyer containing Roscoe Drummond's review of the Overstreet book, THE STRANGE TACTICS OF EXTREMISM.

3. The Anti-Defamation League flyer on DANGER ON THE RIGHT, by Benjamin Epstein and Arnold Forster.

4. Reprint of article, "Extremist Book Sales Soar Despite Criticism in G.O.P.," from New York Times of October 4, 1964.

May we particularly call attention to pages 14 and 15 of "What Is Extremism," which indicates specific steps that local leaders can undertake now.

CAMPAIGN STIRS BITTER PASSIONS

Emotionalism Runs High in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois

by Murray Schumach
(Special to The New York Times)

COLUMBUS, Ohio

The Presidential campaign has burned a swath of personal bitterness across Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and some community leaders fear it may persist beyond the election.

Political argument has become so fevered that it is not rare for people to say:

"A vote for Johnson is a vote for the niggers."

"The whole trouble is that they should have shot Roosevelt the day he was born."

"I came here from Boston several years ago and I still feel I'm living in a foreign country."

"My wife and I don't visit her parents because we get into such terrible political arguments."

"A lot of these white folks aren't telling me how they feel about us. And we aren't telling them how we're going to vote. But it isn't going to be for Goldwater."

"In this election we have a choice between a thief and a man who wants to start atomic war. I'll take the thief."

"If you express a difference of opinion you become a social outcast to the other side."

"Why don't you read 'A Choice Not an Echo,' before you talk?"

"They ought to throw that hate literature out of the stores."

Hot Emotional Climate

Knowledgeable residents of these states -- clergymen as well as politicians -- have noticed that each time either candidate appears the emotional climate becomes more heated.

This picture emerged from interviews along the whistle-stop tour made through these three states by Senator Barry Goldwater, the Republican nominee for President. The interviews were conducted after making the train trip with the Senator.

More than 200 persons were questioned for periods ranging from 10 minutes to nearly an hour. They included both parties and avowed independents. They ranged in age from college seniors casting a first vote to a man of 78. Those interviewed include city dwellers, farmers, suburbanites and residents of small towns.

Over and over again men and women noted that social gatherings had become difficult unless politics was banned or unless everyone was of the same political conviction.

Supporters of Mr. Goldwater declared they could not discuss the campaign with the Democrats on a rational basis. Democrats said the Goldwaterites were too rabid for reason. Close relatives as well as friends appear to have declared a moratorium on political discussion until after the election.

In Columbus, Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish clergymen are conferring, planning a campaign that will go into effect immediately after election. The purpose will be to plead with both sides to try to compose their differences.

Fervidness for Goldwater

Other highlights that emerged from the interviews were:

The most fervent partisans are almost all with Mr. Goldwater. The Democratic supporters are voting more from habit or out of fear or antagonism for Mr. Goldwater. Many say they will vote for Mr. Johnson as "the lesser of two evils."

Surface apathy in some areas is just a ruse to avoid discussion and the name-calling that can ensue.

Thousands of Negroes are determined to go to the polls to vote against Mr. Goldwater.

Many white Democrats say they will vote "to keep the nigger in his place."

Social Security has become a more important issue than the possibility of nuclear war.

These cross-currents are barely discernible at first. On the farms, the feed corn waits husking and the winter wheat is soon for the planting.

The high pointed church steeple, the water tower and the granaries are still the guardians of the towns and small cities. Speech is slow and clothing plain. In the cities -- Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo, Indianapolis, Peoria, Moline -- the rush hour traffic to and from factory and office is the same as ever. There is the usual admixture of Southern and Midwestern accents.

Only in conversation immediately after an event as exciting as the appearance of Mr. Goldwater is the depth of political feeling revealed.

College Students Argue

Thus, in Athens, a city that has exhausted its coal mines, its clay pits, a land of marginal farms and poverty, the young people of the University of Ohio gather in dormitories to talk of girls, sports and politics. At one of these dormitories, some 50 seniors, nearly all voters, sat around in chairs, or on the floor, to talk of the election. They were from different parts of the state, generally of varying background. Two were Negro.

Mr. Goldwater's supporters said:

"Johnson is determined to advance the cause of Socialism."

"When the liberals are finished with making this into a utopian state there will be no freedom left for the individual."

"Security has become more important than freedom."

"Johnson is not a fit example of morality, too much afraid of the bomb, peace at any price."

Opponents replied:

"Goldwater has nothing to offer but isolationism."

"Goldwater is a reactionary not a conservative."

"Johnson is a leader who knows how to handle men."

One of the Negroes, who had been silent, remarked:

"You talk about war and honor. Why should I care about fighting a war for a man who is going to keep me down?"

The leading spokesman for the Goldwater group, when asked what he would do if he were a Negro replied:

"I'd probably vote against Goldwater. He won't push for the Negro as fast as Johnson."

On some things all factions agreed almost unanimously. They said it would have been impossible for their parents to hold such a discussion.

"Older people are not as flexible as the young," said one senior.

Another added:

"Grown-ups have to shut their minds because they have commitments. They may risk their jobs if they speak out."

In Columbus, a clergyman who is worried about the campaign bitterness is a Lutheran who left Germany rather than live with Nazis. He has made progress as a social worker in a Negro section of the city. He speaks with softness. In this city, Mr. Goldwater just a few days earlier had warned against allowing the United States to become weak militarily.

"I have the terrible feeling," the clergyman said, "that I have seen and heard this before. This religious fervor you see among the Goldwater supporters. We must have order in the streets they say. All of a sudden the Government needs special power to maintain that order in the streets. The press is irresponsible. The Government gets the power to make the press responsible. Politics becomes a discussion in absolutes; the absolute right and the absolute wrong. That means there is no discussion. The sabre rattling. I remember that too. I can't help feeling that religion has failed to give the young people the desire for dedication that so many of them are finding in Goldwater."

"Clergymen have been fired because they were considered too liberal. There is very little creative political discussion in this atmosphere. There can't be."

'White Man's Champion'

Then there was Cincinnati, where a few nights earlier Mr. Goldwater had brought thousands of supporters to their feet shrieking, stamping with his "soft on Communism speech." Across the street from the hotel from which the Senator had left for that rally a few days earlier, there was no crowd. Just people waiting to cross the street, or looking in the shop windows. A white man was telling his friend, "Goldwater is the only champion the white man's got."

A few blocks away two Negro women walked. One of them noticed a Goldwater sign. She said to her friend:

"They write all those stories about how big the Goldwater crowd was. Why when he came through our neighborhood the only people in the street booed him."

Then there was Indianapolis, where men and women had crowded into a parking area beside a hotel and had stood along street curbs and under the shade of the old railroad station to hear the Republican candidate rail against his opponent's foreign policy.

But this day, in the downtown area shopping was brisk and the talk was of the World Series. One woman commented on politics:

"All Goldwater's been saying so far is what's wrong with Johnson. He hasn't said how he would do it better."

In both the Democratic and Republican headquarters in this city there was agreement that the big issue in Indiana had become Social Security. Republicans accused the Democrats of deceit and the Democrats retorted that Mr. Goldwater was getting what he deserved.

Farmers Hold Discussion

About a dozen Negroes who were stopped on the street and asked about politics answered uniformly that they had no interest in politics. Yet the registration in Negro areas of Indianapolis has risen enormously.

In the farm areas several farmers sat quietly in a garage, each picking words carefully, discussing farm equipment that costs more than a Rolls Royce. They were drawn into politics slowly.

"There is no better land in the country," began the oldest of the farmers proudly, "than this area." The others nodded.

"Most of us around here," he resumed, after a long pause, "are not a whole lot in favor of Johnson. But it don't make too much difference who they put in nowadays. The farmer's vote don't amount too much any more. The farmers would be a lot better off if the Government left them along altogether."

Another farmer, asked to appraise the farm programs of the candidates replied:

"I ain't heard either one of them offer anything. Nobody cares about the farmers. And now that they have this reapportionment that will finish us."

Asked if they had discussed politics with any Democrats, one replied:

"You can't talk to a Democrat anymore. He gets sore. Never used to be like that."

In a small city in this area, a banker who is also an important Republican said:

"I have been astounded at the passions that have been released by this campaign. I don't think I'd care to tell my fellow Republicans that I think our party could have picked a better candidate for President.

"I can't remember the last time I was able to hold a dispassionate discussion on politics."

At an airport outside Toledo, where one of the hottest rallies was held, with mass heckling by nearly 200 Democrats, two airline pilots on their way into town discussed politics easily. They were in complete agreement.

"Goldwater speaks for the American way of life," said one of the pilots. "When he's elected we won't have to worry about the Commies in this country."

The other pilot added:

"The pinkos try to shoot you down and call you names when you say Goldwater will make a great President. But we're not going to be intimidated anymore by a lot of loudmouths who are afraid to hear the truth."

Extremist Book Sales Soar Despite Criticism in G.O.P.

Paperbacks Pushed by Goldwater Camp in Many Areas

By DONALD JANSON

Special to The New York Times

HOUSTON, Oct. 3—Stacked high on tables and in showcases in southwest Houston's supermarket-sized Republican campaign headquarters are copies of J. Evetts Haley's controversial paperback book, "A Texan Looks at Lyndon."

On order, said Mrs. Donald Mayo, are John A. Stormer's "None Dare Call It Treason" and Phyllis Schlafly's "A Choice Not an Echo."

The three right-wing paperbacks also are being sold as campaign ammunition at other Goldwater-For-President headquarters in many sections of the country.

More than 16 million copies of the books have been printed, including 7.3 million each of the Haley and Stormer books. All were published this year, between February and June.

Never before, trade sources say, have paperback books of any category been printed and distributed in such volume in so short a time. Never before has such literature been used to such an extent in a Presidential campaign.

Johnson Is Target

All three books are written by ultraconservatives. They purport to offer documentation to show that the Johnson Administration is "soft on Communism" and that the President is a man of little principle.

Avid Goldwater partisans express high hopes that the books, disavowed as "smut" and right-wing propaganda by some Republican leaders, will swing close states to the Republican banner.

Democrats concede that the books are being widely discussed, but hope exposure to analysis will win back by Election Day any voter who had strayed.

Among the first organizations to buy, distribute and promote the books was the John Birch Society.

They also have been purchased by the hundreds of thousands by individual Goldwater supporters and mailed free to friends and strangers alike.

Attacks on President Assailed as 'Smut' and Scurrilous

Some End Up in Trash

Much of the circulation is duplicated and ineffective, however. Many voters have received a number of copies in the mail. Some Goldwater partisans pass them on. Others say they toss them into the waste basket.

Free mailings and cut-rate sales at campaign headquarters are continuing, but a more recent development that has heartened backers of the Republican candidate is the brisk sale of single copies at full retail prices throughout the country.

No longer are these paperbacks offered only at right-wing bookshops or in a flood of give-away mailings. They are now stocked and prominently displayed at general bookstores from coast to coast.

Frequently they are best sellers in these shops and department stores, drug store chains, supermarkets and newsstands.

In some cases right-wing pressure was applied to get stores to stock the books.

Tro Harper, a downtown paperback outlet in San Francisco, ordered the Haley book only after repeated demands for it in which the callers asked why it was not offered and whether the store was "Communist."

Gives to Drugstores

Goldwater partisans got some chain drugstores in the Los Angeles area started by giving them large lots of the books free.

In Cleveland, Klein News, distributor of the books for the area, is supplied by the local outlet of the Birch Society for 20 cents a copy with the unlimited right to return unsold copies. Retail prices are 75 cents and $1.

Despite a hands-off policy on the part of the Republican National Committee, Goldwater campaign headquarters in many parts of the country have jumped into the effort to put the books in the hands of as many voters as possible.

This is true, for example, in St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake City, Nashville, Miami, Cincinnati and Houston.

Even regular Republican headquarters are selling the books in some counties, such as Dade in Florida.

"If we could get everyone to read it we would have it made," said Marcus Kyle, the Dade County Republican chairman. He was speaking of "None Dare Call It Treason."

Lloyd Waring, state chairman of the Massachusetts Goldwater Committee, says it is good politics to make use of the books. Others hedge.

The regular Harris County Republican Headquarters here, unlike the party's campaign headquarters for the Southwest District of Houston, does not sell the books. But it refers inquiries to one of its volunteer workers in the building, who keeps a supply in her car outside.

The books were placed on sale in Republican headquarters in Salt Lake City three weeks ago after considerable soul-searching.

After receiving "a vast number of inquiries," State Chairman Ray Child sounded out Republican leaders and the books were stocked despite the strong opposition of Thomas Judd, a Republican candidate for Congress.

Gov. Robert E. Smylie of Idaho, chairman of the Republican Governors Conference, has termed "A Texan Looks at Lyndon" and similar books "smut" and urged that they not be used in the campaign.

Colorado's Republican chairman, Paul W. Wolf, said his office would "try to produce votes by entirely different methods."

Charles Percy, Republican candidate for Governor of Illinois, said he could use "only a straight-forward issues approach, without any personal attacks."

Gov. John Anderson Jr. of Kansas, immediate past-chairman of the National Conference of Governors, called use of the paperbacks "dirty politics."

But he added that "there are a lot of people circulating and reading them and they're going to show their mud." He went on:

"People are saying, 'It must be true or Johnson would sue.'"

Sources close to the President in Washington take the position that the attacks in the Haley book are incredible and will be accepted only by those who want to believe them anyway.

Lee Edwards, deputy director of information for the Republican National Committee, said "the official policy of the committee is not to recommend or endorse publications prepared outside the committee."

But Mr. Edwards added that "we have no way of controlling people out in the field."

Most Popular Items

At its headquarters two blocks away in Washington, the Citizens For Goldwater Committee refers the "thousands" of inquiries it gets for the right-wing books to the Adelphi Distributing Corporation in Houston. The corporation is owned by Mrs. Eloise Lilles, a member of the Birch Society.

Mrs. Lilles also has two retail bookstores. Because of interest in the election, she said, the three controversial books are her best sellers. They are prominently displayed, along with Goldwater pop, soap, buttons and other campaign paraphernalia.

Like bookstores everywhere, she also offers several biographies, including competent critical biographies of the candidates; books of general interest, and sharply anti-Goldwater books such as "Barry Goldwater; Extremist on the Right," by Fred J. Cook.

The Democratic National Committee has sold more than 50,000 copies of the Cook paperback. It receives a commission from the publisher for each sale.

Sale and distribution of anti-Goldwater books has been small compared with that of the right-wing's big three.

A total of 7.3 million copies of "None Dare Call It Treason" have been produced since February by the W. F. Hall Printing Company of Chicago, largest paperback printer in the world, at a cost to Mr. Stormer, the author, of some $600,000.

The 7.3 million-mark was reached last month by "A Texan Looks at Lyndon," which came out last June.

In both cases the author published his own book, creating a "company" for the purpose. Mr. Stormer's is the Liberty Bell Press. It was housed first in his home in Florissant, a suburb of St. Louis. Now it shares a small building on the same street, with a beauty parlor.

Mr. Haley's "publishing house" is the Palo Duro Press. Palo duro, or hard wood, is the name of a nearby canyon. The office is in Mr. Haley's modest home in Canyon, Tex.

Both authors started with small press runs. The Birch Society placed large orders for its 200 American Opinion bookstores, and the authors increased orders for new printings to half a million copies at a time.

The load became too much for the small Stephens Printing Corporation of Sandusky, Ohio, which got Mr. Haley's first order. It farmed out some of the job to the J. W. Clement Company of Cleveland, the country's second-largest printer of paperbacks.

The two Ohio companies have also shared the job of printing 2 million copies of "A Choice Not An Echo." Mrs. Schlafly set up the Pere Marquette Press in Alton, Ill., where she lives, as the publisher. Like the others, it is simply a small order-taking office.

To keep up with the demand for his book, Mr. Haley soon added two more printers, Hall and a company in the "mid-South" he said he preferred not to name.

The tall, blunt author-publisher-rancher has had to turn his entire home into an office. Telephones and typewriters and two secretaries have been installed in the kitchen and a spare room to keep up with the orders.

Sales from Canyon and other distribution points, the 63-year-old Texan said, are averaging 50,000 copies a day.

"The Canyon post office has had a Christmas rush since June," said B. E. McCormick, in charge of the distribution operation.

"A Texan Looks at Lyndon" sells for a dollar, or 30 cents a copy in lots of 1,000 or more. The other two books are priced at 75 cents each and 20 cents in bulk.

Trade sources estimated that printing, storage, sales and shipping costs of the Stormer book, handled in its present volume, would be about 10 cents a book. This would leave the publisher, Mr. Stormer, a profit of about 10 cents a copy even at the bulk rate, or more than $700,000 so far.

At his middle-class ranch home in Florissant, he denied reports that the Birch Society had subsidized publication of "None Dare Call It Treason," his first book.

Mr. Stormer left his last job, as editor of an electrical trade magazine in 1962, to work on the book. He said he had saved enough money to support his family and stand the expense of publishing a book.

Born in Pennsylvania

The 36-year-old native of Pennsylvania said he was not a member of the Birch Society but that his wife was. He is chairman of his Congressional District's Goldwater Committee and until recently was chairman of the Missouri Federation of Young Republicans.

His book is described on the cover as "the carefully documented story of America's retreat from victory." Its theme is the familiar right-wing message that the nation is perilously close to total subjugation because of its leader's conspiratorial failure to deal effectively with Communism.

Many readers express awe at the book's elaborate "documentation," but few of them have apparently seen a recent study on "None Dare Call It Treason" by the National Committee for Civic Responsibility.

Claims Disputed

The committee was formed last year in Cleveland as a nonpartisan citizens group "to encourage responsible debate and to expose the use of calumny and deception."

"Since this book contains 818 references supposedly substantiating the material contained therein," the committee reported, "it gives the appearance of being the well-documented study it claims to be. Nothing could be further from the truth."

The committee concludes that the Stormer book is "at best an incredibly poor job of research and documentation and at worst a deliberate hoax and a fraud."

"A Texan Looks at Lyndon" has been as sharply criticized as the Stormer book, largely because of the author's reliance on rumor.

The book, subtitled "A Study in Illegitimate Power," is laced with such phrases as "Johnson is reported to have . . ." "It was rumored . . ." and "many persons believe . . ."

Mr. Haley, author of a dozen books and boklets on Texas panhandle history, conceded in an interview in his booklined study that he had made liberal use of rumor but contended that "rumor is a psychological phenomenon in the public mind, the existence of which is a historical fact."

A. C. Greene, editor of the editorial page of The Dallas Times-Herald, wrote recently that "Haley is a historian with some excellent writing to his credit, but he deserts historical principles and takes up personal hatred as his guide for "A Texan Looks at Lyndon."

"A Choice Not an Echo," Mrs. Schlafly's first book, is a slim volume that was aimed at helping Senator Goldwater to the Republican Presidential nomination.

The theme is that a small group of "secret king makers," in the liberal Eastern wing of the party has selected the Republican nominee since 1936. Hundreds of thousands of copies were distributed in California before the crucial primary election and the national convention there.

Robert A. W. Welch Jr., founder of the Birch Society, has written that Mrs. Schlafly is "a very loyal member" of the Birch Society.

Other right-wing paperbacks and tracts aimed at electing Senator Goldwater also are appearing at bookstores, on newsstands, and at Goldwater campaign headquarters throughout the country.

Both Parties Concerned

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3—The "paperback explosion" of cheap, mass-produced political propaganda on newsstands and in bookstores has become an "unmanageable" feature of the 1964 Presidential campaign, officials of both parties said today.

Spokesmen at both party headquarters here acknowledged that they had contributed to the proliferation of more than 35 separate titles of political paperbacks now in circulation. Both national committees have promoted the sale of paperback editions of books by their own Presidential candidates.

Officials said they were not dismayed by such "normal promotions of the candidate" but over the growth of "anti" candidate paperbacks. They labeled many of these as "smear jobs." Despite denials on all sides, both parties believe that the other has been promoting books critical of their candidate.

Books Sold in New York

Books making extreme attacks on President Johnson, which are being pushed around the country by groups supporting Senator Barry Goldwater, are being sold in book outlets of the New York City area but not in such numbers as reported in regions of the West.

Executives in the book trade agree that commercial distribution of the books is limited somewhat by "amateurish sales methods" of the publishers of the political tracts. Free distribution of the books by political action groups also limits sales.

Doubleday & Company reports that in its 32 bookstores, 11 of which are in the New York area, the most popular of these books is "A Texan Looks at Lyndon." Total sales have been somewhere between 3,000 and 5,000, it is estimated.

"None Dare Call It Treason" and "A Choice Not an Echo" have had less but somewhat comparable sales.

The head of the book branch of a New York department store said none of these titles were on sale simply because of the insistence of the publishers that cash be paid in advance for their books. Such payment is against the store's policy.

Arnold Swenson, manager of the Columbia University Book Store, said none of the three titles were on his list for the reason that no salesman had ever approached him with an offer to deliver the books.

By ROSCOE DRUMMOND

THIS is a calm book on a hot subject, written by the right authors in the right spirit and at exactly the right time. Harry and Bonaro Overstreet have the credentials, the temperament, and the talent (for documentation without dullness) to turn an incandescent light on the strange tactics of extremism in the United States. They are respected by all thoughtful people as wise, compassionate and alert commentators on American society. Moreover, by their words and by their deeds, by their writing and by their actions, they are firmly established as implacable and effective opponents of Communism. In their books What We Must Know About Communism, The War Called Peace, and The Iron Curtain they have done as much if not more than any other two Americans to expose the evils and uncover the deceptions of Communism and the extreme Left. It will be well to bear this in mind, because, together with their great personal and professional integrity and their respect for others' opinions, this record is their impenetrable shield. I suspect they'll need it.

Their book does not aim to shock; it illuminates. Their book is no smear of the radical Right; it dissects the radical Right. On the basis of massive research, it brings into sharp focus and under penetrating analysis the ideas, policies, purposes, tactics, and foreboding implications of the principal spokesmen of extremism. It will enable you to know what the extremist leaders are saying to their followers and, so far as possible, to the nation.

Conceivably there may be some errors in the Overstreets' research. If so, they would be the first to welcome any facts offered by the spokesmen for the extremist Right to set the record straight. Indeed, a good fact-oriented public debate would be useful.

But this study of extremist tactics and extremist goals is more than reportorial. The stated goals of the extremists and their tactics are put under the most discerning appraisal. The result is a rare combination of fact, insight, warning, and persuasion. The Strange Tactics of Extremism will interest, inform, and excite everyone but the extremists. And it may redeem some of them if they will open their minds to where their leaders are taking them.

The most formidable indictments that the Overstreets bring against the extremists are these:

1. Their tactics create confusion by "loose and irresponsible resort to derogatory labels." Thus men like former President Eisenhower, John Foster Dulles, General George C. Marshall, David Dubinsky, Allen Dulles, and such tough Cold War military writers as Colonel William Kintner and Robert Strausz-Hupé are labeled either "Communist agents" or "phony anti-Communists."

2. Their tactics foster "the belief that a totalitarian form of organization, with directives handed down from the top, is inherently stronger than one that operates by what Welch calls 'debating society methods.'"

3. Their tactics work to "persuade people that the only part of the worldwide Communist threat about which they really need to be concerned is internal conspiracy." Example from the Bulletin of the John Birch Society: "Washington has been taken over! By which we mean that Communist influences are now in full working control of our Federal Government." Also from Robert Welch's writings: "Our danger remains almost wholly internal. . . ."

4. "By labeling as Communist-inspired and Communist-controlled a host of indigenous American efforts to solve pressing social and economic problems"—just about everything the American government has supported since 1933, ranging from TVA to NATO—extremist tactics "act as a brake upon social ingenuity at the very time when we most need to find ways of coping with colossal forces of change."

5. While affirming that they "are fighting Communists—nobody else," the extremist Right directs its specific attacks as much, if not more, against Democratic liberals, Republican moderates, and conservatives who do not go along with them.

The Overstreets do not contend that the Communists are not attempting to subvert our society. They do contend that the extremist Right is determined to claim massive success for these attempts in order to use the "Communist menace" as a smoke screen for attacking all political, economic, and social action with which they disagree. The question that is both implicit and explicit in this book is: Are the extreme Rightists using anti-Communism not primarily as an end, but as a means to destroy everybody and everything from which they dissent?

If you think the answer to this question is "yes," then you ought to read this book in order to learn more about the methods being employed. If you think the answer is "no," then you ought to read this book in order to check the evidence cited by the Overstreets.

The book of the hour!

EDWARD P. MORGAN, distinguished news analyst:

"This book is frightfully valuable and valuably frightening. It proves that freedom of thoughtful inquiry into extremism is no vice- but less than moderate attention to this careful work is no virtue."

THE STRANGE TACTICS OF EXTREMISM is timely, explosive and authoritative. More than two years ago, when few Americans were concerned with extremism, Harry and Bonaro Overstreet foresaw how great a shadow it would cast. Now, in the thick of a Presidential campaign in which extremism is widely regarded as the #1 issue, their long-researched book is being rushed off press.

THE STRANGE TACTICS OF EXTREMISM presents many significant (and sometimes astonishing) statements by such figures as ROBERT WELCH, founder of the John Birch Society; BILLY JAMES HARGIS of the Christian Crusade and MYERS G. LOWMAN of the Circuit Riders. This book shows how the "Extreme Right" was formed, what its principal targets and objectives are, what its leaders and their many followers are like, how it resembles – and differs from – the "Extreme Left" and how its often-underestimated challenge can be met.

THE STRANGE TACTICS OF EXTREMISM gives you the answers to such questions as these: Why do extremists often attack nationally respected anti-Communists – even including the head of Domestic Intelligence in the FBI? Why are the National Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches frequently attacked for being "Communistic"? Why are the public school system and the public libraries favorite "Extreme Right" targets?

THE STRANGE TACTICS OF EXTREMISM is a crucially important book. Crammed with information never before brought together, this is the book for every thinking voter, Republican or Democrat.

WHAT IS EXTREMISM?

10 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

SUPPOSE a public-opinion pollster were to knock on your door and start quizzing you about extremism: "How dangerous, in your opinion, is it?"

You might be tempted to toss back a question at him. "First explain," you might say, "what you mean by extremism; then I'll tell you what I think."

The word is new to most of us; it has entered into general currency only lately. And like other odd words we find ourselves using to express the temper of the day, it has undertones of meaning that aren't defined in the dictionary. Listening tells us more than looking it up.

Listening to extremism means putting an ear to the ground, a form of exercise that has always been essential to our fitness as citizens. It has enabled us, especially in recent years, to swiftly detect the rumblings of Communist disturbance.

But thunder can be heard today not only on the left. Outbursts of fury, terrorism and group hatred come from another direction as well—from the Ku Klux Klan, the John Birch Society and other fanatical elements of the far right.

Experienced as we have become in coping with subversive agitation on the left, we should be quick to recognize its stirrings on the right. In fact, the tactics of the two extremes are frequently the same.

But there is one important difference. In contrast to the Communists, who openly oppose us, the extremists of the right pose as patriots. America, they cry, must be snatched from the grip of conspiracy; agents and dupes of communism, entrenched in seats of power from the White House to the lowliest one-room school, are plotting to destroy the nation.

Under the banner of breaking a conspiracy, the extremists of the right have licensed themselves to break the law. They intimidate by slander, terrorize by rumor, disturb the peace and incite to violence.

This extremist wolf in anti-Communist clothing presents a problem. How can patriotic Americans, sincerely concerned about communism, guard against being duped?

The answer, as the National Commander of the American Legion recently pointed out, lies in our wariness of individuals "who would save America by forsaking its free institutions." For, in Commander Daniel F. Foley's words, "The citizen who defies the law or falsely demeans the motives and authority of governmental institutions is helping Khrushchev's cause — not America's. The citizen who seeks recourse to hatred or violence as the answer to the nation's problems is turning away from an acceptable and workable American solution."

Never have our problems called more imperatively for solutions. Anxieties provoked by the revolutions of our day—in science and technology, in race relations and civil rights, in national and international policy throughout the world—have emboldened the extremists to step up their efforts to fracture our faith in one another and in our national leaders, to divide us into hostile racial, religious and ethnic camps, to stifle free debate and obscure legitimate issues in clouds of calumny.

These divisive thrusts must be repelled. Which means all of us must do a job of person-to-person education — the kind that takes place when one friend says to another, "What's extremism?"

What it's not is more to the point. For extremism is "anti." Its positions are against, not for. Its direction turns backward, not ahead. Its platform is compounded of denunciation and defeatism.

Yet its negative views on whatever issue, be it foreign aid or fluoridation, are of relatively small moment. The real danger lies in its negative actions. By what it does, not what it says, extremism betrays its true designs.

Here are some questions and answers about extremism in action.

Q WHAT ARE THE TACTICS OF EXTREMIST GROUPS?

A The hallmarks of extremism in action are two "I's" — intimidation and incitement to violence.

In 1960, the John Birch Society leader, Robert Welch, flatly proclaimed, "To be civilized is unquestionably to be defeated." This cue did not fall on deaf ears.

Birchers are nowhere specifically told to attack the Chief Justice of the United States and demand he be lynched, to spit upon the United States Ambassador to the United Nations, to harass the president of the California Board of Education with midnight telephone threats because he insisted on fair hearings for teachers accused of misconduct, or to invade a public library and surreptitiously remove dozens of "objectionable" books. Yet such have been the outrages committed by individual Birchers and by organizations with Birchers in their ranks.

Similarly, Ray Owens of Jackson, Mississippi, local chairman of Americans for the Preservation of the White Race, said in a recent interview: "We don't tell our members to do anything. . . . Say we find a Negro is agitating. The first thing we do is tell his employer. Usually that takes care of it, and the Negro's fired. But if the situation isn't cleared up, we just pass the word. The 90 per cent who feel as we do don't have to be told; they just stop trading at the place where the Negro works."

Other Mississippians who "don't have to be told" are believed to be responsible for much of the terrorist activity in that state.

Almost all extremists use rumor-mongering as a means of provocation. A sensational demonstration of this technique was staged in 1963, when a U.S. Army training operation — called Operation Water Moccasin — was being conducted in Georgia. The extremists ballooned this national-defense maneuver into a sinister United Nations plot to occupy Georgia and eventually the whole United States. The panic provoked by planted rumors reached such a pitch that Congressmen were deluged with mail protesting the arrival in Georgia of "15,000 naked African savages with big rings in their noses."

Q ARE EXTREMISTS AND CONSERVATIVES ALIKE?

A They're as unlike as discarding and preserving.

Conservatives, by nature, want to conserve what is good and time-tested in American life. They believe in moderation and self-control. They believe in fair play, a code of honor and a sense of fellowship among Americans.

Extremists want to throw our standards into the scrap heap.

Among the devices some extremists use is a series of recorded telephone harangues called "Let Freedom Ring." Listeners are informed that former President Dwight D. Eisenhower and Chief Justice Earl Warren are Communist stooges and traitors.

One of the extremist papers is called The Independent American. It features headlines like these (May 26, 1964): "Rockefeller's Plan to Subvert the Constitution." "How Soft on Communism Is Richard Nixon?"

Extremists hate with special intensity the very types of people whom conservatives especially respect.

Yet the extremists try to rope in the conservatives. The John Birch Society leader, Robert Welch, instructs his followers: "Keep looking on the leaders of the local or regional patriotic and conservative organizations which have memberships of our required quality, to come into the Society and bring the best of their members with them."

Just as the Communists have always tried to bore from within trade unions, civic and cultural groups, and government agencies, the extremists infiltrate conservative business and even religious groups. And just as the liberals refused to be smeared with the enemy's brush, so must the conservatives now do the same. As the Wall Street Journal puts it (August 17, 1964):

> Within the memory of most of us, extremism on the left was the more prevalent problem. . . . After a decade or so of hesitation, American liberals met this challenge creditably well. They have fairly well isolated Communists and such from the labor movement and the liberal intellectual movement. This certainly has helped diminish domestic communism.
> Intellectually and temperamentally, American conservatives should be even more fitted to cleanse their own ranks of those who endorse extremist methods.

Q ARE THE EXTREMISTS REALLY AGAINST COMMUNISM?

A Instead of fighting communism, they're fighting Americanism.

Instead of protecting our American processes of thoughtful free discussion and orderly debate, and our system of law and justice, they're inciting hysteria and violence. What happens is vividly described by the Executive Council of the AFL-CIO:

Extremism means the night-rider who shoots down the man whose ideas he fears. Extremism is typified by the howling mob which denies to a speaker his right to be heard. Extremism means the self-righteous citizens who censor textbooks or demand the dismissal of teachers because they disagree with them.

Extremism, in short, is that force which seeks to inhibit or deny the free interchange of ideas, or which seeks to substitute violence for the judicial and legislative process.

Extremism lives by the alien and totalitarian doctrine that the end justifies the means. Its anti-Communist crusade is a vicious hoax.

Q HOW LARGE IS THE EXTREMIST CAMP?

A Its size is hard to estimate because groups mushroom in response to hot issues and then wither, but we do know that currently there are several hundred local groups and about 20 with national programs.

Some groups form in indignation at foreign fliers being trained by the U.S. Air Force; or when their collective vigilance detects Polish ham or Czech crockery or Bulgarian Christmas tree ornaments being imported (as part of U.S. policy to spur Communist-controlled countries toward independence).

Some groups are poorly disguised fronts. Indeed the Blue Book, primer of the John Birch Society, openly instructs members to "organize fronts. Little fronts, big fronts, temporary fronts, permanent fronts, all kinds of fronts."

Some groups belong to the old lunatic fringe of anti-Semitic agitators. Others come from the newer lineup of incendiary racists.

Most notorious of all is the John Birch Society.

Q WHAT IS THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY?

A It was founded in 1958 by Robert Welch, formerly in the candy business. Its members are respectable-looking; they come mostly from the middle and upper-middle income group. Some have joined out of ignorance, deluded by predatory appeals to patriotism. But many hold key positions in other extremist organizations.

The number of Birchers, while kept secret, is probably between 20,000 and 40,000. There are units in all 50 states. Annual dues are $24 for men, $12 for women. Gross income reported for 1963 was just over $1 million. A far larger budget is foreseen for 1964.

Top leadership nominally consists of Welch and a committee of four, drawn from the Birch National Council, plus a "Committee of Endorsers." Actually, Welch is in charge.

From the start, Welch called his Society strictly non-political; but by December 1962, after the California Congressional elections, he was able to report that "the strength shown by Birch-supported candidates . . . was an eye opener." In the 1964 Republican primaries in California, at least nine Birchers ran for Federal or state offices, and seven won nomination. Charles Bartlett, in his syndicated column of July 7, 1964, concluded that "Goldwater has plainly derived substantial support, financial and political, from Birch sources."

Prime target of the Birchers' fury is Chief Justice Warren, symbol of our "pro-Communist Supreme Court." In 1963, the Justice and his wife were molested in New York by a band who said they represented a "Movement to Impeach Earl Warren," naming one of the Birch "reading rooms" as their address. A single Birch chapter in Texarkana, Tex., reported it was distributing 10,000 "Impeach Earl Warren" handbills, plus buying 100 radio spots, newspaper ads and an illuminated billboard on the main street,

Also high on the Birch hate-agenda are the U.S. foreign-aid program ("dreamed up by Stalin, planted in this country by Earl Browder") and the United Nations ("Get the U.S. out of the UN and the UN out of the U.S."). Letter-writing campaigns have been launched against public-spirited concerns that showed approval of UN aims, such as United Airlines, U.S. Rubber Company and Xerox Corporation.

The keynote of Birch thinking, like that of the Communists, is distrust of democracy. In the July 1964 Bulletin, Welsh boasted of awakening vast numbers of Americans . . .

to the dangers of a democracy, to the fact that our Founding Fathers themselves . . . feared a democracy as the worst of all forms of government, and to what our Supreme Court was doing to convert our constitutional republic into a democracy as a help to the Communists.

Q WHAT ARE OTHER EXTREMIST GROUPS DOING?

A While most of them turn their fire on dozens of targets, ranging from the UN to the union shop, some concentrate on a particular "Communist menace." Thus, a group called Circuit Riders, Inc., spends most of its time attacking the "Communist-dominated" Methodist Church. Another, called the National Committee for Economic Freedom, fights for a Constitutional amendment to abolish the "Marxist income tax."

In some communities, groups spring at particular local issues—as in Detroit, where a "Catholic Layman's League" and "Protestant Layman's League" suddenly appeared in the summer of 1964 to put across a discriminatory homeowners' ordinance. These groups actually represented neither Catholics nor Protestants, being led by an active Bircher and another rightist promoter. They sent agitators to break up meetings at churches where speakers were opposing the discriminatory ordinance. They flooded the city with literature labeling all opponents as Communist sympathizers. The ordinance was passed on September 1.

In a number of states, racist-extremist groups, such as the White Citizens' Councils, are promoting what they call "the Southern viewpoint" by cracking down on "troublesome" Negroes, denying them work, credit, electricity and water. Typical of these activities is the warning given to Negroes in Indianola, Miss., that they might lose their jobs if they consulted a physician who had been the first Negro in town to register and vote.

Q ARE ALL EXTREMIST GROUPS OPENLY RACIST OR ANTI-SEMITIC?

A No. But virtually all of the groups that are violently segregationist or anti-Semitic are extremist and spread their propaganda throughout the whole extremist camp.

More often than not, the anti-Semites upbraid the rest for not equating Judaism with communism and publicly blaming the Jews for all evil.

Besides inciting anti-Negro violence or fomenting anti-Semitism (sometimes both at the same time), these groups "discover" Communist plots in Washington. The National States Rights Party, a neo-Nazi group based in Birmingham, reviles the late President Kennedy as a worker in the "Communist conspiracy," and Senator Barry Goldwater as a "kosher conservative." It has demanded that the Supreme Court justices be executed as traitors; that public schools be abolished rather than integrated; and that a new United Nations be set up "for white people only."

Q IS THERE A COALITION OF EXTREMIST GROUPS?

A There have been no formal mergers so far; but the civil-rights revolution, as it touches more and more communities, appears to be bringing the racists and other extremists under one umbrella.

This was typified by the response of some extremist groups to the Civil Rights Bill of 1964. Their chief rallying ground was the racist Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms, which flooded Northern senators with opposition mail, sent one million letters to individuals across the country and placed full-page ads in over 200 newspapers.

A number of far-right groups have courted the racists. Thus, Liberty Lobby, which claims to represent 253 like-minded organizations, has begun to promote literature on the supposed natural inferiority of Negroes. It has publicly endorsed some of the more notorious Southern segregationists. The Birch Society helped promote the campaign of Alabama's die-hard segregationist Governor, George C. Wallace, in the Wisconsin and Maryland Presidential primaries.

Q WHY WORRY ABOUT THE EXTREMISTS?

A Because they're trying to bludgeon the American people into abandoning the twin ground-rules of democracy—that problems are solved by free and honest debate of legitimate political issues; and that the bedrock of integrity and good-will among Americans, which lies beneath the surge and flow of conflicting opinion, must be kept inviolate.

Thus we may debate whether taxes are too high or too low; whether U.S. foreign aid or our involvement in the UN should be increased or reduced; whether this or that governmental proposal, ranging from mental-health clinics to civil-rights legislation, is good or bad. But if arguments pro or con are shouted down with cries of "treason" or submerged by outpourings of race hatred and religious bigotry—then the democratic process is subverted and our survival in freedom endangered.

Q WHAT IS THE BEST ANTIDOTE TO EXTREMISM?

A Like all other plagues that attack our body politic, extremism can be repelled if public opinion is fortified with information, and the sinews of intergroup cooperation are strengthened.

Here are 10 suggested "Do's":

1. Get reliable information. Good sources are:

American Federation of Labor—
Congress of Industrial Organizations
815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

The American Jewish Committee
165 East 56 Street, New York, N.Y. 10022

Group Research, Inc.
1404 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

United Nations Association of the U.S.A., Inc.
(formerly AAUN)
345 East 46 Street, New York, N.Y. 10017

2. Organize a local coordinating committee to alert the community to breaches of the democratic process — attempts to suppress free expression, to intimidate and incite to violence. Be sure this committee reflects all responsible elements in your community — conservatives, moderates and liberals; business and labor leaders; all religious faiths and ethnic groups.

3. Distribute material about extremism to civic groups and community leaders.

4. Urge ministers, priests and rabbis to use this material in their sermons.

5. Arrange seminars to develop a pool of well-informed volunteer speakers for church groups, schools, fraternal and service organizations, and other civic groups.

6. See that editors and broadcasters are posted on the character and connections of any extremists active in the vicinity.

7. Ask the librarians, where extremists' literature is in evidence, to put literature exposing their viewpoints on the same shelves.

8. Be sure extremists don't monopolize the Letters to the Editor columns in your local newspapers. Organize a letter-writing squad to answer their distortions and repudiate their tactics.

9. If an extremist appears on a local broadcast, request equal time for rebuttal. The Federal Communications Commission has adopted this "fairness doctrine":

> If one viewpoint of a controversial issue of public importance is presented, the licensee is obligated to make a reasonable effort to present the other opposing viewpoint or viewpoints. . . . It is immaterial whether a particular program or viewpoint is presented under the label of "Americanism," "Anti-Communism" or "States' Rights" or whether it is a paid announcement, official speech, editorial or religious broadcast.

10. Warn community leaders against being lured into activities with high-sounding names like "anti-Communist seminars." Investigate such programs carefully. See if they are inspired by extremists.

Beyond all this, your immediate situation will undoubtedly suggest other constructive ways in which you can help uphold the democratic processes and practices that keep your community and your country strong.

NON-DISCRIMINATION CONTRACT---Bishop Connare of Greensburg, Pa. and Bishop Reed of Oklahoma City have inserted non-discriminatory clauses in their church construction contracts.

FOLLOWING HIS STEPS---A moving story of Bishop Waters' development of a full understanding of racial justice, told in his own words, is available at our office. All you have to do is write for it. The director of the Southern Field Office, Henry Cabirac, at Bishop Waters' invitation, visited with him and with interested groups in Raleigh, Durham, Charlotte, Asheville, and Greenville, North Carolina urging more work for voter registration, further public school desegregation, and equal employment opportunities.

ATLANTA PROGRESS---Parochial schools in Atlanta have had the largest registration in history--this follows desegregation and shows that people of Christ will follow His path. Archbishop Hallinan is giving his full support to the Atlanta Interracial Council which is presenting excellent panels to parish organizations and other places when requested. Atlanta hospitals are desegregated.

CHARITY---Front pages all over the nation carried the story when a New Orleans area pastor was slugged by one of his parishoners who objected to integrated classes for children preparing for their First Communion. Perhaps the sequel in which the pastor refused to press charges against the assailant was not given the same coverage.

FIGHTER---Congratulations are in order for John P. Nelson, vice-chairman of the National Council and secretary of the New Orleans Council on Human Relations, who was one of those responsible for the lowering of the racial barrier at Tulane University. Not content to rest on his laurels, John has filed suit to open Terrebonne Parish, Louisiana schools to Indians in the area.(Remember-discrimination is not limited to one color.)

TRAVELER---Mr. Cabirac's been on the go--places he has visited in recent months include Savannah, Charleston, Washington, New York, Mobile, Nashville, Jackson, Atlanta, Chicago, Birmingham, Lafayette, Monroe, Dallas, Shreveport, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Austin, San Antonio, Houston, Raleigh, Greensboro, Durham, Charlotte, Asheville. If you want him--just buzz him--he'll come arunning provided you get him enough in advance so he can plan his trip to cover as many places as possible.

RATES BASED ON COLOR---It has come to our attention that some Southern-based insurance companies charge Negroes as much as 80 per cent more than national companies do. If you know anything about this practice, please help fight it.

LITERATURE---Here are some recommended pieces of literature we have on supply. Dr. Spock's "Prejudice in Children's Conversations with Dr. Spock"--.25 cents. "Challange to Religion"--National Conference on Religion and Race--$1.65, and "How to Organize a Catholic Interracial Council"--$1.50.

LET'S WORK---If you're interested in racial justice how about getting out and doing something. Pope John XXIII in "Mater et Magista" urged we translate doctrine into deeds. The Interracial Review suggests 12 steps:

1. Read and Study--know what the facts are.
2. Find Others--who are concerned and want to do something.
3. Raise the Issue--don't stand silent, be the first one to talk about it.
4. Join--it's O.K. to be a loner, but groups get things done.
5. Attend--once you've got it started keep the movement alive by attending the meetings.
6. Write and Visit--let your editors, legislators, pastors, and civic officals know what you think. Put it in a letter and, better still, take time to go and visit them.
7. Break Down Isolation--get the races together. They can't know each other as humans if they don't have the chance to meet.
8. Children--let them know truth and justice from the start at home.
9. Hospitality--how about a coffee party at home as a fine place to get people together.
10. Times of Tension--promote harmony so your neighborhood will be ready when passions rise and tempers flare--remember this isn't all strawberries and cream and it might get nasty--so be prepared.
11. Provide Information--let your community leaders know what is going on in other places.
12. Pray--let's face it--we need help and only He can give it.

PERMISSION OF CHANCELLORY NEEDED---All priests desiring to participate in the August 28 march on Washington are required to get the permission of their Chancellory Office and have this forwarded to His Excellency Archbishop O'Boyle in Washington. Archbishop O'Boyle is providing board and lodging for that one day to all those in need of it. For further information please write the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, 21 West Superior Street, Chicago 10, Illinois.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON RELIGION AND RACE---By now you are all aware of the historical National Conference on Religion and Race which was held in Chicago in January. This is the first time in the history of the country that the heads of the three faiths agreed to meet on a national level on any subject. Follow-ups of the conferences are being held throughout the country and there have been some concrete results. In your own community you should try to co-operate with such a follow-up committee, or if there is none, try to initiate one.

PARTICIPATION OF ALL CATHOLICS IN CHURCH ACTIVITIES---Unfortunately because Negroes have been resented for so long they frequently avoid participation in all forms of Catholic life such as parish and diocesian organizations, schools, etc., even when they are able to join. Those of us that are interested in Christian Unity and racial justice and charity should do everything possible to encourage Catholic Negroes to participate to the fullest extent.

PRESIDENT'S CIVIL RIGHTS BILL---All Southern Catholic who are interested in implementing the principles of our Bishops regarding racial justice and charity have given priority to putting our house in order. This is correct. However our concern for justice should not stop here. If you will recall the Bishops' statement "Discrimination and the Christian Conscience" these principles should be applied to all walks of life.

Just as we are very much concerned with such evils in the community as indecent literature because it affects Catholics as well as non-Catholics, this should be the case with racial injustice. We therefore urge you to contact your Senators and Congressmen to ask that they modify some of their opposition to this bill, or in the case of the few areas of the South where your Senators and Congressmen are on the defensive, to encourage them to vote for it. It would be better not to identify yourself as belonging to a Catholic Interracial Council or a Human Relations Council.

COME TO THE SQUARE!

Yohannan's - Lenox Square

6:30 - Wednesday - February 8

For a gala membership dinner-party with key Legislators and State Officials as guests. This will be an opportunity to renew friendships with the Active Voters Faithfuls of many years and to meet new recruits. We hope all these "Old Faithfuls" will bring new members or even prospects. To be more effective we must be more numerous.

The tables will be set for units of eight - so you may arrange your own party if you wish.

The dinner will be in the elegant "Lanier Room" of Yohannan's Restaurant - price $2.50, including tip and tax.

Active Voters take issues and goals seriously - but never themselves - so we promise an evening of information and entertainment, plus relaxation and fun.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Dear Fellow-members of Active Voters:

I send New Year's Greetings to all of you.

The advent of 1961 increases my hope that it will be a year of political progress in Georgia. There are some indications that this hope may not be entirely vain. The reports of several legislative committees show an increasing awareness of the many problems confronting us and a willingness to discuss them in a spirit of realism instead of taking refuge in outworn political slogans. Good committee work was done in several fields - notably in Education (improvement of curricula, teacher training, and financing of public schools), in public health (especially mental health), and in studies looking toward an equalization of property tax assessments. It remains to be seen whether the General Assembly and the Governor will at this session make a frontal attack on these problems, as well as the important related subjects of reapportionment, voting regulations, and State Aid to Municipalities. Elsewhere in this bulletin is published our annual pre-session letter to all members of the General Assembly.

1960 was a year of elections, (Statewide primary Sept. 14 and General Election November 8), and 1961 is likely to be a year of legislative and executive action, as the successful candidates move to implement their campaign promises. Here in Georgia we are at mid-point in Governor Vandiver's term with comparably few new faces in the General Assembly. This makes for a resistance of change. The unfortunate public statements of the Governor and the Legislature made during the past two years remain to inhibit the "agonizing reappraisal" that must be made in the light of events since 1958 in Virginia, Little Rock, and New Orleans. Since this message was begun, events in the school crisis have followed each other in quick and momentous succession. It is unnecessary to review here what happened at the University of Georgia in Athens except to deplore the violence by students and outsiders which resulted in a riot that has to be quelled by local police without the help of the state patrol, although such help apparently had been requested from everybody except the Governor himself. We commend the actions of the university authorities and of the 300 professors who signigied their approval of such action, including the lifting of the suspension of the two negro students.

At this writing the Governor has come out boldly against any closing of schools by State authorities and proposes legislation to the effect of which will be to repeal the segregation laws and replace these with pupil placement and local option statutes. We consider that this represents progress over the former inflexible attitude of the Governor and General Assembly. At this writing we are not prepared to approve or disapprove the specific legislation that is being introduced this week. If Active Voters takes a position on the proposed legislation, we will advise the membership promptly.

FORUMS ON OPEN SCHOOLS

During October Active Voters participated in a series of forums in the interest of open schools. This was a joint effort with the Georgia League of Women Voters, HOPE, and The United Church Women of Georgia. Forums were held in Rome, Albany, Columbus, and Augusta. Your president spoke at the four meetings on the question of "Can Private Schools be Substituted For Our Public School System". Mr. James Peters, Chairman of the State Board of Education, spoke at Albany and Columbus and Senator Erwin Mitchell spoke at the meeting in Rome.

We think these forums contributed substantially to the change of sentiment now evident in Georgia.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
Mrs. George Taylor Douglas

Our new director replaced Mrs. Walter Paschall who served Active Voters so effectively last summer. Mrs. Paschall resigned her position with us because of undertaking graduate study at Emory University.

Mrs. Douglas has a wide and varied experience both in professional and volunteer fields. She is a graduate of Goucher College and M.A. from Columbia University. Her experience includes service on the faculties of Columbia, Wellesly, University of California at Berkeley, and Georgia State College (9 years) where she was Assistant Professor of Sociology. Mrs. Douglas is serving Active Voters part-time. She has already demonstrated her effectiveness in coordinating our various efforts towards better government in Georgia.

AMENDMENT NO. 9 - A GRAVE INJUSTICE

Active Voters opposed this amendment and stated its opposition in the pre-election letter to our membership. Unfortunately, there was very little recognition of the injustice it embodied. The Atlanta Newspapers favored its passage, but we have reason to believe it is because its effect was not realized by their political writer prior to the election. We hope for editorial support for legislation to remedy this injustice.

In this issue is an article expressing in some detail our views of the injustices in this amendment and the legislation needed to correct them.

NEWS LETTER

The year 1960 has been a busy year for Active Voters, and we feel that some important things have been accomplished. We are entering into an intensive campaign for new members, and for money. With the thoughtful and realistic work which has been expended on the role of the Active Voters in Georgia striving for good government, it would seem that we could enlist 10,000 members with such an objective. Let us try to enlarge and spread the responsibility for successful legislation in Georgia to more of our enlightened citizens. This year, please resolve to save some time for Active Voters at the new office, on the telephone, or in your homes. Resolve to secure new members who will in turn secure new members who will give us the benefit of their experience and talents. We need help!

Did you know?

1. Our office is now at 50 Whitehall Street, S.W., Room 711. Visit us!

2. Mrs. Lester Woods and Mrs. J. O'H. Sanders are co-chairmen of our membership-finance drive.

3. We are planning a dinner meeting with key members of the General Assembly. (See front page of bulletin).

4. Mr. Sanders has traveled 1,100 miles and spoken to five groups on the school situation.

5. Mrs. Douglas, the new Executive Secretary, has secured 20 members for Active Voters.

6. Mrs. Paschall's report on tax equalization is ready to go to press for publication.

Have you?

1. Read the letter our legislative committee sent to each member of the Legislature? (Attached)

2. Paid your 1960-61 dues?

3. Missed the bulletin? It is hoped that this will not happen again.

4. Planned to observe for Active Voters at this legislative session? We have some tickets but there is no difficulty at all of securing a card for both House and Senate.

WILL YOU DO US A FAVOR?

Will you do something for Active Voters? It will not take much time and no money. The favor we ask is that you bring our organization to the attention of one, or more, of your friends and ask them to join us. Every member has numerous friends who are interested in Good Government in Georgia. If each member of Active Voters obtained just one new member, just think what a boost it would be to our membership!

December 29, 1960

TO: MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF GEORGIA

We take this opportunity to congratulate you on your election to the General Assembly of Georgia, and to express our recognition of your desire to be of service to our beloved State.

We also take this opportunity to present for your consideration and attention the measures which we commend to you as being in the best interest of the people of Georgia.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS

We urge strongly that there be no interruption of public education and public schools in the State. We add our voice and request to those who call upon you to enact such laws as are necessary to continue and strengthen the public school system in Georgia.

REAPPORTIONMENT

In light of the 1960 census and the manifest unfairness of the present legislative apportionment, as well as congressional apportionment, we respectfully call upon you as a member of the General Assembly of Georgia to take the steps necessary to effect fair legislative representation in reasonable proportion to the number of constituents represented by members of the General Assembly, and fair congressional apportionment with the same principles in mind.

DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS

On behalf of our membership, and on behalf of the vast majority of those of voting age in Georgia, we urge that the legislature create a commission on elections and voting requirements to study the many restrictions and difficulties to which voters and potential voters are now subjected. Among these are the burden of having to register many months ahead of the election in order to vote, and having ones name taken off the registered voters list on account of missing the usual bi-annual election. We feel that there is a rising and justifiable protest vote against such practices, and that unless these grievances are rectified, they will continue to reflect adversely on our great State.

AMENDMENT NO. 9 (Taking of private property for highways and roads)

This amendment which was recently "passed" was mis-labeled on the ballot as "to provide for the payment for taking or damaging private property for public road and street purposes". We are convinced that it received a majority of votes only because people were misled as to the true purpose of this amendment which was to defer or deny payment for condemned private property until the legal procedures and appeals were finished. We urge you to vote against the implementation of this amendment since it was adopted against the will of the people and in violation of their property rights. Should the General Assembly see fit to implement this amendment, we ask that you make every effort to see that the property owner be allowed to have such portions of the condemnation money awarded him by the assessors or special master as will treat him fairly and make it possible for him to protect his property rights in the courts if necessary.

We also call to your attention that the criminal laws, procedures, and administration in Georgia are long overdue for restudy and overhaul, and that a Crime Committee could do effective work in this field. We hope the General Assembly will appropriate funds needed to encourage tax equalization. We call for a study and repeal or fair revision of the county unit system of electing our executive and judicial officers.

We cannot commend or congratulate the executive branch and legislature too much for the splendid Second Institute of Legislation recently held in Athens, Georgia, which undoubtedly is and will continue to be a great force for governmental training and progressive legislation. We also applaud the executive branch and the legislative branch for the recent action which restored the appropriation functions to the General Assembly.

THE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE OF ACTIVE VOTERS

CONFISCATION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY BY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Amendment No. 9 submitted to the voters of Georgia in the General Assembly on November 8, 1960, lured the voters into a trap from which they can only be extricated by the General Assembly which meets Monday, January 9, 1961. Under this constitutional amendment which the voters ratified, a home owner whose property is being condemned for public road or street purposes will be forced to this election: either sell the property for whatever the government's hired appraisers are willing to offer or have his home taken and be paid nothing for the years that it may take before the courts have actually and finally decided what it was he should have been paid in the first place.

Prior to the ratification of this constitutional amendment, property owners were treated fairly and so was the State. The election was this: the property owner could either take what the condemning authority was willing to offer for his property, or he could have a quick hearing within ten days before a court officer, who, after hearing all the evidence, could judicially decide what in his opinion the property was worth. Then, that amount so decided by this judicial hearing could be taken by the property owner and held pending the final outcome of his case if either he or the condemning authority appealed the preliminary decision. The home owner thus was not forced to either take what the condemning authority offered or get nothing for two or three years, but rather he could obtain, before his property was taken and before he had to buy another home or establish a new business, the amount of money which the court thought the owner was entitled to before his property was seized.

Why did the people of Georgia ratify amendment No. 9 which undermines the security of every home and property owner in this State? The answer is simple. The ballot on which this amendment was ratified read as follows: "For ratification of Amendment to the Constitution so as to provide for the payment for the taking or damaging of private property for public road or street purposes." "Against ratification of Amendment to the Constitution so as to provide for the payment for taking or damaging private property for public road or street purposes." So stated, any voter knowing only what was on the ballot would naturally vote to provide "for the payment for the taking or damaging or private property for public road or street purposes". No fair minded person could vote against such a proposal. The point is, however, that no amendment was necessary to "provide for the payment for taking or damaging private property for public road or street purposes". This was already the provision of the Constitution of this State. Article I, Section III, Paragraph 1, of the Constitution, prior to this amendment, states the following: "In case of necessity, private ways may be granted upon just compensation being first paid by the applicant. Private property shall not be taken, or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid." (Emphasis added). It is readily apparent, therefore, that the ballot as submitted was loaded and against the voter and home owner. The actual amendment concealed under the wording which appeared on the ballot amended Article I, Section III, Paragraph 1 - part of the Bill of Rights of Georgia.

Prior to this amendment that Article, Section and Paragraph read as follows: "In case of necessity, private ways may be granted upon just compensation being first paid by the applicant. Private property shall not be taken or damaged, for public purposes, without just and adequate compensation being first paid." (Emphasis added) ways may be granted upon just compensation being first paid by the applicant. Private property shall not be taken, or damaged, for public purposes, without just and adequate compensation being first paid, except that when private property is taken or damaged for public road and street purposes by the State and the counties and the municipalities of the State, just and adequate compensation therefor need not be paid unitl the same has been finally fixed and determined as provided by law, but such just and adequate compensation shall then be paid in preference to all other obligations except bonded indebtedness. The General Assembly may be law require the condemnor to make prepayment against adequate compensation as a condition precedent to the exercise of the right of eminent domain and provide for the disbursement of the same to the end that the rights and equities of the property owner, lien holders and the State and its subdivisions may be protected."

Imagine! Under the innocuous language stated on the ballot, the home owners of Georgia hafe voted to amend the Bill of Rights of Georgia to provide "...just and adequate compensation ... need not be paid until the same has been finally fixed and determined as provided by law ..." It is inconceivable that the people would have ever inflicted such an injustice upon themselves had they been properly and correctly advised by the ballot what they were voting for. The only way this unjust and devious trick can be remedied is for the Legislature to promptly provide, as the Constitutional Amendment entitles the General Assembly to do, a law requiring a preliminary judicial determination of the money to be paid to the property owner and put at his disposal before his property is actually taken.

Mr. Israel Katz, Attorney
Grant Building
44 Broad Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Israel;

I regret that I will be in Texas next week and consequently unable to attend Wednesday's board meeting of Active Voters.

I believe the financial situation of the organization should be called to the attention of the board. After March 1 bills are met, the treasury will stand at exactly $71.31. I think this situation raises several questions;

(1) Can we fix the price of the banquet at the annual meeting so that it will cover all possible overhead and not leave us with the usual bill of $25.00 or so to pay?

(2) Can we afford any more free distribution of our materials in view of the basic costs involved?

(3) Should we not authorize the closing of our office and the termination of the permanent services of our secretary by the 20th of this month unless the treasury is substantially replenished by that time?

I would appreciate it if you would read this communication to the board.

Sincerely,

Paul M. Rilling

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, Monday, November 4, 1957

Ministers Provide Guide for Thinking

Yesterday 80 Atlantans, each one a minister of the Gospel, spoke out frankly on the critical problem in human relationships which confronts our generation.

Those 80 ministers represent major Protestant denominations. But they did not speak for their denominations nor for their congregations. They spoke for themselves, as ministers, as Georgians and as Americans.

They began with a recognition of an obligation to speak their convictions on questions which are moral and spiritual as well as political.

Together they wrote a six-point guide for Christian thinking and behavior on segregation-integration.

But before they did, they deplored extremists on either side. They deplored, too, the insistence by many that integration means amalgamation. They confirmed their own belief in preserving the integrity of each race.

At the same time they expressed a firm belief in the right of all Americans to first-class citizenship.

Their code for Christian conduct includes: (1) Freedom of speech, without reprisal, (2) an obiligation to obey the law, as well as a right to try to change laws by legal means, but never by violence and economic reprisal, (3) preservation of the public schools, (4) a condemnation of hate and scorn as never justified, (5) maintenance of communications between responsible leaders of the races, (6) consistent prayer for God's guidance.

The 80 Atlanta ministers have addressed their words to all men of good will. We commend it, especially to those men whose public utterances have been to the contrary. We commend it for its defense of the individual and of free speech without reprisal from those in positions of political or economic power who have opposing views.

The statement comes from men of disciplined minds and disciplined emotions. It is characterized by those virtues on which Georgia was founded—wisdom, justice, moderation.

Eighty of Atlanta's ministers have responded to an obligation and a challenge.

A Southland and a nation will listen with respect.

Ministers' Statement

in the hearts of men . . .

Like the prophets of old, who forcefully spoke concerning the crucial problem of their day, eighty Atlanta ministers issued a forthright statement giving their views on race relations. We are deeply grateful for the moral and spiritual leadership which they have furnished.

Feeling that their statement will be helpful to others who believe we must solve the race situation in love and on our knees, we are making it available to some of the people whom we think would welcome spiritual guidance.

1 FREEDOM OF SPEECH MUST AT ALL COSTS BE PRESERVED.

"Truth is mighty and will prevail." No R. Ch. ~~minister~~, editor, teacher, state employee, business man or other citizen should be penalized for expressing himself freely, so long as he does so with due regard to the rights of others. Any position which can not stand upon its own merits and which can only be maintained by silencing all who hold contrary convictions, is a position which can not permanently endure.

2 AS AMERICANS AND AS CHRISTIANS WE HAVE AN OBLIGATION TO OBEY THE LAW.

This does not mean that all loyal citizens need approve the 1954 decision of of the Supreme Court with reference to segregation in the public schools. Those who feel that this decision was in error have every right to work for an alteration in the decree, either through a further change in the Supreme Court's interpretation of the law, or through an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It does mean that we have no right to defy the constituted authority in the government of our nation. Assuredly also it means that resorts to violence and to economic reprisals as a means to avoid the granting of legal rights to other citizens are never justified.

3 THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM MUST NOT BE DESTROYED.

It is an institution essential to the preservation and development of our democracy. To sacrifice that system in order to avoid obedience to the decree of the Supreme Court would be to inflict tremendous loss upon multitudes of children whose whole lives would be impoverished as a result of such action. It would also mean the economic, intellectual and cultural impoverishment of our section, and would be a blow to the welfare of our nation as a whole.

4 HATRED AND SCORN FOR THOSE OF ANOTHER RACE, OR FOR THOSE WHO HOLD A POSITION DIFFERENT FROM OUR OWN, CAN NEVER BE JUSTIFIED.

It is only as we approach our problems in a spirit of mutual respect, of charity, and of good will that we can hope to understand one another, and to find the way to a cooperative solution of our problems. God is no ~~respecter of persons. Every~~ human ~~personality is precious in His sight~~. No policy which seeks to keep any man from developing fully every capacity of body, mind, and of spirit can be justified in the light of Scripture. This is the message of the Hebrew prophets as it is of Christ and His disciples. We shall solve our difficulties when we learn to walk in obedience to the Golden Rule: "Therefore, all things, whatsoever you would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets."

5 COMMUNICATION BETWEEN RESPONSIBLE LEADERS OF THE RACES MUST BE MAINTAINED.

One of the tragedies of our present situation is found in the fact that there is so little real discussion of the issues except within the separate racial groups. Under such circumstances it is inevitable that misunderstandings will continue and that suspicion and distrust will be encouraged. One of the reasons that extreme measures have been so often proposed or adopted by groups within both races is found in the fact that those who are most concerned have seldom faced the races is found in the fact that those who are most concerned issues in a situation where there [illegible] of ideas. We [illegible] that a willingness on the part of white leaders to talk with leaders of the Negro race, and to understand what those leaders are really seeking for their people is necessary and desirable. An expressed willingness on our part to recognize their needs, and to see that they are granted their full rights as American citizens, might well lead to a cooperative approach to the problem which would provide equal rights and yet maintain the integrity of both races upon a basis of mutual esteem and of free choice rather than of force.

6 OUR DIFFICULTIES CANNOT BE SOLVED IN OUR OWN STRENGTH OR IN HUMAN WISDOM.

It is appropriate, therefore, that we approach our task in a spirit of humility, of penitence, and of prayer. It is necessary that we pray earnestly and consistently that God will give us wisdom ~~to understand~~ His will, that He will grant us the courage and faith to follow the guidance of His Spirit.

To such prayer and obedience we would dedicate ourselves and summon all men of good will.

Rep. Mackay Urges Local Control School Legislation

The following is a talk made by DeKalb Rep. James A. Mackay on the "Crisis in the Public Schools" at an Emory University adult short course class:

I am glad to have this opportunity to discuss the impending crisis in the Atlanta public school system, because more than 7,000 students who are enrolled in the Atlanta public school system reside in the county I represent and attend schools located in DeKalb County.

Frankly, I do not know the answer to our school problem, but I am certain of one thing.

We are not making strenuous enough efforts to solve it. The only thing the official leadership of Georgia has done so far is to come up with a "No School Plan."

It is my opinion that we have brains and character enough to come up with a "Some School Plan" which will save our children from irreparable damage which would inevitably follow, should the schools be closed for any substantial length of time.

TALMADGE BILL

In anticipation of a federal decree which might order integration of the public schools and our university system, Gov. Herman Talmadge sponsored the private school amendment in the 1953 session of the General Assembly. . . .

Other proponents of the amendment, Eugene Cook, Ernest Vandiver, John Sammons Bell, and Durwood Pye, said that we could keep the same schools, the same teachers, the same books and the same teachers' pensions under the private school plan. You will recall that they said the whole thing could be handled by bookkeeping—two sets of books would do the trick.

Opponents of the private school amendment, led by Hamilton Lokey, Fulton County representative, and M. D. Collins, state school superintendent, vigorously contended that we could not have public schools outside of the law and that come what may, we would have to solve our problems within the framework of the law and the public school system. . . .

VOTES COUNTED

When the votes were counted, 210,488 Georgians, relying on the promise that you could have "free-private-public schools" or "free-public-private schools" on a segregated basis, voted for the amendment. 181,148 Georgians voted against this amendment. Baldwin, Bibb, Camden, Chatham, Chatooga, Clarke, Cobb, Coffee, Coweta, Dade, DeKalb, Fannin, Floyd, Forsyth, Fulton, Glynn, Gordon, Habersham, Hall, Liberty, Lumpkin, Murray, Polk, Rabun, Richmond, Thomas, Towns, Walker, White and Whitfield counties voted against the amendment. Thirty-one counties voted against the amendment, and 128 counties voted for the amendment.

In the 1956 session, a package of bills called, "The Private School Plan" was dropped into the hopper and five of these six bills were enacted into law.

Senate Bill No. 1 required the closing of the public schools in the event of a federal decree ordering integration and provides for grants to individual children in amounts to be determined by the governor, and directs that state and local taxes shall be collected as may be necessary.

Senate Bill No. 1, which is the key bill in the package, received overwhelming endorsement in the House—13 of us voted against it.

Thus, the 1956 private school plan is now the law! It is a "No School Plan." It allows the governor absolutely no discretion. He must close the schools in the event of a federal decree. It allows the residents of the school district involved no chance to vote its opinion on whether or not the schools shall be closed. It does not allow the duly elected Board of Education in the districts affected to participate in whatever decisions are made.

"SOME SCHOOL PLAN"
Rep. James A. Mackay

This private school plan was sold to the people on the basis of the argument that you can have free - segregated - public - private schools; that all you need to do is to keep two sets of books. The argument has failed. It has failed in Little Rock and it is failing in Virginia.

What does this mean to the people of Georgia? And, what do these facts shout to the General Assembly and the incoming administration?

SPEAKS AS PARENT

I can speak for no one but myself, as a parent of two of the million students in the public schools of Georgia. I can speak only as one mindful of the hopes and fears of the 30,000 teachers who strive daily to pass the light of truth on to the boys and girls of Georgia. I can speak only as one of the millions of beneficiaries of our public schools, both as a student and as a parent. I can speak only as one of the hundreds of thousands of parents who simply cannot afford to pay the cost of an accredited private school education—even assuming such facilities were available.

It seems to me that the 1959 General Assembly has a clear duty to safeguard our public schools by passing legislation which will give the governor latitude and will not make him a captive of the situation, and a sitting duck for unfriendly forces.

Second, it seems to me that a law should be passed which would give complete local control, which would place the decision-making authority in our duly elected boards of education in each school district, and which would allow them to arrange referendums which would give the people themselves a chance to be heard as the issues develop. Local government, local control, keeping government close to the people is a Georgia tradition which should be second to none. We, in the local communities, do not think our schools should be run from Washington, or from the State Capitol.

TAKE STOCK

Third, responsible leaders in the school districts which are feeling the impact of these times should meet to calmly and deliberately take stock of what is happening elsewhere, and what might happen here. Only in this way can we hope to save and improve our public schcools which are the key to our national security, and which are the means of bringing a more abundant life to our people, through training boys and girls how to make a living and how to live.

Bill Bodenhamer, who has a son going to a free integrated federal institution, West Point, caused Ernie Vandiver to work himself into an unfortunate corner. Ernie is moving to Atlanta in January, and he and his children will live in the Atlanta public school district. I believe that by the exercise of common sense and practicality, it is reasonable to expect that his children can be educated in a segregated school in the city of Atlanta, notwithstanding the possibility of some integration in that system. If Gov.-Elect Vandiver does not work to save our public school system, I sincerely fear that he may find his children along with 100,000 others in a costly and disastrous predicament.

Finally, I have confidence that the good people of Georgia have the judgment and the character to protect our traditions within the framework of the law, and that they will uphold and advance the vital cause of public education.

It is becoming crystal clear that we cannot get along with a "No School Plan." We have a right to expect our political and school leadership to at least have a "Some School Plan."

Since no understandable or feasible plan of private schools has been brought forward, we should modify our laws so our schools will not be closed. Until an alternate plan for accredited education, available to all our children, is brought forward, we should permit our schools to remain open.

Talmadge Asks Private School Plan

By MARJORY RUTHERFORD

Sen. Talmadge called on Georgians here Wednesday to fight school integration with a private school plan and compared the U.S. Supreme Court's "unprecedented Little Rock decision" to "the mouthings of a Martin Luther King on the streets of Harlem—entitled to about the same respect."

"I for one am unwilling to capitulate and hand our children over to the Supreme Court for social experimentation," he declared.

The senator's extemporaneous remarks came at the close of a televised address before the Cotton Producers' Assn. here. Only the day before the same group had heard Sen. Richard Russell call on the people of Georgia to "try out a private school plan before surrendering to integration."

Talmadge departed from a prepared speech to lash out at integration forces and resent Supreme Court action.

"Every court in the history of our country had previously upheld the private school action of the type recently declared unconstitutional in Little Rock shools," he said. "In effect the Supreme Court is saying, 'We double-dog-dare you to try in any way to get around the 1954 school segregation ruling'."

JOINS RUSSELL

Talmadge also joined Russell in saying that Southern senators will fight to uphold the present rules of the U.S. Senate. He implied the legislative weapon of the filibuster might be used in the January session of Congress, adding. "If that happens the United States Senate will become a mob of 96 individuals." He criticized Vice President Nixon's "zeal to appease the NAACP."

The former Georgia governor reminded that he had "taken the lead" during his term at the State Capitol here in arranging for a legal method for the General Assembly to authorize grants for private schools in case of emergency. He compared stormy days for the South ahead with those of Reconstruction times.

Talmadge told 2,000 CPA delegates from seven states that prospects for early enactment of "a realistic and meaningful national farm program have been greatly enhanced" by election of substantial Democratic majorities in both houses of the 86th Congress.

FRIENDS IN CONGRESS

"The farmer will have more friends in Congress than he has had in a long time," he declared. "Results of last month's elections constitute an indisputable repudiation of the policies of Secretary of Agriculture Ezra T. Benson. There is an excellent chance that Congress will write a bold, new farm law which will give the farmers of this country the protection they have been denied for the past six years."

The Georgia senator said basis for any new farm legislation may be his own plan of free-enterprise farming bolstered by a system of compensatory payments on domestically-consumed basic commodities. Talmadge proposed such a program during the 85th Congress and said he will re-introduce his bill on the convening of the new Congress in January.

The plan calls for abolishment of all federal acreage and marketing controls. Under it the federal government would pay the farmer, up to a maximum of $25,000, the differences between crop prices he receives and 100 percent of parity on that portion of his crop which would be used in the United States.

Results of last month's elections constitute an indisputable repudiation of the policies of Secretary of Agriculture Ezra T. Benson. There is an excellent chance that Congress will write a bold, new farm law which will give the farmers of this country the protection they have been denied for the past six years."

The Georgia senator said basis for any new farm legislation may be his own plan of free-enterprise farming bolstered by a system of compensatory payments on domestically-consumed basic commodities. Talmadge proposed such a program during the 85th Congress and said he will re-introduce his bill on the convening of the new Congress in January.

The plan calls for abolishment of all federal acreage and marketing controls. Under it the federal government would pay the farmer, up to a maximum of $25,000, the differences between crop prices he receives and 100 per cent of parity on that portion of his crop which would be used in the United States.

Talmadge termed the present farm program "a miserable failure." He criticized the "stopgap farm bill" passed by the last Congress as "written under the threat of a White House veto."

"Something is fundamentally wrong with a situation in which farmers constitute 12 per cent of the U.S. population—but get only 3½ per cent of the national income," he declared. He said farmers should get a fair share of national income and be able to "place their products on the world market at competitive prices."

"MISERABLE FAILURE"

Talmadge is a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Farming which will have a major role in writing any new farm legislation.

CPA delegates, winding up a two-day silver anniversary meeting here, reelected S. S. Johnson of Rome association president. They also reelected the following other officers: W. P. Sewell, Atlanta, vice president; D. W. Brooks, Atlanta, secretary-general manager, and C. B. FunderBurk, Atlanta, treasurer.

DeKalb Spurs Permit Inspections

DeKalb County is working overtime to catch up on inspecting the installation of heating, air-conditioning, and ventilating equipment.

M. A. Smith Jr., head of the county's inspection department, says a personnel shortage is the reason inspectors haven't checked out installation of the equipment in private residences.

Three men are making the inspections now, Smith said. Until September there was only one man to cover the entire county.

Smith said the trio should catch up on all the permit requests "by the first of the year."

Many DeKalb residents have complained that they have paid fees for installation permits and in many instances had to wait months to have them inspected.

Desegregation Today Will Score Its Widest Dixie Classroom Gains

But Some Violence Is Feared As 120 School Districts Integrate for First Time

PEP, ABLE Plead for Calm

By JAMES C. TANNER
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—For three summer weeks while their playmates romped on the beach, 30 Negro and white first graders gathered for school classes in a building adjoining the First Congregational Church in this resort city. Their sessions were organized, not by educators, but by the Florida Council on Human Relations.

"We wanted to get the children accustomed to playing, talking and meeting together" before desegregation of real school classes begins in Daytona Beach today, explains the Rev. Louis Mitchell, the council's executive director. "The classes were aimed at breaking down barriers between parents of both races, too," he adds.

Less elaborately, many other Southern cities also are preparing to ease the shock of classroom integration this fall. When school bells toll for most Southern children today, a record number of them will report to racially mixed classes. To help them do so peacefully, police in several cities are warning they'll crack down hard on any racial agitators, and citizens' groups with names like ABLE and ASSIST have organized to plead with whites to accept the inevitable.

Klan Preparations, Too

But segregation extremists are preparing, too—and, ironically, sometimes borrowing the tactics of Negro civil rights demonstrators. Thus the Ku Klux Klan in some states is urging whites to form "human chains" around schools to prevent Negroes from entering.

So the desegregation push could spark new explosions—in some cases all too literally—as it reaches for the first time into such hard-core segregationist communities as Birmingham, Ala., Baton Rouge, La., and St. Augustine, Fla. Already dynamite blasts have wrecked a classroom in an integrated Catholic school in Buras, La., preventing the school from opening today, and blown a crater in a [illegible] University of North Carolina this mon[illegible] whites, however, it's nowhere near fast enough to please many Negroes. They note that only 7.9% of the South's 3.3 million Negro students attended classes with whites last term. Though the figure will rise today, it still will be less than 10%.

Southern Schools: Class Integration To Score Widest Dixie Gains Today

"On the map (of school districts with some mixed classes) desegregation would appear to be spreading rapidly," says a Jacksonville, Fla., civil rights leader. "But what we are seeing this year in many schools isn't token integration—it's token, token integration." And in Atlanta, Mrs. Ruby Hurley, Southeast regional director for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, cites the vast amount of court wrangling still needed, nearly a decade after the Supreme Court spoke, to jar many Dixie schools loose from segregation customs. "It's very slow, very slow," she laments.

To force a speedup, integrationists are haling into court even some school districts that do plan to start desegregation. In Birmingham, the school board has won Federal court approval for a plan to integrate the 12th grade in city schools this year, and a grade a year, working downward, thereafter. But Negroes have filed suit demanding the board begin desegregating all 12 grades this fall.

Tension Rises

In Baton Rouge the school board, under court order to begin integration, has accepted 28 Negroes for transfer into the 12th grade of formerly all-white schools. But the local NAACP branch is considering suing to force it to accept 10 more who also applied for transfer but were refused. Rev. Arthur Jelks, president of the branch, accused the board of "playing the numbers game" by setting in advance the number of Negroes to be enrolled and keeping it low; some of the rejected Negro students, he says, are straight-A pupils.

How violent a reaction such moves will bring from whites is still problematic. Though the Klan is clearly out to stir up trouble, and may succeed in doing so, it's regarded with something less than admiration even by many die-hard segregationists. As far as is known segregation groups with a wider following, such as the numerous White Citizens' Councils, aren't organizing anything other than litigation in efforts to block the integration push.

But tension, whether organized or spontaneous, is rising in enough communities to spread fears of new violence from East Texas to Georgia. A bomb tossed into the yard of a Birmingham Negro lawyer prominent in education suits gave a hint the other day of the atmosphere in that city—the scene of so much spring racial strife. The Baton Rouge school board held a surprise registration session last Wednesday for the 28 Negroes it will accept in formerly white high schools, and has been calling in white student leaders to urge calm acceptance of integration, indicating that it fears trouble when classes begin today.

Even in Florida—considered by many to be more cosmopolitan than much of the South—there are potential trouble spots. "We like to think we're like Miami with all our beaches, our neon lights and our miles of motels," says a Daytona Beach businessman. "But in reality Northeast Florida is still cracker country."

Many Southern cities, however, will be better prepared for potential trouble than were some communities that began integration in previous years.

In Jacksonville, where a bloody race riot in the summer of 1960 still is vividly recalled, Duval County Sheriff Dale Carson says plain-clothes deputies will be stationed at newly desegregated schools this fall, while other deputies will cruise in the vicinity. "If we see any agitators," he vows, "we'll tell them to move on. If they don't move, we'll put them in jail. That goes for either race." Police in other Southern cities desegregating for the first time are taking similar precautions.

PEP, OPTICS, ASSIST

In addition, citizens' groups which have sprung up in recent weeks are working behind the scenes in several cities to keep things calm. Some of these "save-our-schools" organizations count staunch segregationists among their members. Armed with reports on the economic impact of the Birmingham and Little Rock riots, they buttonhole public officials and send speakers to civic clubs urging that law and order be maintained when the schools open.

Birmingham has two of these groups, one a committee of its newly organized, biracial Human Relations Council and the other an organization called PEP (Public Education Peacefully). Mobile, Ala., also under court order to desegregate, has its ABLE (Alabamians Behind Local Education), and OPTICS (Organization for Peaceful Transition in Chatham Schools) plugs for smooth desegregation in the Georgia county where Savannah is located. "The thing we stress is the good image of Savannah," says Mrs. Mary Ralston, an OPTICS official.

"Desegregation is no longer a point to be debated, but a fact to be met," adds one of the organizers of Jacksonville's 150-member ASSIST (Aid September Students In Sensible Transition). "We can do it like Atlanta or Dallas did it — peacefully — or we can do it like Little Rock or New Orleans. These are our choices."

'Lamb' Does Well With Investment

By WILLIAM A. BOYLE

Q. I am a "lamb" among the "bulls and bears" of Wall Street—a housewife and a new investor. In November, 1958, I invested close to $2000 in shares of Wellington Equity Fund. I have reinvested all my dividends and capital-gains distributions.

I follow the daily quotations on this fund and know that the value of my shares is increasing. But, how does it compare with all the other mutual funds?

W. A. BOYLE

I can't look it up in a reference book to see how it did 10 or even five years ago, because it has been in operation less than two years. Also, I'd have to travel 20 miles to find such a reference book and I'm not sure I'd understand it after I got there.

I have a chart from such a reference book open in front of me. The chart gives the performance of more than 100 mutual funds and shows that Wellington Equity Fund has been a standout performer.

The chart (compiled by Arthur Wiesenberger & Co.) shows the changes in net asset value per share of all those funds. Its figures are based on the theory that all capital-gains distributions were reinvested in additional shares and that all income dividends were taken in cash. You point out that you have also reinvested your dividends—thereby increasing your investment.

The chart shows that in 1959 asset value per share of Wellington Equity Fund was up 16 per cent. For the first six months of 1960, it was up another 10 per cent.

That put it way up among the leading performers in both periods. For a "lamb" in the financial woods, you teamed up with the right "tiger" to protect you against the "bulls and bears."

Q. I am considering investing in shares of Penn Square Mutual Fund. I have been reading the prospectus on this fund. What does "open-end" mean? Also, how good is this mutual fund?

A. Suppose we answer the first question by explaining that "mutual fund" is the popular name for "open-end investment you want to cash in your shares, you will receive the net asset value of the shares when you turn them in for redemption.

That asset value per share may be higher or lower than the price you paid for the shares—depending on how well the fund has performed during the time you held the shares.

And, to date, Penn Square has put on a good performance. Using the same method of figuring as in the previous question in this column, its asset value per share was up 22 per cent in 1959. In the first six months of this year, it took a slight (2 per cent) tumble.

Penn Square has one other advantage. It is one of the "no-load" mutual funds, whose shares are sold without the usual selling commission or load. All the money you put up is invested in shares. None of your money is taken in commissions.

Can't Lose Pot Belly Overnight

By JOSEPH G. MOLNER, M. D.

"Dear Dr. Molner: How does one get ride of a middle-aged pot belly? I do a lot of walking and have cut down on food, but the pot remains. What else can I do?—D. L. B."

Quite often I take a long letter and reduce it to the nub of the problem. This time I haven't done any cutting. Would that I could cut down a middle-aged pot belly as readily as I can trim down a letter. But letters reduce more easily than P. B.'s.

Anyway, I thank you for cutting your original letter to the irreducible minimum. I will try to do the same with the answer.

DR. MOLNER

It starts with this: How long will it take to get rid of it? That's the problem!

A youngster, overweight, can combine diet and exercise, and as soon as the excess weight is gone, the remaining flesh goes to the "right places."

All right, add 20 or 30 years and see what happens. Weight increases. We quit playing "red rover" and "prisoner's base" and (on skates) the rugged game of "I got it." No more skin the cat, no rassling," no more basketball, climbin' trees.

Or don't the kids do these things any more?

Anyway, we acquire a little excess poundage, a euphemism for "fat in the pot." After a few years of sittin' and eatin' and sometimes drinkin' and not exercisin', we've added the weight, acquired the habit of eating just a little more than we need, and the muscles have sagged a bit and the skin has stretched.

TO PUT IT BLUNTLY we can't get rid of the accumulated pot of 20 years with two months of diet and exercise. Let's say it takes us half as long to take it off as to put it on. If it took 20 years to put it on, we should not begrudge 10 years to take it off.

In this respect, I am not in the best position (or should I say "not in the best shape") to tell you what you should have done. I like my vittles and I have no choice but to spend a lot of hours at my desk, and I have gained some weight. I admit it: too much!

At the same time I still have the timing and the muscular tone to play a pretty fair game of golf or to bowl a good line or two. So just having good muscular co-ordination isn't enough, and for most of us just getting some sporadic exercise isn't enough.

For the middle-aged pot belly, I'd do two things. First, trim down the eating. Do it gradually but steadily. Second, don't depend on walking. Learn to do some of the things that use those muscles around the middle. Get exercise that involves bending. Lie on your back and pretend you are riding a bicycle. Stand up and bend over and touch your toes, a few times at first, and later a lot of times per day. Do deep knee bends. Do the trunk-twisting calisthenics you learned in school — and then neglected. Watch your posture — don't slump. And give it all time. The trouble didn't develop in a hurry; it will take some time to correct. But keep at it.

"Dear Dr. Molner: At our club meeting one member said a tea bag should be used only for a cup of tea because of some kind of poisoning. Could this be true?

MRS. L. C."

We mortals think of the durnedest things to worry about. No, it's not a matter of anything poisonous. The best flavor comes out with the first steeping. Prolonged second steeping will bring out extra amounts of certain chemicals (tannin and caffein) that will make the tea stronger and perhaps give it a bitter tang, but that's about all that will happen.

"Dear Dr. Molner: Can a person have a recurrence of gall bladder trouble after an operation for same six years ago?

M. S."

Yes,l it is possible. stones can form in the bile passages if the gall bladder was removed. If it was just opened and drained, occasionally it can become reinfected.

HEMORRHOIDS can be cured! If troubled with fissures, fistuals, itching and other rectal problems, write to Dr. Milner in care of The States-Item requesting a copy of my booklet, "The Real Cure for Hemorrhoids," enclosing a long, sefl-addressed, stamped evelope and 20c in coin to cover handling.

Dr. Molner welcomes all reader mail, but regrets that due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' quesions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

One-day pneumonia — Familiar to every personnel director as a synonym for a hangover. Usually strikes on Monday. Victim's wife phones at 8:30 a. m. to say he seems near death's door. But he makes miraculous recovery during day—thanks to an old wonder drug called sleep—and shows up Tuesday morning chirping like a bluebird.

Afternoon sickness — Patient has three martinis and a parfait for lunch. Snores at desk until quitting time.

Daily Doublitis — A gnawing compulsion by employe to go to nearest pay phone to call bookie each afternoon shortly before start of first race at nearest horse track.

Sinecure Syndrome — The state of utter panic experienced by the office goof-off when he learns the firm has hired an efficiency expert.

Morning Stupor — A cerebral haze which grips approximately half of entire staff until they get 10:30 a. m. coffee break.

Aqua Bloat — Strikes worry warts who can't buckle down and make even a simple decision without at least 17 nervous round trips to the water cooler.

The 5:15 p. m. Myopia—This malady makes it impossible for the stenographer to discover any misspelled words in any letter she finishes just before quitting time.

Jawbone Fever — Afflicts the office gossip, a one-man rumor factory, whose mouth is an open book. He knows little, but tells all.

Payday Heartburn—This is the feeling everybody gets when he rips open his paycheck envelope and is again reminded of the vast gulf between his salary and his take-home pay.

The board is responsible for passing on all new industry applications for 10-year exemption from state property taxes and passing on contracts involving the state's industry inducement law.

THE HERITAGE OF FREE PUBLIC EDUCATION for
THE UNCERTAINTY OF MAKESHIFT PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Many years, a great deal of public money, much individual hard work and sacrifices have gone into the building of our free public schools. We can be proud of a job well done. Until this year, when uncertainty and anxiety moved in to take the place of security, we could be sure that each and every one of our boys and girls would be assured of the finest education possible.

Now, the talk is for private schools. The Committee for Public Education is not against these institutions. We believe that there are many fine private schools who are rendering a very real service to the field of education. But these schools, like the public schools, have taken many years to build. The question is . . . can we build a private school system that will be adequate for the needs of the more than 40,000 white children now attending public schools . . . and can we do it in the three weeks that remain before September 8th?

HERE ARE THE FACTS TO CONSIDER

WHERE?

The federal courts have found unconstitutional the use of public school buildings for private schools. This means that we would have to look further afield for a place to hold classes. Since there is no time to build (even if monies were available), the likeliest prospects would be church auditoriums and basements, unused commercial property or the attics and basements of large homes. Few of these possible locations would have proper ventilation, heat and lighting.

HOW?

We have a tendency to take the tools of education for granted . . . the comfortable desks, the well-lighted blackboards, books, lab equipment and so many others. These would have to be purchased in the initial outlay of establishing private schools . . . purchased, or done without. We would sacrifice the equipment acquired over the years by the public schools — the fine gymnasiums and libraries, cafeterias and auditoriums.

WHO?

And then there is the question of qualified teachers. In Little Rock public school teachers were not available to teach in the private schools. Although it is possible that teachers could be drawn from the ranks of the public school system to teach in private schools here, they would have to be paid in line with their former salaries—and some benefits would have to be given for retirement and other. This again is something to think about.

WHY?

. . . should we continue to toy with the idea of establishing private schools when from these facts it is so very evident that they are almost certainly doomed to failure. Other communities, faced with desegregation, have tried private schools. Other communities have failed. We should; we must, profit by their example before it is too late.

OAS Leaders Eye Dominican, Cuba Problems

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP)—Western hemisphere foreign ministers begin informal talks today seeking common ground for dealing with the problems posed by the Dominican Republic and Cuba.

Eight ministers were already here for the meeting sponsored by the Organization of American States (OAS). More were expected, including U.S. Secretary of State Christian A. Herter. The meeting starts tomorrow.

Cheered by an airport crowd of 500, Foreign Minister Raul Roa of Cuba said on arrival yesterday, "We come as accusers and not as the accused."

This appeared to promise a new outburst against the United State for raising charges that international communism has become a threat to the Western hemisphere because of the growing alliance between Cuba and the Soviet Union.

Roa also pledged assistance to Venezuela in its quarrel with the Dominican Republic, the first major subject to come before the two-part meeting.

A five-nation inter-American investigating committee has submitted a report accusing high officials of Generalissimo Rafael Trujillo's Dominican dictatorship of a part in the assassination attempt against President Romulo Betancourt of Venezuela June 24.

Foreign Minister Ignacio Luis Arcaya of Venezuela has indicated his country will press for sanctions against the Trujillo regime to isolate it from the other American republics.

After the charges against the Dominican regime, the conference will turn to the Communist threat. To the U.S. charges of Communist influence on Fidel Castro's regime in Cuba, Roa is expected to counter with repetition of Castro's frequent charges of U.S. economic aggression against his country.

Castro Warns Catholics-- No Conspiring During Mass

HAVANA (UPI)—Catholics leaving Havana Cathedral yesterday were handed written warnings reminding them of Fidel Castro's definition of a "true Christian" as one who does not conspire against the revolution during Mass.

The distribution of the pro-Castro propaganda by militia members gathered outside the ancient cathedral was the only incident reported as Cuba passed its first Sunday in several weeks without anti-church violence.

A prominent Catholic lay organization meanwhile endorsed the sharp anti-Communist declaration issued by the island's top prelates last week and protested Castro's accusation that certain "fascist" priests were conspiring against him with United States' backing.

'Absolute Backing'

"We lend our most decided support and absolute backing to each and every one of the (bishops') declarations," said the national Catholic organizations in a formal statement.

As expected since early last week, President Osvaldo Dorticos decreed the seizure of the $67 million Moa Bay Mining Company, the next to last major business enterprise owned by U.S. interests in Cuba.

Revolutionary militia were expected to occupy the big property in Northern Oriente province some tife today. Owned by the Freeport Sulphur Company of New York, it had been out of operation since March because of confiscatory taxes imposed by the Castro regime.

Freeport to Act

(In New York, the Freeport Company siad it would take all possible legal action to protect its rights.)

The "intervention" climaxed a week of "popular jubilation" to celebrate the expropriation of other companies composing the one-time billion dollar U.S. business investment in Cuba.

The Nicaro mining complex, owned by the U.S. government, was the only major U.S. concern remaining.

BURGLARS STEAL FORTUNE IN COINS

CHICAGO (AP) — Burglars chopped a hole in the brick wall of a vault in the basement of a coin collector's home yesterday and stole rare coins and gold pieces he valued at between $50,000 and $75,000.

Julius Tobias, 60, told police the burglars left behind other coins he valued at $100,000, probably because they were too heavy to carry. Tobias, a tavern owner, told police he has been collecting rare coins for more than 30 years. He said the coins are not insured.

TO PRESERVE PUBLIC EDUCATION IN NEW ORLEANS

What is the Committee for Public Education?

The Committee for Public Education is a locally organized, non-profit group of public school parents, dedicated solely to the cause of concerted effort in behalf of our public schools. The Committee was formed by public spirited individuals who realize that New Orleans needs its public schools, and are willing to take action to insure their preservation.

What are its aims?

First of all to formulate a program of enlightened action. This project is already well underway. Support is coming from all quarters and workers are undertaking the enormous task of spreading the true facts of the school controversy to the people most vitally concerned, the parents and teachers of the New Orleans area. Secondly, to make the Committee's views known to public officials; and, thirdly, to provide informed, reasonable leadership in this period of community stress.

Who heads the Committee?

If there were room to print all of the names, you would see listed many of your friends and neighbors—responsible citizens interested in the welfare of our children to the extent that they are actively working on and for the Committee. You would also see outstanding business and professional men, civic and social leaders, educators. Here are just a few of their names.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

DR. R. C. LANCASTER, President; MRS C. W. COFFEE (KATHRYN R. COFFEE), Vice-President; REV. RALPH BRIDGES, Treasurer; MRS. WINSTON W. WALKER (ANN B. WALKER), Recording Secretary; MR. V. H. BOETTCHER, JR., Corresponding Secretary; DR. GORDON FREY, Sergeant at Arms.

Board Members: MRS. R. C. LANCASTER (SARAH S. LANCASTER), MR. CHARLES RICHARDS, MR. PHIL PHISTRY, DR. CLARENCE SCHEPS, MR. SAM ROSENBERG, M. JOHN SPARKMAN, MR. R. C. SMITH, DR. WILLIAM SMITHER, MR. LEONARD GLADE.

PEOPLE ARE ASKING

Will the schools close?

The answer is "yes" unless the School Board complies with federal court order to desegregate at the first grade level. In spite of promises from Governor Jimmie Davis to keep the schools open and operate them through state control on a segregated basis, they will close. Federal courts have found UNCONSTITUTIONAL: the use of public money for private schools, the operation of private schools with publicly-paid teachers, the leasing or selling of public school buildings for the operation of private schools.

If the schools close, will I be able to enter my child in one of New Orleans private schools?

Here are the facts. Last year, the white nonsectarian schools of New Orleans had a combined enrollment of 2372 children. If the public schools close, there will be over 40,000 white children looking for a classroom. It is impossible to think that these few schools would be able to expand overnight to absorb 18 new pupils for every one presently enrolled. Parochial schools are equally overcrowded.

What is the average tuition of private schools should I be lucky enough to enter my child?

Get ready for a shock. Private schools charge for the services they render, and rightly so, for operating a private school is a costly operation. Tuitions in New Orleans run approximately $400 to $650 a year . . . sometimes more. Then there are additional costs for transportation, lunches, books and incidentals. Those of us whose children have always attended public schools are in the position of "realizing our blessings" when it comes to the cost of education.

What can I do to preserve our present public school system?

1. Form groups in your community to discuss the issues and bring the true facts to light. Others among your neighbors may not be well informed on the actual facts of the matter. Ask your friends to carry the word to their friends as quickly as possible.

2. Be open in your views. Indicate your interest to all concerned. Speak up when asked to express an opinion.

3. A Speakers Bureau has been formed to present the facts to the people of New Orleans. If you belong to a club or a community group, no matter what its size, one of these speakers will be happy to come free-of-charge or obligation of any kind to make an address concerning the school controversy and to answer questions. Call EXpress 5201 a time and date.

Whatever happens, the outcome should figure prominently in headlines that lately have been dominated by other racial news. Outside the South, attention of both Negroes and whites has switched this summer to a national surge of Negro demonstrations for jobs and other integration goals, climaxed by last week's mass "march on Washington." But almost unnoticed in this furore, Southern school desegregation has been scheduled to make its biggest gains today — peacefully or violently — since the landmark Supreme Court decision outlawing "separate but equal" education breathed new life into the whole Negro civil rights movement nine years ago.

Old and New Integration

Several Southern school districts that began integration earlier are speeding it markedly this term. In New Orleans, where angry whites boycotted newly integrated schools four years ago, some 400 Negroes will enroll in classes with whites today, up sharply from 107 in the 1962-63 term. In Atlanta, around 120 Negroes will report to integrated high classes, against 44 last year and only nine three years ago. Nashville will count some 700 Negroes in biracial schools, compared with 476 last year.

A big batch of other Southern schools will begin desegregation today, following in the footsteps of Celina, Tenn., whose small school opened on Aug. 5 so that its students will be out in time to help harvest strawberry crops next spring. The Southern Education Reporting Service says some 120 districts in the 17 Southern and border states will admit at least a few Negroes to formerly white schools for the first time this term. That's almost triple the 46 districts that desegregated last year, and the biggest number to begin integration in any one year since 1956, when border states were rushing to comply early with the Supreme Court's ruling.

Altogether, the Southern Education Reporting Service figures some 1,100 Southern and border school districts will conduct some mixed classes this term. That's more than a third of the 3,063 districts that have both white and Negro students.

Among states, only Mississippi will still open public schools on a totally segregated basis. In Charleston, 11 Negroes will enter formerly all-white schools, a beginning for classroom integration in South Carolina, previously a holdout state.

And the South this fall no longer will contain Negro children deprived of a formal education because whites closed public schools to block integration. Even in Prince Edward County, Va., where "public" schools have been closed for four years, a board of trustees will open three "private but free" schools that Negroes can enter.

Fast as the integration pace seems to many

Emory Professors Plead for Schools

"Although private schools contribute greatly to education for democracy, both history and contemporary experience clearly indicate that the major portion of the educational load can be adequately borne only by the public school system."

This quote is from a statement by 250 full-time faculty members of a private school, Emory University, published yesterday. In a sense this appeal is fully as significant as that of 312 Atlanta ministers a week ago. It expresses again the growing concern of all citizens about the prospect of closed schools.

The document was signed by approximately 95 per cent of members of the faculties of the graduate school and of the college of arts and sciences at Emory, minus about 20 individuals absent from the campus on other duties. Acting on their own initiative from a realization of the consequences which would result from closing the schools, they appeal to Georgians to save, strengthen, and improve them.

As we have said here a number of times the state of Georgia may take the route of closed schools. If we so choose, however, the people of the state should be informed fully of the price they must pay. This the Emory professors point out in unmistakable terms:

"Every citizen should realize that even a partial interruption during one year of schooling will result in a decrease during the following years of the services of trained specialists such as physicians, dentists, nurses, county agricultural agents, engineers, lawyers, librarians, clergymen and teachers. If such an interruption continues even for a few years, the services of an entire generation in such professions and skills will be lost; and this will amount to nothing less that willful discrimination by the people of this region against themselves and their own children."

They warn us, too, of the economic consequences in pointing out that "many industries will not find it possible to remain in any section where there are no stable public educational facilities" and that "new business and industries will be reluctant to come to such a section."

They point out also that, in our challenge from the Russians, to close the public schools in any city, county, state or region of America is to play directly into the hands of communism.

The big issue, then, is not to close the schools but to find a way to preserve public education. If an outside agency can succeed in forcing us to commit partial suicide, the damage to the state will be permanent.

All thoughtful citizens can but be grateful to the Emory professors for speaking out. As educators these men know full well that all Georgia will suffer greatly if the schools are closed. The biggest challenge still is finding a way to prevent it.

We the undersigned

. . . who are full-time members of the faculties of Emory University, are opposed to the closing of the public schools in any section of the United States. We wish to point out the irreparable damage that will result from the closing of public schools, not only to the people of any particular community, but also to the state and nation at large.

Every citizen should realize that even a partial interruption during one year of schooling will result in a decrease during the following years of the services of trained specialists such as physicians, dentists, nurses, county agricultural agents, engineers, scientists, lawyers, librarians, clergymen and teachers. If such an interruption continues for even a few years, the services of an entire generation in such professions and skills will be lost; and this will amount to nothing less than wilfull discrimination by the people of this region against themselves and their own children.

WE AS CITIZENS should also realize that many industries will not find it possible to remain in any section where there are no stable public educational facilities for children of employees and no adequate supply of high school and college graduates for these industries. Furthermore, new businesses and industries will be reluctant to come to such a section. This is bound to have an unfavorable effect on the economic welfare of the state and all its citizens.

Those of us who are educators are seriously concerned with the consequences of Russia's systematic attempt to overtake us educationally, an attempt that has been alarmingly successful, as recent events have indicated. We cannot afford the folly of a weakened educational system, and we can even less afford no education at all. To close the public schools in any city, county, state, or region of America at this critical stage of world history is to play directly into the hands of communism.

EVEN APART from such considerations, an interruption in public school education would detract disastrously from its role in providing our children with a comprehension of the natural world around them, in appreciation of the heritage of civilized men and an understanding of the society in which they must live.

Although private schools contribute greatly to education for democracy, both history and contemporary experience clearly indicate that the major portion of the educational load can be adequately borne only by the public school system. We therefore earnestly appeal to our fellow citizens not to allow the closing of our schools, but to save them, strengthen them and improve them.

The Executive Committee of the United Churchwomen of Georgia have reprinted this thoughtful statement by responsible educators for the consideration of all who share a concern for the future because of the moral and practical crisis faced by our state regarding public schools.

Hope Inc. Chartered To Fight School Close

An organization has been chartered in Atlanta with the stated purpose of giving information to persons interested in keeping public education from being destroyed by closing the schools.

The charter was issued to HOPE, Inc. The letters stand for "Help Our Public Education."

The chartering group gave as its purpose "to give factual information to those citizens of Georgia who want to keep our public education from being destroyed by the closing of our schools; to give direction, information and program of action to those groups and individuals throughout the state who feel, as we do, that the closing of our schools would be a tragedy almost too terrible to contemplate."

The group said present state laws concerning schools are unworkable and that similar laws have been declared unconstitutional in other states.

"Our governor-elect is quarantined by these laws and cannot do anything except close our public schools in the event of a federal decree ordering integration in any public school system of Georgia," the statement added. The group said injunctions following one such action would soon close all public schools in the state.

NAMED IN CHARTER

The incorporators named in the charter are Dr. Willis A. Sutton, Kendall Weisiger, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Dilworth III, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Breden Jr., Mrs. Harold B. Friedman, Mr. and Mrs. Claude E. Jones Jr., Mrs. Dan Burge, Mrs. Martha C. Bryant, Mrs. John I. Dickinson, Lanier Randall Jr., Mrs. Brittian Pendergrast, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Daugherty Jr. and Mrs. Hamilton Lokey.

The incorporators said a nominating committee will be appointed and will be presented at a general meeting for approval.

HOPE'S OBJECTIVES

HOPE's objective is to maintain public education. Our system of schools for all children is one of the great accomplishments of American democracy.

HOPE recognizes that preservation of public education means compliance with the United States Constitution, and the laws of the nation in which we live. Virginia and Arkansas have demonstrated the fruits of massive resistance. Let Georgia meet the challenge of the times in the American tradition of reasonable discussion of issues which face us.

The course of progress and reason is compliance with the law of the land. Those who shout that the Supreme Court has overstepped its power are deluding the people and doing a great disservice to the South. Our United States Constitution gives the Supreme Court the power to interpret the law. Our own Georgia Constitution itself states that the Constitution of the United States and the laws in pursuance thereof - these are the supreme law. (P. 69).

Fortunately for us, the Supreme Court recognized that so far reaching a decision would call for widespread adjustment in many local situations, and could not come about overnight. So long as the State laws are not in violation to the Federal law and as long as a School district acts in good faith, both time and leeway are permitted.

Private schools are not the answer for total and competent education of our young people.

HOPE believes that there is no problem connected with our school system which cannot be solved by a spirit of good will and reasonableness. This problem has been magnified and distorted by shouting and hysteria. The die-hards, who pretend to have all the answers, have only one answer: NO PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

HOPE is trying to arouse public opinion before the shcools shut down. I want to make HOPE's objectives completely clear:

First, HOPE wants to awaken the citizens of all 159 counties in Georgia to the imminent danger to all schools in our state. Through a vast program of public information, we want to make Georgians everywhere realize that this is not just a crisis here in Atlanta, where a suit is pending and where the decision is expected.

Second, HOPE believes Georgians need and want an organization through which they can make their voices heard in this crusade to save our schools.

Third, HOPE plans to pursue an action program designed to save the schools. For example, if a public school anywhere in the State is closed because it has been ordered to desegregate, HOPE will lend support and encouragement to action designed to reopen that closed school. In Norfolk, Va., rather than close all the schools in the state, Gov. Almand reopened the Norfolk schools after the court order came down.

We believe that HOPE offers a realistic and truly American way out of this crisis. We hope that you will join in this historic battle, the most significant in the South of the 20th century. If Georgians show common sense and courage and wisdom, we can set an example for other southern states to follow, and an example for the entire free world. That is why we ask you to stand up and be counted. That is why we ask you tonight to help spread HOPE through Georgia!

Mrs. Beverly Downing - Athens
Mrs. John B. Benson - Athens
Mrs. Herbert Otto - Athens
Rev. James Hooten - Gainsville
Rev. Richard Bates - Gainsville
Mr. John Franklin- Marietta
Mr. W. C. Henson - Cartersville
Mrs. Thomas Breeden - Atlanta
Mrs. Hamilton Lokey - Atlanta
Mrs. J. C. Harris - Atlanta
Mr. Gene Jones - Atlanta
Mrs. Ross Greene - Atlanta

Mrs. Pauley asked for progress reports.

Mrs. Downing reported that about 25 persons have formed "HOPE Athens." A much larger group is interested in the school crises about which they are holding open meetings, to gain information.

The three Athens ladies expressed the belief that eventually most of the larger group would support HOPE. Mrs. Downing said that they want to support HOPE financially as soon as possible.

Mr. Hooten stated that HOPE Gainsville meets approximately once a month. He is chairman and has a program committee and a secretarial committee. James Mackey spoke at one of their recent meetings. He suggested that

1) HOPE Executive Committee provide chapters with suggested programs of action.
2) HOPE move toward a broader base of improving public education (i.e. do research on teachers' salaries, facilities; seek information through "Better Schools"- N.Y.C. - Dr. Conant's study, etc.)

Mr. Henson reported that Cartersville groups have had speakers on the school crisis, but so far, they have formed no HOPE Chapter. He made the following general suggestions:

1) Educators ought to be encouraged to come out for public education
2) Civic Clubs throughout Georgia should be talked to. Now would be a good time to write them, to get on a program within the next 6 months.
3) Sponsor meetings of the District Govenors of Kiwanis, Lions, Civitans, Rotary, etc. and secure their active help in educating the people of Georgia on the current crisis.

Mr. Franklin gave a brief resume of the way HOPE Marietta was organized. It began with a discussion group in a home, at which time another meeting was planned, with each person agreeing to bring a friend. A chairman was elected. The third meeting drew 150 people. The fourth meeting was an organizational one. A large rally was held, at which Jake Ward spoke.

Mrs. Greene was asked to give some pointers on planning a rally. She named the following key committees: attendance, publicity, arrangements, program. Telephoning is very important: ten people call ten others and so on. The phone calls should be followed by a card.

Gene Jones offered to give help to HOPE Chapters in setting up financial procedures. He asked that chapters give as much money as possible to help defray the large cost of publications, etc.

Mrs. Pauley asked if Chapters would approve of an "Activity Report" form, to be sent to her periodically. Such a procedure would fulfil a dual purpose:

1) Keep State Committee informed
2) Enable State Committee to channel good practices, programs to all Chapters.

It was suggested that we stress state-wide organization, and refer Georgia HOPE, instead of by towns.

HOPE INTER-CHAPTER NEWS SEPTEMBER 17, 1959

GOOD NEWS FROM ROME
Chairman of the Board of Education, Dr. Robert Norton, publicly endorsed HOPE. He said that he understood that HOPE was influencing public opinion to keep the schools open. "If that is true, then I'm in favor of it. I think it's time somebody tried to generate public opinion in this direction.", he said at a P.T.A. sponsored meeting.

"WE THE UNDERSIGNED, ARE IN FAVOR OF CONTINUING THE OPERATION OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN GEORGIA"
These are the words on the HOPE petition. Seems Dr. Norton understood correctly. We hope petitions were available at the Rome P.T.A. meeting. Won't you see that one is readily available at any such meetings that you sponsor or attend? We are enclosing a few copies with this Newsheet. HOPE wants to have jillions of John Doe signatures, with which to impress our legislators, come January! - But, please get them to the HOPE office by December 15. This due date has been moved up from December 1, to allow for the second week in December to be designated as "sign a petition and save our schools week", in Atlanta. Would you like to make this a state-wide week? Let us hear from you.
Signatures from every part of Georgia will speak volumes more to our General Assembly, than will Atlanta signatures only.
This is one big state-wide project that needs all of us working together on it to make a really impressive showing. Every signature will mean a vote for public schools, in compliance with the law, --- and conversely, a vote against closing every school in Georgia, which is the only other choice!

HERE'S A QUOTABLE QUOTE
for you unfortunate folk who don't "see" Ralph McGill regularly: "The most tragic aspect of the blind, massive defiance in the hard-core states is not defiance itself. It is the inability of the South to reduce the school problem of its steadily declining Negro population to rational terms. Leadership, which from the beginning has deceived the people as to the alternatives, consistently has substituted myth for fact, emotion for reason.

"Going to school has been made into the image of an intimate social gathering, rather than a place where children go separately to be taught. The myth of forced social mixing has become a fixed one, as if attending classes was similar to attending a dance. The myth of a school being overwhelmed by mass numbers of Negroes is fostered despite the fact controlling pupil placement laws have been declared constitutional."
Therefore, it would seem that legal desegregation would bring only a few qualified Negroes into white schools.

ANOTHER WORD TO REASSURE ANXIOUS PARENTS comes from the Atlanta Constitution also, special to that paper from Joe Hatcher of the Nashville Tennessean: "The trend in Nashville of fewer Negro enrollees was seen as probably typical in the token integration areas - the Negro students preferring to stay in their own schools, and gradually transferring out of the white schools all the way to the top ....
"An estimated 325 Negro students were eligible to enroll in predominately white schools --- The 36 Negro students (who did enroll) represented the lowest percentage yet ***
"The largest number of Negroes in any one white school was eight in an area where both races live near the school. But there were 11 Negroes in this school last year. A number of those enrolled last year failed to enter this term, presumably returning to the Negro School."

Omar Carmichael, School Superintendent of Louisville, Ky., on a recent visit to Atlanta told what happened in Lexington, Ky. where Negro parents were permitted to send their children to any school of their choice. Out of a total of 29,000 Negro children in the Lexington school system, 29 only were entered into formerly all-white schools.

HAVE YOU TOLD YOUR BOARD OF EDUCATION THAT YOU WANT PUBLIC SCHOOLS?
Betty Vinson, President of the Georgia League of Women Voters says, in the August Voter - "Do you know that some of your elected representatives and leaders are saying that they WILL CHOOSE TO CLOSE ALL THE SCHOOLS ... when the issue is finally drawn ... WHY? Because they believe that you, the people, have given the legislature and the Governor a mandate to close the schools rather than permit desegregation anywhere."

DO LET US HEAR YOUR NEWS!

The "Good News from Rome" delighted us all!

HOPE is organized for action - Let's act!
"Help Our Public Education"

HOPE Projects

Telephone	1.	Build a telephone tree. Ask ten people to get ten people to get ten people who want to maintain public schools. Add these names to your mailing list. This means more people will do more talking about public schools.
Meet	2.	Hold small meetings, morning coffees, coke parties, luncheons, to discuss HOPE. Informal groups in the back yard while the mothers oversee small children's play. This can also be a "Dollar for HOPE" meeting and be fund raising as well as a time for discussion of the school problem.
	3.	Have a big meeting or rally. This carefully planned with much publicity, newspaper, T.V., radio, telephoning etc. This gets the information to a large group since your publicity reaches many more than the meeting.
Petitions	4.	Set yourself a goal and work for signatures on the petitions. 100,000 signatures from all over Georgia can influence the General Assembly next January. Also, as people are asked to sign, more people think and talk about public schools.
Observers	5.	Have regular observers at your school board meetings. Try to learn more of the problems and help the board to consider planning ahead. Perhaps this will mean a Louisville rather than a Little Rock in your town.
Mailing	6.	Publish a bulletin or newsletter. Mail to many people in your area. The state wide committee should help furnish news.
	7.	Have a project in nearby rural areas where county mail boxes can be surfeited with HOPE literature. Many people read when they will not attend a meeting.
Literature	8.	Put HOPE materials everywhere: Doctor's offices, Church meetings, Civic Club meetings. Educate!
Speakers	9.	Form a speakers bureau. Don't wait for invitations, ask to be heard. Prepare well and the heckler will only add to the interest.
Organize	10.	Organize a HOPE committee of at least five people in your neighboring counties. The voices of one or two in a community added to the multitude throughout the state will make a difference.

USE YOUR IMAGINATION! You know the best projects for your town.

SOME DAY IN THE FUTURE, GEORGIA WILL HAVE ONE OF THE BEST

Aids in Organizing and Maintaining HOPE Chapters

Organization Tips

You can start "small" and grow.
Work toward having as broad a base as possible, which will touch many segments of community life.
Elect necessary officers, but steer clear of too much formal organization (Most chapters have a chairman, secretary, treasurer; appoint committees as needed; elect delegate to represent chapter, along with chairman, on State Board of Directors)
Decide on a plan of action
Meet regularly

Program Tips

1) Get as many people as possible to let their legislators and the Governor know how they feel about wanting the schools kept open.
2) Sponser "block meetings" to discuss the crisis. Distribute HOPE materials. Seek the help of organizations who are in sympathy, such as the League of Women Voters, United Church Women, B'nai B'rith.
3) Have at least one money-raising activity for HOPE during the summer such as a "benefit", entertainment, sales (bake, etc.), canvas, silver tea.
4) Get as many petitions filled in as possible, and as many car owners to use stickers as will.
5) Encourage every supporter to talk or correspond with all Georgia "Kith and Kin". This network of "cousins" should reach every nook and cranny!
6) Publicize all HOPE activities through every possible medium. Appoint a Newsletter correspondent to send news in to the State office by the 15th of each month.
7) Have at least one community wide meeting during summer to build interest in HOPE generally.

Finance Tips

Order materials from office on a cost basis. (Most items cost .05 each)
Urge supporters to pledge a certain amount monthly to help defray expenses of Georgia HOPE, Inc.
Call on Gene Jones, Finance chairman, for help in setting up chapter financial procedures.

TIPS ON ORGANIZATION

You know: There are probably people in every town who think as you think. There are going to be some difficulties in every place. Just what you never know. But they aren't as difficult to cope with when you realize they will exist!

Get all the help you can before you actually go - Ask for names from everybody you meet, librarian, minister, church women, club women, professional men, Scouts, college alumni, etc.

Mail material ahead. No letter is needed, just the blue card and the brochure.

Work to get the community to call the first meeting - not you. Make it sound simple. Just get in a friend and let's talk a little.

Don't push - but encourage. Tell Mrs. Jones that Mrs. Smith is interested. I don't think the ministers would have ever taken the initiative in Rome if we had not been able to give them the names of several people who would support but would not lead the movement. Supporters are easier to find than the leader. All you really need is the leader.

Don't delay too long before you actually get to the place chosen. You will never have things planned and set up the way you want them, but go ahead. Then if a town seems sticky, move on to another and wait a little for another contact in town No. 1.

In fact, I think get mailing out in several places at one time, and try for contacts in several places. Some will break where you least expect it.

The more you can know about the local situation the better --- but again in an issue like this you can't really know.

Try to get more than just one clique but don't stop the movement because you don't have a hugh cross section. If you end up with a committee of five in any of your surrounding counties, I think it would be great. The committee could have certain projects different from a big group. But they could be ready to receive materials, pass them along to some others and speak to their legislators at the right time.

I see a few HOPE chapters and many HOPE committees over the state. But who knows, it may not work this way! I think more people are waking up every day.

This isn't much help --- I'm sure --- this is an individual job. One person find and sell another person. But mainly we can start talk!

Good Luck!

(Original letter to each chapter chairman: Franklin, Hooten, Downing, Robertson Rogers, Rivvis,-- Copy of minutes to be enclosed)

Dear ____

We hope that you will read the enclosed minutes carefully, since several ~~discussions~~ decisions affect chapter participation.

The first meeting of the state-wide board of Directors will be held in Atlanta between Oct. 1st and 10th. Please check your preference on the enclosed card and return it as soon as possible. The choice of the majority will determine the date. Local members gladly offer hospitality for that night.

So that your chapter will be officially represented, will you see that a Board member and an alternate are appointed? Both may attend if desired. Please feel free to send suggestions for the agenda.

~~Your help is needed now, on compiling names of people, suitable and willing men and women to serve on the State Advisory Board.~~ Please send us from one to five names as soon as you can. They will be ~~asked~~ contacted by letters from the State office.

The minutes describe the plan of monthly pledges undertaken by the Board of Directors and the Executive committees. Will you please discuss this with your committee, with the thought of undertaking a similar plan? We beleive that the next six months are critical ones, and are sure that you share with us the determination to "stay in business" as long as necessary.

We are proud of the fine work you are doing, and are looking foward to working with you more closely, through our State Board.

Sincerely,

Frances Breeden (Mrs, Tom)
Chairman, Board of Directors

Dear Mr. Franklin,

We hope that you will read the enclosed minutes carefully, since several decisions affect chapter participation.

The first meeting of the state-wide Board of Directors will be held in Atlanta between October 1st and 10th. Please check your preference on the enclosed card and return it as soon as possible. The choice of the majority will determine the date. Local members gladly offer hospitality for that night.

So that your chapter will be officially represented, will you see that a Board member and an alternate are appointed? Both may attend if desired. Please feel free to send suggestions for the agenda.

As you will note in the minutes, it was decided to secure a State Advisory Board. This Board will be composed of Georgians who are influential on a state-wide or sectional basis. The Virginia Committee had such a Board. Because of its prestige, it enabled them to organize in certain towns much more readily. The enclosed letter will be sent to prospects. It is in securing names of these prospects that we need your immediate help. Please send us from one to five names as soon as you can. They will be contacted by letters from the State office.

Step by Step Hope Expands

7. Pauley

1. Mrs Mason Robertson has been elected the chairman of the newly formed Savannah group. Many enthusiastic men and women are giving the group support.

2. Columbus had its initial meeting Tuesday night July 21 with 55 present/ Several Columbus pediatricians were on the committee that called the meeting. Dr. Walker Rivers is the temporary chairman.

3. Five members of the Athens group met with a group of Augusta women on July 15 to discuss the objectives of Hope and the possibility of organizing an Augusta chapter. Many excellent suggestions were made that will benefit the statewide growth of Hope.

4. Two members of the Emory Department of Education have done an interesting paper on the costs of private schools. This will be made available immediately through the Southern Regional Council if you care to ask for a copy.

5. Dr Donald Ross Green presented the paper at an open Hope executive meeting on July 29. The data proved to the audience that it is impossible to educate all the children through any sort of a private school arrangement.

5. One of the Hope volunteer typists recently called from the hospital to request that her typing be sent to the hospital so she could continue her Hope job without interruption. She was hospitalized because of the birth of a son! Congratulations.

6. We are often asked "What kind of people are in Hope"? All kinds, with perhaps a majority of young couples with school age children. There may be more professional men than business men. However more and more it seems that business men are wanting to try to turn the tide so that it won't happen here.

7 A minister in rural Georgia told a Hope committee member that his men members are aware and alarmed over the probability of closed schools. He says that they know that closed public schools will mean no schools for their children.

8. Mr. William Rodgers, chairman of the Rome group of Hope, has made some excellent suggestions for a new statement of Hope's policy. The Directors will consider the new wording at their next meeting.

9. Send us news to pass along!

State

Notes taken at Augusta/Leadership Meeting, July 15, 1959

1) Re: draft of policy statement, sent in by William Rogers of Rome - Group thought it good; suggested that point 6 be incorporated in preface.

2) Re: petitions
Suggested door-to-door canvas, following a rally; take basket to collect "dollars for HOPE"

3) Re: rallies
Suggested that they be held concurrently, state-wide, followed the next day by the above action.

4) Re: State organization
(a) Suggested dividing state geographically, allocating to each chapter a certain section. Perhaps the ten congressional districts could be use, sub-dividing where possible.
(b) Send each chapter the territory for which it is responsible, along with clear directions on how to organize committees or chapters; also include their portion of the map showing the vote on the private school amendment.

5) Re: communication
Importance of keeping in close touch (State headquarters and chapters) was stressed. A mimeographed news sheet could be sent out often, and should include chapter news, as well as items from state office.

6) Re: a legislative committee
The group believed it to be important that the Executive Committee appoint one as soon as possible.

7) Re: State Board of Directors
It was pointed out by Mrs. Pauley, Chairman of State Organization that the Incorporation papers call for each chapter electing a delegate and alternate. It was suggested that the Board of Directors meet quarterly.

8) Re: State Advisory Board
This was approved, and those present were asked to send in names, with suggestion of best method of contacting.

9) Misc. suggestions:
(a) distribute a simple hand bill this summer, directed to mothers "Do you want your children to have a permanent vacation? Support HOPE, and be sure they will enter school every September".
(b) use of out-door posters.

Betty M. Harris , Executive Director

Notes from Beverly Downing, July 21, 1959:

1) Suggestion: try to get radio and T.V. to promote a specified time in Nov. (maybe a couple of days) during which every voter would be urged to write or call his legislators and tell them what they want: No Schools, or schools with some Integration.

Athens want to talk to Ray Moore

2) Athens is making headway with their top business men - they are pushing this harder than anything else now.

3) Wants us to divide state, and let them know what they are responsible for, in organization.

4) Likes State Advisory Board, and would like to see it formed as soon as possible.

5) Athens is pushing petitions

6) Athens will try to raise money

MEMO

TO: HOPE Chapters
FROM: HOPE Executive Committee
RE: (1) Financial Straits
(2) Petition - Need for 100,000 signatures

First, Finances:

We have just about scraped the bottom of the barrel, to pay for the full-page ads, plus normal current expenses. These are about $1500 per month, to run the office, pay for printing, and large mailings.

Until the good news comes that HOPE, Inc. has been declared tax-exempt, we will be skating on thin ice financially. That is, unless the chapters and/or individual supporters come to the rescue.

Therefore, we urge each chapter to come through soon with as sizable amount as possible.

Also, please urge individual members to send in the "pledge coupon" which may be clipped from the last Newsletter, or just write us to that effect. If every supporter sends only $1.00 per month for the next six months, we will be able to manage, without curtailing our program. So, please ------ and thank you!

Second, Petitions:

100,000 Georgia signatures will speak loud and clear to Governor Vandiver and our legislators. We can amass that many by next January if every single HOPE supporter does his share.

HOPE will publish no names that appear on the petitions. When 100,000 have been secured, they will be presented with a flourish to the Governor just before the convening of the Georgia Legislature.

Begin by getting your own petition filled, and ask each person who signs it to take a petition and do likewise. A Chain-reaction is needed!

Send petitions to kin-folk and friends whereever they may be, in our state, and ask them to give them wide circulation.

Urge all who take petitions to send them to the HOPE state office as soon as they are filled in, or no later than December 1, 1959.

We will send more petitions to you, or you may mimeograph your own, exactly like the enclosed one, please.

These two requests, for money and signatures, are urgent. No one knows better than we do that hard work will be required to realize both in the abundance that they are so sorely needed.

But, our public schools are at stake. Need we say more?

Aids in Organizing and Maintaining HOPE Chapters

Organization Tips

You can start "small" and grow.
Work toward having as broad a base as possible, which will touch many segments of community life.
Elect necessary officers, but steer clear of too much formal organization (Most chapters have a chairman, secretary, treasurer; appoint committees as needed; elect delegate to represent chapter, along with chairman, on State Board of Directors)
Decide on a plan of action
Meet regularly

Program Tips

1) Get as many people as possible to let their legislators and the Governor know how they feel about wanting the schools kept open.
2) Sponser "block meetings" to discuss the crisis. Distribute HOPE materials. Seek the help of organizations who are in sympathy, such as the League of Women Voters, United Church Women, B'nai B'rith.
3) Have at least one money-raising activity for HOPE during the summer such as a "benefit", entertainment, sales (bake, etc.), canvas, silver tea.

7) Have at least one community wide meeting during summer to build interest in HOPE generally.

Finance Tips

Order materials from office on a cost basis. (Most items cost .05 each)
Urge supporters to pledge a certain amount monthly to help defray expenses of Georgia HOPE, Inc.
Call on Gene Jones, Finance chairman, for help in setting up chapter financial procedures.

1959

At the June 1 meeting of Athenians interested in the work of Hope, 25 people were present at the home of Mrs. Beverley B. Downing, 359 Hampton Court.

A report was made on the meeting the 4 member Steering Committee had held since the group's last general meeting. The following three immediate objectives were suggested:

1. The distribution of HOPE literature throughout Athens.
2. The distribution of this literature outside the confines of Athens within the state.
3. The giving of parties, group meetings, etc. to both spread the idea of HOPE and to raise money for expenses.

A discussion was held concerning the telephone committee's work and it was decided that when a new development in the present situation breaks, each of the people present at the meeting should be responsible for phoning a list of people to stir up interest in decisions made,etc.

A teacher suggested the idea that we might well join forces, unofficially at first, with other groups concerned with public education (local and state PTA, boards of education, etc.) to see if similar aims are not present. He suggested that at least informal talks with leaders of these groups would let HOPE know where these other organizations stand on the problem.

Two medical doctors agreed to approach all the other M.D's in town concerning the placement of HOPE literature in their waiting rooms. A lawyer agreed to do the same thing with other lawyers in Athens. Three women volunteered to approach other public places and the suggestions was made that a table of HOPE literature at such meetings as Child Studygroups, circles, etc. would be a good idea.

Names of interested (or approachable) people in other Georgia were collected with the idea of writing and/or visiting them to see if interest could be stirred up across the state.

Plans were formed to investigate the cost of advertising in the local paper.

Three women present agreed to plan and give a @Dollars for HOPE" bridge as a fund raising affair.

A six member Membership Committee was established with representatives of the university faculty, business, and professional families included.

It was suggested that each of us contact (personally or by letter) Governor Vandiver and the two representatives of Clarke County, Chappell Matthews and Julian Cox.

The group selected a treasurer and established that all money collected should be turned over to her.

Mrs. Downing agreed to find out the cost of the printed HOPE material and to report on this at the next meeting.

The group decided to send $25.00 to Atlanta now to cover the cost of literature until further plans could be made as to the exact amount of printed matter we can use.

The Board of Directors of H.O.P.E., Clarke Co., met at the home of Dr. and Mrs. John Elder, October 19, at 8 p.m. Mrs. Beverly Downing, Chairman, told about the State Board of Directors meeting she attended in Atlanta. There, the fact was stressed that the schools in Atlanta and later all over the state would be closed if the legislature were not forced by public opinion to change some laws to permit possible limited integration. The Atlanta chapter of H.O.P.E. reported planning a big rally on December 8 and a meeting Nov. 4, at which Everette Tucker, Jr., Board of Education Chairman at Little Rock and Boyd Ridgeway, Executive Director of the Chamber of Commerce of Little Rock would speak.

James Barrow was asked for his opinion on the situation and stated that he believed that, under present laws, the governor would stop tax money to those school systems which were forced to integrate. In Athens, this would mean that the schools would lose $1,200,000 out of a $1,900,000 budget. It was stated that the future work of H.O.P.E. in Athens would be on two levels---Clarke County and State.

The following areas of concentration for work in Clarke County were discussed:

1.) Contact with radio station operators to determine their attitudes and to arrange for publicity.

2.) Contact with Chappel Matthews and Julian Cox to determine their position. A committee of Beverly Downing and Janet Stegeman was appointed to visit them. It was suggested that they be asked the following questions:

What is your opinion of H.O.P.E.?
Are you in favor of keeping our schools open?
Do you propose to initiate or support anything in the legislature to help keep our schools open?

The possibility of public panel discussions or debate in the legislature was discussed.

3.)Contact with the Athens Chamber of Commerce about a statement of their position and a possible meeting with the men from Little Rock. W.H.Benson and James Barrow were appointed as a committee to visit them and get their reaction to the proposed meeting. It was suggested that the ways and means committee see business people for contributions to H.O.P.E. after the Little Rock meeting.

4.)Contact with all school P.T.A.'s. It was proposed that a 10 minute statement of H.O.P.E.'s position be made before the P.T.A.'s it it is impossible to arrange for an entire meeting.

5.)Contact with members of the Board of Education with the purpose of explaining the position of H.O.P.E. in regard to the school situation.

6.)Contact with students--both high school and University. Joanna Traylor and Bill Rogers were appointed to a committee to start work in this direction.

7.)John Benson was asked to call a meeting of members of the University who have shown an interest in H.O.P.E.

8.)It was reported that the Athens Ministerial Association have requested that H.O.P.E. present a program at their meeting on November 2. A committee of Bill Rogers, Beverly Downing, John Wilkins and John Elder were appointed to be in charge of the program. It was suggested that the program take the form of a panel with representatives from H.O.P.E. and ministers discussing the ethical side of the problem.

9.)The Atlanta chapter of H.O.P.E. has requested that all petitions be in by the first week in December.

It was moved and seconded that the following be the officers of H.O.P.E.:

Chairman Beverly Downing
Vice-chm. Janet Stegeman
Secretary Mary Boyd
Treasurer Joyce Woodworth

The executive committee was appointed as follows:

Beverly Downing Betty Elder
Bill Rogers
June Rogers
Gwen Smith
Janet Stegeman

John Benson was appointed as an alternate to the State Board of Directors.

The following changes and additions were made in the standing committees:

Pauline Berger was transfered to local distribution of literature from liason with Emily Brinkley,

Mary Boyd was appointed to the letter writing committee and ,

Nat Parker was to be in charge of local visitation of ministers.

HOPE'S POSITION

"HOPE, Help Our Public Education, Inc." was incorporated in December 1958 in Fulton County on the petition of 17 citizens of the State of Georgia. These men and women felt the need for an organization whose specific purpose would be "to give direction, guidance, information, and program to all citizens of Georgia who desire to continue the operation of the public schools of this State". (Quoted from the petition for incorporation). This statement has been prepared and adopted by democratically elected representatives of units of "HOPE, Help Our Public Education, Inc." for the purpose of increasing the effectiveness of local unit efforts.

The efforts of HOPE to accomplish the purpose defined in the petition are based upon a sincere conviction that a very real and present danger exists to the continued operation of the public schools of Georgia.

HOPE takes the position:

1. That Georgia cannot continue to exist in a state of health without a system of public schools available to all its citizens; that abolition of Public Education would inevitably lead to economic, social, moral, and even civil deterioration; and that no consequences which now appear even remotely possible can justify elimination of public education.
2. That private schools are beyond the reach of most people; that no system of such schools can possibly meet even the minimum needs of our children; that private schools are not an acceptable substitute in case of even temporary closing of a few public schools; and that their operation only tends to perpetuate rather than relieve an undesirable condition.
3. That even temporary closing of any public school is an extreme and an indefensible action, unworthy of Georgia citizens and legislators.
4. That HOPE does not and will not encourage or support action or litigation aimed at closing any public school at any time.
5. That HOPE supports continued operation of public schools in strict accordance with established laws and statutes, recognizing that any conflict therein must eventually be resolved.
6. That the responsibility for continued operation of public schools ultimately rests with the individual citizen through his acceptance of the privileges of democratic self-government; and that this responsibility cannot be abdicated.

A Southern Point of View

BY

ELIZA PASCHALL

A Southerner who was born in Charleston, South Carolina, and who received her A.B. from Agnes Scott College, ELIZA PASCHALL has lived in Atlanta, Georgia, for the past twenty-four years. She is the mother of three children who attend public school in Atlanta and has been active in many local community organizations.

IT IS common practice among Southern spokesmen to refer to the "Southern point of view." Our capitol in Atlanta resounds with speeches which say that all Georgians agree. And it is always stated or implied that what they all agree on is that our present system of a legally racially segregated society is best.

With the threat of closed public schools, it has now become "realistic" to admit that, though there may still be doubt as to the jurisdiction of the U.S. Supreme Court over the state of Georgia, we should act as though the jurisdiction were legal rather than shut down all our schools. It has become "courageous" to accept token integration rather than have our children denied schools. All this realism and this courage, it is made quite clear, go against the Southern point of view.

I am a Southerner. From my point of view, not only does the U.S. Supreme Court have jurisdiction over Georgia, but the school decision was a correct one. Our schools are separate but not equal, and even if they were, legal racial segregation has no place in a democracy. It is a hangover from slavery. Historically it can be explained in the South, but it cannot be justified from my Southern point of view.

I am tired of justification by comparison. "But it is really so much worse in the North. Look at Chicago. And what about South Africa?" I do not set my standards of morality by what others do, in the North or in Chicago or in South Africa. I set them by what I believe in my heart, and I do believe in my heart that segregation is a disease that infects all parts of a being, human or political. It is a germ from which I should like to protect my children as much as possible, regardless of its virulence in other places.

My Southern point of view cannot accept the argument that a school board increases its effectiveness in administering a law by ignoring it until forced to obey by a court order. "They had to wait until court action, and they had to contest the suit," I am told. Why? I do not see that reluctance to enforce the law necessarily increases public support for those who are finally forced to abide by the law, or that it increases respect for other laws among adults or among youths.

I have heard these officials defended by those who "do not believe in segregation either" on the grounds that ignoring the law is a necessary political move, presumably to gain support of those citizens who prefer that the law be disobeyed. The implication is that the majority of citizens fall into this category. But I believe that there are many Southerners who expect their public officials to honor their oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States.

I do not agree with the "realistic liberals," who daily play the game which has as its primary rule: To be influential you must stay in the group. What influence do we have if we constantly yield to the pressure of "This is not the time. It would cause trouble"? Above all else, the group says, one must not cause trouble. The chorus goes like this: "We would have no objections, but others might. We might lose members. We might lose business. We might lose an organization." They never seem to consider that by positive action we might gain a soul, and there are many lost souls in the South today.

I resent the time and effort this problem which we create for ourselves takes from constructive efforts to solve more demanding problems that are not of our own making. At every point in the life of the community, these questions rise to plague us. Shall we admit Negroes? Where could we meet? Whom would we offend? The easy way out is to say that the Negroes prefer it this way and that they do not want to come to our affairs. I do not presume to know the minds of any group of citizens. No doubt many Negroes would not be interested. But I would let any citizen choose to participate or not according to his interests, not according to law or class.

Let me list from my personal experience a few examples of the dilemma facing liberals.

We have elected a Negro to the board of education, but it is difficult for civic groups to arrange meetings at places to which all members of the board may be admitted. The resources of a state educational institution are at the disposal of citizens in planning community projects if only the white population of the community participates. A United Fund agency has a fine International Club, where foreign students are invited to come and meet American students. Negro students are invited if they are from foreign countries, but not if they are Americans. In this instance, American birth seems to be a liability.

A local civic group interested in international affairs votes to affiliate with a national organization, a member of the national board of which is a local resident. He is also a college president and a Negro. He is expected not to attend local meetings. (He hardly would have time anyway, inasmuch as he travels a great deal representing our country on foreign missions.)

And what about private lives? There is no law that I know of regulating whom I may have in my home, but here in the South one always wonders about what the neighbors will think. "Will they understand?" Understand what? That I like some people and not others, but not on the basis of the color of their hair, or their eyes, or their skin? That I want my children to have an opportunity to know other Americans, as well as visitors from India, Pakistan, Germany, and Australia? At our local, integrated Unitarian-Universalist Church, my child has a Negro classmate with whom she has developed a strong friendship. The friend's father is a university professor, honored in his profession, chosen to assist in the planning of the 1960 White House Conference on Youth. But when his daughter comes to see my daughter, they do not go to the corner drugstore. I am not sure what would happen, and so I keep making excuses when asked point-blank, "May we go?"

"You are too sudden," I am told. "Don't try to change things overnight." Eighteen sixty to nineteen sixty: "sudden"? Nineteen fifty-four to nineteen sixty: "deliberate speed"? Our spokesmen say that others do not understand our problems. What is there to understand in a plan to give up all schools rather than admit one Negro child to one "white" school? Substitute "Hungarian and Russian" for "Negro and white," and would we call it democracy? Substitute "Jew and German" for "Negro and white"; would we call it democracy?

No matter how big our other problems are, we evidently feel that none is as great as accepting the fact of certain children's sitting down together to learn.

In a federal court I listened to the judge announce that, by his order, henceforth there were to be no more white and Negro schools in Atlanta. But the fact remains that all the Negroes are assigned to certain schools and all whites to other schools, and all the teachers end up in the same fashion. Even as we talk of possible desegregation, we speak in terms of a Negro child's asking for a transfer to a "white" school, though the judge has said there are no specifically white schools any more.

Week in and week out, at luncheon meetings, we salute the flag and pledge "liberty and justice for all." We do not have to meet the eyes of the Negro waiters, who are standing in the back, for our eyes are looking forward at the flag.

While we meet and eat, we are likely to endorse crash programs to improve the facilities and the treatment of our mentally ill, who are increasing in numbers each year. Yet how can we avoid split personalities, delusions of grandeur, flights from reality as individuals when we indulge in them as a society?

I have sat in the gallery of the state capitol and listened to the governor (several governors, in fact) and the legislators repeat, like a broken record, "We will never — never — never —" And I have wondered, What are they afraid of? Is it just habit? Do they think this is what is expected of them by the people? And do the people, hearing their officials, think the safe thing to do is to repeat after them, each following the other, round and round like a dog chasing his tail?

I am weary of the chase. I can no longer live with my own silence. I am tired of wondering what the neighbors will think. I would declare to the whole world, including my neighbors, that from my point of view democracy is a serious and wonderful thing, that it must be lived as well as believed in, that the game of "I don't mind, but I thought you did" is a vicious circle that binds and restricts and stunts minds and hearts, that if to thine own self thou art not true, thou canst not then be true to any man.

There is another Southerner whose view I would accept as my own. That Southerner is George Washington. The words are "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair." The standard is the Constitution of the United States.

A Statement by Clergymen of New Orleans

Urge Schools Preserved

A resolution urging preservation of the public school system and deploring "hatred and scorn for those of another race" has been signed by 94 ministers and rabbis of the New Orleans area.

The statement in full:

To whom it may concern:

We the undersigned ministers and rabbis of the Greater New Orleans area speak as individual citizens of Louisiana and the United States, having authority to represent no other than ourselves. We speak in humility and penitence. At the same time, we speak out of the deep conviction of our souls as to what is right. We maintain that the following principles must pertain in our consideration of the problems before us.

1. There must be the preservation of freedom of speech at all costs. Unless there is free expression and discussion it is impossible to resolve any problem. Economic reprisals, social ostracism and even physical violence are constant threats to those who do not conform to the strict patterns of segregation. As we insist upon the right of honest conviction—whether right or wrong — to be heard, we would pay tribute to the courageous individuals and groups who are speaking out that our problems must be faced in a spirit of realism, sanity and good will.

2. As Americans and as religious leaders we must obey the law. Those who insist that the decision of the supreme court on segregation in the public schools has no binding force do great injury to our people. The supreme court's interpretation of the Constitution has the effect of law in our country. It is possible for that court to err, just as it is possible for Congress to enact bad laws. The citizens of our country have the right to work through legal processes to secure the correction of judicial errors or the repeal of undesirable legislation. They do not have the right to defy laws simply because they personally hold them to be unwise or harmful. A policy of obeying only those laws or those rulings of the court with which we agree leads inevitably to anarchy. It is time for us to face up to the fact that, under the ruling of the supreme court, made in the discharge of its constitutional authority, enforced segregation in the public schools is now without support in, and contrary to, national law. At times in her history the church has opposed civil law in the name of the claims of the higher laws of God. However, we believe that the Constitution of the US in its provisions for human rights is in accord with Divine law, and we must, therefore, learn to live with and under the law.

We reaffirm our conviction that the integrity of each race should be maintained on a basis of mutual esteem and free choice, rather than of force. There are some areas in which some desegregation in schools at this time would be possible without insurmountable difficulty, as has already been demonstrated in certain sections of the South; while there are other areas where such desegregation would involve needless hardship and grave danger. We have the hope that, if our leaders will offer evidence of good faith toward providing constitutional rights for all citizens, the federal government will be willing to leave the working out of details in local hands. We believe it is possible, under the ruling of the supreme court, for states to take reasonable steps to comply with the law of the land and at the same time give due consideration to local situations and avoid an indisriminate desegregation of the public schools.

3. The public school system must be preserved. Many of our people have been led to believe that through some ficticious legal device we could close our public schools and still provide for public education through tax funds. Recent developments in Arkansas and Virginia serve to make it abundantly clear that any such hope is based solely upon wishful thinking. The choice which confronts us now is either the end of an enforced segregation in public schools or no public schools whatever. We are alarmed to note that many political leaders are apparently willing to offer no better solution than the closing of public schools and the destruction of public education in order to maintain what has been inappropriately described as "our sacred way of life." It is inconceivable that the South should deliberately destroy its dearly bought system of public education. The results of such action in the impoverishment of countless lives, in the loss to our section, even from a purely economic viewpoint, would be a tragedy of the first magnitude. It is not likely that the South would ever recover fully from the consequences of such action. Obviously, the closing of the public schools means a small and favored portion of our youth would be educated in private institutions, while the great majority, white and Negro, would receive no school training worthy of the name. No democratic society can tolerate that situation, nor do we believe our citizens wish to sacrifice the welfare of our youth.

In this connection we would voice an emphatic protest against any suggestion that church property be used as a means of circumcenting the law of the nation. The churches and synagogues owe a tremendous debt to the state and this we believe they would gladly repay in any legitimate way possible. There are times when the educational equipment of the churches should be offered to supplement the public school buildings in providing space for our growing school population, provided that the separation of church and state shall always be recognized and maintained in such an agreement. We concur that churches and synagogues have the right, as they have always had, to engage as they may deem wise in educational enterprise in the interest of their constituencies. We believe, however, their facilities should not be offered nor demanded as a means for defying the constituted authority of our national government.

4. Hatred and scorn for those of another race, or for those who hold a position different from our own can never be justified. All hatred between races and groups within society carries with it the constant threat of violence and bloodshed, as has been evidenced by the bombing of churches, synagogues, and schools. Defiance of one law leads to disrespect for all law. We would call upon our political leaders scrupulously to avoid the type of inflammatory utterance which has characterized too many public pronouncements in recent months and to exert an influence for sanity, for justice, and for kindness. We believe that multitudes of voters in the South as in all America are far more prepared to respond to and support fair-minded and statemanlike attitudes and policies in political life than these men have realized. In any event, political power is by no means so important as to justify its attainment by the sacrifice of justice, of knidness, and of truth, and by the unleashing of these emotions which threaten the very life of our people.

5. Communication between responsible leaders of the races must be mainained. The time of danger is also the time of opportunity. It may well be that we are passing through that darkest hour which comes just before the dawn. Never has there been greater need than now for men of good will in both races to voice their convictions, to exert their influence, and to maintain open lines of communication. We are heartened by the intelligent concern and struggle of an increasing number of groups who are facing the issue and its implications. We are likewise heartened by the constructive results which are coming from those lines of communication which do exist between the races.

6. Our difficulties cannot be solved in our own strength or in human wisdom but only through prayer, obedience to God, and under His blessing. The situation which confronts us is one which calls for sincere penitence, for earnest prayer, for clear thought, and for courageous action.

INTRODUCTION

In the present crisis over segregation, many people believe that New Orleans public schools will be closed this coming September. We feel that this would not be good. We believe that it would hurt our children, our schools and teachers, our business community, and our city as a whole. We feel that the only sound course of action is to keep the schools open, and to try by every possible means to make them better, rather than to destroy, even temporarily, the free public education which is so vital a part of our American society.

We have come to this conclusion largely by studying what has happened in two cities where public schools were closed -- Norfolk, Virginia, and Little Rock, Arkansas. In Norfolk the schools were closed for one semester, in Little Rock for a whole year. In both these cities, when the people saw what school closing was doing to them, they got together and fought to have the schools reopened. We hope that we in New Orleans can learn by their experience, and avoid paying the price they had to pay in order to learn that school closing is not the best answer to our mutual problem.

It is our purpose here to examine the New Orleans situation in the light of what happened in Little Rock and Norfolk. We will present the relevant facts, with a minimum of editorial comment, because we think the facts will speak for themselves.

What We In New Orleans Stand to Lose If Schools are Closed

What is likely to be lost or damaged if New Orleans public schools are closed? We have a sizeable investment in the schools, and in the job the schools are doing. This investment will certainly be affected by school-closing.

Quality: The people of New Orleans have been working since the year 1840 to build a good system of public schools, and they have succeeded. Graduates of our high schools (there were 2,728 of them in 1959) are admitted to all of the best colleges and universities. Every year, some of them win National Merit Scholarships and other scholarship awards in national competition. Obviously, if public education is disrupted by school closing, this quality will be impaired.

Student attendance: In October, 1959, there were 91,115 students in the public school system. Hundreds of millions of student-hours of learning will be disorganized or lost outright if the schools are closed for one year.

Teachers: In June, 1960, we had 3,313 teachers on the public school payroll, and more are needed every year. Experience in Little Rock and Norfolk shows that when schools are closed, the teachers are encouraged to leave the city for jobs elsewhere, and others are discouraged from applying for jobs in the closed schools. The net result is a loss of qualified teachers. This fact alone shows the crippling danger of school closing to New Orleans.

Other employees: 2,119 other persons, besides teachers, are employed by the public school system, which is one of the biggest businesses in the city. Many of these are skilled workers who could easily get jobs elsewhere and who would be hard to replace at current salaries.

Accreditation: At present our schools are accredited by the Southern Secondary School Association, as well as by the state. In Little Rock last year, three of the four closed schools lost their regional accreditation, thus penalizing hundreds of high school graduates seeking the finest college available to them.

Budget: The current year's operations cost more than $28,000,000.00, some $15,000,000.00 of which came from the state. Some of this, in turn, came from federal funds. If the schools were closed, some or all of these funds would be jeopardized.

School property: New Orleans public school buildings are valued by insurance companies at $75,170,090.00, and their contents at an additional $7,436,200.00. These figures do not include the value of real estate. The value of buildings and contents--not counting land values of operating budgets--comes to about $478.00 for each family in the city.

School bonds: The bonded indebtedness of New Orleans public schools, as of December 31, 1959, was $43,870,000.00. If the schools were closed, this debt would still have to be paid. Also, when schools are threatened with closing, school bonds may decline in market value.

Short-term loans: This figure varies from week to week, but as of June 17, 1960, it stood at $5,273,000.00. Naturally, any default on either loans or bonds which might result from school closing would bring losses to banks and other lenders and bond holders, most of them in the New Orleans area.

Teachers' retirement: Pension funds owed to thousands of teachers and retired teachers, which are administered by the city and the state, might be jeopardized by school closing. These facts indicate the size of our investment in the public schools. We feel that by far the most serious loss would be that of learning time by the students who would be forced to drop out of school altogether, or who would have to do the best they could in makeshift, necessarily inferior private schools during the time public schools were closed. Hardest hit would be students in the upper grades. During the past school year, 5,089 were enrolled in public schools in the 10th grade, and 3,927 in the 11th. Many of these--almost half--want to go to college. In order to enroll successfully in the colleges and universities of their choice, they need the best possible education during their junior and senior years of high school. They are not likely to get it if the public schools are closed.

In addition to this loss, the closing of public schools would be certain to have wide repercussions, directly and indirectly, on the whole community, financially, industrially, and commercially. To indicate the nature of this part of the problem we now offer some facts derived from the experience of Little Rock and Norfolk, some of which has been extremely painful. We in New Orleans have a chance to learn the lesson without suffering the pains and losses that our sister communities have sustained.

II. The Little Rock Temporary Schools

The recent history of Little Rock High Schools has been as follows: September 1957: Central High desegregated by court order, nine Negroes admitted, with national guard and federal troops called out. September 1958: four high schools closed by the governor, remaining closed all year. August 1959: all public schools reopened, on a desegregated basis.

That the normal process of education was disrupted for two years is clear. The city did try to keep schooling going during the "schools closed" year, with a system of private schools. Some five private high schools were organized. Three were very small. Let us see what we can learn, for the situation in New Orleans, from the private school experience of the two big schools during that year.

The biggest private school was Thomas J. Raney High. Its student body varied between 714 and 827 students. Classes met in several buildings, some rented and some purchased by Raney. There were some 32 teachers, all with bachelors' degrees, but some were totally inexperienced, others were elderly. (All of the regular high school teachers in the city went to their empty classrooms all through the year, and were paid regular salaries; a court order enjoined them from service at the temporary schools.) The curriculum was limited. There were no foreign languages, no general mathematics, no art nor music nor vocational classes other than typing or shorthand. Only about one-fourth as many courses were offered as were given at Central. Facilities were inadequate: there was one laboratory, combined for physics and chemistry, poorly equipped for 1959 needs, and a library with 1900 books plus some sets, all donated. Crowding was ever-present. Although the students showed IQ ratings from 54 to over 140, there was no selective grouping by ability in any class--the fast and the slow students studied side by side. In other words, there was no special offering for exceptional pupils, and none for the retarded. Perhaps the best that was said about the situation was that morale was excellent--the students being challenged by the unique situation.

Financial problems proved to be acute. No tuition was charged, but appeals for funds--reaching nation-wide proportions--produced a sum put at $300,480.43. In addition, the state contributed $71,907.50 in student-aid money to individuals. In February 1959 Raney purchased a 20-acre tract, and announced plans for construction of a million-dollar school building. In August, however, the school revealed that it was bankrupt and would not reopen.

A rather similar history characterizes Baptist High School. Some 370 students were charged $20 tuition per month, a figure raised to $25 during the year. Some 70 students were unable to pay, but were admitted anyway. Classes were far too large for good teaching. While Spanish and Latin were offered at Baptist, courses and facilities remained at a minimum. As in Raney, the fast and the slow worked side by side, there being no grouping by ability. Monthly income was $6500, whereas $8500 was needed. Although there was no building cost, as operation took place in rooms of a Baptist church, funds were always low. When by July 20, 1959, only 22 paid registrations were received for the fall semester--of a minimum 75 needed for efficient operations--Baptist High closed its doors.

Thus these two big schools, and three small ones, did try valiantly to continue the educational process. However, as Newsweek (December 1, 1958) put it, "Nobody believes that the makeshift schools are as good as the city's four public high schools were. No student hoping to enter college next fall knows whether his senior year's work will be accepted."

What are some of the further consequence, aside from inferior schools--when schools are closed? Financially, the costs of these two schools alone could be estimated at $475,000 for the year--above and beyond the fixed costs of the regular schools (the regular teachers were being paid, debt payments had to be kept up, etc.). Other consequences are equally impressive:

---The Little Rock school board estimated that, as of December 1958, 825 highschool children were getting no schooling whatsoever, and 405 others were getting only mail courses. (Television stations tried to do their best, but the job was far too big for more than experimental success.)

---The board announced in November 1959 that 1141 boys and girls who should have been in city high schools at that time, were not. Many families had left town, many children were attending schools in other cities and states. Also, however, hundreds simply dropped out of school, one or two years before they normally would have.

---Three of the four high schools lost their accreditation to the North Central Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges---a blow to superior students seeking to enter top colleges outside Arkansas.

---As a result of the two years of strife, the ever-present problem of obtaining good school teachers became severe. A week before the May 5, 1959 school board meeting, Superintendent Powell said that a poll showed 176 of the city's 828 teachers would not return for the 1959-60 school year. Of these 98 were going to resign, 56 probably would resign, 14 were retiring and 8 were taking leaves. (Southern School News, June 1959.) A few weeks later Powell said applications for teaching jobs were about a third the number usually received. There had been only 63 applications by May 21. At that rate, he said, it would be a difficult problem to get enough good teachers for all 36 schools. Many teachers had left permanently to teach elsewhere.

---The state withheld hundreds of thousands of dollars from the Little Rock school board during 1958-59, thus causing a severe financial pinch for that agency.

---Many indications point to a substantial economic blow to the city during the period, as seen in decreased entry of newcomers, many families leaving town, no new industry entering the city, difficulties in attracting and keeping professional, skilled and trained employees, and a dip in commerce in many fields. These will be discussed in detail below.

III. The Norfolk School Closing

Three Norfolk junior high and three high schools closed in September 1958, and were closed for one complete semester. Some 9950 pupils were affected. The most fortunate were 948 students who attended almost regular classes in a South Norfolk high school---from 4 to 9 p.m. Another 270 enrolled in a private school (much like the two in Little Rock) run by the Tidewater Educational Foundation; here again, teachers were recruited from outside the ranks of Norfolk's regular teaching staff. An estimated 4400 children attended "tutoring classes," meeting in churches, stores, garages, etc. Moving out of the city to study elsewhere were an estimated 1620 youth. Finally, 2700 pupils were receiving no education whatever. The tutoring groups charged (usually) $20 per month fee. The closed schools still required disbursements of $172,000 per month.

"The first week we all said, 'Hot dog,' recalled Chuck Spence, 17, president of the Granby High School Student Cooperative Association. Then everybody started tearing their hair out." (Newsweek, December 1, 1958.)

It is clear that education suffered during the semester of closed schools. That business also was adversely affected is suggested by this fact: in January 1959, full-page advertisements were taken in the two Norfolk papers by 100 leading businessmen of the community, calling for reopened schools for business as well as educational reasons. Shortly thereafter, all six schools opened their doors.

IV. What School Closing Did to Little Rock's Business

In September of 1958 the Governor of Arkansas closed the four Little Rock high schools, shutting out 3500 students. A series of makeshift schools or tutoring groups was established and television stations broadcast stepped up educational programs, but some students were receiving no schooling at all and nearby school districts were flooded with city children. Nobody has claimed that the improvisations were equal to the regular high school program. Some families left the city, others lost jobs, and local industries and professional organizations felt new difficulty in hiring trained personnel. It was a community-wide crisis. We can say this because of the following facts:

On February 23, 1959, the Board of Directors of the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce asked its members two questions. We give these questions, and the vote on each:

	YES	NO
"Do you favor continued closed high schools?"	230	632
"Do you favor opening schools with 'controlled' plan of integration?"	819	245

Conclusion: The businessmen of Little Rock had learned that closed schools were not the answer.

On March 25, the President of the Chamber published in a paid advertisement the recommendations of the Directors, reviewing the situation and advocating the reopening of the high schools by using a pupil placement plan.

What had actually happened as a result of school closing? We know, of course, that 3500 boys and girls were not getting a good year of education. What about the rest of the community? Some interesting answers come from reports of the Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools, which was formed as soon as the schools closed. These women---and many men---went to work and documented the waste of school closing. They found the following:

NEW INDUSTRY DID NOT LOCATE IN LITTLE ROCK. The Little Rock Industrial Development Company furnished the following figures about new industry and expansions in the city:

Year	No. of New Plants	Value	No. of New Jobs	No. of Expansions	Value	No. of Jobs
1950	7	$ 835,000	143	6	$2,110,000	...
1951	7	945,000	255	3	475,000	...
1952	6	295,000	163	9	2,150,000	...
1953	2	100,000	30	7	820,000	...
1954	3	1,350,000	150	1	500,000	...
1955	5	1,393,000	565	8	1,250,000	192
1956	2	325,000	70	8	1,350,000	212
1957	8	3,092.000	1002	3	913,985	70
September 1957 ----Trouble at Central High School
1958	None	None	None	1	325,000	50
1959	None	None	None	1	268,000	...

These figures were furnished by the Little Rock Industrial Development Company. The plant values and the numbers of employees are mainly estimates, particularly in more recent years.

Conclusion: Since September 1957, when violence at Central High School became front page news, not a single new factory came to the city. It has been estimated that on the basis of the city's earlier rate of expansion, Little Rock has lost more than five new plants, worth more than a million dollars and employing more than 300 persons. Many executives told the Women that new industry shunned Little Rock because of the school situation.

The Women's Group obtained figures on newcomers to town from the Chamber, using utility company reports:

NEWCOMER FAMILIES:...	1956	1957	1958	1959
	1975	2076	1807	1391

The metropolitan area likewise suffered (although moving van operators enjoyed booming business):

NEWCOMING AND DEPARTMENT FAMILIES: Little Rock area

	1957	1958	1959*
Newcomers	3342	2952	2376
Departures	1280	1623	2507

(*Based on first six months.)

A leading realtor declared that the sale of homes was off between 20 and 25 per cent in Greater Little Rock in 1959 as against 1958. Rentals, too, were off and there were said to be some 20 per cent more vacancies in 1959 than in 1958.

Other economic indices verified the women's belief---and that of the Chamber and its members---that school closing had indeed hurt the community. Some other examples:

PER CENT GAIN IN TOTAL PERSONAL INCOME*

	1956	1957	1958
Pulaski County (includes Little Rock)	6.2	6.1	5.2
Arkansas	4.5	3.1	6.1

(*Source: University of Arkansas Bureau of Business Research)

PER CENT CHANGE IN EFFECTIVE BUYING INCOME

Per Household - 1956-58. (Source: Sales Management.)

Little Rock	-7%
Arkansas	6%
United States	5%

Average Workers Income Gain (Source: U. S. Department of Labor)

	1956-57	1958-59
Little Rock	6%	4%
Arkansas	2%	11%
United States	4%	11%

Further, while retail sales per person failed to rise in Pulaski County between 1956 and 1958, sales per person for the state as a whole climbed by 4 per cent in that period. And business volume increased less in Little Rock than in the average Arkansas city and than in the state as a whole.

In conclusion, while these declining economic indices could conceivably be the result of many factors (no city has a continual boom), the evidence can be read to place part of the blame on the troubled school crisis. A study by the American Association of University Women in Little Rock showed that of 85 businessmen interviewed, 44 said their business had been hurt during the school crisis period, 35 had seen little change and only 6 said their business had actually improved. (The latter six, interestingly, were two moving companies, three filling stations, and one laundry.)

V. What About Private Schools For All?

Some people are saying that to prevent desegregation, we can (1) close the public schools, and (2) set up private schools. It is true that we have this option. The question is, Would private schools be better schools, at a similar financial cost?

Answering this question is a large task. Part of the matter resides in the legal plane. Can a state provide public schools for some of its communities and not for all? Could tax revenues be used to finance such private schools? Can present school buildings be sold for, say, $1.00, to a private group, or leased on a long term basis? These questions must be answered by a competent constitutional lawyer.

In this section, we will compare public schools and private schools from an educational point of view, from a financial point of view, and from an administrative point of view.

Educationally, several studies have compared the college performance of private school graduates with public school graduates. When students of similar IQ scores are compared, the public school graduates do better. The Princeton study is one of these (J. Davis and N. Frederiksen, "Public and Private School Graduates in College," Journal of Teacher Education, 6, 1955, pages 18-22). Note that these studies are examining mostly those now-existing private schools long noted for their excellence; hurriedly built private schools without the financial and historical endowment and years of experience and backing of outstanding families may perform with far less brilliance.

Furthermore, existing private schools specialize in the college preparatory program. They do not focus on such courses, vital to the community, as vocational, secretarial and industrial techniques---- programs in which the public schools excel. Nor do private schools devote the same attention to the retarded and handicapped child with impairments of speech, sight, hearing, and learning in general. And as shown in the case of the Little Rock makeshift schools, students were not grouped selectively in terms of ability as is the case in public schools, but all studied in the same room together, the fast and the slow alike, without regard for the exceptional student.

Financially, private schools are more expensive than public schools, without improving the quality of learning (as shown above). All education is costly; typically, about one-half of a city's expenditures go to its schools.

A 1959 study by Green and Gauerke compared costs of public schools with private schools. Some of their figures:

	Average Per-Pupil Cost For One Year
Georgia Public Schools 1958-59.....	$265
Atlanta Public Schools 1957-58.....	277
United States Public Schools 1956-57..	360
17 Private Schools in 4 Southeastern States 1957-58.....	475
8 Private Schools in Atlanta area 1958-59.....	625

The difference of costs is clear. Above and beyond this, however, there is an even greater difference when other important factors are included. For many of the private schools studied, the cost of books, food, transportation and laboratory fees was not included. Costs in private schools generally go up, the higher the grade. Private schools frequently put parents under pressure to contribute additional funds. Administrators generally agree that $450 per pupil per year is the minimum necessary for adequate education, and most private schools in the New Orleans area (as in Atlanta) charge more than this. Orleans Parish public schools, for their part, are quite similar to those in Atlanta, costing in the neighborhood of $300 per pupil.

The differential in costs between public and private schools can be explained by several factors: much larger base for quantity purchasing; staff specialists (legal, financial, construction, maintenance, counseling, testing, health and many other) can distribute their services widely, therefore, at a much lower cost-per-student; lesser geographical area for public school buses to travel; and very important, financial---- federal aid, in the form of surplus food and other goods, plus federal grants from the departments of agriculture, health, education and welfare, and the Veterans Administration.

In general, the administrative problems in setting up an entire new private school system, to replace the public system started by Orleanians in 1840, are formidable. The complete structure of personnel, supervision, sources of finance, recruitment, standards, curriculum, accreditation, and control of policies would be taken out of the hands of professional education specialists and given over to untested private individuals having no link with the state or municipality. Before deciding to abandon the existing system, one must ask: Who would impose what kinds of controls and policies on this new system, what voices would the citizen have over the private controllers, what buildings and land would they use, who would pay, and what kind of an education would our children get?

Answers to these practical questions all point to the uncertain wisdom of attempting an entirely untried system of private cooperatives with their questionable administrative, financial, and -- most important-- educational foundations.

ADDENDUM: On July 19th, just as this material was being prepared for printing, a speech was delivered in New Orleans by Roy Pearson, director of the School Foundation of Prince Edward County, Virginia. It was there that a private school system was attempted for the year 1959-60 (although only for white children). While this was a local option situation and local teachers could be used, local school buildings and equipment could not. Some 15 buildings, such as churches, were used, rent free, together with such equipment as folding tables and chairs. Laboratory, library and other equipment were minimal, and the children were dismissed at 1:30 p.m.

Moreover, Prince Edward has decided it must seek state aid for 1960-61, as well as raising its school taxes by 20 per cent to a new all-time high. Thus, while some could call the school year "successful" in that white students did indeed have schools, educationally and financially we have another example of the desperate nature of attempting to supplant public schools with private. Prince Edward County's population, it should be noted, is approximately 15,000.

VI. Summary and Conclusion: Loss or Gain?

So far we have attempted to state facts rather than emotions and opinions in this report. This attempt has not been completely successful, because of our very strong conviction that school closing would be disastrous to the educational and economic well being of our community. We can now sum up the picture, and here we will express our opinions. Let us put it in terms of gain and loss: What will the city GAIN if the schools are closed, and what will the city LOSE?

WHAT WILL NEW ORLEANS GAIN BY CLOSING ITS SCHOOLS?

The city will postpone desegregation for some months while the schools are closed. For some people this would be a gain. This is the ONLY gain we can see. Why?

A LEGAL INTERPRETATION OF FUTILITY.

We say that there will be only a postponement because the devices that will be used to effect the closing will fail in the courts. Eventually, the Governor will be enjoined. The President has shown that he will use troops, if necessary, to protect the integrity of federal court orders. Troops may not be necessary, even if there is an "interposition." We must also keep in mind the fact that courts have been given the power to enjoin persons who are not parties to the suit from interferring with desegregation orders.

Some will ask about Prince Edward County, Virginia--the closing there has not been invalidated. The difference there is that the closing was effected through the "local option" plan. If our legislature should allow the local communities to make their own choice, rather than decide the question for itself, then we should have the same decision to make. As a legal matter, the Prince Edward device may pass the test of evasion of the federal court order. It may yet fail ultimately as a discrimination against taxpayers; or, more important and probable, the Educational Foundation may become "public." The private foundation in 1959-60 refused to accept tuition grant money which came originally from the public treasuries, but the county supervisors have proposed to raise taxes to a new high, appropriate money for "educational purposes" and allow taxpayers credits for contributions to private schools. The school board refused to sell the high school to the foundation unless there was a referendum provided by law. The foundation has bought a tract of land and is now in the process of attempting to raise money to erect a building. In short, Prince Edward found it could not operate a private system without help from the state and without levying additional taxes for schools. The private school is becoming progressively "public."

When all the legal battles are through, the ultimate choice will be the same. Either we really, totally and permanently give up public support of education, or we find some way to comply with court orders. Virginia was no less fervent about segregation than Louisiana. But Virginia could not commit economic suicide and close all its schools. She tried everything else - state sovereignty, interposition, police power. She even went through a school closing episode, but she could not close every public school in Virginia. If there had been another legal way, the Virginia lawyers would have found it.

We can make this choice now or we can live through a futile school closing and be forced to make it later. We may gain time by postponing the final choice, but from here on that time costs us enormously.

WHAT WILL NEW ORLEANS LOSE BY CLOSING ITS SCHOOLS:

The entire foregoing paper has documented loss after loss, in various areas of community life. Make no mistake, we feel the chief loss will be pupil days of sound public school education. This can never be made up. Particular harm would surround the crucial years: first grade, seventh grade, and the pre-college high school years.

The second most important loss, we feel, will be the loss of good teachers. Just as many of the teachers in Little Rock left the city, we fear that many of our best teachers will leave New Orleans. This MUST NOT happen. We need them. If they leave, we will have to attract replacements, and frequently this means lower quality at increased recruitment costs---an undesirable alternative.

These two losses---of teaching and of teachers---are basic. But this is only the beginning of a long series of losses should the schools be closed. We have suggested most of these losses in the main part of the paper. To recapitulate the other losses:

LOSSES TO INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE: We stand on the facts of Little Rock. Business there declined, and many indices prove it. Many businessmen said they believed the decline was caused by school closing. The same is true of Norfolk. The same could happen to New Orleans.

Many of us know people who already are getting ready to leave town if the schools close.

LOSSES OF FUNDS FOR SCHOOLS: The largest portion of funds to operate public education in New Orleans comes from the state. Under the most probable forms of "private" schools, state funds would be cut off. Remember, $300,000 of the $370,000 it took to operate Raney High was raised by individuals, ABOVE and BEYOND regular taxed income for schools. Baptist High got no money from the state. Both schools were reopened in August-September of 1959. The courts have ruled that under normal conditions the state may not finance these makeshift private schools.

Federal funds ---in amounts of many millions of dollars---go to the state of Louisiana for education. As far as we can see, these funds will not be payable to closed or private schools.

Even if private schools are tried, the costs of the public school system will go on, at least for the first year. And the community is certainly obliged to pay on its bonded indebtedness. Some persons apparently think that private schools can simply use the existing public school buildings. They are wrong. They will have to purchase these buildings at fair market value---a matter in New Orleans of more than $75,000,000. The same goes for libraries, laboratories, teaching aids, tables and chairs, school buses, and so on.

If private schools are tried, there will be tuition over and above continuing public school costs. It has been established that good private schools average well over $00 a year per pupil, and often more. What kind of education would our children receive with hastily organized and staffed private schools using teachers with a variety of standards of training and ability? Remember, just as the private schools cannot simply occupy the public school buildings, neither can existing teachers teach in the makeshift schools. They go daily to empty classrooms, and are paid as stipulated in their contracts.

LOSSES IN CURRICULUM: We gave a picture of the curriculum in the Little Rock private schools. About one-fourth as many courses were offered at Raney as at Central High. Many important areas were simply not offered --- foreign languages, vocational classes, etc., and library, laboratory and counselling services were woefully weak. Our present school system has gradually developed its curriculum, and today has achieved a high standard of excellence.

LOSSES TO THE SCHOOL SYSTEM AND ITS ADMINISTRATION: Many trained specialists would doubtless follow the teachers and leave the city. This in itself would be a crippling blow. Furthermore, what would the problems be of shifting back to a public school system? Much administrative and legal assistance would be required, merely getting the schools back to the point of where they are already.

The loss to the city, then, would be crippling. There are other losses: think of thousands of children at large in the city, without superivision at school---perhaps the juvenile delinquency rate would be markedly affected; there is a certain loss of pride and prestige nationally---as is quite clear in the case of the entire city of Little Rock; and we have not mentioned the well known fact that education and income are closely correlated---high school graduates earn more than those without a diploma, and thus bring more skill and more economic multiplier to the community. And certainly of paramount importance is the competitive struggle against the Iron Curtain countries: all of us have become aware of the significance of education for survival. Always, there is the matter of American tradition: our forefathers knew that democracy required an educated electorate. We must not stumble now.

The people of Little Rock and Norfolk---southerners like the people of New Orleans---did little to prevent school closing. AFTER the closing, however, they fought to have them reopened. That is the lesson of this paper. Will the same tragedy befall us?

VII. Selected Quotations on the Place of Schools in American Life

A. By Noted American Leaders:

George Washington:
"Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge."

Thomas Jefferson:
"The commonwealth requires the education of her people as the safeguard of order and liberty."

Abraham Lincoln:
"I view education as the most important subject which we as a people are engaged in....."

Horace Mann on "The Ground of the Free School System," 1846:
"I believe in the existence of a....principle of divine origin... which provides the absolute right to an education of every human being that comes into the world, and which, of course, provides the correlative duty of every government to see that the means of that education are provided for all..."

Woodrow Wilson:
"Without popular education, moreover, no government which rests upon popular action can long endure."

Governor James P. Coleman of Mississippi, speaking at Greenville, November 12, 1959:
"It would hurt Mississippi worse to lose its public school system than it was hurt in the Civil War."

Governor James P. Coleman, March 1959.
"If Mississippi had to abolish its schools to defeat integration, it would place a premium on knowledge and industry wouldn't come to the state if there were no public schools."

B. From Southern newspapers, quoted in "Save Our Schools: A Roundup of Southern Press Opinion":

Atlanta Journal, January 6, 1958:
".....Parents are discussing now what they will do when the schools are closed as though it were a certainty that schools will close. It is almost a certainty. With the closing of the schools, should they remain shut, goes an entire way of life in America, a way that means far more to our future and to our basic American conceptions than the extension of the fading tradition that will cause closings.
"....The greatest disaster that could befall us would be the closing of the public schools for an extended period of time."

Chattanooga Times, February 14, 1959:
"....No greater calamity could befall any community....."

Gainesville Daily Sun and Alachua County News, April 12, 1959:
"...we...feel that having to close the schools would be nothing short of tragic."

Raleigh News and Observer, October 6, 1958:
"...The issue is inescapable. No schools, or schools operated under the law of the land...."

The Tampa Tribune, April 1, 1959:
"In a recent state convention, the Florida Junior Chamber of Commerce formally resolved that the public schools should remain open. The Florida Education Association, in its recent convention here at Tampa, took the same stand, and over last weekend the Florida Young Democrats followed suit...."

From the Virginian-Pilot:
"This condition of education deprivation and idleness (in Prince Edward County, Virginia) is so at odds with the primary obligations of modern society that it will grow increasingly uncomfortable for the conscience of Virginia. It is there, and it will become worse, until it is solved."

C. By Southern Business Leaders:

John W. Landis, Assistant Manager, The Babcock and Wilcox Company, Lynchburg, Virginia:
"The Babcock and Wilcox Company, as one of the new and growing organizations in the community, considers it obvious that we would have trouble securing and retaining qualified technical personnel if the public schools were closed."

Dr. Louis T. Rader, General Manager, Special Control Department, General Electric Company, Waynesboro, Virginia:
"Unless we face up to solving problems of this type, the public school system will be injured, and with it, the future of Virginia will be in danger. We will then be in the position of having committed economic suicide, for the school situation can be the Achilles' heel of Virginia's economy...."

O.B. Newton, Jr., Vice-President and Sales Manager, C.B. Fleet Company, Lynchburg, Virginia:
"Two of our most recently acquired industries have, within the past few weeks, expressed themselves to the effect Virginia would not even have been considered as a location for a new plant had there not been the guaranteed certainty of a free public school system for the children of their employees." (Before the House Privileges and Elections Committee, General Assembly, Richmond, Virginia, April 17, 1959.)

Ivan Allen, Jr., immediate past president, Georgia State Chamber of Commerce and Atlanta businessman:
"To abandon public education is to secede from the economic life of the nation." (Atlanta Journal, December 10, 1958)

William P. Engel, former chairman of the Birmingham, Alabama Chamber of Commerce Committee of 100, said that the principal reason expanding industry is by-passing Alabama is publicity resulting from racial problems in Birmingham and Montgomery:

"We must face up to our own deficiencies. The hoodlumism here has hit headlines throughout the nation. As a result, we have lost one major plant in Birmingham and several smaller installations." (Birmingham Post Herald, February 6, 1957)

Dr. Charles H. Carpenter, Industrial Engineering Consultant to the Arkansas Development Commission, declared that Governor Orval Faubus' actions in the desegregation controversy had cost Arkansas thousands of jobs. He said the situation "means the loss of large, substantial industries which might otherwise have come to Arkansas." (Arkansas Gazette, October 3, 1957)

Clifford M. Clarke, Jr., executive vice-president, Associated Industries of Georgia:

"There can be no industry without good schools." (Atlanta Constitution, December 2, 1958)

Martin R. Gainsbrough, Chief Economist, National Industrial Conference Board, said problems raised by the public school issue in the Southern states are having a definitely adverse effect on industrial plant location decisions:

"I know this," he said, "because I sit in on meetings of various companies where these matters are discussed...I have heard them eliminate from further consideration areas which have this school problem, because of the friction involved in them and the difficulty of getting top personnel to move to such places with their children." (Atlanta Constitution, February 27, 1959)

Dr. F. Douglas Lawrason, provost for medical affairs, University of Arkansas:

"The University Medical Center, being within the community of Little Rock, could not help but be affected by the public school problem there. I think it would be only fair to say that because of this complicating social change, the Medical Center has had its faculty recruitment program brought to a virtual standstill. So many of the persons we approach and invite to join the faculty are diverted by the events that have been taking place in the community." (Arkansas Gazette, January 16,1959)

Business Editor James Montgomery in Atlanta Constitution:

"The industrial and university officials...expressed unanimous agreement that closing of public schools would impair both the present economic strength and future economic development of the state."

Boyd Ridgeway, Executive, Little Rock Chamber of Commerce. Quoted in Atlanta Constitution:

"The solution to our crisis in education came as it had to from the community leaders---the top business, professional and educational people---best represented by the Chamber of Commerce...I think the Atlanta Chamber has a responsibility to be completely informed on this issue so that it will be in a position to provide leadership. Preventing interruption of public education is completely dependent on the community's leaders."

D. By Southern Professional Leaders:

The Virginia Association of School Administrators, quoted in the Washington Post:

"We believe that a sound system of free public schools is the surest foundation and greatest hope for a free society. We further believe that consistent and deliberate effort should be made to improve the character and quality of education for all children and youth in the commonwealth."

Virginia Teachers Association quoted by Associated Press:

"We urge parents, teachers and the citizens in general to dedicate themselves to the task of teaching youths the competencies which will enable them to compete effectively in this society and to strive for their inclusion in all the experiences which society provides."

School Superintendent Jim Cherry, DeKalb County, Georgia. Quoted in Atlanta Journal-Constitution:

"How can we imagine that if we remove public schools from the picture, parochial and private schools can do the job that all three are now doing adequately?"

"The undersigned physicians, acting as individuals, and representing no official organization, believe that the closing of the public schools in Atlanta and in Georgia would constitute a major catastrophe that would result in irreparable damage to the children of our city and state. We believe that closing the public schools would materially interfere with the supply of essential scientific personnel and would ultimately damage the health services of this region. We also recognize the far-reaching consequences to the spiritual, moral and economic welfare of our community.

"We respectfully urge all of the people, and particularly the city and state, business, professional and political leaders to take whatever legal steps are necessary to prevent the closing of our public schools.

"We, as individuals, further state our willingness to cooperate with other state and local citizens in a concerted effort to solve the problems arising out of the effort to maintain the public schools.....

BAKER, Calif. (AP) — The wife of a rock hunter has been rescued after surviving the brutal heat of the Mojave desert three days without food or water. But her husband is still missing.

Mrs. Catherine Vieke, about 46, of Los Angeles, said she and her husband were stranded 23 miles north of Baker Friday when their car got stuck in volcanic ash. She said her husband started out on foot for Baker, which is about 120 miles northeast of San Bernardino.

Yesterday a sheriff's deputy found Mrs. Vieke and the couple's car on a power company road. She was unconscious.

Temperatures there have exceeded 110 in recent days. Mrs. Vieke revived briefly but lapsed into unconsciousness before officers could get her husband's name or their address.

WHAT WILL BE THE ECONOMIC EFFECT OF A PUBLIC SCHOOL CLOSURE IN NEW ORLEANS?

As Little Rock and Norfolk have already proved, what is "bad for public schools is also bad for business." If our public schools in New Orleans do not open their doors on September 8th, the economic health of our Community will suffer an incalculable blow.

Retail trade and real estate volume will decrease appreciably when the schools are closed. Already, New Orleans merchants are beginning to feel the "pinch" as Back-to-School sales figures decline day by day. The buying public is holding back on such items as school clothing and accessories due to the uncertainty of the school situation. Real estate sales also hang in the balance as parents wonder if they will have to move to another community in order to provide education for their children.

New industries on which we hope to build the economic security of the future will almost surely be discouraged from coming into an area where there are no public schools. A troubled community is no place for industrial expansion.

And, just as surely, recruitment of employes for the industries and businesses of the area will be seriously hampered. Skilled workers, technicians, college educators, professional men will not choose to settle in a town where public schools are not available.

Here are a few results we can plainly foresee:
1) The $20,000,000 school construction program, for which the bond issue has been approved, would have to be abandoned if the school system is shut down.
2) The $28,000,000 annual operating expenditures of the Orleans Parish School system would be lost to the community.
3) Payment would be enforced on the school bonds that are now outstanding, although the taxpayer would be paying taxes for benefits no longer received.

In dollars and cents, then, the closing of public schools is an expensive proposition. Businessmen of New Orleans have a stake in its public schools, not only as a matter of civic interest; but, realistically, as a matter of DOLLARS and SENSE.

• WE SHOULD PROFIT BY THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHER COMMUNITIES

In Little Rock, the year before the school crisis, the number of new jobs totalled 1,003. During the two years that followed, there were no new jobs.
In Norfolk, the city estimated that closed schools cost the economy of the community $172,000 a month.

• WE MUST ACT NOW TO PRESERVE PUBLIC EDUCATION

We must realize that there is no longer a choice between INTEGRATION and SEGREGATION . . . the issue now is EDUCATION or ILLITERACY, together with all of the civic and economic disasters it brings. No matter what our individual feelings in the matter, we must realize that our children are entitled to the right of education.

I. Introduction

"The Constitution, in other words, does not require integration. It merely forbids discrimination. It does not forbid such segregation as occurs as the result of voluntary action. It merely forbids the use of governmental power to enforce segregation." Briggs v. Elliott, 132 F. Supp. 776 (E.D. S.C. 1955).

"It can scarcely be doubted that the United States Constitution does not in any way require that a state afford any education to its children. Accordingly, those states which have repealed their requirements that the state furnish education would argue preliminarily that they have thus avoided the impact of the decision in the School Segregation Cases. And so they have - if there is a complete relinquishment of state support for public education." McKay, "With All Deliberate Speed", 31 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 991, 1043 (1956).

The present Louisiana Constitution does not require that the state furnish public education to all its children of educable age. Art. 12, Sec. 1 was amended to state that public education may be provided and that tuition grants may be given. There is, then, no state constitutional issue involved in partial school closing in Louisiana.

The state may avoid integration by closing its schools and completely abandoning public education. The two broad issues are whether it may stop short of closing all its schools, and whether it may assist private education. May the state close a few schools throughout the state, or all of the schools in one parish only? May it allow the local school board to close all the schools in a parish under the operation of the "local option" plan? If all the schools are permanently closed, will the private schools be affected by the Fourteenth Amendment? There is an overlap of constitutional issues in these questions; nevertheless, the issues seem clearer when discussed in connection with specific school closing plans thus far put forth.

1. Partial School Closing by the State Government

The "equal protection of the laws" does not prevent a state from producing inequality in its classifications. It merely requires that such classification have some rational basis. The test is "reasonableness". Long before Brown v. Board of Education, the Supreme Court had invalidated legislative classifications on the basis of race or color. Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U.S. 303 (1880). It had also invalidated racial discrimination by judicial or administrative action performed under laws which were not discriminatory on their face. Ex parte Virginia, 100 U.S. 339 (1879); Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886). Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) found that separation of the races was not an unreasonable regulation, where there was no inequality involved. The new law of Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954), was that, even though the privilege of education had been granted to all, the separation was inherently unequal.

The "equal protection" clause is, however, much broader than a prohibition of racial discrimination. It encompasses any sort of unreasonable or arbitrary classification, or any unreasonable discrimination in the administration of the laws. In this respect, it is akin to the "due process" clause. Any closing of fewer than all the state public schools involves the broader meaning of the clause, as well as the narrower racial discrimination application of the clause. If the school closing is an evasion of the Brown case or of a court order based on that case, then racial discrimination is at issue. If the closing results in an arbitrary denial of public education to some, then discrimination against taxpayers is at issue. The Arkansas closing case decided the first issue; partial closing by the state government is an evasion, not avoidance, and is unjustified by the use of the police power. The Virginia case decided the second issue; there was an arbitrary discrimination against the taxpayer-parents of the children whose schools were closed.

A. The Arkansas case - Aaron v. McKinley, 173 F. Supp. 944 (E.D. Ark. 1959), Aff'd. 361 U.S. 197 (1959).

At Little Rock, after one year of desegregation under trying circumstances, the school board asked the federal court for permission to delay putting into effect the desegregation plan for two and a half years. When this stay order was denied by the courts, the Governor issued a proclamation closing the high schools of that city. The legislation authorising him to do so had been passed a month before in anticipation of that denial of stay. Two Acts of that legislation were before the federal court, after their constitutionality had been upheld in the state courts. Act 4 gave the Governor the authority to close any or all schools in a district whenever he determined that peace and safety of the lives or limbs of students or teachers required it, whenever any troops were maintained at the school to enforce an integration order, or whenever he determined that it was impossible to maintain an efficient school system because of integration. (The latter ground was necessary because the state constitution required the maintenance of efficient free schools.)

Act 5 provided that funds to closed schools were cut off, but could be paid to other public schools or private non-sectarian schools which received the pupils from closed schools. The Arkansas Supreme Court, in a 4-3 decision, found no violation of the state or federal constitutions. As to the federal constitution it was held that such action was a temporary emergency. The federal court found otherwise. It quoted one of the state dissenting judges to the effect that there was no temporary emergency, but rather "a condition that has already existed since 1954 and will continue to exist until either the United States Constitution is amended or the United States Supreme Court overrules Brown v. Board of Education." The federal court also quoted one of the majority Justices who had indicated that the action was valid as an emergency measure, and that Act 4 need not be viewed as giving the Governor the power to close all schools permanently, as such action would be in violation of the Brown decree and also in violation of the state constitution. The opinion then relied on Cooper v. Aaron 358 U.S. 1 (1958) to show that there had been no valid exercise of police power.

The Cooper case was that Supreme Court case which decided that the circumstances which arose at Little Rock did not justify a delay in desegregation there. The instant case said: "As we read the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Cooper v. Aaron ... it, in effect, holds that no lawless violence or threat, fear or anticipation of such violence, resulting from hostility to the integration of its schools, can justify any State, under the guise of the exercise of its policy power, in depriving citizens, either temporarily or permanently, of rights guaranteed them by the Constitution of the United States." The Court then quoted Cooper directly to the effect that action of the Governor is state action under the Fourteenth Amendment, and that "the constitutional rights of children not to be discriminated against in school admission on grounds of race or color declared by this Court in the Brown case can neither be nullified openly and directly by state legislators or state executive or judicial officers, nor nullified indirectly by them through evasive schemes for segregation whether attempted 'ingeniously or ingenuously'." The court then pointed out that if the findings made by the District Court judge in granting the 2-1/2 year stay were insufficient to sustain that order on appeal (the stay order had been reversed), then "we can see no basis whatever for a ruling by us that Act No. 4 constitutes a valid and reasonable exercise of the police power of Arkansas to meet an emergency."

The Court held:

"With all due respect to the considered views of those Justices of the Supreme Court of Arkansas who concluded that Act. No. 4 represented a valid exercise of the police power of the State and therefore did not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, we are firmly of the opinion that Act No. 4 cannot be sustained upon that ground, and is clearly unconstitutional under the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment, and conferred no authority upon the Governor to close the public high schools in Little Rock." The Court also found that, the funds cut-off provision was dependent upon Act. No. 4, and therefore, was invalid. It noted that part of the money had been paid to the private high school but did not discuss the validity of the direct payment to the private school. Aaron v. McKinley, 173 F. Supp. 944 (E.D. Ark. 1959).

The United States Supreme Court affirmed this decision December 14, 1959, in a memorandum opinion at 361 U.S. 197, 80 S.Ct. 291 (1959).

B. The Virginia case - James v. Almond, 170 F. Supp. 342 (E.D. Va. 1959).

Governor Almond closed schools in several parts of the state, including six secondary schools in Norfolk, Virginia, in September 1958. In January 1959 the state Supreme Court of Appeals declared the action invalid under the state constitution which required that Virginia maintain an efficient system of free schools. On the same day the federal District Court of Norfolk declared that the laws permitting closing of a few schools violated the federal Constitution. This was a separate suit brought by the parents of some of the white children whose school had been closed. This raised a different issue. Apart from the question of whether the rights of the plaintiffs in the original desegregation suit seeking admission were violated, there was the issue of whether those children already enrolled in those schools had been deprived of any constitutional right. Was the exercise of the police power valid as to them? The court held that it was not.

The opinion noted that the plaintiffs were taxpayers of the Commonwealth, and most were taxpayers of the City of Norfolk; that a partion of the public funds of the state derived from taxation of plaintiffs and other citizens was used in the operation of the free public school system of Virginia; that it was not unmindful of the difficulties produced by Brown but that any doubt as to the controlling force of the principle of that case had been removed by the Supreme Court in Cooper v. Aaron. After quoting from that case, the opinion stated: "Tested by these principles we arrive at the inescapable conclusion that the Commonwealth of Virginia, having accepted and assumed the responsibility of maintaining and operating public schools, cannot act through one of its officers to close one or more public schools in the state solely by reason of the assignment to, or enrollment or presence in, that public school of children of different races or colors, and, at the same time, keep other public schools throughout the state open on a segregated basis. The "equal protection" afforded to all citizens and taxpayers is lacking in such a situation. While the State of Virginia, directly or indirectly, maintains and operates a school system with the use of public funds, or participates by arrangement or otherwise in the management of such a school system, no one public school or grade in Virginia may be closed to avoid the effect of the law of the land as interpreted by the Supreme Court, while the state permits other public schools or grades to remain open at the expense of the taxpayers..... We do not suggest that, apart from the Constitution of Virginia, the state must maintain a public school system. This is a matter for state determination. We merely point out that the closing of a public school, or grade therein, for the reasons heretofore assigned violates the right of a citizen to equal protection of the laws and, as to any child willing to attend a school with a member or members of the opposite race, such a school-closing is a deprivation of due process of law.

The court distinguished Cumming v. Board of Education, 175 U.S. 528 (1899), in which case the Supreme Court upheld action closing a high school for sixty Negro children in order to operate an elementary school serving three hundred. The court noted that in that case the closing was to be temporary and the reasons were economic. It was pointed out that in the instant case the schools were closed solely because of resistance to the law; that these plaintiffs became a class created by reason of the operation of the massive resistance statutes. They were the subjects of discrimination and were unable to obtain the benefits of public taxation on the same basis as the parents of other children similarly situated.

Then the court apparently left open the question of the validity of the "local option" plan, now in effect in Virginia.

The opinion said: "In the event the State of Virginia withdraws from the business of educating its children, and the local governing bodies assume this responsibility, the same principles with respect to equal protection of laws would be controlling as to that particular county or city. While the county or city, directly or indirectly, maintains and operates a school system with the use of public funds, or participates by arrangement or otherwise in the management of such a school system, no one public school or grade in the county or city may be closed to avoid the effect of the law of the land while other public schools or grades remain open at the expense of the taxpayers. Such schemes or devices looking to the cutoff of funds for schools or grades affected by the mixing of races, or the closing or elimination of specific grades in such schools, are evasive tactics which have no standing under the law."

The court found no merit in the contention that the closing was a temporary delay in operation. The Governor was not to reopen until pupil assignments could be made without any enforced or compulsory integration against the wish of any child or his parents. It was noted that under this test the schools could never be reopened. The court found ineffective a provision that the school would be returned to the public school system of the political subdivision upon being closed. This provision violated the statement in the Brown case: "Such an opportunity (of an education), where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms." As to the argument that the action was valid because the schools were closed to both races, the court said: "The discrimination here complained of is the denial of the right of white children to attend public schools which are closed by action of the Governor ... , while other white children living in the same state, and within the same political subdivision, are enjoying the educational opportunities afforded them at the expense of all taxpayers, including the parents of the white children locked out of the six schools. We need hardly discuss the factor of race to arrive at the conclusion that this is not equal protection of laws. Equality of treatment is not achieved through indiscriminate imposition of inequalities."

The court then disposed of the issue of the state's sovereign immunity of suit under the Eleventh Amendment, and enjoined all the defendents from enforcing "massive resistance" statutes.

While not discussing specifically the tuition-grant provisions, the court cited the statute sections held unconstitutional (Va. Code 1950 Tit. 22, S S 188.3 - 188.15) and these included those which dealt with the right to the grant if schools were closed. The state court suit invalidating the laws under the state constitution held that there was no constitutional objection to the procedures for making tuition grants out of funds properly available for that purpose. However, grants could not be given out of funds unconstitutionally withheld from some of the free public schools. Harrison v. Almond, _____ Va. _____ (1959).

Thereafter the Norfolk City Council refused to deliver funds tentatively appropriated for the secondary schools to the School Board, and they were enjoined from so refusing. Duckworth v. James, 267 F.2d 224 (4th Cir. 1959), cert. den. U.S. Sup. Ct., 28 U.S.L.W. 3105, Oct. 13, 1959.

C. The Louisiana statutes

The statutory plan in Louisiana places the control of desegregation in the legislature and the governor. A classification statute, R.S. 1950 Tit. 17, Sec. 341-346, requires that schools being presently utilized for the education of white children shall be so utilized unless otherwise reclassified by the legislature. The law authorizes the appointment of a special committee to designate all the schools for use by children of the white race or for children of the Negro race. The power to change the classification of a school from all white or all Negro to any other classification is specifically reserved to the legislature. The present statute requires that white teachers must teach white pupils, and Negro teachers, Negro pupils. Tit. 17 Sec. 345.

The law presently applies only to New Orleans. The proposed bill (H.B. 500) re-enacting and amending makes it applicable to every school in the state. In effect, the present law freezes the classification of the Orleans schools in their present status and the Orleans school board cannot comply with the federal court order until the legislature reclassifies some school. There is also a pupil assignment law (Tit. 17 Sec. 101 et seq.), but it appears that the Board cannot use this law unless the legislature repeals the classification law or reclassifies schools. Even then a repeal might be necessary, for the proposed classification amendments provide that the Governor supersedes the school board and takes over the "exclusive control, management and administration" of schools affected by a plan which the local board has put into operation or which the court has ordered placed into operation.

The present classification law was before the federal courts in 1958. The Court of Appeals for the Circuit apparently did not rule directly on the constitutionality of the law, but the School Board was found to be the proper defendant as to any order touching upon the manner of operation of the schools. The proposed law, giving the Governor exclusive control, may cause this issue to arise again.

The present law allows the Governor to close any racially mixed school or school subject to court order "requiring it to admit students of both the Negro and white races by a date certain." The same statute authorizes him to close any other school in the parish or city where a school has been closed under this Section, if he determines that its operation might cause friction, disorder or a breach of peace. He may reopen the school if it can be reopened, within a reasonable time or by the end of the term, shall be considered indefinitely closed.

This is not a temporary emergency measure. It is asserting the right to close a school or all the schools of a parish, rather than desegregate.

One proposed bill, H.B. 499, gives the Governor the power to close all the schools of the state when any school in the state is "ordered to integrate" either as to all grades or any grade. If, after a reasonable time, he determines that all the schools may not be opened on a racially segregated basis, he may declare the schools permanently closed.

Another proposal, H.B. 1066, gives the Governor the power to close any school "when the operation thereof is threatened, interfered with, or disrupted by disorder, riots, or violence, or in his judgment the closing of such school is deemed necessary to prevent disorder, riots, or violence, that would threaten, interfere with or disrupt the operation thereof." This law will be separated in the statutes from all others dealing with desegregation.

All three provisions for closing will have to meet the issue of the Arkansas case. May the Governor close schools to avoid desegregation? It seems that only H.B. 499 can pass the test of evasion. Closing all the schools will be avoidance, rather than evasion. That would give rise to other constitutional problems to be discussed later. Closing only certain schools or certain grades will bring the fact situation within the Arkansas and Virginia cases. Even if all the schools in Orleans Parish are closed, it is the state which is closing them. As long as the state, and not the local authority, is the closer, it cannot discriminate against Orleans children. The Governor had been given power to close the schools rather than desegregate; the school board has not been given this power. If it closes anyway, it is acting as an arm of the state. Only if the state laws are changed giving the local boards the option to close or desegregate, can the local board close. The Cooper rule is that any arrangement whereby the state supports segregated schools is an evasion of the Brown case. Only an option in the local authority can possibly pass both the evasion test and the taxpayer discrimination test.

H.B. 499, the general police power authority for closing, is probably constitutional on its face. If, however, it is applied unconstitutionally, the Arkansas case still controls and invalidates the Governor's unconstitutional application.

The question left open in the Virginia case, whether a local authority can close all the schools in its locality, cannot be decided now, for the state has undertaken to provide public education in Louisiana. The Constitution does not require that it do so, but it is now doing so. It has not left the matter to the determination of the local community in deciding whether or not the community, not the state, will provide it.

In short, whether the Governor or the local board closes one school, or eliminates first grade, or even closes all the schools of the parish, the action will be unconstitutional, under the present school system of Louisiana.

It should be added that the application of the Fourteenth Amendment to a state governor, as well as to any other state official, is well-settled. The following language is quoted from Sterling v. Constantin, 207 U.S. 378 at 397:

> "If this extreme position could be deemed to be well taken, it is manifest that the fiat of a state Governor, and not the Constitution of the United States, would be the supreme law of the land; that the restrictions of the Federal Constitution upon the exercise of state power would be but impotent phrases, the futility of which the State may at any time disclose by the simple process of transferring powers of legislation to the Governor to be exercised by him, beyond control, upon his assertion of necessity. Under our system of government, such a conclusion is obviously untenable. There is no such avenue of escape from the paramount authority of the Federal Constitution. When there is a substantial showing that the exertion of state power has overridden private rights secured by that Constitution, the subject is necessarily one for judicial inquiry in an appropriate proceeding directed against the individuals charged with the transgression."

On the issue of the jurisdiction of the federal court over a governor of a state, the court said:

"The District Court had jurisdiction. The suit is not against the State. The applicable principle is that where state officials, purporting to act under state authority, invade rights secured by the Federal Constitution, they are subject to the process of the federal courts in order that the persons injured may have appropriate relief. * * * The Governor of the State, in this respect, is in no different position from that of other state officials." 287 U.S. 378, 393.

The above quotations were included in Faubus v. United States, 254 F.2d 797 (C.A. 8th 1958) in answer to the argument that the discretion of the Governor or Arkansas in using the National Guard could not be questioned.

The Supreme Court in Cooper v. Aaron, supra, after disposing of the main issue, said:

"However, we should answer the premise of the actions of the Governor and Legislature that they are not bound by our holding in the Brown case. ****

"Article VI of the Constitution makes the Constitution the supreme Law of the Land. * * * Every state legislator and executive and judicial officer is solemly committed by oath taken pursuant to Art. VI, S 3 to support this Constitution. Chief Justice Taney, speaking for a unanimous Court in 1859, said that this requirement reflected the 'framers' anxiety to preserve it (the Constitution) in full force, in all its powers, and to guard against resistance to or evasion of its authority, on the part of a State. * * *'

"No state legislator or executive or judicial officer can war against the Constitution without violating his undertaking to support it. Chief Justice Marshall spoke for a unanimous Court in saying that: 'If the legislatures of the several states may, at will, annul the judgments of the courts of the United States, and destroy the rights acquired under those judgments, the constitution itself becomes a solemn mockery * * *.' United States v. Peters, 5 Cranch 115, 136, 3 L.Ed. 53. A Governor who asserts a power to nullify a federal court order is similarly restrained."

If the Governor of Louisiana refuses to present his defense of sovereignty in the federal courts by refusing service of process, the federal court might ignore the rule of abstaining from passing upon the constitutionality of state statute until the state has done so. It may then find that the law under which the Governor is proceeding is unconstitutional; that the Governor had no authority to control the schools or close them, and, as in the 1958 case, that the local school board remains the proper party defendant.

III. Closing under the "Local Option" Plan

This plan operates with the pupil assignment law and the tuition-grants. The state government abandons, to some degree, control over public education and makes the local school boards as autonomous as possible. The state appropriates money for education and turns it over to the local boards, or administrative units. The local board uses the money to maintain public schools, and in addition levies local tax for school purposes, if the community has voted for such a levy. If the board has been ordered to desegregate its schools, the community in effect votes whether or not to have a public school system by voting for or against the tax levy. If it votes against the levy, the local unit does not operate any public schools. It is, therefore, not violating the federal court order because there are no schools to desegregate. If the community keeps the public schools, the assignment plan it put into effect. A child may request a transfer if he is unwilling to attend a desegregated school; if no transfer is possible, he may apply for a tuition grant. In communities where the schools are closed, the state funds are used by the board for the tuition grants.

Cooper v. Aaron, the Supreme Court set the test: "State support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds, or property cannot be squared with the Amendment's command...." In this situation the state is not supporting segregated schools. State funds are used for schools which may be integrated or for tuition grants to pupils. This is an entirely different case from that in which the grants are given to pupils in the "closed" areas, while the remaining areas throughout the state are operated on a segregated basis. Both the Arkansas and Virginia cases especially noted that other schools operated by the state were required to be segregated. The Virginia case in discussing taxpayer discrimination took care not to touch upon the type of factual situation raised by the "local option" plan. If the schools in "closed" areas are truly private, it would seem that this arrangement may pass the evasion test. If the county or parish is the unit, then a closing of all the schools of the county may constitute a withdrawal from public education without discrimination. On the other hand, if the state is the unit, then a partial closing has resulted, considering the state as a whole. It might be argued that there is in fact a state educational system, and that the taxpayers of the closed schools, who pay state as well as local taxes, have been discriminated against. Finding the remedy would be more difficult than finding the discrimination. The citizen cannot compel his county to levy the tax. He cannot claim the state has discriminated against his county, for his county has received its share of state funds. If, however, the courts insist on total abandonment of public education as the only avoidance of the Brown case, they may allow an injunction suit against the state, restraining the operation of public schools unless there are public schools available to all the citizens. The Brown case states that education must be made available to all "on equal terms" where the state has undertaken to provide it. It might be argued that tuition grants constitute "separate but not equal" treatment. If it comes before the courts, this issue will undoubtedly be influenced by the type of private school arrangements in the "closed" area.

Cities have been allowed to close recreational facilities, rather than desegregate them. Tonkins v. Greensboro, 162 F. Supp. 549 (M.D.N.C. 1958) held:

"No person has any constitutional right to swim in a public pool. All citizens do have the right, however, if a public swimming pool is provided, not to be barred therefrom solely because of race or color. If the swimming pools are closed or sold, the rights of all groups will be equal, and it must follow that the closing or sale will not discriminate against anyone."

In Clark v. Flory, 141 F. Supp. 248, aff'd 237 F.2d 597 (1956), the plaintiff was denied relief because the state had closed the state park in question. In this case legislative action was needed to reopen the park. The court distinguished cases where administrative agencies could close and reopen at will.

On the rationale of these cases, it is possible that a local governing body can close schools, if it closes all within its jurisdiction. A citizen of New Orleans cannot complain to the state that the citizens of Baton Rouge have a swimming pool. It remains to be determined if schools are in the same category.

IV. Permanent School Closing and Substitute Plans

In the event that public schools are closed, what can be done in assisting the private schools? These issues are similar, whether the closing be state-wide or local. However, in a state where there is no public school system, it may be necessary for that state to relinquish control of private schools to a greater degree than if the public system is operated also. The state has plenary control over its public school system; as to the private system it may regulate only in the interest of the public health, safety and welfare. Ordinarily the police power over private schools is fairly wide, and new regulations may be imposed without suspicion, so long as a public system exists too. If, however, the public system disappears and at the same time the state extends its control over private schools beyond the control exercised previously, then the private schools may become public. It matters not that each individual instance of control can be justified in the exercise of the police power. If the total result is that the private school system is indirectly supported, and regulated under the same rules previously applicable to public schools, then such schools may become "public" for the purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment. The only sure way to avoid this is for the state to repeal all school laws or those remotely concerned with schools, give up all control and regulation, and provide no assistance for education whatever. What can be done short of such an extreme measure is speculative. How many features of public education can be retained and still maintain the private character of the schools cannot be predicted. Therefore, in a discussion of details, it should be borne in mind that the whole may be more than the sum total of its parts.

It is axiomatic that the Fourteenth Amendment applies to state action; it does not apply to private action. In considering a particular institution, a court may find that by reason of the support to that institution or the control of it by the state, it is a state institution and its action is state action, so that the Amendment applies. A private charter of incorporation is no guarantee that the corporation's action is not state action.

Enoch Pratt donated a library to the City of Baltimore in his will, by donating the property and the building outright to the City and providing that the library should be incorporated and managed privately. He established a trust fund for the library and the City was also required to support the library by making appropriations thereto. The library set up a training school for librarians and refused to admit the plaintiff. The federal Court of Appeals found that such refusal was state action and enjoined the corporation from discriminating in admissions. Although the City did not control the library, it owned the property and contributed a major portion of its income. Kerr v. Enoch Pratt Free Library, 149 F2d 212 (4th Cir. 1945), cert. den. 326 U.S. 72 (1945).

In the same Circuit, a federal District Court found that a school of mechanical arts was not a state school, even though the City of Baltimore owned the property and leased to the private corporation for much less than the commercial rental value of the premises. In addition the City provided tuition scholarships and appropriated some money to the school directly. Norris V. Mayor of Baltimore, 78 F.Supp. 451 (D.C.Md. 1948).

The Norris case distinguished the Kerr case and refused to follow it. It is doubtful that any direct support of a private school system substituted for public schools would now be allowed. The Cooper case, it will be recalled, says: "State support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds or property cannot be squared with the Amendment's command that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Nor would the Norris leasing arrangement be allowed today. After the Brown decision, municipalities and states attempted to lease recreational facilities to private groups. The courts held that the lessees would be subject to the Amendment. The lessee is bound by the obligation of the state lessor not to discriminate. Even where the motive for the lease was not avoidance of the Brown rule, the court applied the rule to lessees. Derrington v. Plummer, 240 F.2d 922 (S.D. Tex. 1955), cert. den. sub nom Case v. Plummer, 353 U.S. 924.

The Derrington case suggested: "No doubt a county may in good faith lawfully sell and dispose of its surplus property, and its subsequent use by the grantee would not be state action." It has been noted that Greensboro, North Carolina was allowed to sell a swimming pool rather than desegregate it. The court stated that the sale must be a bona fide sale without cullusion as to future use. Tonkins v. Greensboro, supra.

The Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit enjoined the Little Rock School Board from leasing school property to the private school corporation. Aaron v. Cooper, 358 U.S. 1 _____(8th Cir. 1958). The Louisiana law allows school property to be leased or sold, for cash or for credit. It is possible that the courts might enjoin a sale on liberal credit terms. Even a sale for a fair cash price might be enjoined if it is made in connection with an illegal closing. If the closing itself is accomplished legally, then the credit terms will be a factor in considering whether the private school is supported by the state.

Two of the other leading cases on "state action" should be mentioned. In New York City the power of eminent domain was used to acquire property for a housing development constructed by a private corporation. In addition, tax exemptions were given to the corporation, which refused admission to Negroes. The court found that this was not sufficient state support to constitute state action. Dorsey v. Stuyvesant Town Corp., 299 N.Y. 512, 87 N.E.2d 541 (1949), The Supreme Court denied certiorari, 339 U.S. 981 (1950).

The action of Girard College, a private school, was found to be state action, so long as the City of Philadelphia acted as trustee under the testamentary trust creating the college. Pennsylvania v. Board of Directors, 353 U.S. 230 (1956). When state control was removed by changing the trustees, the Pennsylvania court held that the constitutional objections had been removed. In re Girard College, Trusteeship, 391 Pa. 434, 138 A.2d 844 (1958).

Tuition grants, considered independently, are probably valid by analogy to the cases questioning state support of the church. In Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1 (1947), the Supreme Court found no violation of the First Amendment (incorporated into the Fourteenth) in a provision granting transportation to parochial schools at public expense. Payments were made to the parents. In Cochran v. Board of Education, 281 U.S. 370 (1930), the Supreme Court upheld Louisiana law supplying free textbooks to parochial school children. On the other hand, the Supreme Court of Virginia found that tuition grants to children of deceased veterans, which might be used in sectarian schools, constituted an indirect support of the schools themselves. Almond v. Day, 199 Va. 1 (19). If tuition grants operate so as to provide the major portion of the operating expenses, the courts might take the approach that the state is indirectly supporting the schools and they are subject to the Amendment.

Apart from the questions of financial assistance and control, the courts may find "state action" where there is a private use of public machinery to accomplish the forbidden purpose. If the schools close in one area, the school board remains in existence. If dispenses the grants and submits budgets to the state to show the amount of needed funds. An analogy might be made to the "white primary" cases invalidating discrimination in voting rights in the Democratic primaries, on the ground that use of election machinery by private groups was "state action". Even further, the courts have used the theory of "exercise of a public function" by a private group to find "state action". Such a notion was used to find "state action" where the state had given up all control and regulations of the primary. Rice v. Elmore, 165 F.2d 387 (4th Cir. 1947), cert. den. 353 U.S. 875 (1948); Terry v. Adams, 345 U.S. 461 (1953). The court might not go so far as to find that providing private education is exercising a public function; it might well find, however, that the New Orleans Educational Cooperative, Inc. was substituted for the public school system and was therefore exercising a public function. A privately-owned company town was found to be exercising the public functions of a municipality and therefore limited by the Fourteenth Amendment, in Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U. S. 501 (1946).

"As long as the Fourteenth Amendment remains a valid, enforceable provision of the Federal Constitution, it seems scarcely debatable that the school-closing, publicy-financed private school system will be declared invalid." Raynard, Review of Legislation, 19 Louisiana Law Review 155 (1958).

BACKGROUND MATERIAL ON THE LOUISIANA SCHOOL PROBLEM: SEGREGATION-DESEGREGATION

On July 15, 1959 the Orleans Parish School Board was ordered by the Federal District Court to file a plan of desegregation of public schools by March 1, 1960--later postponed to May 16, 1960. When the School Board failed to comply with the order on May 16, the Federal Court supplied a plan of its own which read as follows:

> "It is ordered that, beginning with the opening of school in September, 1960, all public schools in the city of New Orleans shall be desegregated in accordance with the following plan:
> "A. All children entering the first grade may attend either the formerly all-white public school nearest their homes, or formerly all-Negro public school nearest their homes, at their option.
> "B. Children may be transferred from one school to another provided such transfers are not based on consideration of race."

On May 25, 1960 the Federal District Court in New Orleans ordered desegregation in public schools of St. Helena and East Baton Rouge parishes and in six state-operated trade schools. Judge Wright said in his judgments:

> "It is ordered, adjudged and decreed (that the various boards) are restrained and enjoined from requiring segregation of the races in any school under their jurisdiction and from engaging in any action which limits or affects the administration to, attendance in, or education of plaintiffs or any other Negro child...on the basis of race or color."

Judge Wright said that integration was to begin "after such time as may be necessary to make arrangements for admission of children to such schools on a racially nondiscriminatory basis with all deliberate speed."

There was no specific date set for compliance. The six trade schools affected are in Crowley, Natchitoches, Greensburg, Lake Charles, Opelousas, and Shreveport.

What is in store for the public school system of Louisiana? Because of these recent court decisions concerning desegregation in public elementary, secondary, and trade schools in various parts of Louisiana, this question should be receiving serious thought by every citizen of the state.

An editorial in the Times-Picayune on June 26, 1960, "The Public School Situation in New Orleans," began: "Tens of thousands of parents, we are sure, would like to be told now what is in store for them and their children when the regular public school term comes around in September. We wish we could guarantee them what to expect. On the basis of official information available at this time, it seems to us it would be difficult, if not impossible, to forecast accurately just what will be the situation on Sept. 6, when the new school term is scheduled to begin." The editorial brought out the conflicting views of Mr. Lloyd Rittiner, president of the Orleans Parish School Board, and Mr. Emile Wagner, former president and present Board member. Mr. Rittiner, who represents the views of the three other board members, believes that there must be some degree of integration in the New Orleans public schools in September, or the schools will be closed. Mr. Wagner believes it will be possible for the governor, as sovereign of the state, to supersede the school board and operate the schools on a segregated basis.

The editorial further stated: "The choice as to whether closed schools are to be preferred to integrated schools is one which the people themselves must make. We would not presume to make it for them....Abandonment of the public schools, if they are abandoned, will present many serious problems and these problems will be insoluble without sound planning and organization."

The League of Women Voters of Louisiana cannot evaluate and make recommendations on the public school situation under the wording of its present education item. State League can take action only on those issues or on legislation concerned with the subjects on which consensus has been reached. However, League members must necessarily be interested in problems concerning public education in support of our National Principle: "A system of free public education which provides equal opportunity for all." An educated citizenry is basic to the primary purpose of League: "To promote political responsibility through informed and active participation of citizens in government."

During the past six years, many people have felt that the question of segregation in the public schools was in the hands of the courts and our public officials. Little consideration has been given to the possibility that a choice might have to be made between conforming to the court decision and abandoning the public school system.

It now appears that a decision may have to be made before the people of Louisiana have had time to thoroughly study the situation and arrive at the best possible solution. While it may be true that court decisions are out of the hands of the people, and the responsibility for legislative and administrative changes rests with the public officials, state and local, to whom we have entrusted the powers of government, in a deeper sense the decision makers will be the private citizens who are actively involved in the lives of their communities.

This background information has been compiled to supplement the July 1960 Voter in preparing us to meet the possible crisis which may have to be faced as early as September 1960, either in local communities or throughout the state.

WHAT DOES THE U.S. CONSTITUTION SAY?

Preamble: "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union,...do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Article III, Sec. 1: "The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court...."

Article VI, Sec. 2: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof,...shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Article VI, Sec. 3: "The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution...."

Tenth Amendment: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Fourteenth Amendment, Sec. 1 (adopted in 1868): "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

WHAT HAVE THE FEDERAL COURTS SAID?

Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka (1954): "In approaching this problem we cannot turn back to 1868 when the Amendment (14th) was adopted, or even to 1896 when Plessy v. Ferguson was written. (This case dealt with transportation, and the Supreme Court ruled that segregation did not imply the inferiority of the colored race and that "separate but equal" facilities fulfilled the case of equal protection.) We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation....Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society....It is the very foundation of good citizenship....We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

A second decision in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka considered the manner in which relief was to be accorded. It stated in part: "Full implementation of these constitutional principles may require solution of varied local school problems....Because of their proximity to local conditions and the possible need for further hearings, the courts which originally heard these cases can best perform this judicial appraisal (on good faith implementation). Accordingly, we believe it appropriate to remand the cases to those courts....The courts will require that the defendants make a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance with our May 17, 1954 ruling." The decision further stated that desegregation was to be accomplished "with all deliberate speed."

Cooper v. Aaron (1958): This case "involves a claim by the Governor and Legislature of a State (Arkansas) that there is no duty on state officials to obey federal court orders resting on this Court's considered interpretation of the United States Constitution.... The prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment extend to all action of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whatever the agency of the State taking the action...or whatever the guise in which it is taken....Constitutional rights...can neither be nullified openly and directly by state legislators or state executive or judicial officers, nor nullified indirectly by them through evasive schemes for segregation whether attempted 'ingeniously or ingenuously'....In 1803 Chief Justice Marshall...declared that 'It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is' (Marbury v. Madison)...(and later) 'If the legislatures of the several states may, at will, annul the judgments of the courts of the United States and destroy the rights acquired under those judgments, the constitution itself becomes a solemn mockery'....A governor who asserts a power to nullify a federal court order is similarly restrained....It is, of course, quite true that the responsibility for public education is primarily the concern of the States, but it is equally true that such responsibilities, like all other state activity, must be exercised consistently with federal constitutional requirements as they apply to state action....State support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds, or property cannot be squared with the Amendment's command that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws....The basic decision in Brown was unanimously reached by this Court only after the case had been briefed and twice argued and the issues had been given the most serious consideration. Since the first Brown opinion three new Justices have come to the court. They are at one with the Justices still on the Court who participated in that basic decision as to its correctness, and that decision is now unanimously reaffirmed."

In Justice Frankfurter's concurring statement on the Cooper v. Aaron case, he said: "Every act of government may be challenged by an appeal to law, as finally pronounced by this court. Even this court has the last say only for a time. Being composed of fallible men, it may err. But revision of its errors must be by orderly process of law. The court may be asked to reconsider its decisions, and this has been done successfully again and again throughout our history, or what this court has deemed its duty to decide may be changed by legislation, as it often has been, and on occasion by constitutional amendment."

Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham Board of Education (1958): (The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the decision of the U.S. District Court of the Northern District of Alabama.) "The School Placement Law furnishes the legal machinery for an orderly administration of the public schools in a constitutional manner by the admission of qualified pupils, upon a basis of individual merit without regard to their race or color. We must presume that it will be so administered. If not, in some future proceeding it is possible that it may be declared unconstitutional in its application."

Kelly v. The Board of Education of City of Nashville (1957): (Before the U.S. District Court of Middle Tennessee) A Tennessee law passed in 1957 (generally referred to as the School Preference Law) authorized boards of education to provide separate schools for white and Negro children whose parents or guardians elect that they attend school with members of their own race. The Court of Appeals upheld the District Court which ruled that this plan for three types of schools--one integrated, one for Negro children, and one for white children--is "on its face antagonistic to the principles declared by the Supreme Court in the two Brown cases and is, therefore, unconstitutional."

James v. Almond (1959): "...it is our duty to apply constitutional principles in accordance with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and when state legislation conflicts with those constitutional principles, state legislation must yield....While the State of Virginia, directly or indirectly, maintains and operates a school system with the use of public funds, or participates by arrangement or otherwise in the management of such a school system, no one public school or grade in Virginia may be closed to avoid the effect of the law of the land as interpreted by the Supreme Court, while the state permits other public schools or grades to remain open at the expense of the taxpayers....We do not suggest that, aside from the Constitution of Virginia, the state must maintain a public school system. That is a matter for state determination.... In the event the State of Virginia withdraws from the business of educating its children, and the local governing bodies assume this responsibility, the same principles with respect to equal protection of laws would be controlling as to that particular county or city."

WHAT DOES THE LOUISIANA CONSTITUTION SAY?

Provisions regarding education are found in Article XII of the Louisiana Constitution, and those regarding appropriations are in Article IV. Quotations are from those sections having special significance.

Article XII, Sec. 1: (Act 557 in 1958) (The 1954 edition of the La. Constitution [latest available] has two sections 1 of Article XII. The first section 1 contains the following provision: "The educational system of the state shall consist of all public schools, and all institutions of learning, supported in whole or in part by appropriations of public funds...." The second section 1 states: "The Legislature shall provide for a public educational system of the State to consist of all public schools and all institutions of learning operated by State agencies...." There is some confusion regarding the 1958 amendment [Act 557] since it did not specify which of the sections 1 was being amended.) "The Legislature shall have full authority to make provisions for the education of school children of this State and/or for an educational system which shall include all public schools and all institutions of learning operated by state agencies. In this connection, the Legislature may authorize and/or provide financial assistance to students attending private non-sectarian elementary and/or secondary schools in this State, out of any monies or funds presently or hereafter dedicated or devoted to public schools or public education whether by this Constitution or by statute, anything in this Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. A non-sectarian school as used herein, shall mean a school whose operation is not controlled directly or indirectly by any church or sectarian body or by any individual or individuals acting on behalf of a church or sectarian body...."

Article XII, Sec. 6: "The State Board of Education shall have supervision and control of all free public schools."

Article XII, Sec. 15: Second: "Parish school boards shall place into one fund, to be known as the general parish school fund, all revenue received for the general maintenance of public schools from state and parish constitutional and statutory sources; and such funds shall not be subdivided, apportioned or separated in any manner whatsoever, nor shall they be paid to any ward, district, or other subdivision, but such revenue shall be dedicated and used exclusively, to pay the cost of the current operation of public elementary and secondary schools within the parish and under the control of the parish school board, as provided for by the laws of the State."

Article IV, Sec. 8: "No appropriations from the State treasury shall be made for private, charitable or benevolent purposes to any person or community, provided this shall not apply to State Asylums for the Insane, Schools for Deaf and Dumb, and other public charitable institutions conducted under State authority."

Article IV, Sec. 9: "The general appropriation bill shall embrace nothing but appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the government, pensions, the public debt and interest thereon, public schools, public roads, public charities and all State institutions; and such bill shall be so itemized as to show for what account each and every appropriation shall be made. All other appropriations shall be made by separate bills, each embracing but one object."

Article IV, Sec. 12: "The funds, credit, property or things of value of the State, or of any political corporation thereof, shall not be loaned, pledged or granted to or for any person or persons, associations or corporations, public or private;..."

WHAT DO THE LOUISIANA STATUTES SAY?

Many laws have been passed by legislatures since 1954 regarding education. Some of the bills passed in 1960 include provisions of Acts passed in previous years. The ones most pertinent are summarized:

Classification of Public Schools
Assumption of Control by Governor

Act 496 (1960) provides for a Special School Classification Committee of the Louisiana legislature, appointed by the President of the Senate, which has the power, authority, and responsibility of classifying any new public school, or re-classifying any existing public school. Such classification must designate a school as either all-white or all-Negro. The authority to classify any public school as integrated is reserved to the legislature. If the legislature has now classified a school or school system as integrated and any court or local school board places an integrated plan into operation...the Governor shall supersede the school board and assume exclusive control...until such time as the legislature shall classify or reclassify schools to place into operation therein a plan of racial integration. Suit contesting any of the provisions of this Act may be brought against the state only with the consent of the legislature.

Governor's Power to Close Schools
Rights of Personnel
Promotion of Students

Act 542 (1960) provides that the Governor shall close any public school when the operation of the school is threatened, interfered with, or disrupted by disorder, riots, or violence, or in his judgment the closing of such school is deemed necessary to prevent disorder, riots or violence; and for reopening of the school when the Governor deems it no longer necessary to keep the school closed in order to prevent disorder, riots or violence from threatening, interfering with, or disrupting the operation of the school.

The Governor shall direct the local school boards to protect the rights and privileges of sick leave, sabbatical leave, tenure, retirement, and continue payment of salaries and other benefits of all school employees for the remainder of the school year. In the event an employee accepts full time private employment, salary for which is less than that received from the local school system, the local system shall pay only the difference between the two salaries.

School boards have the authority to promote any and all students.

Withholding Books, Supplies, Funds

Act 333 (1960) provides that no free school books, other school supplies, state funds, school lunch funds, or any assistance or recognition shall be furnished any integrated school. Any person, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined or imprisoned at the discretion of the court.

Closure of Schools
Rights of Personnel
Promotion of Students
Sale or Lease of School Property

Act 495 (1960) specifies that when any court has ordered or orders any public school or school system in the state integrated, whether all classes or grades or certain classes or grades are ordered integrated, the Governor may order all public schools in the state closed. When the Governor decides that the schools can be opened segregated and peacefully, he shall order them reopened. If the Governor decides that the schools may not be reopened on a segregated basis , after a reasonable time he may declare the schools permanently closed.

The Governor shall direct the local school boards to protect the rights and privileges of sick leave, sabbatical leave, tenure, retirement, and continue payment of salaries and other benefits of all school employees for the remainder of the school year. In the event an employee accepts full time private employment, salary for which is less than that received from the local school system, the local system shall pay only the difference between the two salaries.

School boards have the authority to promote any and all students.

School boards may sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of, at public or private sale, for cash or on terms of credit, any real or personal property if the schools have been permanently closed by the Governor, to any private agency, group of persons, corporation or cooperative engaged in operating a private school system. The consideration shall be equal to the reasonable value or in case of sale...to the replacement costs of property sold.

Pupil Placement Law — Act 492 (1960) provides for assignment, transfer, and continuance of pupils in public schools. The local school board, or the local superintendent of schools (if authorized by the school board) shall consider various factors in the assignment, transfer or continuance of pupils among and within the schools as listed:

1. Available room and teaching capacity
2. Effect of new pupils upon established or proposed academic programs
3. Suitability of established curricula for particular pupils
4. Adequacy of pupil's academic preparation for admission to a particular school and curriculum
5. Scholastic aptitude and relative intelligence or mental energy or ability of the pupil for type of teaching and associations involved
6. Effect of admission upon the academic progress of other students in a particular school or facility thereof
7. Psychological effect upon pupil of attendance at a particular school
8. Possibility or threat of friction or disorder among pupils or others
9. Possibility of breaches of the peace or ill will or economic retaliation within the community
10. Home environment of the pupil
11. Maintenance or severance of established social and psychological relationship with other pupils and with teachers
12. Choice and interests of the pupil
13. Morals, conduct, health and personal standards of the pupil
14. Request or consent of parents and guardians and reasons assigned therefore
15. Availability of transportation facilities
16. Effect of admission upon prevailing academic standards at a particular school.

The bill further provides for admission of pupils to schools in adjoining parishes by mutual agreement of the school boards, and the transfer of school funds on account of such transfer; withdrawal of children from schools where races are commingled upon written objection of the parent or guardian and such aid for the education of the child as may be authorized by law; immunity of school boards and agents to any charge of libel or slander because of written or oral statements during proceedings concerning this Act; appeal from decision of the school board.

(The Louisiana Pupil Placement Law was modeled after the Alabama School Placement Law. See Supreme Court decisions, above.)

Trade and Special Schools — Acts 579, 580, 581, and 582 (1960) provide for classification, cutting off funds, closing, etc. in case of integration in trade or special schools.

Educational Cooperative Law — Act 257 (1958) provides that "Cooperative, nonprofit membership corporations may be organized under this Chapter for the purpose of conducting private elementary or secondary schools or educational facilities." This Act states that it "repeals all laws in conflict herewith." Detailed provisions for the organization and operation, powers, duties and liabilities include:

Name of cooperative
Organizers, officers, agents and employees
Articles and By-laws
Membership, Meetings, Voting
Board of Directors consisting of at least five persons
Division and redivision of territory into districts
Conversion of corporations now providing educational services into cooperatives
Use of revenues
Sale, mortgage or lease of property
Fees
Immunity of members for debts of cooperative
Dissolution

Expense or Tuition Grants — Act 258 (1958) titled "An Act to provide for a system of education expense grants for children attending non-sectarian, non-public schools where no racially separate public school is provided..." provides that:

Local school boards shall determine the amount paid; this shall be equal to the per-day, per-student amount of state and local funds expended on public schools throughout the state during the preceding school year except may not exceed the amount actually spent by the child.

Evidence is required that child actually has attended a private, non-sectarian school, recognized and approved by the State Board of Education. Payments are to be made by school board on monthly, bi-monthly or quarterly basis as set up by State Board of Education. Vouchers must be signed by president and treasurer of local school board. Parish and city school boards may appropriate amounts from any local tax or non-tax funds and state funds for an education expense grant.

Other provisions include penalties for false swearing, accepting unearned payments, hearings, appeals, etc.

Suspension of Compulsory Attendance Requirement — Act 28 (1958) provides for the suspension of compulsory attendance laws in any public or private day school where integration has been ordered.

Dismissal of Personnel — Acts 248, 249, and 250 (1956) provide for dismissal of school bus operators, teachers, and any other school employee advocating or in any way working for integration of public schools.

WHAT NEW ORLEANS LEAGUE HAS DONE

Voters Service A series of three television programs, moderated by the New Orleans League President, were presented over WYES-TV Channel 8 at weekly intervals on June 29, July 6, and July 13, 1960. The studio taped these programs which each run about one and a half hours, and the tape is available to other TV stations upon request to WYES, 916 Navarre Ave., New Orleans.

The programs were as follows:

1. Mr. M. Hepburn Many--U.S. Attorney, gave background on U.S. Constitution and Court Decisions; Mr. Eugene D. Saunders--President, New Orleans Bar Association, and Mr. Wegmann--Bar Association Member, questioned Mr. Many.

2. Mr. Lloyd Rittiner--President, Orleans Parish School Board, Mr. T.H. Shepard and Mr. M.R. Sutherland, members of Board, with Superintendent James Redmond and five members of his staff were questioned by Glenn P. Clasen, President of New Orleans City Council and Mr. C.P. Besse, former school board member.

3. Mr. Emile Wagner and Mr. Louis Riecke, the two remaining school board members who had not been able to appear on the previous panel, in addition to Dr. Emmett Irwin, President of Citizens' Council of Greater New Orleans, Dr. Robert Lancaster, President of Committee For Public Education, and Mr. Jack Nelson, an Attorney and member of Save Our Schools Committee.

General Meeting In response to membership request, a general meeting of the New Orleans League was held on July 19, 1960, to consider ways in which League could further inform its members and the public regarding the possible closing of schools. At the meeting the membership voted to recommend that an emergency item be placed on the current agenda. The date for a special meeting to consider a current agenda item has been set for August 11. Under New Orleans League By-laws, an emergency item can be voted on at a meeting called for that purpose, after two weeks' notice to the members. Tentative wording suggested by the New Orleans League Board is "Study of the problems presently confronting the New Orleans Public School System."

Dear Mrs. Smith:

Mrs. Downing has asked us to send you this kit of Open School materials to use in your efforts to enlist your community in the fight for open schools.

We have divided it into two main categories:

1. Background facts and information as up to the minute as we can make them. (We will continue to keep you supplied with additional material as it comes off the press.)

2. A sample editorial, radio spots . . . even a sample speech that you can use as is, or adapt to your own local situation. Here again, we will be sending new material before and during the "Last Chance" Legislature.

We have also included a sample fund-raising letter just in case you, or any of your co-workers know people who might like to help defray the cost of this all-out effort.

In order to get this kit to you immediately, we might have omitted something which would be particularly effective for you. Any suggestions you have will be most gratefully received.

"Crisis in the Public Schools"

ADDRESS

By

DeKalb County Representative

JAMES A. MacKAY

At Emory University on Monday, Nov. 3, 1958 before the Adult Short Course Class

I am glad to have this opportunity to discuss the impending crisis in the Atlanta public school system, because more than 7,000 students who are enrolled in the Atlanta public school system reside in the county I represent and attend schools located in DeKalb County. Frankly, I do not know the answer to our school problem, but I am certain of one thing. We are not making strenuous enough efforts to solve it. The only thing the official leadership of Georgia has done so far is to come up with a "No School Plan." It is my opinion that we have brains and character enough to come up with a "Some School Plan" which will save our children from irreparable damage which would inevitably follow, should the schools be closed for any substantial length of time. Therefore, let me review with you the events of the last five years.

In anticipation of a Federal decree which might order integration of the public schools and our university system, Governor Herman Talmadge sponsored the private school amendment in the 1953 session of the General Assembly. It passed in November of that year by a vote of 146 to 37 in the lower House. That was before the May 17, 1954 decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation.

During the late summer and fall of 1954, after the momentous decision, the people of Georgia engaged in a spirited debate as to the merits or demerits of the amendment.

B. D. Murphy, Chief Architect of Georgia's segregation laws, contended that failure to pass the amendment would mean mixed schools in Georgia in 12 months. Governor-Elect Marvin Griffin said that passage of the amendment would not affect our public schools and that after passage of the amendment the General Assembly could meet in special session and enact legislation which would guarantee free public schools.

Other proponents of the amendment, Eugene Cook, Ernest Vandiver, John Sammons Bell, and Durwood Pye, said that we could keep the same schools, the same teachers, the same books and the same teachers' pensions under the private school plan. You will recall that they said the whole thing could be handled by bookkeeping — two sets of books would do the trick.

Opponents of the private school amendment, led by Hamilton Lokey, Fulton County representative, and M. D. Collins, State School Superintendent, vigorously contended that we could not have public schools outside of the law and that come what may, we would have to solve our problems within the framework of the law and the public school system.

Hamilton Lokey and John Sammons Bell brought the issue into clear focus when each was asked whether he would prefer integrated schools or no schools. Bell replied that he would prefer no schools. Lokey replied that he would prefer integrated schools but that he felt that we did not face this alternative, that the real question was whether we would have "no schools" or "some integration" in our public schools.

When the votes were counted, 210,488 Georgians, relying on the premise that you could have "free-private-public-schools" or "free-public-private-schools" on a segregated basis, voted for the amendment. 181,148 Georgians voted against this amendment. Baldwin, Bibb, Camden, Chatham, Chattooga, Clarke, Cobb, Coffee, Coweta, Dade, DeKalb, Fannin, Floyd, Forsyth, Fulton, Glynn, Gordon, Habersham, Hall, Liberty, Lumpkin, Murray, Polk, Rabun, Richmond, Thomas, Towns, Walker, White and Whitfield counties voted against the amendment. 31 counties voted against the amendment, and 128 counties voted for the amendment.

Governor Griffin had promised that there would be no enabling legislation in the 1955 session and none was passed except a bill which made it a felony for any official to expend any funds for mixed schools.

In the 1956 session, however, a package of bills called, "The Private School Plan" was dropped into the hopper and five of these six bills were enacted into law. Let me review them briefly.

SENATE BILL #1. requires the closing of the public schools in the event of a Federal decree ordering integration and provides for grants to individual children in amounts to be determined by the governor, and directs that State and local taxes shall be collected as may be necessary.

Section 3 of this act makes it a misdemeanor for any parent to pay this money as tuition to any sectarian school. It should be pointed out here that most private schools now in existence in Georgia are sectarian schools and this means that in the event of closing our schools, the private schools we would most likely turn to would not be available insofar as the grants would be concerned.

SENATE BILL #2. declares it to be a misdemeanor for anyone to enter upon the property of a closed school except for its care, custody, maintenance or inspection.

SENATE BILL #3. authorizes the leasing of public schools for private educational purposes without bids and for periods up to five years.

SENATE BILL #4. authorizes the State School Building Authority to lease school buildings.

SENATE BILL #5. as I recall, made it a felony to appeal a decision denying admission to a school. This bill was quietly dropped when we pointed out that this struck down the intelligent decision of Judge Sibley, that you must first exhaust your administrative remedies before seeking relief in the courts. It is through the administrative process that school children can be intelligently classified for reasons other than color.

SENATE BILL #6. amended the State Teachers Retirement system by providing for the admission of teachers in privately operated non-sectarian schools.

Eight of us in the House of Representatives at that time studied these bills very carefully and then issued the Public School Declaration. I would like to read it to you because I believe that it is a statement of principle with which most Georgians would agree, and I feel as deeply tonight about this statement as I did then:

Public School Declaration

We believe in the public schools of Georgia. They are our greatest asset. The work of Georgians for seventy-five years and the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars in public funds have made our schools what they are today. Our children now have educational opportunities comparable to those of children in other parts of the United States.

We believe that every boy and girl and every parent, and every Georgian, has a stake in the preservation and strengthening of our public schools.

We believe that anything that harms the public schools does irreparable harm to the future of our children and our State.

Believing these things, we cannot support legislation which would:

1. Destroy our public schools.
2. Place in the hands of any one man, whoever he might be, unlimited power to shut down our public schools and dole out our school money.
3. Provide for the lease, sale, transfer or other disposition of public school properties without any statutory safeguards to protect the public interest or provide who will get schools and on what terms, and without any provision whatsoever for the welfare or future of our teachers other than retirement pay.
4. Substitute for our present accredited public schools a grant of money to be applied toward an education of unknown quality, in unspecified locations, for an uncertain school year, with no required academic standards and with no provision for building maintenance other than fire safety.
5. Deny the right of peaceful assembly, petition, or open discussion relative to the school problem.

We believe in our traditional way of life, but we must find a solution to our present school crisis consistent with this declaration of principles.

Lokey of Fulton
McWhorter of DeKalb
M. M. Smith of Fulton
W. M. Williams of Hall
Nightingale of Glynn
Mackay of DeKalb
W. B. Gunter of Hall
Fred Bentley of Cobb

Senate Bill #1, which is the key bill in the package, received overwhelming endorsement in the House — 13 of us voted against it.

Thus, the 1956 private school plan is now the law! It is a "No School Plan." It allows the governor absolutely no discretion. He must close the schools in the event of a Federal decree. It allows the residents of the school district involved no chance to vote its opinion on whether or not the schools shall be closed. It allows the duly elected Board of Education in the districts affected no opportunity to participate in whatever decisions are made.

This private school plan was sold to the people on the basis of the argument that you can have free-segregated-public-private schools; that all you need to do is to keep two sets of books. The argument has failed. It has failed in Little Rock and it is failing in Virginia.

What does this mean to the people of Georgia? And, what do these facts shout to the General Assembly and the incoming administration?

I can speak for no one but myself, as a parent of two of the million students in the public schools of Georgia. I can speak only as one mindful of the hopes and fears of the 30,000 teachers who strive daily to pass the light of truth on to the boys and girls of Georgia. I can speak only as one of the millions of beneficiaries of our public schools, both as a student and as a parent. I can speak only as one of the hundreds of thousands of parents who simply cannot afford to pay the cost of an accredited private school education — even assuming such facilities were available.

It seems to me that the 1959 General Assembly has a clear duty to safeguard our public schools by passing Legislation which will give the governor latitude and will not make him a captive of the situation, and a sitting duck for unfriendly forces.

Second, it seems to me that a law should be passed which would give complete local control, which would place the decision making authority in our duly elected Boards of Education in each school district, and which would allow them to arrange referendums which would give the people themselves a chance to be heard as the issues develop. Local government, local control, keeping government close to the people is a Georgia tradition which should be second to none. We, in the local communities, do not think our schools should be run from Washington, or from the State Capitol.

Third, responsible leaders in the school districts which are feeling the impact of these times should meet to calmly and deliberately take stock of what is happening elsewhere, and what might happen here. Only in this way can we hope to save and improve our public schools which are the key to our National security, and which are the means of bringing a more abundant life to our people, through training boys and girls how to make a living and how to live.

Bill Bodenhamer, who has a son going to a free integrated federal institution, West Point, caused Ernie Vandiver to work himself into an unfortunate corner. Ernie is moving to Atlanta in January, and he and his children will live in the Atlanta public school district. I believe that by the exercise of common sense and practicality, it is reasonable to expect that his children can be educated in a segregated school in the city of Atlanta, notwithstanding the possibility of some integration in that system. If Governor-Elect Vandiver does not work to save our public school system, I sincerely fear that he may find his children along with 100,000 others in a costly and disastrous predicament.

Finally, I have confidence that the good people of Georgia have the judgment and the character to protect our traditions within the framework of the law, and that they will uphold and advance the vital cause of public education.

It is becoming crystal clear that we cannot get along with a "No School Plan." We have a right to expect our political and school leadership to at least have a "Some School Plan."

DOLLARS FOR HOPE

"Dollars for HOPE" parties to provide financial help and neighborhood discussion on Georgia's school crisis got underway April 20. Before the end of April, 61 such gatherings, from morning coke parties to bridge luncheons, garden teas and evening meetings will have taken place in the Atlanta and DeKalb area.

Mrs. Dan Burge is HOPE's chairman of this new project, which is expected to form the basis of a long-range discussion program among neighborhood groups interested in keeping abreast of school developments in Georgia. Both the Atlanta and DeKalb Leagues of Women Voters are co-sponsoring many of these meetings and providing discussion leaders. At least 50 percent of the hostesses, according to Mrs. Burge, are emphasizing discussion rather than just sociability.

Yeoman work in helping to organize the "Dollars for HOPE" gatherings so far has been done by Mrs. Raymond Kuniansky, Mrs. Frazier Durrett, Jr., Mrs. G. Stanley Joslin, Mrs. Ambrose Pendergrast and Mrs. Edwin Irwin.

THERE'S HOPE...FOR SPEAKERS!

Members of HOPE's Speakers Bureau met April 21 at the Atlanta Athletic Club to swap ideas and receive kits of material. The Speakers Bureau, of which Mrs. J. Brittain Pendergrast is Chairman, is receiving more and more requests to explain the objectives of HOPE and the means to preserve public education. Representative groups which have recently heard addresses by HOPE speakers include the Atlanta Jaycees, Y. W. C. A. Homemakers' Club, Agnes Scott alumni, Cartersville Lions Club, East Atlanta Exchange Club, Southwest Optimist Club, an adult Sunday School class at St. Mark's Methodist Church and many others.

IT TAKES MONEY TO SPREAD HOPE

Maintaining an office, even in donated space, printing materials, mailing information throughout the State -- all require a continuing flow of contributions. Budget something for HOPE each month and keep mailing checks into the office; or take a tip from Mrs. Harry M. Gershon, who recently sent a contribution honoring the birthday of a friend who was also a strong HOPE supporter.

NEW CAR STICKERS AVAILABLE

Call the office if you'd like one of the new car stickers which read: "Join HOPE...Keep Our Schools Open."

MRS. HARRIS TAKES HELM

Mrs. J. C. Harris (Betty) has become Executive Director of HOPE, Inc., giving full-time professional service to the organization. In addition to directing the HOPE office, she will travel around the State to help establish HOPE in communities interested in preserving the public school system of Georgia.

Mrs. Harris comes to HOPE from the Girl Scouts, in which she was a professional worker since World War II. She most recently has served as Executive Director of the Yonah Girl Scout Council, with headquarters in Gainesville, after previous assignments in Atlanta and Albany. Mrs. Harris was born in Waleska at ReinHardt College, where both her parents were teachers. She is a graduate of Agnes Scott College. Her husband is J. C. Harris, an office equipment salesman. They live in Decatur and have two grown daughters.

MRS. PAULEY, STATE CHAIRMAN

Mrs. William C. Pauley has accepted the Chairmanship of the State Organization Committee, following the resignation of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Dilworth, III.

With the help of Mrs. Harris, Executive Director, she will visit and write groups throughout the State where increasing interest in HOPE is being expressed. On April 24, Dick Kenyon, Gainesville attorney, who helped the Rev. James Hooten organize HOPE-Gainesville, will meet with a group in Athens to form a HOPE Chapter there. Mrs. Harris held a preliminary meeting last week in Athens. Another meeting is scheduled next week in Macon.

Recent expressions of interest in HOPE have come from Savannah, Rome, Dalton, Albany, Brunswick, Columbus, Moultrie, Greenville, Warner Robins, Augusta, LaGrange, Cartersville and Newnan.

KEEP PETITIONS CIRCULATING!

Call the office, JA 5-8469, for additional copies of the Petition in support of public education. Only by adding more and more names can we convince our political leaders that Georgians want the schools kept open!

HOPE TO OBSERVE BOARD MEETINGS

Henceforth HOPE will have an observer at the meetings of the Atlanta Board of Education at 7:30 P. M., the second Monday of each month in the City Hall. Go yourself -- meetings are open to the public!

SCHOOL ROUND-UP.....Teachers.....Official Views.....Supporting Organizations

ATLANTA TEACHERS ANXIOUS

HOPE has been advised by the principal of an outstanding private school in Atlanta that more than 200 Atlanta public school teachers have sent her applications for jobs next fall. She adds that she knows many other Atlanta teachers who have applied to schools in Florida. This can only be interpreted to mean that teachers are fearful lest Atlanta schools be closed. July is the month to watch for a developing teacher shortage here. That is when teachers must give notice if they do not plan to renew their contracts.

LATIMER REPLY EVASIVE

Many Atlanta teachers have expressed hesitation in supporting HOPE publicly because they feel they do not yet have clear-cut administrative approval. In an effort to clarify this doubt, in March HOPE sent a letter to all members of the Board of Education. In replying, A. C. Latimer, President, withheld any reassurance to teachers, saying: "Teachers were advised through the Superintendent's Letter that they are free to express their opinions in any manner they think best, but they are restricted from discussing the matter in the classrooms...We do not see any reason to reiterate our policy as we see no evidence of any misunderstanding on the part of our teachers."

Harry Boyte, Chairman of HOPE's Executive Committee, pointed out: "In spite of Mr. Latimer's reply, many teachers state that they feel they do not yet have satisfactory clearance to participate in HOPE. The catch, I think, is in the interpretation of Mr. Latimer's phrase, 'in any manner they think best', which nevertheless might not meet with administrative approval."

RUSSELL OFFERS NO SOLUTION

Sen. Richard B. Russell was asked by HOPE to outline his proposals for solving Georgia's school crisis. His reply, offering no constructive suggestions, stated: "I must advise that I cannot cooperate with your organization HOPE, Inc., for, if I understand it correctly, you are in essence advocating mixing the races in the public schools of Georgia...I shall do what I can to prevent educating white and Negro children in the same school rooms."

Inasmuch as the federal courts have ruled that public schools cannot be segregated, Senator Russell's position seems tantamount to refusing to support public education in Georgia.

Sen. Herman Talmadge did not even reply to a similar letter from HOPE.

GROUPS SPEAK FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION

Even though officials are failing to provide leadership needed in the school crisis, more and more voices are being raised for public education.

The Atlanta and DeKalb Leagues of Women Voters unanimously adopted, at their annual meetings in March, the current agenda item: "Preservation of Public Schools." The Georgia League, at its Savannah convention, adopted: "Promotion of Citizen Responsibility for Measures to Preserve and Improve Public Schools in Georgia."

Groups which have publicly advocated the continuation of public education in Georgia, include: B'nai B'rith, 319 Atlanta area ministers, 205 staff members of Emory University, 97 percent of the Agnes Scott faculty, 31 staff members of Oglethorpe University, 419 physicians in the Atlanta area, 160 members of the Communicable Disease Center, and the annual meeting of the Georgia Council of Churches.

THE SIBLEY REPORT

On April 28, 1960, after meetings throughout the state and with legal counsel, the General Assembly Committee on Schools (the Sibley Committee) presented a majority report and recommendations, and a minority report with an added statement by Rep. Render Hill.

THE MAJORITY REPORTED THAT:

The Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by the Supreme Court is the law of the land, and those state laws that are in conflict are unenforceable. Any public school system must recognize that the state cannot, by law, segregate by race. p.6

To maintain total segregation throughout the state, Georgia will have to give up all public schools. p.10

It will be impractical to develop a system of private schools that will provide adequately for the educational needs of the people of Georgia. p.11

Those who insist on total segregation but back away from closing all schools are deceiving themselves and the people. p.15

To close the schools temporarily would be a useless gesture, and would create confusion, great economic loss in the state and utter chaos in the schools. p.14

The basic alternatives are 1. give local authorities control of placing students, 2. give as much freedom of choice to parents and local communities as possible, and 3. give "assurance that no child will be required to go to school with a child of a different race except on a voluntary basis." p.12

Pupil placement is the plan by which the local school boards can place a pupil in a school according to geographical, scholastic, and psychological standards. p.12

To put these alternatives into effect would mean some changes in the Georgia Constitution, which would have to be voted on in a general election by all voters. p.15

THEREFORE THE MAJORITY RECOMMENDED THAT:

1. A Constitutional amendment be proposed to the effect that no child shall be forced into a school with a child of the opposite race, and that the child whose parents object to an integrated school be entitled to reassignment, tuition grants or scholarship aid. p.17

2. A Constitutional amendment be proposed to provide for a uniform system of local units for the administration of the schools, and to allow any such unit to close schools within the unit or to reopen the school in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the qualified voters. p.17

3. The General Assembly pass laws for tuition grants or scholarships for students who wish to withdraw from an integrated school or whose school has been closed. p.17

4. The General Assembly pass laws to have teachers retirement cover private school teachers as well as public school teachers. p.17

5. The General Assembly decide whether to close the schools, or to give as much freedom of choice as possible through 1. pupil placement, 2. empowering the people of each community to vote whether to close their schools in the event of integration or to continue the operation of said schools, and 3. parent option-parent would be able to ask for reassignment or withdrawal with tuition grant or scholarship aid for private education. p.18

THE MINORITY REPORT RECOMMENDED THAT:

1. A Constitutional amendment be proposed to guarantee that no child be forced to go to an integrated school. p.6

2. The General Assembly provide for tuition grants by state, county and municipal funds. p.7

3. Schools be kept segregated as long as possible then resort to tuition grants. p.7

4. The Governor and the General Assembly take such action and enact such laws as may be required from time to time. p.7

Representative Render Hill added that each member of the 1961 General Assembly should inform himself of the school situation, and determine the will of the voters so each may present these views, 2. the General Assembly in 1961 should resolve these issues, and 3. laws be made so no child shall be forced to attend an integrated school and if necessary make each school a separate authority. p.2

GOVERNOR ALMOND (VIRGINIA) ON THE IMPORTANCE OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

EXCERPTS FROM AN ADDRESS by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., at the commencement exercises of the Warren County Educational Foundation, June 9, 1959.

(Note: Gov. Almond included in his address a sharp criticism of the Supreme Court and a review of his long fight to prevent public school desegregation in Virginia. It is not desired to give a misleading impression of Gov. Almond's attitude, but to invite attention to his eloquent plea for the continued operation of public schools.)

The time for hurling the firebrands of criticism, charges and countercharges and recriminations has passed. The time has arrived to take stock, not of theory and indulgence in wishful thinking, but in actual conditions and realities, and the laborious and soundest procedures within the limits of our genius to devise for the present and future welfare of Virginia.

We must not allow the welfare of our children and the future of our state to be victimized by the bitterness of disappointment, the pang of frustration, the demon of hate, and threat of political purge, appeal to base passions and prejudices, and the stirring of emotions productive of violence and disorder.

It is your sacred responsibility and mine, the responsibility of those whom you elect to positions of high trust, to face the issues squarely and honestly, and to dedicate every energy and talent to a constructive resolution consistent with honor and under the aegis of law.

No error could be more grave, no mistake more costly, no travesty more tragic, no curse more productive of woe, than to succumb to the blandishments of those who would have Virginia abandon public education and thereby consign a generation of children to the darkness of illiteracy, the pits of indolence and dependency, and the dungeons of delinquency.

The only sure prevention of any integration anywhere in Virginia is the total abolition of every public school everywhere in Virginia. If this is what they advocate, the people of Virginia should now be told with complete clarity and frankness.

I tell you now that we cannot secede from the Union; we cannot overthrow the Federal Government, and we cannot reverse a final decree of a federal court.

I tell you now that the General Assembly cannot confer upon the Governor, any board, agency or person, any power which it does not itself possess.

I further tell you, notwithstanding the claims of some, that the General Assembly cannot under the pretense of invoking the police power take over and operate the public school system and thereby negate the final decree of a federal court. People who permit themselves to be fooled by such delusions deserve to be fooled.

In consideration of the abandonment of public schools, we should bear in mind that enrolled in the public schools of Virginia are approximately 800,000 children. There are only 112 sectarian schools, 12 of which are integrated, with a total enrollment of 266,610. There are 110 nonsectarian schools, one of which is integrated, with a total enrollment of 10,325. Private schools—both sectarian and nonsectarian — accommodate only 36,935 as compared with 800,000 in public schools. This points up the magnitude of the problem of accommodating children denied access to public schools.

The issues revolving around public education will confront the next session of the General Assembly. I have taken my stand. We must save, sustain and support the cause of public education in Virginia. I call upon all Virginians who believe in the soundness and righteousness of that position to rally to my support before it is too late. "To be forewarned is to be forearmed."

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL ODUM (FLORIDA) ON THE FINANCIAL COMPLICATIONS OF CLOSING PUBLIC SCHOOLS

EXCERPTS FROM AN ADDRESS by Asst. Attorney-General Ralph E. Odum before the Independent Bankers of Florida, at Tampa, February 23, 1959.

(Note: Mr. Odum included in his address a number of opinions not included here. Again, it is not intended to give a false impression of an official's public position, but to emphasize certain incontestable facts which his speech clarifies.)

To me it seems clear that the one sure way of insuring a public school system in Florida which might in time be operated on a compulsory attendance basis and which is owned, controlled and operated by the federal government is for Florida to abolish its public schools.

Second, I do not think it practical to abolish our public school system for financial reasons.

The liquidation of Florida public school property and its bonded indebtedness would be, in a way, one of the largest bankruptcy proceedings in history, involving well over a billion and a quarter dollars.

Mr. Lee Young, Assistant in School Finance, State Department of Education, has estimated the actual fair market value of public school property in this state to be well in excess of one billion dollars. Considering the fact that most school buildings have only a limited use for any purpose other than education without extensive remodeling, the sale of these holdings would present extraordinary problems unless it could be accomplished gradually over a period of years.

The federal courts have already ruled that public school buildings may not be leased to segregated private schools. Although the question has not been legally tested, I believe that the buildings could be sold under state law at their fair value on a time payment basis. This would, of course, contemplate that title to the property would pass and the school board accept a mortgage to secure the deferred payments. It would also contemplate that the sales were not a method of circumvention of federal court orders but were bona fide sales of school property which was no longer needed for school purposes.

In addition to the liquidation of over a billion dollars worth of property, we would also be faced with the retirement of bonded indebtedness of $232,852,899.00 which we now owe for school buildings. Our state courts would have to enforce the payment of the principal and accrued interest on these bonds, regardless of the reluctance of the taxpayer to continue paying taxes for benefits which no longer existed.

In addition to school bonds, our Florida county school boards owe Florida banks $2,413,180.00 on short term notes for money borrowed for capital outlay.

In addition to these notes, our school boards owe local banks an undetermined but considerable amount on short term loans for operating expenses. No record of these loans is required to be kept in Tallahassee, so it would be necessary to check each county board to ascertain the amount of this type of indebtedness.

Of the 282 banks in Florida, most have invested heavily in Florida school bonds and revenue certificates.

Picking at random 15 banks of all sizes in different parts of the state, I found that all but one of them had invested in Florida school bonds. The percentage of their total investment in securities which is invested in Florida school bonds varied from 0 to 14%, or an average of 4% for all 15 banks. The total in dollars for the 15 banks amounted to $4,559,000.00. If the pattern set by these 15 banks can be projected as a guide even on the most conservative estimate our 282 Florida banks must now be holding at least 80 million dollars of Florida school securities.

A default of these bonds, although ultimately remedied by litigation, might in the interim strain the earning capacity of many of our smaller independent banks who form the financial mainstay for most Florida communities.

All this with the abrupt termination of employment of 33,029 teachers and several thousand other public school employees such as administrative assistants, bus drivers, clerks and lunch room personnel; the cancellation of school expenditures for operating expenses totalling $216,804,957.00 a year; plus the dislocation of 899,000 pupils with no schools to attend, might easily create an economic and social catastrophe in this state.

CLOSED SCHOOLS COST YOU

Closed schools cost you in many ways, only one of which is financial. But let us look at the economical costs of closed schools, for if closed schools hit you nowhere else, they strike straight at your pockbook.

NORFOLK KNOWS ABOUT CLOSED SCHOOLS. Norfolk's experienoe shows how closed schools can pick a community's pocket. Six white schools were closed in Norfolk from September 1958 to February 1959 in an act of "massive resistence." During this period, overall economic activity* in Norfolk grew only 27 percent as fast as in the rest of the Richmond Federal Reserve District,  while it grew 76 percent as fast during the comparable period September 1959-February 1960, when Norfolk's schools were open. In addition, employment declined 2.91 percent in Norfolk during the period its schools were closed, while employment in all Virginia rose 0.35 percent. If you want to shoo business out of Atlanta and cut jobs in Georgia, Norfolk's lesson shows closing the schools is a good way to start.

DON'T POISON YOUR POCKETBOOK. Talk about closing the schools for any purpose creates an unstable environment that scares away business. In Charlottesville, Virginia, where the desegregated public vs. segregated private school controversy has continued from 1958 to date, employment declined in both 1958 and 1959, although 1959 was a "boom" year, with employment gains in the state as a whole. Would you want to locate a branch plant or office in Georgia if its public schools were going to close? Your answer to this question should be your answer to any plan which would close Georgia's schools.

NOTE: Norfolk and Charlottesville were chosen for this study since they are the two largest Virginia cities in which schools were closed. The effect on Atlanta could be even worse, since Atlanta is much more of a Southern business center than either Norfolk or Charlottesville. For instance, Atlanta contains regional distribution offices for over 3300 different national companies, many of which could move their offices elsewhere if Atlanta's schools were to close.

*Overall economic activity in a community is, perhaps, best indicated by bank debits, which measure check spending (nine-tenths of total dollar spending) in the community. Bank debits present a comprehensive picture of economic activity since they include such items as the paycheck you receive, the checks you write to pay bills, taxes, and rent, and the checks you sign to buy houses, stocks, materials, and supplies. Thus, when we say overall economic activity rose so much in one area relative to another area, we base our information on bank debits for these areas. Bank debit data for 344 U.S. areas are available on release G6 of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Washington 25, D.C.

 The Richmond Federal Reserve District includes the District of Columbia and the following states: Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and the two Carolinas.

NO HITS, NO RUNS . . . AND 250 ERRORS

Southern school districts have been to court over 250 times to prevent compliance with the Supreme Court ruling on desegregating the schools. But it must be pretty clear by now that maneuvering and delaying tactics in court just won't work. These legal shenanigans won't keep your school open.

What we need is strategy which will permit compliance with the Supreme Court, and yet force no parent to send his child to an integrated school. This has worked out fine in North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky, and it could work here in Georgia. The Sibley Commission has shown us exactly how this can be done. It has recommended a system of pupil placement and local option that will keep the maximum segregation possible, and allow local communities to decide the issue for themselves. The alternatives to this plan are either closing every school in the state -- a catastrophe -- or forced integration by the federal government, which no Georgian wants.

We think the time has come when every parent must act. Write to your legislator and tell him that you don't want our schools closed, and you don't want forced integration either. Tell him you support the Sibley Commission's majority recommendations.

Let's get Georgia back into the educational ball game.

SAMPLE FUND-RAISING LETTER

Many of us have written to close personal friends on our own stationery asking for contributions to help keep schools open. If you wish to do so, you might find the enclosed letter a useful guide, which of course you will tailor to suit your own style.

Dear (First Name)

As I'm sure you know by now, I have a one-track mind when it comes to Open Schools. After a relatively quiet period, we have started to move again, as you will see from the enclosed reprint. I feel there is a good chance that we can convince the Legislature in January to keep open the public schools of Georgia.

My own enthusiasm is at fever pitch, and I hope this makes up for the fact that I am a complete amateur at asking for money. I trust you will overlook the amateurishness and recognize the urgent need. It would be catastrophic if we should fail now to save our school system.

I am asking a few of my friends to make a special large gift for our final effort before and during the "Last Chance" Legislature. Your gift will help put over this "Operation Last Chance" -- but it will do more. It will prepare Georgia for peaceful compliance with the inevitable. For even worse than failure in the Legislature would be a repetition of Little Rock.

Please give as generously as you can to (name of your local Open Schools Committee). Enthusiasm will go only so far. It takes dollars to carry on the fightt effectively. If you have any questions about your gift or wish to earmark it for a special purpose, please call me.

Thank you very much for what I know will be a thoughtful and generous response.

Warmly,

SAMPLE SPEECH

Many clubs welcome suggestions for program material. Try to schedule a program on schools at Church Groups, Rotary Club, P.T.A. Study Groups, Women's Club or any other interested citizens group. If you cannot make a speech yourself, try to arrange for a speaker and offer the enclosed speech as a guide in the event he does not wish to write his own.

SUGGESTED SHORT SPEECH

Two thousand years ago, Cicero said: "Public opinion is stronger than the Legislature." And this is as true today as it was twenty centuries ago. It is as significant for Georgians in dealing with today's school crisis as it was for the Romans. For I believe with all my heart and soul that we in Georgia — plain everyday people — mothers and fathers, businessmen and teachers, farmers and factory workers — have it in our power to keep our schools open. We can keep our schools open without coercion, without ugly violence, and without losing our proud identity as Georgians.

Some of our politicians and some of our legislators, have not felt this power of public opinion yet. They seem to be living in a dream world -- and its chief fantasy seems to be that if we do nothing about the school crisis, it will go away by itself. But this dream world can turn into an horrible nightmare for us all if constructive action is not taken to keep our schools open.

Some of our politicians have told us that total segregation can be maintained and the schools will still stay open. The truth is that in over 130 court suits throughout the South, this position has lost every single time. Let's face it: Total segregation means closing every school in the State. If anyone tells you differently, he's either kidding himself or deceiving you.

We have been told that a private segregated school system is the answer to the school crisis. Well, the courts have ruled decisively that the states cannot go into the private school business. Therefore, providing for the educational needs of our children would depend on each individual county. This county now receives _____% of its school inocme in State aid. The small balance comes from the county* Can your county afford to replace the State's contribution?

* Contained in this kit is a county by county analysis of the percentages of state aid received. You will be able to fill in the appropriate figure for your county by consulting this mimeographed sheet.

Or will you have to be satisfied with _____% of a school for your children? Will you be content to have your children taught in the basements of private homes, or in unrented stores? Is a bootleg education really good enough for your children?

We have only to look at Prince Edward County in Virginia, which alone of all the Virginia counties is still clinging pathetically to massive resistance. Its private, white school system is sadly unable to cope either financially or academically with the educational needs of its children. Now, after robbing its children of two whole years of public education, the private school set-up is in such a bad state of decline, that it may have to be abandoned.

But more is at stake here than the education of our children, serious though that is. For if total segregation is maintained, as I said before, every school in the state will close. And if every school closes, what will happen to the purchasing power of thousands of teachers, school administrators, school bus drivers, and the whole army of maintenance workers who will be out of work?

What will happen to Georgia's elaborate plans to attract new industry, new capital to the state, when the schools close? What businessman will move his business, or build a new plant here, or create a branch office, when there are no schools for his employees' children? And can you imagine the thousands of transfers that will be arranged by employees who now make Georgia their home?

What will happen to the financial position of banks which hold school bonds, or to the sale of Georgia school bonds all over the country?

Are we willing to gamble on our state's economic health by starting a downward spiral with school closing? Businessmen know full well, that when that downward spiral starts, it is difficult to stop. Are we willing to start a homegrown depression by closing our schools?

No, I don't believe that we are. We cannot tinker with the educational progress of our children. We must not gamble with the economic health of Georgia.

What then is the alternative to these twin disasters? The alternative is both sensible and fair, and very much in keeping with Georgia's tradition of local control without outside interference. It is the way recommended by the Sibley Commission as the only answer to closing the schools. In simple language, it is giving local administrators the authority to place students, with as much freedom of choice to parents as possible, with assurance that no child will be required to go to school with a child of a different race except on a voluntary basis. This simple recommendation will conform to the Supreme Court's 1954 ruling, and at the same time, no parent will be coerced.

After all, the southern contribution to our democratic way of life has been to resist dictatorship from the Federal government on purely state issues. Surely then, the local school district should have that same right — the right to decide for itself how to manage its own school affairs without dictatorship from the state government.

Let me repeat, local freedom of choice is the only alternative to closing the schools. When Judge Hooper last Spring granted Georgia a year's delay in starting integration, he was, in his own words, giving the Georgia Legislature a "last chance" to keep our schools open. We must not let the Legislature fail. We must not have a terrible repetition of Little Rock or New Orleans to bring shame and disgrace on our beloved state. We must each of us assume a personal responsibility for our schools.

How can we best exercise that responsibility? First and foremost, we must let the people know. There are thousands of Georgians who have been lulled into a sense of false security by politicians, or newspapers, into thinking that total segregation can be maintained while the public school system kept operating. So our first job is to make the facts available, and to let the facts break through the barrier of silence, or apathy which has settled over many communities.

Our second job is to let Governor Vandiver know how we feel. If your Legislators have not committed themselves to the cause of open schools, by all means contact them, also. We must let them know that we want them to enact into law the recommendations of the Sibley Commission majority report. We can do this in a variety of ways -- by personal interviews and individual letters, by group resolutions and telegrams, by concerted action in our church groups, PTAs, business associations and social clubs. And we can be confident that they will respond to the strong, united voice of citizens from all over the state.

But they will listen only if we make our wishes clear. So far, most of our legislators have depended on fancy legislative shenanigans to keep on the books laws that have been proven over and over again in the federal courts to be unconstitutional. This is a form of ostrich-type head-burying that will get us nowhere. Recently, there have been signs that some of our legislative leaders

Of course, we are not the first Southerners to complain of inactivity by our Legislators. General Robert E. Lee writing his request for legislative action for his armies commented bitterly: "I have been up to see the Confederate Congress, and they do not seem to be able to do anything except eat peanuts and chew tobacco."

Well, General Lee was eventually able to stir his Legislators to action, and I feel certain we can do the same with ours. It will take time, effort, imagination and money. But the reward is the uninterrupted education of the children of Georgia. When the prize is so great, we cannot fail to achieve the victory. Thank you very much.

I believe we must keep our public schools.

If enough people express this opinion at the same time our elected officials must pay attention to our wishes.

Therefore, I request that I be contacted when we are ready to speak together. I agree to send a personal letter or wire to the appropriate official when notified.

OPERATION LAST CHANCE

From the standpoint of basic planning and goals:

1. We need to increase the numbers of action advocates who will work for open schools.

2. We need to answer the question, "But what can I do?"

3. We need to provide a means by which we can move together—many voices spoken simultaneously make more impression than sporadic pipings. A position of strength accompanies mass expression of opinion.

Stated purpose:

To establish a network of communication throughout Georgia so set up that at a moments notice concerted action can be taken to preserve public schools.

Method:

1. Divide responsibility. (HOPE will coordinate, but not insist that this be done as an exclusively HOPE project. Any and all advocates of open schools must be recruited.)

2. Responsibility of leader of each district:

   A. To establish a contact person in each community who agrees to carry out the plan for his town, and who will cooperate with the state effort.

      This contact will then move in the direction which for his community seems appropriate. This may be through already established channels or may have to start from scratch. He will be provided with samples of this card and may or may not use them. The whole idea is to get started on a list or file of names of people who will act when signaled.

   B. Keep the project itself quiet. Publicity will arouse opposition and also may intimidate some who otherwise would go along.

SAMPLE RADIO SPOT ANNOUNCEMENTS

Your local radio stations are obliged to give a certain number of hours per week for free public service announcements(such as the Red Cross, Community Chest, etc.). Try to convince your stations to broadcast these announcements (and/or others they or you may wish to write) as a free public service to the citizens of Georgia.

Where the name of the Legislator in your district is left blank, please fill it in.

If there is a television station in your area these would be suitable on it, as well.

Statement by Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, December 6, 1960

The Atlanta Chamber must take a bold and firm stand on this issue. It must clearly set forth to the public at large and the business community in particular the full implications of the Little Rock, Norfolk, and New Orleans stories. It should officially endorse the majority report of the Sibley School Committee and actively work for the passage of the necessary legislation in the January session of the General Assembly. Atlanta's public schools must stay open and the Chamber should provide its share of vigorous leadership in seeing that they do.

"There is a rule of law that is called "The Last Clear Chance Rule". Generally in layman's language it means that if a person has a last clear chance to avoid trouble and fails to take advantage of it to save himself, the consequences of his negligence are squarely upon him. The people of Georgia have a last Clear Chance to avoid closing the public school system of the state . . ."*

SUNDAY, JANUARY 8, is our last chance to meet before the opening of the legislature. Will you be there?

STATEMENT OF CONCERN

Released January 12, 1961

It is with a sense of profound sorrow that we have witnessed the breakdown of law and order in our State. The disturbances which have occurred on the historic campus of the University of Georgia have done irreparable harm to the reputation of the University and to the image of Georgia as expressed in its motto: Wisdom, Justice and Moderation.

These events are particularly tragic because they need never have happened. The disturbances of Tuesday night gave prophetic warning of the need for firm, preventive action. To permit non-University persons to congregate on the campus Wednesday night was to invite the events that ensued.

A further lack of responsible planning was the failure to authorize the State Patrol to promptly come to the aid of local officials when requested. Local authorities notified the Patrol as early as 5 P.M. Wednesday that such assistance might be required. Assistance was urgently requested at 10 P.M. but the Patrol did not appear on the scene until the disturbances were already quelled. This kind of administrative indecision threatens the safety of every citizen of Georgia.

The suspension of the two Negro students solved nothing. It can be interpreted only as the abdication of constitutional government in the face of mob violence. Such a retreat will encourage continued breaches of community order. This danger is increased by the irresponsible and inflammatory remarks made by the Governor's Executive Secretary.

Under the Georgia Constitution the Governor is the "conservator of the peace". This role calls for firm direction during the critical days ahead.

University authorities and Athens city officials have faced the situation intelligently and courageously. They deserve commendation. They also deserve the strongest support from the Governor and the Legislature.

There is time for us to retrieve the reputation of our State, to preserve law and order in the future and to guarantee the peaceful, uninterrupted operation of our State University.

The two Negro students should be immediately reinstated at the University of Georgia.

In the future, all persons contributing to breaches of the peace should be handled with the full authority of the law.

All persons not having legitimate business on the campus of the University should be denied access to the campus.

The Legislature should forthwith repeal all laws jeapordizing the continued operation of the University system.

We call on all parents and alumni of the University of Georgia and on all other citizens of Georgia to support the University officials and to encourage the students of the University to maintain the high standards of courtesy and conduct that have been demonstrated by the great majority of students.

 Youth Advisers Conference which stimulated many other programs among teen-agers and leaders.
 Continuous work with news media: releases, TV programs; back-ground material for magazines, newspapers.

NOW, YOUR SUPPORT CAN FINISH THE JOB!

The three Sections of OASIS have estimated that $6500.00 is needed. This amount will enable not only us to continue many of the projects referred to above, but also to accomplish the following:

----- Stepped-up program of public information, i.e.:
1 - Law and Order Week-End
2 - Effort to reach the "hard to reach" (low income families, etc.)
3 - Ads
4 - Prime time on all TV channels and radio stations to present community leaders on eve of de-segregation; preceded by wide publicity, and city-wide organization of viewers in homes, and in club meetings.

----- Compilation, printing, and distribution of a valuable kit of information for visiting newsmen. This will contain back-ground information of Atlanta preparation, and a handy guide to persons and places.

Please use the enclosed envelope for prompt mailing. The need is NOW!

There is no price-tag on a good name for a citizen, or for a city --- Your check will purchase a share in Atlanta's bright future as a city of progress - "too busy to hate".

The Purpose of OASIS

(Organizations Assisting Schools in September)

OASIS was formed in February, 1961 to Assist Schools in September, 1961--as the name states. The Atlanta Board of Education had been ordered by a federal court to cease discrimination in admission of students to the public schools, effective September, 1961. Knowing that the cessation of discrimination would mean great changes in community thought and action, and knowing that citizens have a responsibility and a duty to prepare for these changes, representatives of organizations have together assumed leadership for educating the community to accept and implement these changes positively and peacefully.

Representatives of forty-eight organizations, constituting a broad cross-section of the entire community, are seeking to stimulate and promote educational programs and activities of many kinds. Separately and together--that is, within their own structure and functions as well as in joint programs and activities--community education is being carried out on many levels. From interracial conferences of the leaders (for the first time in Atlanta broadly representative) to small informal neighborhood discussion groups, opportunities are being created for frank and full presentation of facts and exchange of ideas. OASIS appeals to individuals to assume their responsibilities as citizens for upholding the law and maintaining the peace.

No effort is being made to achieve unanimity of sentiment on the part of either the participants or the community as a whole. Organizations bear the responsibility for their own programs. These programs differ widely, both in philosophy and in action. OASIS feels that its great strength stems from its common concern for peaceful and orderly desegregation, in support of city and school officials. This we are determined to widen and deepen through information and calm expression.

A RECORD OF PROCESS - COMMUNITY PREPARATION FOR DESEGREGATION OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN ATLANTA, GEORGIA

By - Grace T. Hamilton, National YWCA, Community Division, Southern Region

INTRODUCTION - A major interest of the YWCA is in the community organization process which occurred in Atlanta in preparation for school desegregation. The account of the background, which contributed to this process, is greatly condensed. A more complete summary of the role of the organizations prior to 1961 is in process, but is not included as a part of this record.

I. BACKGROUND - Community Organization for "Open" Public Schools prior to January, 1961

The date on which Atlanta school desegregation would begin was determined by an order of the Federal District Court in a ruling on May 9, 1960. The court's order defined September, 1961, as the date, specified that desegregation would begin with the 11th and 12th grades, and approved procedures for the transfer of pupils from schools previously known as "Negro" or "white" high schools, as set forth in a plan for "pupil placement" submitted to the court by the Atlanta Board of Education.

The focus of citizens' action between 1955 and 1960 and prior to the meeting of the Georgia Legislative Assembly in 1961 had been directed toward developing support for keeping public schools open. In 1955 the Georgia Assembly had passed legislation which would have required the closing of public shcools unless segregation was maintained. The efforts of many organized groups helped to develop a ground swell of public interest and expression throughout the state, acknowledging the importance of continuing public schools to the welfare of the state and its people.*

The 1960 Legislature responded to the growing pressures of public opinion created during this period by the formation of The School Commission, headed by banker, John Sibley. The Commission held public hearings in each of the Congressional Districts of the state and in April, 1960 recommended to the administration that steps be taken to develop "a freedom of choice" plan to be adopted as a solution to the problem. The report of the Commission reflected the sharp division in the state. Of the 19 members, 11 joined the majority report and recommended a plan very similar to the one adopted by Virginia. Eight members issued a minority report standing fast for segregation and interpreted the results of the hearings to show that most Georgians preferred closed schools to any form of desegregation. The public hearings of the Sibley Commission undoubtedly contributed to increasing the understanding of the hazards which would face the state should Public Schools be abandoned.

One effort which proved influential in the development of such public opinion was a series of Women's Legislative Forums called "Days of Decision Forums," held throughout the state during October, 1960. The League of Women Voters, Active Voters, and HOPE provided panels of speakers for four-hour meetings, conducted with a local moderator, in Rome, Albany, Columbus, and Augusta. The announcement of these meetings stated that members of the Georgia Assembly would be invited to attend, and that the purpose of the forums was:

> "To provide information to members and to increase their 'know-how' in public affairs;
>
> "To talk with legislators about matters of mutual concern;
> "To provide a pattern for legislative forums which members may wish to follow in their home communities." *

The public opinion developed during the fall found expression in December when two Negro students were admitted to the University of Georgia. It undoubtedly was reflected in the new posture assumed by the governor at that time. He made it clear that he would not exercise his power to close or withdraw state funds from the University of Georgia after it became necessary for the University to comply with an order of the Federal Court, requiring the admission of the Negro students. The Legislature followed the governor's initiative and repealed state laws which would have placed Atlanta's public school system in jeopardy. It repealed state legislation requiring withdrawal of state financial support from school systems required to desegregate by court action, and passed legislation permitting communities to have the option of continuing to operate a system of public education, authorizing the payment of tuition grants to parents of children preferring to attend private rather than public schools, when schools in the community of residence were desegregated.

For two years prior to 1961, an informal and nameless committee convened by the League of Women Voters and met once a month to share information regarding efforts being made by the organizations represented in the group in behalf of open schools in the state and of securing compliance in Atlanta with the Supreme Court Decision. The former had more emphasis than the latter until public schools in Atlanta faced closing under the existing legislation. Representatives of organizations concerned with hastening desegregation were included in the committee, and thus a channel of community-wide communication was established between groups whose emphasis differed but who were united in a common major objective. The committee's membership was "unofficial" and informal. It included representatives of local, state, and regional organizations known to be "concerned." *

This committee never had public attention and its most valuable function was to provide liaison and communication between community groups and to permit the sharing of information and resources developed by one group with others whenever useful. The group came to be known as the Intergroup Committee on Schools, and later as OASIS (Organization Assisting Schools in September) when efforts were focused on Atlanta.

II. COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION - January through March, 1961

HOPE, Inc., regarded its original purpose of enabling the continuance of open public schools to have been fulfilled with the action of the Legislature. However, securing "peaceful compliance" and the "maintenance of law and order" in Atlanta was an unmet challenge. The mob action, following school desegregation in New Orleans, and the mob which developed at the University of Georgia had occurred during the year and were reminders to the thoughtful that the good name of the city and the well-being of all the city's children were still at stake.

On February 23, 1961, HOPE, Inc. called an exploratory meeting to discuss ways and means of working toward peaceful transition to desegregation in Atlanta high schools. The group invited to this meeting included two members of the Atlanta YWCA Board, both active members of the Council of Church Women, a member of the National Board of the YWCA, three officers of high school PTAs, the president of the Atlanta Council of Church Women, a retired high school principal and a retired Atlanta high school teacher. HOPE's executive director explained HOPE's role "Then and Now" and stated that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss "peaceful desegregation": who is doing what, what should be done, who should be involved and what HOPE's role should be. The group arrived at the consensus that every effort should be made to get as many groups as possible to work constructively toward calm acceptance and peaceful transition, that the committee effort should be coordinated by HOPE and that this should be done openly without fear of antagonizing. There was agreement that HOPE had proved its worth and should continue to be the rallying point for open school efforts. The group agreed to serve as a steering committee for an enlarged effort and the suggestion was made that the committee be enlarged to include people representing other segments of the Atlanta community: business, legal, religious and youth work. It was agreed that the organization's work would be strengthened if Negroes were added to the steering committee (HOPE had not included Negroes in its policy-making bodies and had not sought Negro membership in the belief that this might handicap its single purpose.)

It was announced at this meeting that a conference was scheduled with the Superintendent of Schools by representatives of HOPE to report plans for enlisting cooperation of community groups for the Board of Education and to determine the opinion of the superintendent with regard to the most useful ways of work.

Three days later a meeting was held of the group now enlarged and known as the Citizens Committee. The conference with the school superintendent had been held and was summarized as follows: He was pleased with the proposals and encouraged work through "the normal channels of PTA's principals, area superintendents, churches, etc." He had pointed out that school authorities could deal most effectively with the student bodies but urged all youth organizations to help their members to meet their responsibilities with good will and honor. The Board of Education's plans, as reported to the representatives, included:

1. The personal appearance of the superintendent before each high school assembly to appeal to their pride and to make it clear that any action which does not measure up will not be tolerated.
2. A close working relationship with city authorities, including the police department.
3. Conferences with administrative and teaching staffs.
4. Letters to all high school PTA presidents, asking for their cooperation.
5. A TV appearance in April.

Following this report the discussion developed provocative suggestions for community action and it was agreed that three working sub-committees should be established:

1. A speakers bureau built upon HOPE's bureau as a nucleus.
2. To stimulate interest in community organizations, religious, business, civic groups, youth organizations and community councils.
3. To seek PTA cooperation beginning with area superintendents with the aim that at least one PTA meeting in each high school could be devoted to this subject before the closing of school.

During the following weeks a Community Contacts Committee was organized (and subsequently merged with the Committee on PTA Cooperation). The Community Contacts Committee defined its purpose as: To extend the posture of tolerance into as many organizations as possible in areas served by each of the white high schools, and to establish channels of communication to encourage a high quality of responsible citizenship throughout the period of change brought about by the desegregation of public schools in compliance with court order.

It was decided:

1. To implement this purpose through work with three existing community councils with whatever degree of cooperation each council was willing to assume, and
2. To endeavor to find leadership in the thirteen remaining white school communities to take responsibility for spearheading the program.

It was agreed that the cooperation of the four area superintendents would be sought and that attempts would be made to develop discussion groups by school areas, with the hope for cooperation of principals and PTA presidents and with the assistance of the committee established to develop cooperation by PTAs.

During the month, the latter committee arranged a meeting with the four area superintendents with predominantly white schools to discuss means for securing PTA cooperation and for finding community leadership in the areas of the thirteen white high schools where there were no community councils. This meeting arrived at the following decisions:

1. To seek support of the Atlanta PTA Council rather than limiting efforts to individual high school PTAs.
2. To work separately in each high school community with emphasis on community contacts rather than through school personnel.

It was suggested in this meeting that it would be helpful to have the Superintendent of Schools present a factual account of the plans for school desegregation to the Atlanta PTA Council and to suggest to the Council a role it might play in setting a pattern of responsible citizenship for individual PTA groups to follow. A TV panel presentation was also proposed, with the panel possibly including the chairman of the Board of Education, the Superintendent of Schools and the President of the Atlanta PTA Council. The committee members responded to the latter proposal by urging the use of commercial TV to permit wider coverage, and by suggesting the use of the TV program as a springboard for discussion and action in school communities. The suggestion was also made that any "school viewings" of the TV program should include elementary as well as high schools.

The Intergroup Committee on Schools met on March the 10th at the YWCA, with the Superintendent of Schools as special guest. He opened the meeting with remarks and was most generous in answering questions.

The Superintendent of Schools presented as his firm policy:

1. The placing of stress on the rightness of peaceful, positive acceptance of desegregation by the students, and
2. Enforcing such acceptance, by suspension for absenteeism, etc.

Timing is of the utmost importance. Every auxiliary of the school is to begin now. Work approaching students and teachers should come from within the school administration only. But the lid is now removed, and, beginning with an editorial in Focus, the official organ sent to all teachers and PTA presidents, the work is begun. Students will be encouraged to subscribe to an Honor Code. Ministers will be requested by the School Board to preach and teach peaceful positive acceptance. Requests for study and support will be communicated to PTAs and other organizations.

The possibility of an Advisory Committee, composed of outstanding citizens, was discussed. It was pointed out that a steering committee that would dominate the situation and possibly hinder independent organizational activities is not desired. But an Advisory Committee (the constitution of which the superintendent indicated he would like to take the initiative to discuss with the Board of Education) could serve privately, or at a proper time take public action, such as presenting a pledge which citizens would take in mobilizing sentiment. The group endorsed the ideas of both the Advisory Committee, to be initiated by the Superintendent of Schools, and a pledge.

Community action underway and proposed was discussed. Expansion of participation in the group as a clearinghouse and liaison group was discussed and the chairman was requested to appoint a committee to make definite proposals.

III. COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION - April through June, 1961

On March 29th, the Intergroup Committee on Schools met with an expanded membership resulting from organizational contacts made by members of the steering committee of the Citizens Committee. The call to this meeting included the following paragraph:

> "If you are receiving this notice and invitation for the first time, you might like to know something about the Inter-Group Committee on Schools. For two years representatives of state-wide organizations, that were publicly committed and working for the preservation of open schools in conformity with federal court decisions, have met together, informally, without organization and name, and without publicity. A few public occasions, like the calls made upon Governor Vandiver, Senators Russell and Talmadge last year, and several statements have been sparked from this group. We have grown to a list of about twenty-five and need to grow some more as the scene has shifted from state legislative action to Atlanta's needs. We want you to come, if you are interested. Please call me if I can help. See you Wednesday.
> (Signed) Mrs. - - - - - -
> League of Women Voters of Georgia."

The plan of action proposed by the Citizens Committee was reported and three working sections were agreed upon to implement the plan of action (religious organizations, civic and service organizations, and youth-serving agencies). The chairmen and a nucleus of membership for each section were designated and the sections were asked to hold organizational meetings and to prepare proposals for presenting a meeting of the enlarged organization, to be called the following month.

During the next three weeks the speakers' bureau was expanded through contacts with former members of HOPE's speakers' bureau and new speakers obtained mainly through contacts with the Toastmasters and Toastmistresses Club. A third committee member was secured and designated to handle all requests for speakers.

The religious organizations section met on April 26 with 25 persons present. The group made the following suggestions about things that churches can do for future consideration:

1. Speeches and discussions in all groups within churches and synagogues.

2. The arrangement of contacts between church groups and others of a different race.

3. Special sermons. These might be coordinated on a special day of prayer, as was done in St. Louis and Nashville.

4. Newspaper columns or articles by leading churchmen.

5. Public statements. These might take the form of another ministers' manifesto, denominational statements, statements signed by lay leadership as well as by clergy.

6. Study seminars.

7. Providing interracial contacts for children of high school age.

8. Support of a possible community pledge.

9. Solicitation of the cooperation of religious editors and religious periodicals in the area.

The group elected officers and a steering committee representing all religious faiths.

The Civic and Service Groups section met, considered reports of what was being done by various organizations and established a steering and resource committee. The latter agreed to be responsible for creating a library of resource materials to be available to all groups. The Community Contacts Committee continued to work as a sub-committee of this section. Its responsibilities included the training of discussion leaders for groups in neighborhoods and developing a plan to find hosts for morning or evening "coffees" at which discussion leaders would talk with groups of neighbors. Training sessions for discussion leaders were held in two sections of the city on May 22 and 23. A staff member of the Southern Regional Council conducted these sections at which a guide for the presentation of the subject "How Desegregation Will Affect Our Atlanta Public Schools" was used. Copies of the Atlanta pupil placement plan were distributed to leaders and resources, which would be available, were noted. More than 80 people attended one session and 125 attended the other. (Materials prepared for discussion group leaders appended).

The Youth Service Committee met on April 18 with representatives of group work agencies present. Discussion of the programs of the agencies revealed a range of activities. Many groups reported having held or planning discussions on the problems of bi-racial school experience. Some have had bi-racial meetings. Representatives from the Atlanta YWCA reported that the school superintendent had spoken at a Y-Teen leadership weekend attended by approximately 100 white Y-Teens and that discussion had occurred during the weekend designed to deal with the insecurities and fears of white school students facing a new experience in the fall.

The group recommended that each agency representative attempt to secure the sanction of their sponsoring organization for the development of educational programs which would interpret to youth their role in the school desegregation program. The group proposed a sub-committee which should seek to establish an inter-racial youth council with the purpose of stimulating meaningful programs between the membership of the youth-serving organizations.

The Intergroup Committee on Schools met April 25. The name OASIS was proposed and approved. * (Hereafter the Intergroup Committee on Schools came to be known as the OASIS Co-ordinating Committee) The suggestion was made that all cooperating organizations be asked to contribute ten dollars to help pay for mimeographing mailings from the OASIS office and that the service sub-sections try to arrange otherwise to carry the cost of their programs. Among the new ideas presented at this meeting was the proposal of a city-wide meeting, proposed for the latter part of August to have as its theme, either "A Salute to Atlanta's Public Schools" or "A Salute to Atlanta - 20th Century", with a keynote address by President Kennedy or Vice-President Johnson. It was reported that the superintendent approved the idea and that a gift of $500.00 had been received for this purpose. The mayor's opinion of such a meeting was being sought.

It was reported that a TV panel proposed earlier, was now being planned for a commercial station and that the superintendent had promised to keep the group informed. It was agreed that letters would be mailed to a wide range of organizations with enclosures describing the purpose of OASIS and seeking the cooperation of as many groups as possible and suggesting areas of action for individual organizations. (Copies of letters and enclosures are appended).

The chairman of the youth-serving section, member of the Atlanta YWCA Board, and chairman of the Y-Teen Committee, reported plans for holding an Advisors' Workshop in June. The purpose of this meeting will be to help leaders who work with teenagers in the city and at camps during the summer season.

Civic and service organizations reported their plan to concentrate on community contacts at the neighborhood level. The religious section reported their plans to include a "law and order weekend" with special sermons, and an emergency stand-by committee to aid possible victims of harassment and a mailing to ministers outlining specific suggestions of ways they might work with their own memberships in this effort.

During the weeks immediately following the announcement of OASIS, the first program effort involving both white and Negro high school students began. The Director of Quaker House (Friends Fellowship House) invited a small group, including persons identified with the programs of the NAACP, the Atlanta Council of Human Relations, and HOPE to assist in planning for a six-week Sunday series designed to help the young people get acquainted. The first group meeting included only white students who could be easily invited and whose help was needed in finding others for the group. At this first meeting a Negro couple, both college teachers in the community, and the Director of Quaker House were the discussion leaders for the group. During the afternoon a hostess committee was chosen and the leader for the following week was announced. Lillian Smith worked with the group at the second meeting, attended by approximately fifty young people with both racial groups almost equally represented. This afternoon a steering committee of the students was designated to plan the activity for the summer, and a member of the adult committee was chosen to work with the student committee. Efforts had been made to find student leadership from the neighborhoods of white schools which would have Negro students in attendance in the fall, and all the Negro students whose applications for transfers had been granted, were invited for the second meeting.

Efforts were also made at this time to include five white and five Negro high school students from Atlanta in a six weeks Youth Camp at Highlander Folk School. This camp is "an interracial experience in the creative arts for high school students" whose enrollment is limited to forty young people drawn from the country as a whole. It was thought that the reservation of ten places for Atlanta students who would be involved in the process of desegregation in the fall would offer a constructive experience for the participants which would contribute to their effectiveness at home.

The Co-ordinating Committee of OASIS met on June 1, the Superintendent of Schools attended at the invitation of the chairman. The Chief of Police had also been invited and a representative of the police department was expected but was not in attendance. The chairman of the Service Operating Sections of OASIS reported as follows:

Civic and Service Organizations

The organization of neighborhood discussion groups was continuing. More than a hundred volunteers had been enrolled as discussion leaders. A draft of a letter to be sent to approximately twelve hundred persons over the signature of the chairman of the Community Contacts Committee and the chairman of the Civic and Service Organizations, was approved (letter appended with Oasis materials).

The chairman of the Youth-Serving Agencies reported that 75 registrations for the Youth Advisors' Conference to be held on June 8, had been received and efforts were continuing to secure representation from every high school in the city and from civic and religious groups in all parts of the city.

The chairman of the religious section reported that two meetings of the steering committee of the sections and two meetings of the section as a whole had been held since the last meeting. The program of this section includes:

1. Promotion of a layman's statement.
2. Efforts to encourage statements from denominational ministers and groups (Methodist statement already received).
3. Efforts to get individual churches to circulate statements for adoption by the membership and churches. (Trinity Presbyterian has already adopted a statement)
4. A concerted effort in all pulpits urging peaceful compliance planned for the last Sunday in August.

The chairman stated that the program of the religious section has involved more active participation by all religious faiths than any other program in Atlanta before this time.

The speakers' bureau chairman reported that seven invitations had been filled and asked the group to stimulate other invitations from organized community groups.

The chairman of the committee reported that a conference with the President of the Chamber of Commerce resulted in the assurance that the business community would be happy to cooperate in all ways which the Board of Education deemed advisable. The proposed Citizens Advisory Committee to the Board of Education was not deemed useful.

The superintendent commented that the Board of Education's position regarding the Citizens Advisory Committee was "that informal seeking of advice from appropriate persons was more desirable." He reported upon programs within the school department as follows:

1. Continued activities among school personnel, particularly social science teachers

2. "A good spirit" on the part of student leadership in all high schools.

He recognized that "many moral and spiritual values will be involved as this goes on," but that present emphasis is upon abiding by the law. He reported that the Board of Education plans a meeting with representatives of all news media in order to establish and prepare a written set of ground rules for the opening of school. It was suggested that a press kit be prepared which would include a description of the positive preparation on the part of the community. It was thought that this would be particularly useful for national media representatives who are expected in the city.

In discussion of the proposed mass meeting for late August, several reservations about its advisability were noted. No opinion had been secured from the mayor's office at this time.

It was noted that HOPE is providing office space and staff salaries but that funds were needed for mailings, mimeographing, etc. The possibility that a staff assistant might be provided for the three summer months by the American Friends Service Committee was noted with enthusiasm. It was agreed that the chairman should appoint a finance committee to explore local sources for the funds that it will be needing for the program in the remaining months.

It was agreed that publicity should continue to emanate from participating organizations, rather than from OASIS, itself.

It was reported that a news commentator of a major television station was interested in preparing a documentary film on Atlanta's preparation for the fall.

The Youth Advisory Conference sponsored by OASIS took place June 8th, at the Central YMCA. Representatives from the following agencies and organizations were represented in the attendance:

Youth-serving Agencies

Butler Street YMCA
Central YMCA
Edgewood Avenue YWCA
Phyllis Wheatley YWCA
Atlanta Girls' Club
Grady Homes Girls' Club
Atlanta Boys' Club
B'Nai B'Rith Youth
Wesley House
Bethlehem Community Center
Girl Scouts

Religious and Church Groups

Capital View Baptist Church
First Baptist Church of East Point
Peachtree Christian
First Christian
Park Street Methodist
St. Mark Methodist
Trinity Methodist
Audubon Forest Methodist
Druid Hills Presbyterian
Trinity Presbyterian Church of God
Southeastern Conference of Congregational Christian Churches
United Church Women
Temple Youth
Salvation Army

After the panel discussion at which the chairman of the Youth Section of OASIS presided, the group divided into five work sections. A report of the panel presentation followed and a copy of the report to the participants is appended.

The third meeting of the Quaker House Youth group included the ten Negro students transferred and student representatives from three of the schools to which they were being transferred. (One high school was not represented and efforts were continued to find representation from this school.) The program committee of the larger group had listed the "interests" of the group's members, and were proceeding to plan for activities related to these interests during the summer at Quaker House. (The following interests were noted: dramatics, world politics, philosophy, fine arts, creative arts and crafts, French, music - classical, folk and modern.)

The youth director of the Highlander Folk School secured the names of the elected student leaders from three of the "white schools" who were interested in attending the Highlander Youth Camp, but who because of previously made plans for the summer - jobs and summer school, could not go. The director of Christian Education in three Methodist churches was especially helpful in discovering potential white participants.

On Monday, June 26th, it was announced in the press that a meeting of representatives of the U. S. Department of Justice had been held with city officials to consider ways in which the Department could be helpful to Atlanta in the fall. The Mayor, the Superintendent of Schools and the Chief of Police were present in this closed session with U. S. Department of Justice representatives.

IV. COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION - July, 1961

The July meeting of the Oasis Coordinating Committee took place on July 11. The following developments were reported:

Youth Section

An adult group from Theatre Atlanta had prepared an episode useful for starting discussion of the issues which might be involved when schools open on a desegregated basis. The skit had been presented by the group from Theatre Atlanta at the YWCA's Summer Camp, at the Quaker House Young Peoples' Club and at the Girl Scout Camp. Responses were reported as excellent and the group is available to other organized adult or young peoples' groups during the remainder of the summer.

Speakers' Bureau

Requests continued to be met for speakers. The chairman reported that they found the contacts with "fringe" areas, thought to be segregationists in sentiment, "very rewarding." He expressed the belief that the majority of the population, particularly in areas where there are schools not facing immediate desegregation, believes that the issue does not concern them, are not thinking about it, nor expressing their "fears".

Religious Section

A Laymen's Committee is organized and plans to release a Laymen's Manifesto in August. Law and Order Weekend is scheduled for the last week in August with wide-spread participation hoped for from churches and synagogues. United Church Women are working with "key women" of all denominations to encourage statements from congregations and discussions during the summer in Sunday Schools and churches. The Religious Section expects to put emphasis during August upon publicizing resolutions, statements, etc. from religious organizations.

Civi and Service Organizations

One hundred and twenty-five discussion leaders have been trained for the neighborhood "coffees." Twenty such discussion groups have already been held. The big problem seems to be securing hosts for the neighborhood groups. The chairman reported apathy in neighborhoods where schools do not face desegregation this fall. The Community Contacts Sub-committee is now following up by telephone calls the letters mailed to 2500 persons, urging neighborhood groups.

Publicity

The chairman who had recently returned from Washington reported the tremendous interest in Atlanta's preparation for the fall on the part of agencies of the Federal Government. The preparation of background material on Atlanta's organizations for national representatives of the press and other media, who are expected in Atlanta in early September, was reported.

The interest of the major television stations serving Atlanta in presenting a panel during August in prime evening time, as a public service program, was reported. The panel will probably include the Mayor, the Chief of Police, and the Superintendent of Schools.

The preparation of a radio tape on Atlanta interviews by the Friendly Word Broadcasting Station was also reported. The Publicity Committee is working with the local press and several writers for national magazines in developing plans for "The Atlanta Story" for release during the fall.

The public rally just prior to the opening of school, with a prestige speaker, was again considered and it was the consensus that this proposal should be abandoned but that all effort should be devoted to increasing the audience for the proposed television presentation.

The interest of a local foundation in giving financial assistance to OASIS was reported. The Police Department's increased attention to the apprehension of bombers and the prevention of bombings was noted with appreciation, as was the editorial support for this step by the press.

During July the press increasingly reflected results of concern generated by OASIS and the many groups related to it. (See Press files) Atlanta's growing acceptance of responsibility may be largely attributed to the work of a small but very active group of women whose concern and involvement in the public's welfare developed through leadership roles in voluntary organizations.

THE BEGINNING OF HOPE

The Story of the Struggle for Open Schools in Georgia

In the fall of 1958, Georgia faced a critical decision regarding her public schools. A court suit to outlaw segregated schools in Atlanta had already been filed. Legal precedent in Virginia and Arkansas obviously dictated a ruling against the further operation of segregated schools. But integrated schools were forbidden by Georgia's massive resistance laws. The conflict between Federal and State law pointed to a complete closing of the public schools.

Yet to all appearances, the people of Georgia, even in Atlanta, didn't know or didn't care that they were in extreme danger of losing their public school system. A handful of the more enlightened citizens were concerned, but the majority of Georgians felt secure because in 1954 they had voted for a Private School Amendment. This, they were assured, made it possible to convert the huge public school system, encompassing more than a million children, into a private one with ease and speed. . . and private schools, as everyone knew, were out of the Federal jurisdiction, and therefore "integration proof".

Also, with few exceptions, the people were afraid. The vociferous segregationists who loudly sold the public on private schools had among them the leading politicians of the state, as well as a hard core of violent agitators. The latter made it clear that any who asked for the continuance of public education were traitors to the South, "communists" or "rotten integrationists." To speak out for open schools means all-night sieges of threatening phone calls, cross-burnings on the lawn, business reprisals, or worse.

And so Georgians held their tongues. . . while the Private School Plan was ruled illegal and evasive. . .while Charlottesville, Norfolk and Little Rock suffered the agonies of massive resistance and its consequences.

As was true in Little Rock and Norfolk, the people who finally dared broach the subject publicly were not the community leaders. A newspaper columnist outlined the situation clearly for Atlantans. . .a legislator spoke to a P.T.A. meeting; here and there, an attorney discussed the matter when an opportunity arose.

Then, in October, a chance conversation between two housewives resulted in a small, concrete action. The two women started a "chain" of morning coffees specifically for discussions of the school situation. Their purpose was to desseminate information, seek ways to preserve the public schools and obtain additional supporters for the open-schools stand.

Ten women convened for the first coffee, and their reaction to the information they received was explosive. Within two days, thirty people had called requesting invitations to the second coffee schedule. Soon the number soared to fifty and it was necessary to find room at a community hall.

Suddenly, more than a hundred men and women had expressed a desire to attend, and as the telephone wires hummed, the community hall rejected the group because of its controversial nature. A place had to be found, but the only one available was an auditorium seating 450-500 people. Now the phones were put to frantic use. Telephone squads were started as chain phone calls went out to "bring a friend and call a friend" to fill the hall.

The day before the meeting, two inexperienced women who had never addressed a public gathering found themselves with a large audience, no program, no printed material, and no speaker who knew the facts -- and was willing to state them publicly.

Miraculously, all of these were secured. A local printer put his men on overtime to make reprints of an open schools speech given in 1954, during the political campaign for the Private Schools Amendment. A speaker -- a member of the Georgia legislature, to boot -- agreed to address the group. Fully aware that he was inviting political and personal disaster, he had nonetheless made an emphatic speech to a P.T.A. group, exhorting them to preserve their public school system -- and he courageously agreed to address this, the first public meeting ever held for the express purpose of open discussion on the school crisis.

His speech, plus the emotional intensity of the two women who eloquently pleaded for the preservation of public schools, fired the audience. The newspapers covered the meeting, ran a sizeable story, and the flame was lit.

Beds remained unmade, meals uncooked, as the two housewives were inundated by a tidal wave of reaction. Their telephones rang in one long peal, all day -- and all night, as a harrassment campaign was instituted by the segregationists. Threats rained down upon their heads -- but so did praise. From all over the city, people called to offer their assistance. It became apparent that organization was vitally necessary.

Under the quiet auspices of the League of Women Voters, a steering committee was formed, which attempted to approach the leaders of the community in search of aid and cooperation. The so-called Power Structure was adamant and unanimous in its refusal. No one wanted to lead or contribute to such a controversial, perhaps dangerous group. . .nor did they want to be touched in any way by its stigma.

And as business and civic groups abdicated their responsibilities of leadership, the fledgling steering committee withered on the vine, became impotent, its meetings sterile.

But the two women did not surrender so easily. With a few others who joined them under the name of "Parents' Study Group", they continued to hold meetings in various parts of the city. Each of these meetings brought forth some brave soul who earnestly proffered time and effort to help keep the schools open. Finally, there were 18 active members in the group, and in December, 1958, they were legally chartered under the name of HOPE, Inc. (Help our Public Education).

As yet, they had no money, no place from which to work, no resources of any kind. Yet they were extremely active. In a hostile atmosphere, they encouraged open discussion of the school situation at every opportunity. Individuals rose at P.T.A. meetings to call for discussion and a vote on whether or not to keep schools open. They succeeded in obtaining polls in about 15 schools in the city -- and here they discovered how deeply snarled in politics were the P.T.A. groups.

The P.T.A. Council of Atlanta tacitly discouraged all efforts to vote on the question. Under pressure, wherever it was unavoidable because of parent demand, ambiguous ballots were issued just before the Christmas holidays -- with instructions that all votes must be in when school reconvened in January. While a large numerical majority voted to keep schools open, the final report was ambiguous. A reporter who pursued the story further encountered a curtain of silence on the part of the majority of P.T.A. presidents; the Atlanta P.T.A. Council derided the polls and stated that there would be no additional voting on the subject at any time.

In spite of this, the members of HOPE, Inc. were not at all discouraged. They were achieving their objective -- facts were coming to light, everywhere people were talking and as they talked, minds were changing. More and more Atlantans realized that closing the public schools would mean disaster.

By January of 1959, HOPE had offices and furnishings in a downtown building, donated by supporters who chose to remain anonymous. There were no funds, but the printer who had provided the original pamphlet continued to furnish booklets and stationery on a "pay-if-you-get-it" basis. The first mailings, reprints and legal interpretations of state and federal laws, educational studies, informative speeches, and, of course, appeals for funds, went out to a small nucleus, consisting of those who had attended meetings. . .of ministers, doctors and educators who had signed manifestos for open schools as the fever grew. But within three months, requests for mailings threatened to swamp the little group. The mailing list mushroomed to 10,000. Office help and volunteer workers became a necessity -- money for postage was vital if the work was to continue.

The money came -- mostly in one dollar bills, from those solicited by mail and through "Dollars for HOPE" parties. Money was never abundant, but somehow, there was always just enough.

On March 4th, 1959, the organization held its first large public meeting at a local theater. Police were alerted to insure a quiet gathering, for segregationist threats were rampant. Almost 1,800 jammed the theater to hear Mayor Hartsfield, Pulitzer Prize Winner Ralph McGill, Sylvan Meyer, a forthright young editor from Gainesville, Georgia; and a member of the Women's Emergency Committee of Little Rock, who recounted the economic and social distress suffered by that city because of massive resistance.

The rally was an unqualified success. The calm, dignified atmosphere, the attentive enthusiasm of those present, the information-packed speeches, all found their mark. The newspapers, radio and TV stations reported the meeting favorably, publicly establishing HOPE's respectability and integrity. The group's position as a rallying point for moderates throughout Georgia was assured.

Now volunteer committees began to function effectively in the fields of public relations, finance, legal advisement, legislative work, and most important, state-wide organization. In the Spring and Summer of 1959, numerous neighborhood discussion groups, led by HOPE volunteers, were held throughout Atlanta. A speakers' bureau was established to meet the increasing requests from church, civic and school groups. The most definite signs of progress were the slow but sure trickle of requests for advice and help from outlying areas of the state.

By the fall of 1959, the courts had ruled illegal the operation of segregated schools in the city of Atlanta and the School Board had been instructed to produce a plan of desegregation by December, 1959. HOPE sent out repeated mailings to various groups throughout Georgia -- editors, Georgia Education Association and P.T.A. leaders, professional groups, Chamber of Commerce representatives, business leaders, Board of Education Chairmen, legislators and club leaders. That the educational crash program was paying off found proof in the establishment of active HOPE chapters in Gainesville, Rome, Athens and Savannah. There was strong support in many other smaller communities, where groups worked for and with HOPE, but out of fear and pressure, remained on an "underground" basis.

Meanwhile, in Atlanta, regular open meetings were held to keep the people abreast of the legal and educational facets of the situation. Mayor Hartsfield proclaimed a "Save Our Schools Week". On a designated Sunday, ministers preached sermons on the subject. The "Week" culminated with the unanimous endorsement of open schools by the Fulton County legislative delegation which had previously withheld support of the open schools stand.

In spite of all this, the Southern part of Georgia, with its larger Negro population, remained willing to let Atlanta bear the brunt of school closings in order to maintain segregation. They refused to face the fact that under the "equal rights" provisions of our national constitution, the closing of a single Atlanta school would certainly mean the shutting down of every school in the state. The county representatives readied themselves for the 1960 session of the State Legislature in rigid accord to "hold the line for segregation at all costs" despite the fact that the Federal District Court had delayed its final ruling in the Atlanta suit in order to give the Legislature time to change the laws in conflict with the United States Constitution.

In January, 1960, when the Legislature convened, HOPE was ready. Every Senator and Representative received significant and challenging literature repeatedly during the six-week session. Observers attended all proceedings and the solons, friendly or "otherwise" were visited by HOPE volunteers.

On January 25, HOPE delivered to the House of Representatives the fruits of many weeks of effort -- petitions for uninterrupted public education bearing the signatures of 10,024 Georgians from 85 cities and counties in the state. A thousand of these names came from Macon, a South Georgia city in the midst of solid segregationist territory.

In view of the fact that only fifteen months had passed since that first morning coffee for ten women, the HOPE petition was a staggering achievement -- and though it received but scant and derisive notice from the elected representatives of the people, the local and national press gave it much prominence.

The day before Senators Russell and Talmadge were scheduled to address a joint session of the Georgia Legislature, they were visited by delegations made up of HOPE representatives and fourteen other Georgia civic, church and school groups with memberships totalling over 500,000. While Senator Talmadge was openly hostile, Senator Russell attempted to be reassuring with a vague statement that there was no real need to worry about school closings. Both firmly reiterated the "massive resistance" theme and held out no hope of mitigation of current state laws.

The next day, when the Senators addressed the Georgia House and Senate, the gallery was filled with quiet, unsmiling citizens who carried simple signs reading "We Want Public Schools". It is interesting to note that the atmosphere on the Legislative floor that day was strained and restless. Each time the solons resumed their seats after wild pro-segregation demonstrations, they looked uneasily at the crowded gallery so obviously representing a new twist. . .massive resistance to school closing. And when, finally, two segregationist signs were held aloft, the men and women on the floor of the Legislature whooped and applauded in great relief at the appearance of some support, however fractional.

One small concession the 1960 Legislature found itself forced to make was the formation of the School Study Commission, headed by Banker John Sibley. The Commission held open hearings in each of the ten congressional districts of the state -- and in April, recommended to the Administration that steps be taken to allow a "freedom of choice" plan to be adopted as a final solution to the problem. The Commission itself reflected the sharp division in the state. Of the 19 members, 11 joined in the majority report and the recommendation of a plan very similar to the one now operating in Virginia. Eight members stood fast for segregation, issuing a minority report with a re-interpretation of the figures released to show that most Georgians preferred closed schools to any form of integration.

The final outcome of the issue is still debatable. But it is, at least, debatable. The people of Georgia are talking, thinking, learning. Each day brings new developments. The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce finally passed a resolution for open schools. The State P.T.A. which until very recently, was adamant and even obstructive, forcefully came out in support of public education. Teachers and school personnel are emerging from their cocoons of fear. The Atlanta Bar Association, a most cautious and conservative group, has endorsed the open schools stand.

As one editor recently expressed it: "You can hear minds changing all over Georgia."

The war is far from won. . .but the battle for free expression has resulted in tremendous victory. If HOPE can claim one measure of success, it is the fact, unbelievable as it may sound to residents of other regions, that it is now respectable to talk about continued public education in Georgia.

History of OASIS --

(Organizations Assisting Schools in September)

OASIS is the culmination of two years' work by citizens who first came together on March 10, 1959.

Ten people met in the HOPE office on that morning to discuss the problems centered around Georgia's public schools and the 1954 Supreme Court decision.

The organization resulting from these first meetings was known by at least three names: Co-ordinating Committee on Schools, Inter-Group Committee on Schools, and to save breath "Blob". Mrs. Philip Hammer was selected as chairman, and presided over the informal meetings which were fairly regular each month.

Representatives of state-wide groups were invited to participate, mainly for exchange and stimulation of ideas to preserve Georgia's public school system. By 1960, the "Blob" included 17 organizations, about ten of which were regular in attendance.

Activities for "open schools" increased greatly, and in two ways:

1. The most interested groups undertook many projects, within their own organizational structure;

2. A few groups banded together to undertake other projects, such as an Open School Conference, a series of state meetings, statements to the press.

When the 1961 General Assembly took the necessary steps which would enable Georgia's public schools to remain open, "Blob" took a good long look at its objectives, and decided on the following course:

February, 1961

1. With the implementation of the Atlanta Pupil Placement Plan in the offing, the focus changed from state to city.

March, 1961

2. The chairman appointed a committee to draw up a list of 50 Atlanta organizations, which should be asked to send representatives to a meeting which was held at the YWCA on March 29, 1961. The interest seemed to indicate that plans should proceed to center activities in the Atlanta area.

April, 1961

3. In quick succession, four sections were formed, each with Chairman, Co-Chairman, and a Steering Committee. These chairmen and four members-at-large formed the General Co-ordinating Committee, chaired by Mrs. Hammer.

May, 1961

4. The name OASIS was selected, whose purpose was determined:

-- to stimulate organizations to be as active as possible, within their own structures and policies, to help accomplish desegregation in a peaceful and orderly manner

-- to co-ordinate, and sponsor activities as needed.

June, 1961

5. Paper was printed, and a mailing was sent to 1500 groups (sample enclosed), each Section of OASIS became well-organized, has undertaken many constructive projects, and is planning others:

Civic and Service Organizations: recruited and trained 125 discussion leaders, to lead in informal neighborhood group meetings. Twenty-five hundred people have been asked to serve as hosts to such groups, in their homes.

Religious Organizations: in process of promoting "manifestos of the laity," discussions, interfaith and interracial meetings, special sermons and prayers on the last Sunday in August.

Speakers Bureau: has produced a trained corps of speakers, and kits of materials to guide them; has so far been able to meet each request for a speaker.

Youth-Serving Organizations: had a Youth Advisers Conference June 8, attended by over 100 leaders of teen-age groups (program attached).

INTRODUCTION

In their search for a way to resolve the continuing crisis in public education, Louisiana and a number of other southern states have passed tuition-grant laws. The laws are designed to preserve segregation in our schools, but outside the structure of legal prohibitions from federal courts and within the body of principles guiding sound education. The failure of other methods of avoiding integration suggests that we will soon have to determine whether we will resort to the tuition-grant system. But before we can decide intelligently we must understand the law and its workings. What is our tuition-grant law, and how does it compare with the laws of other states? Will the law be upheld in the courts? Will the tuition-grant system provide our children with an education as good as that provided by the public schools?

TUITION GRANT SYSTEMS

Those are questions of concern to every citizen interested in education. But the answers are always complex, sometimes inconclusive, and never unqualified. To assist citizens of Louisiana to answer those questions this study has been prepared.

Some southern and border states where desegregation has taken place have enacted tuition grant laws; some have not. Those without tuition grant laws are: Delaware, Florida, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, and West Virginia. Those with tuition grant laws are: Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina and Virginia.

The number of desegregated districts in these states are as follows (1959-60 figures):

Without Grant Laws

Delaware	24 desegregated out of 93
Florida	1 desegregated out of 67
Kentucky	128 desegregated out of 211
Maryland	23 desegregated out of 24
Missouri	200 desegregated out of 1,889
Oklahoma	189 desegregated out of 1,276
Tennessee	6 desegregated out of 154
Texas	130 desegregated out of 1,531
West Virginia	43 desegregated out of 55

With Grant Laws

Arkansas	10 desegregated out of 422
Georgia	0 out of 198
Louisiana	1 out of 67
North Carolina	10 out of 173
Virginia	11 out of 130

The number of desegregated school districts is higher in states which have no tuition grant system. This probably indicates that citizens in these states who (excepting those in North Carolina) strongly resisted desegregation and then reluctantly accepted it regard the grant system as a legal and psychological device to minimize and contain the effects of desegregation. It may also mean that, in states where this device does not exist, the public has been given a clearcut choice between desegregated schools and no schools at all, which, in turn, made it readier to accept desegregation as part of the price of public education.

It is worthy of note that public schools have been closed in Virginia and Arkansas which possess tuition grant laws, and have never been closed in states which do not possess these laws.

Arkansas

Arkansas is the only state which has a tuition grant system, but no local option plan. Local option was roundly defeated by the electorate on November 8, 1960. In 1959 the state legislature passed laws which:

Provided tuition grants for closed-school areas.

Provided tuition grants for students who declined to attend desegregated schools.

Provided general approval of the tuition grant system.

When the Little Rock schools were closed, there was no tuition grant law, as we understand the term, on the state's books. There was a law which authorized the transfer of school funds cut off from a closed system to schools which received the refugee pupils, but the moneys were paid, in lump sums, to the schools involved. This law was upheld by the State Supreme Court and overturned by the Federal Court. The state argued that the law was a temporary emergency measure--the Federal Court answered that there was no temporary emergency, but rather "a condition that has already existed since 1954, and will continue to exist until either the U.S. Constitution is amended, or the U. S. Supreme Court overrules Brown vs Board of Education." The court did not, however, discuss the validity of the direct payment to the private school. It simply outlawed the cut-off of funds to the desegregated (and closed) schools as an invalid exercise of police power of the state which violated the 14th Amendment.

Raney High School--one of the substitute private schools created when the Little Rock public schools were closed--has since gone broke and has shut its doors.

Georgia

The Georgia tuition grant law, enacted in 1961 by the General Assembly, provides grants for every educable child attending a non-sectarian private school in lieu of attending the public schools. The amount of each grant is to be determined by dividing the total local and state education funds for each school year by the number of pupils in the local school system. Differentials may be prescribed as between grants for elementary and high school pupils. The grants will be paid to the parents, guardians, or custodians of the applicant children. The local school boards are authorized to prescribe the necessary application form to pay out the grants and to approve the grant applications. If a grant application is refused by a local board, the applicant may appeal to the State Superintendent of Schools, who may direct the payment of the grant from state funds if he finds that the application is valid. There are no references in the law to race, segregation, or desegregation.

Companion acts provided for:

1. The elimination of the general supervisory powers of the State Board of Education over public schools, reaffirming the principle of local school board control of school systems.

2. Local option elections, to be called by local school boards or by petition of 15% of the registered voters of the district on the proposition of suspension of public education; with the proviso that the boards may at any time, or upon receipt of a petition of 15% of the voters, call an election on the proposition of reopening the schools. The results of these elections are to be binding on the local boards.

3. The continued flow of state funds to local boards, regardless of the outcome of the vote.

Georgia State School Superintendent Claude Purcell, in commenting on the tuition grant law, said that the State Board of Education would not attempt to formulate any statewide standards for schools receiving grants.

Although the new Georgia laws have not yet become effective, the Atlanta and Fulton County school systems have received requests for grants to children already in private schools. At present, the state has no funds with which it can finance a tuition grant system. State Attorney General Eugene Cook ruled unofficially that the new law was not to go into effect until the funds are provided by a new appropriations act, which becomes effective on July 1, 1961.

Louisiana

Here, as in Georgia, our tuition grant law has not yet become effective. It provides:

1. That every child resident in Louisiana is entitled to apply for a grant from state and local funds appropriated for that purpose; such grants shall be available only for education in a private, non-profit, non-sectarian school, approved by the State Board of Education. The word "accreditation" is nowhere mentioned in the law.

2. That the amount of each grant may equal the per-day, per-student amount of state and local money expended on public schools during the previous year; that in no case may the grant exceed the sum actually expended for the actual private education of the child. The amount is to be determined by the governing authority of the local school system.

3. That the grant application shall be made to the governing authority of the local school system. However, the application form must be prescribed by the State Board of Education.

4. That grants shall be approved by the local authority if:
   (a) the applicant child resides within the parish or city; and
   (b) the child is enrolled or accepted for enrollment in a private, non-profit, non-sectarian school approved by the State Board of Education.

5. Grants may not be requested for a period exceeding 180 school days.

6. Disapproval of grant applications may be appealed through the existing court system.

7. Payment of grants shall be made, by check, to parents and guardians of applicant children, or jointly to parents and schools. The payments will be made by the local body governing the schools, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the State Board of Education.

8. That the State Board of Education shall have general supervision and administration of the grant funds provided by the legislature, and that it is intended that the State Board shall manage and allot these funds.

9. That the governing authority of each local school system may appropriate amounts from any local tax or non-tax funds and state funds for a tuition grant.

The remaining provisions of the law set forth penalties for those who violate the act, which makes no mention of race, segregation, or desegregation. Grants are not available to children in public school.

We cannot discuss the real workability of this law in Louisiana because it has not been tried. We note, however, that when the Frantz-McDonogh cooperative was set up, it was forced to join the St. Bernard public school system because grant funds were not available. At least one applicant from a private school in New Orleans was likewise advised that the state was unable to give her a grant because there was no money for it. Now, apparently, the tuition grants are to be financed from the State Welfare Fund. It is possible that this method of grant financing will prove to be illegal since some of the Welfare Fund comes from the Federal government, and since the Welfare Department, by law, is required to maintain a $5,000,000 cushion at all times. It is also possible that the grant money may be paid from the State Education Fund if the proposed constitutional convention removes the dedication (to public education) from that fund.

It seems obvious, furthermore, that the state anticipates wholesale school closure in certain parishes, notably St. Helena, and that it is primarily interested in supporting private schools in closed parishes, rather than schools in parishes where the public system remains open. The danger here lies in the fact that the Federal Court may simply throw out local option closings and/or tuition grants paid to closed areas. By setting up laws which make a Prince Edward-type closing easy, the state has invited suits such as that filed by the Prince Edward plaintiffs. Further, the Welfare Fund money now earmarked for tuition grants could not be stretched to support, at most, more than 5 or 6 parishes for a year. The greatest problem attaching to a tuition grant system is the constant drain on the financial resources of the state--leaving aside the legality of the grant laws.

North Carolina

In North Carolina the legislature enacted laws enabling local school boards to conduct referendums to determine whether the voters of each county wished to maintain the local school property tax. A vote against the tax levy was to be, in effect, a vote to abolish the public schools of the district. If the district voted for the tax, schools were to remain open, even if desegregated, and the pupil placement law (passed in 1955) was to go into effect. Any child unwilling to attend a desegregated school was allowed to request a transfer; if no transfer was possible, the child was to be awarded a tuition grant (law passed in 1956).

No North Carolina school district has closed its schools, and reliable records indicate that no district has ever held a referendum on this question. Ten school districts were desegregated as of December 1960, when 82 Negroes attended desegregated schools.

Virginia

Virginia, while it has no specific local option laws, does have statutes which have enabled at least one county, Prince Edward, to close totally. It also had statutes which brought out school closure in Norfolk, Charlottesville, and Front Royal in Warren County. A Federal court decision, James vs Almond, reopened the schools in these areas, but the court reserved judgment on the questions raised by the Prince Edward closing.

Virginia's tuition grant law makes the grants available to all students who attend public, private, segregated or desegregated schools, as long as they meet minimum accreditation criteria--and in some cases the criteria are indeed minimal--as, for instance, in Front Royal, where the new private school had no library and no science laboratory. The state voluntarily relinquished some of its control to local school boards, to avoid the charge of state management of private schools. Virginia also:

1. Permits reduction in school terms;

2. Permits month-to-month school financing;

3. Repealed its compulsory attendance laws;

4. Permits initiative and referendum for disposal of local school property;

5. Exempted private school buildings from zoning and building code laws for two years;

6. Reenacted its compulsory attendance law, but left enforcement to local school boards and authorized parents to withhold their children from school;

7. Authorized local bodies to spend funds for private schooling of children;

8. Authorized localities to permit tax payers to deduct contributions to non-sectarian private schools from real estate and personal property tax levies;

9. Permits local authorities to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the State Pupil Placement Board, and to administer their own local assignment plans;

10. Stipulates that tuition grants be paid by local authorities to the parents of applicant children--not to the schools.

In short, Virginia has tried to make each local school district as autonomous as possible, in the hope that lack of state control over public education would both pacify the Federal Government and would force plaintiffs to sue local officials in county after county. The fact that the Prince Edward plaintiffs are suing state officials seems to indicate that this plan has not worked, but it stood a better chance of working than any of the others discussed herein, with the possible exception of the North Carolina scheme.

LEGAL PROBLEMS

In areas where the grants have been used to finance private schools while the public schools remain open, no legal challenge of the grant system has been made. Since it sometimes happens that the number of children attending private schools in a given district is not large enough to warrant a reduction in the taxes spent on public schools some citizens have grumbled that they are being taxed twice for schools; but no suit has been filed on this basis.

Closed area, however, are another matter. In Prince Edward County, Virginia, where the public schools have been shut for two years, Negro plaintiffs have filed a suit in Federal Court which directly attacks the tuition grant system. No Negroes have set up private, grant-supported schools in Prince Edward. The plaintiffs claim that tuition grants constitute state support of the private foundation in Prince Edward. Advocates of the grant system claim that the grants are benefits to the child and not to the school. Yet a Virginia state court, in the case of Day vs Almond, held otherwise.

The events leading up to that case were as follows:

After World War Two, the state of Virginia made tuition grants available to children of deceased war veterans. Some of the grant money was spent in religious schools. Exception was taken to this, since both the Federal and state constitutions forbid the making of laws respecting the establishment of religion. In the Day case, the state court held that tuition grants paid to religious schools, even though they were paid indirectly through the children, constituted state support of these schools and, therefore, contravened both constitutions. It remains to be seen whether the Federal courts will agree with the Day decision that tuition grants constitute state support of schools.

The Federal courts may take into consideration the amount of grant money the private schools are receiving. A school which derives most of its financial support from tuition-grant pupils is more vulnerable to attack than is a school which has no more than a handful of grant pupils. A school system, like that in Prince Edward, which could not exist without tuition grants, is especially vulnerable.

If tuition grants are adjudged to be state support of private schools, what does this mean to the future of those schools? There are two Federal dicta which may answer that question. The first is to be found in the Federal court decision in the Arkansas case of Cooper vs. Aaron, in which the court said, "State support of segregated schools by any arrangement, management, funds or property, cannot be squared with the 14th Amendment's command..." In the second case, Allen vs. Charlottesville School Board, the court said, "If the state is going to abandon public education it must do so completely and not continue it under the guise of private schools supported by state funds. As long as the schools are operated with public support they must be operated on a desegregated basis."

If the private schools are desegregated, the Cooper and Allen dicta will not apply. However, the private schools set up in Virginia since 1958 are segregated, and most of the Louisiana cooperatives will likewise be segregated. If the Supreme Court, which affirmed the Cooper decision, holds that grants do constitute state support of the private schools, the court will have no choice but to:

1) Forbid the use of grants in segregated schools; or

2) Order those schools to admit any qualified pupil, regardless of race.

The Prince Edward plaintiffs are asking the court to stop all payments of public funds to any school, corporation, association, or partnership which excludes students on the basis of race. They are also asking that public school property be withheld from such institutions.

Advocates of the grant system frequently compare the grant laws to those laws which allow the state to provide free transportation, lunches, and textbooks to all school children. The courts may consider this an invalid analogy. The benefits outlined above are fringe benefits only. Tuition grants, on the other hand, will supply most of the support for the private cooperative schools.

Advocates of the grant system also maintain that tuition grants resemble the scholarships given under the G.I. Bill of Rights. However, the G. I. Bill grants had no connection with race. Race is a factor - the prime factor - in the tuition grant system, since most of the grant money will go to segregated schools, and the courts will have to take this into consideration. If the Cooper dictum holds good, and if the Day decision is followed by the higher courts, it is hard to see how the grant system can be salvaged.

A serious flaw in the Louisiana tuition grant system lies in the wording of our grant law. It allows, for instance, the grant checks to be made jointly to the parents and the private schools - thus providing proof of direct state support of those schools. Section ten of the law affirms that "the State Board of Education shall have general supervision and administration of the funds provided by the legislature for education expense grants, and it is intended that such funds shall be managed and allotted by the State Board of Education." This provision requires control and management of education by a state agency; segregated schools thus managed (and most, if not all, of the cooperatives will be segregated) fall under the Cooper dictum. What is more, "...no education expense grant shall be paid for any child except for attendance at a private, non-profit, non-sectarian school as approved by the Louisiana State Board of Education." The law sets forth no minimum approval standards, nor does it require the State Board to approve previously accredited schools. The word "accreditation" does not appear in the law. Under this law, the State Board of Education might disapprove our finest private schools and approve any hastily formed cooperative, at will. The law provides procedures of appeal from disapproval of grants, but they entail lengthy court processes both distasteful to and expensive for the ordinary citizen.

In short, our tuition grant law is very vulnerable to legal challenge. If a Louisiana community closes its schools and relies entirely on tuition grants, the way will have been opened for the destruction of the tuition grant system in the state.

There is a peripheral legal problem in Louisiana with regard to tuition grants. It has been articulated, perhaps unwittingly, by those who compare tuition grants to the G. I. Bill of Rights funds. Those funds were expended in church schools, as well as non-sectarian institutions.

Our law forbids the giving of grants to church schools. At the same time, it declares that the grants do not support the schools directly. The grants, according to the law, benefit only the children. Some students in the numerous church schools of South Louisiana will probably apply for the grants, laying the matter before the courts if necessary.

How could the state defend itself in such a case? It cannot claim that the grants actually do constitute support of schools, and that such support of religious institutions is constitutionally prohibited. Such a contention on the state's part would destroy the carefully built-up doctrine that the grants are not state support of private schools, and would lay the state open to suit on the grounds that it was, in fact, directly supporting segregated education. If, on the other hand, the state continued to assert that the tuition grants are simply scholarships "like the G. I. Bill of Rights", as Emile Wagner said, it would have no grounds for denying them to students at church schools.

This dilemma appears to be unsolvable. If the Supreme Court should hold that the grants are "benefits to the child" the state would have no option but to pay them to students in church schools, since there is no justification for withholding them from students at any sort of approved school. This would breach the wall of separation between church and state and would be hotly contested for years. If, on the other hand, the Supreme Court held that the grants actually constituted state support of private schools, the NAACP would contest the legality of such support for segregated schools under the Cooper dictum. In either case, the tuition grant system might be headed for the scrap heap.

It is possible, of course, that the Supreme Court might sanction state support of religious institutions, but while the court has been willing to condone state expenditure for transportation of children to parochial schools (as it did in the Everson case) it will probably distinguish between a fringe benefit and all-out support.

If the state refuses grants to students in church schools it can only do so by admitting that the grants really support the schools. If it withholds the grants from students, it is depriving those students of their "benefit to the child" payments, which it has no right to do, especially since our state constitution specifically prohibits discrimination on religious grounds. The only practical solution to this problem is the continued maintenance, by the state, of free public education.

It is interesting to note in this regard that E. S. Oglesby, Chairman of Virginia's Pupil Placement Board, has said that the state of Virginia is violating the U. S. Constitution in denying grants to pupils in church schools. Oglesby said, in part, "When we say the grant cannot be used in furthering education in a sectarian school, we are violating the First Amendment to the U. S. Constitution." This is another side of the legal coin. Heretofore the courts have construed the First Amendment to mean that the Government may not support religious establishments. Mr. Oglesby is saying that it may not inhibit them either. Only time will tell us whether Mr. Oglesby is correct.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS - DO THEY WORK?

Can good private schools be financed entirely by tuition grants? The history of four Virginia communities indicates that the answer to this question is "No".

Charlottesville

In Charlottesville the public schools were closed in 1958 by order of Governor Almond. Rock Hill Academy, a private, segregated high school, was established and is still operating, as is Robert E. Lee, its companion elementary school. Rock Hill is generally recognized as a well-equipped school with good facilities. Its science and language programs are particularly good.

In 1960-61, 555 applications for tuition grants in Charlottesville were approved. Most of this money was spent at Rock Hill and Robert E. Lee. This money almost covered the schools' operating costs. Some $350,000 gleaned from private donations (about $200,000 in cash and pledges, the rest in loans) has gone into capital outlay. Thus, the Charlottesville private foundation has gone into the red because of these initial capital costs, which were necessary for the construction and equipment of facilities, including one old house and four new classroom buildings, which have made Rock Hill the good private school it is.

Apart from the money raised by loans and fund drives, Rock Hill, in 1959-60, received some money from parents, over and above the tuition grants. The tuition charge is $250; the grant allowance was $234.43. The difference was made up by the parents. In the year beginning in 1960, the local governing body of Charlottesville voted to supplement the grants with non-school funds and the difference was made up in this way.

Thus, when Rock Hill and Robert E. Lee were first founded, the tuition grants were really not adequate even to pay the schools' tuition charge. In 1959-60, parents paid a total of about $9,420 to eke out the grant money. Now that difference is being made up by Charlottesville taxpayers. The grants were totally inadequate to cover the cost of new school buildings and the acquisition of the original building for Rock Hill, nor did they cover transportation costs. These Charlottesville private schools are in debt, even though the foundation received $20,000 from an anonymous donor.

Norfolk

When six Norfolk public high schools were closed, a Norfolk private foundation established the Tidewater Academy, which offered grades 7-12. This effort did not receive much community support. Although nearly a thousand tuition grants went to Norfolk during Tidewater's first year, enrollment at the school did not exceed 200, indicating that Norfolk children were not interested in hastily organized facilities and instruction. The school is housed in an "old mansion" which cost $75,000. No extracurricular activities are included in Tidewater's curriculum unless the students want them so badly that they themselves organize them.

Fund-raising efforts have been made for Tidewater and have proved disappointing. Continuing solicitations are being made, but meanwhile sources are meager. The school charges each pupil about $80 a year over and above his tuition grant.

The Tidewater mansion was purchased only after a fund-raising drive provided some of the necessary money. After several months of financial maneuvering, the private foundation obtained the funds for the down payment. The remainder of the purchase price will be paid off over a period of years. The mortgage is held by individuals, rather than any investment concern.

In Norfolk, as in Charlottesville, tuition grants fall slightly short of covering actual operating costs, and did not cover initial capital outlay at all. While it is not likely that Tidewater will wish to expand its facilities, it is certain that the grants could not finance the expansion.

Front Royal (Warren County)

When Warren County High School was closed, a private foundation started private segregated Mosby Academy. At first, Mosby occupied a small restaurant on the edge of town. It had no laboratory, no manual training workshop, and no home economics facilities. Its library was inadequate.

In 1960-61, 473 children from Front Royal were given tuition grants. Most of these children attend Mosby. The school has always solicited private donations. In 1959-60, it received $50,000 from a local labor union; later, the national union put a stop to this expenditure of the local's funds.

Now Mosby is housed in a new building containing 22 rooms and a cafeteria. The school is in the process of acquiring the facilities it lacked when it opened. All of its capital needs must be supplied through gifts and fund-raising projects, and it is faced with a financial drive to build a new, companion, elementary school. Each student pays $15.00 a year over and above tuition grants, plus small fees for materials.

Here, again, tuition grants do not quite cover operating costs, and do not cover capital outlay at all.

Farmville (Prince Edward County)

Here, the public schools have been closed for nearly two years, and no Negroes attend any school. At first the Prince Edward Private Foundation attempted to run its schools without any tax support. That proved impossible, and in 1960-61, 1,324 tuition grants were approved for the county's students. There are seven schools in the Prince Edward Foundation private system, housed in 6 churches, the Women's Club building, and, in the case of the high school, scattered through churches, stores and an old residence. A new high school building is being constructed. No cafeteria facilities are available. The school day ends at 1:30 P.M.

A recent fund-raising drive netted a private foundation nearly $250,000--nearly 4/5ths of which was pledged rather than given in cash. All of it will be spent on capital outlay for new buildings and facilities. Each pupil pays a yearly charge of $15.00, over and above his tuition grant. In addition to this, each family pays a dollar a week to a private organization for transportation--about $35 a year.

The Prince Edward curriculum is not superior, but it is not too different from that given by the closed public schools--although, of course, the private foundation cannot match the equipment of those schools. Sports are the only extra-curricular activities.

The initial legal test of the tuition grant system will come when the courts are asked to decide whether the grants constitute state support of private education. If the courts decide that the state is supporting segregated education by means of the grants, they will probably strike down the entire grant system. If the grants are found to be what the state claims they are...direct benefits to the recipient children...the problem of grants to students in church schools will almost certainly arise, and this legal struggle may also bring about the downfall of the grant system. In any event, the private tuition grant schools are in real danger.

CONCLUSIONS

It is evident, from the Virginia case histories, that tuition grants in Virginia are not adequate to support the poorest private school or the finest. These schools have set their tuition fees as low as they dare, but there is still a gap between the grants and the fees. If the gap were the only problem, it would not constitute a serious obstacle to the creation of private schools elsewhere, but such is not the case. The grants do not begin to pay for the costs of old and new buildings, and for the acquisition of first-class facilities. All of these things must be paid for by donations and pledges from the private citizens of the affected communities. So far, these citizens have been remarkably generous, but the time is bound to come when they will lose interest in the private foundations. This is already happening, to some extent, in Charlottesville, Warren County, and Norfolk. There are even indications that it is happening in Prince Edward, where the closed public schools have united the county's white citizens in an all-out effort to keep the private foundation going.

Nor are all of these schools good schools. Rock Hill Academy is the best of the lot; it would probably pass muster anywhere. Mosby, though deficient, is improving, but Tidewater remains quite mediocre, and the Prince Edward schools, while they serve the whites of that rural community fairly well, do not measure up to national standards.

In New Orleans, where the long established private schools charge approximately $500 to $700 yearly tuition, the tuition grants will fall far short of these charges. These private schools do not charge exorbitant fees -- this is the money necessary locally to run a good private school.

Can any school financed solely by tuition grants ever offer its pupils an adequate education? Not one of the Virginia schools have studied has even attempted to rely solely on tuition grants for all its operating expenses. Could private, tuition-grant schools survive in New Orleans without substantial donations and gifts? Certainly no good New Orleans private school has been able to do this, nor have the Virginia schools been able to do so.

What do these facts suggest for Louisiana?

1. Tuition grants cannot cover the operating costs of even a small, mediocre private school.

2. Schools founded on grant aid will have to conduct perennial fund-raising drives to collect the money necessary for building and expansion of building facilities.

3. As the public begins to lose interest in the private, tuition-grant schools, some of those schools will go under. There is a limit to the number of cultural enterprises any city can support.

4. Even a guarantee of sufficient funds is not a guarantee that the recipient school will be a good one.

There is a further drawback to the tuition grant system for Louisiana. The grants are flat rates, based on the per educable allowance and the amount each school district receives from the equalization fund. While the per educable allowance is fixed, the equalization allowance is not. It fluctuates from year to year according to the needs of the districts. Rural parishes, accustomed to fall back on the equalization fund as the school population increases and the school facilities are forced to expand, will find the present tuition grant allowance insufficient to cover operating costs, and the grants cannot possibly begin to pay for capital costs. This will not work too great a hardship on the cities of Louisiana, for most of them rely on property taxes to relieve their tight budgets. It will, however, work great hardship on the small, poor country parishes, where there is little property to tax, unless the state institutes a flexible scale of tuition grants, giving more to the rural areas. The administration has not, so far, considered this problem.

Nor is this all. A school system cannot function with true efficiency unless it is continually planning for the needs of children who will enter the system in years to come. It must study the whereabouts of those children in order to build schools readily available to them. It must calculate the number of children it can expect to enter the system every year, and plan accordingly. At present, 25,000 new pupils enter our public schools every year. They must be considered, and accomodated. These studies cost money, and the tuition grants cannot be stretched to cover many of the special services our New Orleans schools now provide.

Taxation for tuition grants is distasteful on principle to an increasing number of citizens. These men and women, who do not object to supporting the public schools because they have a public purpose, do object to paying for the private education of students to whom public education is available. Might it not be said that the tuition grant schools also have a public purpose? Their adherents answer "Yes". The schools have softened the impact of desegregation--they also provide "freedom of choice" for students in desegregated areas. The real question here is one of degree. How much "freedom of choice" is desirable? Those students who object to desegregation may withdraw from public school if they choose. They are quite free to finance their private education--if they can. Do we owe them more "freedom of choice" than this? Opponents of the grant system say that we do not. We would not dream of underwriting the private education of every child who cannot afford to pay for it himself. Why should we give this kind of aid to the applicant children simply because they don't like desegregation? The answer is that the issue of desegregation colors the thinking of the general public on this matter. The principle becomes obscured by practical considerations. If the applicant children wanted to escape from coeducational schools, for instance, the public would probably be indignant at the very idea of financing such a retreat. It may be years, however, before the Southern people become indignant when they are asked to finance a retreat from desegregation.

Do the tuition grants do harm? The answer is both yes and no. They are a severe drain on the finances of the state. They are, in Virginia at least, misused to a grave extent. They are paid to children who have always attended private school; to children who transfer from their own public system to a better one; to children who attend private schools outside their counties and sometimes outside the state itself; to children who leave small, segregated schools to attend integrated schools in Norfolk. On the other hand, the grants provide a refuge for the diehards.

Some argue that the existence of tuition-grant schools weakens the open public schools in communities which employ the dual public-private system. To some extent this is true, but the same argument could be levelled at any private school. And it seems apparent that the tuition-grant schools of Norfolk, Front Royal, and Charlottesville are weakening as the public schools grow stronger. These communities may emerge from their crises with renewed confidence in the value of public education. It is significant that the "elite" of these cities, who often set the fashion for community action, are gradually returning their children to the public schools. Meanwhile, the Front Royal public school, during the hiatus created by the white boycott, was able to re-evaluate and reshape its curriculum into a remarkably fine program which includes a triple-track system of education and a number of science courses taught on college levels. These are benefits to the community's children which would not now be available had there been no private Mosby Academy.

Do tuition grants lead to school closure? Not in any instance that we have been able to discover. The one county - Prince Edward - which remains closed, shut down its schools and operated for a year without tuition grants.

It is possible, but not certain, that without the grant system no school outside of Prince Edward would have remained closed for long, and in this respect the grants are a weapon in the hands of the advocates of closure. The grant system provides an alternative to public education which may make closure more acceptable to Southerners. However, it also provides an alternative which makes desegregation more palatable to Southerners. Those who raise a hue and cry about "forced integregation" can be answered simply by a reference to the grant system. As long as the grants exist, "forced integration" cannot be a valid issue in the South, for those who do not wish to be "forced" have an out.

What doe we owe our children?

Do we owe them an education, regardless of the public or private nature of that education? Do we owe them full "freedom of choice"?

Or do we owe them "freedom of choice" only to withdraw from public school, and to finance their private education as best they can? These are questions every citizen must answer.

As the retiring School Board of Prince Edward said in April, 1960:

"We are aware that the Prince Edward Foundation has obtained contributions from those who have school age children and those who do not -- For this, we stand grateful. Yet the people of Prince Edward County must face the question whether this method of voluntary support of schools can be depended upon, year in and year out, through good times and bad, to pay the cost of education for all. Education must meet standards of quality over a period of many years, and be conducted by teachers and administrators of edicated purpose and training if it is to continue to be effective to meet the needs of our people."

These are wise and solemn words. Can a system of tuition-grant schools meet their challenge?

"THE CHALLENGES WE FACE"

(An address given by Mr. J. E. Devaughn, Principal Brown High School, at Wednesday night Fellowship Supper at Park Street Methodist Church on April 26, 1961)

I do not propose to come tonight to tell you what you should think and do about the evident crises we face. I dislike the approach of one who would tell an audience a point of view which it should take; rather, I prefer to talk with you about the way we try to help our students at Brown to see the challenge we face. On the other hand, I think I have used the plural "crises" advisedly:

We face a crisis of particular importance in the United States in the racial issue; and this particular issue and related ones of our country spill over into the problems we face throughout the world. The problems are multiple in nature, in my opinion, and the issue of desegragation is merely one of these problems.

As I have conceived this problem as a school executive, I have considered the problem and the opportunity and responsibility as above that of personal feeling and inclination. I have felt that personal feeling should not be part of the consideration, but that welfare of the country and of its citizens and our future should be predominant. Personal feelings have liggle place in such considerations.

In these impersonal considerations, the Decision of 1954 must be taken as the law of the land, as lawful interpretation of the Constitution within the framework of our system. This decision and subsequent decisions must be taken as consistent and part of the process which guarantees to every man his personal rights. These decisions merely apply to the Negroes' rights. And, therefore, consistent attitude must be that this isthe law of the land, despite personal and sectional differences of opinion. We must admit that in the protection of the rights of all the people some rights which may conflict with any one individual's personal feelings may be granted, but that the protection of the rights of all is more important to Democracy than that a few are inconvenienced.

The school executive must realize that his only course of action is that necessary to implement in an orderly manner the Atlanta Board of Education Plan as approved by the District Federal Court. It is true that in a democratic society the issues may still be debated, as to whether the constitutional provisions which give Negroes the rights directed by the court are good, whether the rights may be abridged for the benefit of the prevailing class and race, but also must be considered the resultant effect of such abridgment upon the Republic as it affects not only the individuals of the minority group but of the majority as well. These discussions may be held, with view of constitutional change, but the cost must also be considered, and meanwhile the prevailing decision must be accepted without apology. Recognition of law and order must be achieved in a democracy.

There is also the idea that freedom of association somehow is challenged in this decision. Freedom of association is a constitutional right and is not jeopardized in the granting of rights to individuals of another race or color or creed. This idea of association is one of individual conscience, not of legislation nor decree. One may be as free as his conscience and sense of right allow in choice of associates. This may be the hardest task finally.

There is another important consideration: We all are in this thing together, and it involves not just the local resolution of the racial issue, but involves also our position in the world in a way little understood by most.

Since this issue of desegregation is one of multiple problems we face as a nation and as Western Culture, we consider the job a professional one -- to bring to students understanding not only of this particular problem but of other issues of the world that relate to it. Our job is to put in perspective, without indoctrination, the problems of the world as they relate to the United States and the individuals of our school. These issues are in fact determinants of the future of our nation and of the future of the individuals to whom we are responsible.

The local problem and those of the large world can best be seen in perspective. Perspective isbest achieved when we consider man in his history. Recently a writer in the New York Times Magazine helped all who would read to gain a sense of perspective when he wrote that it took man 475,000 years to reach the Agricultural Age. It took him another 25,000 years to reach the Industrial Revolution. From the Industrial Revolution to the Space Age required only 150 years! To express the sweep of human history in another way, the history of man may be likened to a river that began on a huge plateau with little fall and meandered in a wide stream slowly for a half million years. Then the river reached a hill country of gradual decline for another period of some great length. In the last century and a half the river has come over an Alpine range and has descended in such torrents and with such speed that we cannot make sense of the sweep of events and the tendency of the main stream. The speed with which events now move in relation to the slower times is illustrated in the fact that it took Christianity from Jesus' crucifixion in 29 A.D. to 325 A.D. to be accepted by Constantine the emperor of the culture which crucified Him. Yet, the doctrine of Karl Marx moved with remarkable speed, though insidious and materialistic instead of heavenly. The Manifesto was published in 1848, and yet the workers in St. Petersburg who entreated Tsar Nicholas II in 1905 were bestirred by Marxist doctrine as well as by rightful feelings against injustices of that period, and the Revolution of 1917 was almost totally dominated by this doctrine little more than a half century after the Manifesto. Thus we see the increased tempo of the sweep of ideas.

We fought World War II with fighter craft which flew at 325 miles per hour, and had a few craft for which we claimed 425 miles per hour. Now our "Hustler" flies more than twice the speed of sound, and a man guides a space craft successfully at 5100 miles per hour. This is part of the swift movement of events which hold us in their grasp. Yet, the movement of man in space is not so momentous as that of the rising nations of the earth and that of the rising aspirations of the peoples of the world and of the minorities of our United States who have been in the culture. This our students and we must recognize if we are to survive as a nation and as a part of Western Culture, wherein the individual and his pursuit of religious and individual values are important. Thus, it is now in reality a possibility that a nation may fall and lose its position in the world in a matter of weeks or even days.

In this perspective we try to help students to see that Laos and our failure there are important to us and our position in the world and to the value system to which we are committed. We would help them see that SEATO was powerless to act because the strongest member of the Pact, Turkey, could not have been committed without giving Russia an excuse to attack and seize our bases there and the warm-water ports which would have given her an outlet to the Mediterranean which she has sought to enter for many centuries. We try to help students to see that South Vietnam has a meaning to them in relation to values we treasure, and that China and its materialism is an even greater threat in the years ahead. We must help them see that Russia and those countries of the Communist conviction will exploit conflict as a method of operation on either extreme, working with those who would unsuccessfully dam the movement of the torrent of history and against those who would successfully channel it. Students must know that Communists have exploited and used liberal elements in the best American colleges for their own purposes and have also joined groups which were dominated by hate. Students must know that in the fall of 1961 Communists and unthoughtful persons could exploit and agitate against the peaceful solution of desegragation of our Atlanta schools and divide us to our hurt before the eyes of the world. This the students and we must be cognizant of constantly.

We have tried to help students see the troubles in Cuba, and all of Latin America as well, in perspective and in view of our national goals. It is important that they review Suez and the action of Britain and France there a few years ago as perhaps crucial, with our joining Russia in denunciation of that action. The rising nations of South Africa must be seen in light of old oppressions and aspirations of peoples who will influence the near future of this world in which we are irrevocably entangled. Our destiny, we help them to see, is with all of these conflicts, and is inescapable. Even in a short quarter century England's position and future in the world has been drastically changed beyond the Englishman's and our comprehension of such sweep of aspirations of colonial peoples. Our own history is changing in this quarter century. Evidence is in the imbalance of payments and the drain on our gold reserves, in our troubles in Cuba, and in all trouble spots of the earth. These are all related events of the stream of history.

We take time to add to the perspective of students. Arnold Toynbee, we remind them, listed three causes of the fall of the majority of civilizations of human history, plus militarism as an outgrowth of any one of these three chief causes: 1) A soft bed, or an enviroment which invited peoples to be content and on the defensive and unconcerned about the issues of the world confronting them; 2) An outside challenge not met creatively; 3) An internal challenge not met creatively.

We have all three. First, we have a people enjoying great material comfort for the most part, and with too much invested to venture to think or speak or act in a manner to disturb the comfort they now enjoy, too comfortable to move out of the payline or the clubhouse-home and to take an issue on fundamental principles of America. Second, we have the outside challenge of a Communism with goals definitely and even destructively defined, a challenge which turns our own great liberalism upon us in a distorted form, quoting our Jefferson and Wilson while denying individual freedom and religious search of the human conscience, practicing materialism and pretending that ends and means are separate, that the ends justify the means. We have not met this challenge with the creative reaffirmation of the human principles upon which America was founded, but rather have met the challenge in a defensive position of that which is inconsistent with our announced purposes and beliefs, and thus, we have our truths flung into our teeth by an alien philosophy and a most efficient operation of the Communists. In the third place, we have with us, and have had since slavery was shamefully and with great guilt taken upon us, a proletariat, a minority in the culture but not of the culture, a minority which is challenging all of us that they be of the culture. Must not students and all of us understand that the Constitution and Declaration before it and the noble minds of the founding years give the members of the minority group bases for their claim, and that the Justices merely testify to this fact and reaffirm the rightness of the claim?

This we all must face. This is only a part of the sweep of history in perspective. This is not a localized problem. It is part of the world problem we face. And face it we must, with calmness and magnanimity of heart and soul. What we personally feel must have second place and must be of little consequence if we have enlightened self-interest for years of our personal future as well as that of our nation.

May I remind you, as we try to remind students, that most revolutions, including our own, were caused by movements of minorities in attempt to rise, or by the privileged as they fought to prevent the rise? Pray God we may avoid a violent Revolution or Counter-Revolution.

We have worked with students to help them see these issues in perspective. We have helped them to know the issues and choices without attempting to change points of view. One of our great prides is the Brown High Honor Code, which over a period of years is a result of students' thinking of a value system. We have strengthened student government, so that it is a real voice in the school. We have tried to have students face the issues for September, 1961, on desegragation, and they have renounced violence as a method of action in a land of law and order and have pledged to use democratic methods to forward their purposes. Of course, not all students will be fully committed, but we have tried to have them see the problem in perspective.

But this is not just a school problem or a problem for students. We feel that the Christian Church stands at a crucial point in its history in this and other matters in this world, and are certain that the Church will reaffirm its great historic place in moral leadership in the world as well as in this matter. Else it will turn its back upon the issues and cease to be a moral influence in our world. The Samaritan, too, must have a place in the culture, or the culture will fall. Families must consider the issues above personal feelings and desires. All civic clubs and groups in the culture must face the issue.

Fellow citizens, choices of history have never been easy, for the individual or a nation. In fact, every great choice of history, by individual or by a nation, was difficult and took courage and resolution and sacrifice. This problem and the related problems that challenge us are of the same kind. We must solve this challenge of September, 1961, or we shall not solve the other problems we face over the globe. We have challenged the students of Brown High. We challenge you!

"READY FOR THE CRISIS"

(Excerpts from a sermon preached on May 28, 1961, at Druid Hills Methodist Church, Dr. Nat G. Long, Pastor.)

No one of us knows what tomorrow will bring...As long as life moves smoothly, anybody can meet it, but only those who are prepared can stand in the crises. Emergencies cannot make us, but they reveal what we are, and sometimes they break us.

The disciples were concerned about the end of the world; they were anxious about the second coming of Jesus. They asked their Lord when he would come again, and when the world would end. He said, in effect,"I cannot tell you when the world will end, or when I shall return. But the only way to be prepared for the end of the world, or for the coming again of the Son of man is to be ready for either at any and every hour." To illustrate what he had in mind he told a story. . .

Certainly, we find there not only instruction regarding our attitude toward the end of time and toward the second coming of Jesus, but also toward any crisis of the future. It is a parable of preparedness. In it Jesus is saying, "You cannot know what crisis you will be compelled to face tomorrow, but you can become spiritually prepared for any and every crisis."

Jesus likens the Kingdom of God to the coming of a bridal party. A wedding for the Jews was the most joyous of all occasions. Jesus was saying that the joy of a wedding is the proper sign of the Kingdom of God. He wanted his disciples to become prepared for the most joyous thing on earth. He wanted them to be prepared for all kinds of emergencies and crises...Whatever comes we should be ready for it. Jesus seems to say, "Be ready for the future; new duties are to be done; new missions are to be performed; new issues are to be met; new honors and pleasures are to be enjoyed; terrible trials are to be faced. Be prepared for any and everythin."

The crises that are coming to you and to me are inescapable. They are of a thousand kinds. Financial disaster may deprive our children of an education. The savings of a life time may be shattered over night. Suddenly in the midst of a happy life disease may set in. A person may be tortured by loneliness. Some moral issue may face us. And, of course, for each of us there will be the crisis of death.

One social crisis which we must face in Atlanta in September of 1961 will be the desegregation of our schools. Whether we like it or not, we shall be compelled to accept it. None of us here is responsible for it, but we must face it. The Supreme Court of the United Statesin 1954 ruled segregation as unconstitutional. United States District Judge Hooper has ordered that the plan of the AtlantaBoard of Education for gradual desegregation be put into operation as of May 1, 1961. The applications of Negroes to enter the twelfth and eleventh grades of white schools were made between May 1 and May 15, 1961. These applications are being processed. There will be some integration. It is no longer a matter of opinion as to whether we should have it or not. It is a matter of fact that we shall have it. It will be a crisis for us.

The only question before us is, How shall we meet the crisis? We can wisely prepare for it, or we can foolishly leave the matter up to hoodlums and mobsters. If we do nothing, and let the worst element of our society determine the reaction of the great city of Atlanta to this social crisis, we shall bring disgrace upon our city, state, and nation. How lacking in intelligence such an approach would be!

How can we wisely prepare for this crisis? Herbert Jenkins, Chief of Police of Atlanta, in addressing the members of his police force, suggests the proper approach. Said he, "I am prepared to yield to the judgment of the Supreme Court. Why? Because, as law enforcement officials, there is no other position we can honestly take..as policemen we are the law. The Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land that must be obeyed by everyone. . history will be written in our city in 1961. Our action will play a large part in the writing. Let's be sure our part is good." As members of the church let us be sure our part is good. Dr. John Letson, Superintendent of Atlanta Public Schools, also suggests the right attitude. Says he, "The goals of all must be to accomplish peacefully and with dignity what we are required to do. Anything less will not change the ultimate result, but will exact a terrible price that will not be paid in full for a generation."

Every person here can do something about this coming crisis. First of all, he can earnestly pray for God's guidance; second, he can resolve that he will be sane, dignified, law-abiding; third, he can speak out against defiance of the courts; fourth, he can help to create an atmosphere of peace. For the church people all over this city to make this wise approach to the crisis will enable us to meet it as God would have us do. I plead with you wisely to prepare for the coming school crisis in this manner.

Let us again emphasize the fact that the emergency, or crisis, will not itself develop character. The emergency or the crisis will only reveal character. The conflict with slavery in the United States did not make a Lincoln, but when a Lincoln had been made in the quiet of humble training, it proved him to be the man of the hour. World War II did not make General Dwight Eisenhour, but when he had been made through years of hard study and efficient service, the war thrust him forward as a great leader. The coming school crisis will not make Atlanta a peaceful, dignified, law-abiding city, but when a peaceful, dignified, law-abiding citizenry has been developed through prayer, through level-headedness, through commitment to God, the crisis will show how noble and fine our people are. . .

Dear Friend:

You have doubtless read this "quote" from Dr. John Letson:

"The goals of all must be to accomplish peacefully and with dignity what we are required to do. Anything less will not change the ultimate result, but will exact a terrible price that will not be paid in full for a generation."

People of good-will throughout the city are asking "what can we do to help achieve this worthy goal?"

Even if you are already involved, our committee offers another opportunity - practical - specific - and important:

Will you invite into your home a small group of friends, acquaintances, and neighbors, to talk together informally, with the guidance of an amiable discussion leader?

This carefully selected person, a concerned citizen like yourself, will come prepared to enable the group to share its hopes, troublesome questions, and to examine the important role of the individual citizen in maintaining law and order. He (or she) will have ready access to much helpful resource material.

To sum up: over one hundred discussion leaders are trained, and one of them is ready to accept your invitation! Please read carefully the enclosed guide, then fill out and mail the "tear sheet", as soon as you can decide upon the date and time. The name of your discussion leader will reach you by 'phone or by postal.

You have been selected by our committee to play a vital part in this citizens' "grass roots" effort, and we earnestly hope you will accept.

Sincerely,

PARK STREET METHODIST CHURCH - ATLANTA, GEORGIA

June 8, 1961

Dear Friends,

The Commission on Christian Social Concerns, with the approval of the Official Board, submits to the membership of Park Street Methodist Church the following information and recommendations for your prayerful consideration:

The Atlanta Pupil Placement Plan is now being worked out according to the requirements of law, which means that three Negro students will be admitted to Brown High when school opens this fall. This is a fact we must face. There is no alternative short of closing all our public schools. The Atlanta Board of Education is implementing the Pupil Placement Plan as ordered by the Federal Courts. We believe they are not to be censured, but rather, they should be aided by a mature citizenry to accomplish what must be done in as orderly and just a manner as possible. It is up to us as Christian citizens to accept this responsibility sanely and seriously.

The individual Christian rightly asks: "What, then, can I do?"

Your Commission suggests the following for your careful study:

1. As Christian citizens we have an obligation to live up to the laws even those we do not agree with, or the ones which cause us inconvenience. We believe that a Christian will not attempt to take the law into his own hands, but will rely upon and uphold the proper authorities as they attempt to preserve order and provide protection for all citizens. He will not become a part of a mob or give any encouragement to violence. Rather, he will inform police of any attempts to incite to violence or intimidation if he should become aware of such plans or actions.

2. We believe that each member should think through the Christian position calmly and deliberately for himself so that he will know where he stands and be prepared to act on his Christian convictions rather than let anyone else do his thinking for him. We believe that a Christian will be a steadying influence among his friends who become emotional or violent in their attitudes toward others. He will be courteous to all people and respect each individual as a child of God. He will remain calm and exercise mature judgment at all times.

3. We believe that it is the responsibility of Christians to provide constructive leadership in our community during this period of transition They should encourage calm consideration of the issues we face. We must do our best to preserve peace and order in these difficult days. We cannot permit any outbreak of hatred or mob violence. We can help our community to serve as an example to others who must face the same problems in the future.

Since the above statements are submitted for your careful study and prayerful consideration, we request your written signed comments to guide us in future considerations.

Respectfully Submitted,

Harold N. Cheney

NOTE: For resource study information only and not for general publication.

TO THE MEMBERS OF TRINITY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH:

Recognizing the recent decisions of our civil courts with regard to the desegregation of the public schools and the subsequent proposals of the Atlanta School Board to implement these decisions in the fall of 1961, the Session of Trinity Presbyterian Church makes this official statement with regard to the position of the church in light of this impending situation:

1. We recognize this coming change as one over which there has been much discussion and difference of opinion. We recognize the difficulties involved in resolving this problem in our society due to the deep feelings and sentiments of many people.

2. In 1954, our General Assembly stated ". . .that enforced segregation of the races is discrimination which is out of harmony with Christian theology and ethics and that the Church, in its relationship to cultural patterns, should lead rather than follow." We affirm this position already taken by the General Assembly of our denomination regarding the moral rightness of efforts to end racial discrimination. Our concern that such changes come about without undue disturbance or friction is based on fundamental Biblical and theological truths which are relevant to such social crises.

3. We, therefore, endorse the constructive measures now being worked out by the duly constituted authorities of our city to implement the decisions of the courts. We encourage the members of this church to pray for the good of these endeavors, to lend their support to those sane and positive efforts toward a smooth transition and effective conclusion of these procedures. We encourage rational discussion of this matter in a context of Christian love and trust, and urge people to avoid participation in and support of such groups or programs which are likely to intensify strife.

By action of the Session,

May 1, 1961 Trinity Presbyterian Church

The following directive was sent on May 31, 1961 to all Catholic priests of the Atlanta Diocese by Chancellor Harold J. Rainey:

As you know the integration of the public schools in Atlanta is scheduled for September of this year. In view of this approaching crisis, the Most Reverend Bishop directs that the Memorare be recited by priests and people at all Sunday Masses during the announcements. An announcement should be made to the effect that the Memorare is being recited for the just, peaceful and happy outcome of this important step in the history of our beloved City. All should be requested to pray that through the help of God's grace and the intercession of Our Blessed Lady, Atlanta will make this transition with dignity and honor. The Memorare is to be recited at all Sunday Masses until further notice.

Dear Friends,

As you know the Atlanta Pupil Placement Plan is now being carried out as required by law, which means that the eleventh and twelth grades of some of our schools will be desegregated when school opens on August 29. This is a fact we must face. We must do our best to see that this transition is made peacefully.

School officials, law enforcement agencies, civic groups, and others are working effectively toward this end. We feel that moral and spiritual leadership must come from the religious community. The Religious Organizations Section of Oasis was formed to assist churches and other religious groups to prepare their own congregations and to exercise a constructive influence on the general climate of the community.

Thus, we are addressing this letter to you with the hope that you will want to act on one or more of the following suggestions of things you can do with your own congregation:

1. Provide discussion opportunities for young people and adults, perhaps through regular meetings and groups already functioning, to help them understand the situation we face this fall. (You may want to use the enclosed Fact Sheet, Bibliography, and statements by Dr. John W. Letson, Atlanta School Superintendent, and Mr. Everett DeVaughn, Principal of Brown High School.)

2. Mail a statement to your own members which will help them to think through their own religious position so as to be prepared in advance when changes do come. (Enclosed are samples of such statements already mailed to the membership.)

3. Include in your preaching references to being prepared, accepting change, etc. as illustrated in excerpts from the enclosed sermon.

Of course, some of you may have done these things already and wish to move beyond this. Whatever you do, we would like to know about it to encourage other churches to follow your lead. So please let us have a copy of your letters, statements, etc. indicating what use can be made of the material.

Please do not hesitate to call on us if we can help you in any way.

P.S. We would like to encourage you to make your vacation plans so as to be in Atlanta the latter part of August so that your moral leadership will be on the scene if needed.

We also urge you to reserve the last week end in August for "A Day of Prayer for Law and Order" perhaps with a special sermon on that day.

EXCERPTS FROM PRESENTMENTS OF FULTON COUNTY GRAND JURY
May--June, 1961, Term

(3) We wish to commend the (Atlanta) school system on the openness, objectivity and good faith with which they are carrying out the court order to desegregate Atlanta schools.

(4) We wish to exhort all citizens and groups to conduct themselves during school desegregation with restraint, dignity and honor, keeping in mind that wherever opposing groups must meet on a middle-ground, sentiments and convictions remain but must be subordinated to constructive effort to work in the new environment toward a goal which is best for the whole....

(5) We commend the use of established legal procedures by any group or individual to attain relief and redress from alleged encroachment on personal rights....

Many problems exist and many more will arise. They must be met one-by-one with calmness, with objectiveness and with dignity. They must be met with application of the Christian principle of the Golden Rule. They must be met with respect for and support of our laws. Our many American freedoms, of which we are so proud, include many privileges but not the privilege of selecting certain laws to obey (because they favor our viewpoint) and other laws to disobey (because they are contrary to our viewpoint). * * *

A "Dramatic Springboard"

--- for discussions

If you are wondering how to introduce the subject of school desegregation to your particular group of teen-agers or adults, perhaps you would like to take advantage of this interesting offer:

A group of professional actors and actresses have volunteered their services to improvise, or act out situations that might occur in desegregated schools this fall.

The settings for these dramatizations can be club meetings, church groups, camp units, community centers, or other appropriate places. It is suggested that the minimum number in the participating audience be twelve. The physical plant should determine the maximum number.

The actors' material must be carefully planned to suit the particular needs of each group, so your suggestions would be needed at this point.

After the actors have performed thier "improvisations," the audience is divided into groups of six to eight persons, with a discussion leader to guide the conversation for approximately ten minutes. Next comes brief reports from each group to the total number present.

This procedure may be repeated with from two to four improvisations comprising the program.

A summation concludes the program. If possible, this should be done by speakers from both races.

This medium is an excellent one to help people talk about what they feel, and get their hopes and fears out in the open.

PROCEDURE:

Call JA 5-8469 to make your request for a cast of actors, at least two weeks in advance, if possible. This will give time to consult on the material, and to work out other details.

ATLANTA POLICE DEPARTMENT

SPECIAL NOTICE AND ASSIGNMENTS

H. T. Jenkins, Chief of Police

The Board of Education and the Superintendent of Schools has original and complete jurisdiction to operate the public schools in the City of Atlanta.

In accordance with Federal and State regulations, and under orders from the Federal Courts, the Atlanta Schools will be desegregated when schools open on August 30, 1961.

If any person or persons objects to the manner and method of operations of the Atlanta Public Schools, those objections must be made to the Superintendent of School's office at the City Hall, and under no circumstances will objections, discussions or disturbances be permitted at any of the individual schools.

Local and state laws have always surrounded and provided special protection for public worship and public schools. Section 36.14 of the City Code forbids disturbing public schools and states that "no person, at or near any public school, shall, by conversation, sign or otherwise, engage the attention of any of the pupils, to the disturbance of such school."

The highest value of the law is the keeping of the peace -- the Atlanta Police Department has full responsibility and authority to maintain the peace and good order over the entire city and especially at and around the schools. Attached hereto are special school assignments.

Dear Friend:

On August 9, OASIS will present a model discussion group on To-Day in Georgia at 9 A.M., WSB-TV. Parents of children attending Grady will be the participants.

We hope you will tell your neighbors, friends, and members of your organization to watch and to call the station afterwards. This is a grand chance to invite a group in for coffee at your home and to continue your own discussion period. But don't forget to let Ruth Kent and Ray Moore have your comments!

Chief Jenkins of the Atlanta Police Dept. has released a statement to us which we know will be valuable to you in your effort to build community opinion.

The statement reads as follows:

"The Board of Education and the Supt. of Schools has original and complete jurisdiction to operate the public schools of Atlanta. In accordance with state and Federal regulations and under orders from the Federal Court, the Atlanta schools will be desegregated when school opens on August 30, 1961.

"If any person or persons objects to the manner or method of operation of the Atlanta Public Schools, those objections must be made to the Supt. of Schools's office at the City Hall, and under no circumstances will objections be discussed, or disturbances be permitted at any of the individual schools.

"Local and State laws have always surrounded and provided special protection for public worship and public schools. Section 36.14 of the City Code forbids disturbing public schools and states that 'no person, at or near any public school, shall, by conversation, sign, or otherwise, engage the attention of any of the pupils, to the disturbance of such school.'

"The highest value of the law is the keeping of the peace -- the Atlanta Police Dept. has full responsibility and authority to maintain the peace and good order over the entire city, and especially at and around the schools." August 1, 1961

Please make the best possible use of this information.

School Principal Request to Students' Parents

Exh 28

HENRY GRADY HIGH SCHOOL
929 Charles Allen Drive, N.E.
Atlanta 9, Georgia

Office of the Principal

August 17, 1961

To the Parents of All Students of Henry Grady High School

Dear Parents:

As you know, the Federal courts have ordered desegregation of Atlanta high schools. Two Negro students have been transferred to Henry Grady High School.

The purpose of this letter is to inform you of certain precautions in connection with the opening days of school and to ask your co-operation in the observance of these regulations and with all our efforts to provide the education which is your children's right.

The following information and precautionary measures are for your guidance and for the welfare of the students of this school:

1. All students will report to school on Wednesday, August 30, for a full and regular day from 8:30 A.M. to 3:10 P.M. On Tuesday, August 29, the new 8th grade and other students new to the school who have not previously registered will report for orientation and registration. Tuesday, August 29, is also available for parents wishing to discuss student schedules or pertinent problems with school personnel.
2. Parents desiring a conference with the principal, counselors, or teachers should arrange an appointment at any time before August 30 or after September 7. Non-school adults will not be admitted to the school building for an indefinite period beginning August 30.
3. A sufficient number of police officers and detectives will be on duty at, or in the vicinity of, the school for the safety and protection of the students, to maintain order, and to regulate and control both pedestrian and automobile traffic.
4. Spectators, sightseers, and loiterers will not be allowed to assemble, either on foot or in automobiles, in the vicinity of the school. Adults will not be allowed to park in the immediate neighborhood of the school.
5. Students, provided there are no adults in the car, will be allowed to park in the customary places except that no parking will be allowed on Charles Allen Drive between 8th and 10th Streets.
6. All students will be expected and required to report immediately to their old homerooms or to the cafeteria immediately upon their arrival at school. Positively no loitering or congregating of students will be permitted in cars, yards, corridors, toilets, or stairways.
7. Students will not be allowed to bring cameras or radios into the school building until further notice.
8. We are asking too that use of the telephones be limited to emergencies. We hope you will not call the school during this period except for illness or dire extremity.
9. Traffic regulations, particularly as apply to driver licenses, will be enforced.

10. The flow and pattern of automobile traffic in the vicinity of the school will remain unchanged except that no parking will be allowed on Charles Allen Drive between 8th and 10th Streets. This is the portion of the street directly in front of the building.

We believe you can render a great contribution to our school and to our students by your own example of patience and understanding. We believe you can help in creating and maintaining an attitude of good citizenship and respect for law.

Every effort will be made to protect your sons and daughters. We are optimistic in our belief that there will be no disorder caused by our students. This belief rests squarely on a faith in our excellent students as they reflect the fine training of the homes and parents of Henry Grady High School.

When the chips were down Henry Grady has always "come through".

I believe that Henry Grady High School will again come through in a way that will earn the praise of the whole city and the whole world!

Sincerely yours,

GREATER ATLANTA COUNCIL of CHURCHES

163 Walton Street, N. W.

JA 3-2796

August 23, 1961

NO. 3 RELEASE ONLY AFTER 10:00 P.M. August 26, 1961.

Newscasters are requested to hold release of this statement until 10:00 P.M., August 26, 1961. Repeated use of the Layman's Letter is recommended through August 29th. If only one reading of it can be made, it is recommended that once be on August 29, 1961.

Atlanta, August 27, 1961. Headquarters OASIS (Organization to Assist Schools in September). Religious Section, Laymans' Committee.

Over 800 key laymen of Protestant, Catholic, Jewish and Orthodox faiths representing 16 denominations and 81 congregations signed a statement called "A Layman's Letter to His Child" and printed it in full with signatures in Atlanta's Sunday papers. This is an effort to obtain peaceful compliance with the court order to desegregate Atlanta's Public Schools on August 30th. This statement is in the tradition of the statements and manifestos of Atlanta's clergymen during the past three years which have become world famous as models in racially intolerant communities.

Exhibit 25

A LAYMAN'S LETTER TO HIS CHILD

Soon you will be going back to school again. That day you will stand alone. You depend now upon me for guidance in your conduct as the schools are desegregated.

You depend now upon my years, my judgment, and whatever godliness I possess to guide you as I have cherished and instructed you from the cradle.

Therefore, as a layman who worships Almighty God, and who acknowledges our need for a peace and guidance greater than the world gives, I say to you:

This change is now come, and I counsel you to accept it with dignity, doing no act of defiance or ill manners, which can reflect on you, your faith, your rearing, or your community.

No matter where I may have stood in the debates of my generation, I now counsel you to cling to the Golden Rule and to meet the unfamiliar with calmness, dignity and peace;

To recognize that obedience to the rules of law, which bring order to our family society, is rooted in our spiritual faith, and must be respected and revered;

To hold fast to our teaching that hatred, lack of charity, and scorn for any human is unworthy of us;

And to accept this change prayerfully, praying with me that we be not fearful but sustained; not vengeful but understanding; not wilful but worthy; not faithless but assured of God's grace to help and guide us;

And that in this my judgment, governing your lifetime more than mine, I may be in the memory of you who are God's matchless gift to me, not small, but godly.

Dear Friends,

As you may know certain vicious hate materials seems to be getting fairly wide distribution in our community.

Some of this is being handed out on the street, some mailed to the home, and some is being addressed directly to high school students by name.

Some of this material offers to set up "private white schools" for all grades immediately, to help students to get state tuition grants, and urges students not to attend "when school opens on Sept. 1" -- though actually the opening day of school is Wednesday, August 29.

Because of all this, we feel that you will want to have the enclosed factual information so that you will know who the publishers of this material are. Of course you are free to make whatever use of this factual information you feel will be helpful in your particular situation.

We want to thank you again for your observance this week end of a "Day of Prayer for Law and Order" as well as using prayer during the following week and all the other things you have done to help prepare your people and our community generally for peaceful desegregation of our public schools.

Sincerely,

NOTICE:

The enclosed fact sheet was prepared by the Anti-Defamation League at the request of OASIS.

CONFIDENTIAL - NOT FOR PUBLICATION

THE THUNDERBOLT - the official organ of the National States Rights Party formerly published in Louisville, Kentucky; now published in Birmingham, Alabama, official headquarters of the National States Rights Party. This racist publication is violently anti-semitic and frequently has attacked the FBI and has made personal attacks on J. Edgar Hoover. The Thunderbolt has been widely distributed in Atlanta during the last several months.

NATIONAL STATES RIGHTS PARTY (NSRP) - this party was formed in August 1958 and its leadership includes many anti-semites of long standing, such as Dr. Edward R. Fields and J. B. Stoner.

DR. EDWARD R. FIELDS - although listed as information-director of the NSRP and editor of The Thunderbolt, he is in fact the principal figure of this organization. Fields has a long back-ground of anti-semitic activity despite the fact that he is only thirty years of age. Fields presently resides in Birmingham, Alabama but makes frequent trips to the Atlanta area.

J. B. STONER - is an attorney licensed to practice in the state of Georgia and of late has been defending Klansmen and others of their ilk who have been apprehended committing acts of violence. Stoner is the leader of the Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, P. O. Box 48, Atlanta. He formerly headed an organization known as the Christian Anti-Jewish Party. Stoner and Fields have a close working relationship and the former is sometimes listed as "Attorney for the NSRP".

THE WHITE AMERICAN - official organ of the National White Americans Party, P. O. Box 2013, Atlanta 1, Georgia. First issue, published August 1961, given widespread distribution in this city. It is similar in content and form to The Thunbolt. It is violently racist and anti-semitic and is edited by Robert A. Bowling.

ROBERT A. BOWLING - was one of those indicted for the bombing of The Temple in Atlanta in 1958. His indictment was later nole prosse. Robert Bowling and his brother, Richard, were formerly active in J. B. Stoner's Christian Anti-Jewish Party. The two Bowling brothers took part in a picketing demonstration staged by the Christian Anti-Jewish Party in front of The White House in 1954. Robert Bowling was one of the three men who distributed The White American and carried placards attacking Ralph McGill and the Atlanta newspapers in front of the Journal-Constitution Building on August 9, 1961.

PRIVATE WHITE SCHOOL ASSOCIATION - P. O. Box 6551, Station "G", Atlanta 15, Georgia. This organization is given prominent mention in the August 1961 issue of The Thunderbolt. The telephone number (MA 2 - 4850) listed by this Association is also the same number used by the NSRP in Atlanta.

EMORY BURKE - now resides in Montgomery, Alabama. Burke was a leader of the Columbians. He maintains close ties with old associates such as Fields. The Columbians were a storm trooper type organization active in Atlanta after the Second World War. Several of its leaders were imprisoned because of their activities.

JOSEPH BEAUHARNAIS - is the former head of the defunct White Circle League, which was located in Chicago. Beauharnais is a long time racist and anti-semitic activist and has been closely associated with Fields and other members of the NSRP. His last known residence is Macon, Georgia. Within the last few months, Beauharnis formed an organization known as The National Segregation Party. He has been observed in the Atlanta area within the last month or so.

PETER XAVIER - is a veteran anti-semitic writer, formerly living in Dayton, Ohio but now residing in Macon. Xavier has been arrested for cross-burnings in the Dayton area.

____ Atlanta laymen, of the three major faiths, of _____ denominations and of _____ different churches and synagogues, urge fellow parrishioners and citizens to accept school desegregation "with dignity" in a statement released today.

A letter from laymen to their children on the eve of school opening, the statement asks the school children of Atlanta "To recognize that obedience to the rules of law, which bring order to our family society, is rooted in our spiritual faith, and must be respected and revered."

In releasing the "laymen's letter" a spokesman for the group said that an effort was made to enlist representative laymen of all faiths and denominations, rather than a large number of signatures.

The letter is circulated only among the congregations of the white community.

"Our ministers, priests and rabbis have spoken out," said a committee spokesman. "So have our churchwomen. So have our Negro citizens. We felt it was time for us, the white laymen of the city, to make our views known."

Following is the text of the "Laymen's Letter" and the names of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant laymen whose signatures were received by today's release deadline.

Denominations represented are: Baptist, Catholic, Christian,

M O R E

Christian Science, Episcopal, Jewish, Lutheran, Methodist, Nazarene, Presbyterian, Quaker, Seventh Day Adventist, and Unitarian.

The names of the laymen subscribing to the principles of the letter are listed alphabetically, without church identification. These signing did so as individual laymen, not as officials or representatives of their churches and synagogues.

CITY HALL

ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES

The first obligation of the Atlanta schools is to provide educational opportunities for pupils enrolled. A further responsibility is to seek in every way possible to assure pupils' safety and welfare as they go about the business of obtaining the education which is their right. It is hoped that the first day of school will be as normal as possible. As a step in this direction the following policies are established with the belief that they will contribute substantially to our goal of serving the best interests of the students and of the public welfare:

1. School buildings, grounds and premises, and adjacent sidewalks at Brown, Murphy, Henry Grady, and Northside High Schools are off limits to all persons except students of the school and professional and maintenance personnel.
2. News representatives carrying special cards issued by the Chief of Police will be permitted to assemble across the street from school premises. No one will be permitted to congregate or assemble in the streets adjacent to these schools. Cars may stop to discharge passengers but will be required to move on.
3. News representatives are requested to respect the fact that students are under the legal responsibility of the school from the time they leave home until their return home at the conclusion of the school day. It is requested that students be contacted only at their homes. Students will not be permitted to talk with news representatives while at school.
4. It is requested that principals and teachers not be contacted during the school day. Official contacts will be made at the City Hall news room at intervals throughout the day.
5. The official opening hour of the schools is 8:30. Negro students transferring to the high schools have been requested to report to school a few minutes after the opening hour. The closing hour is 3:10 P.M. Transfer students will be permitted to leave a few minutes before the closing hour.
6. Complete and accurate news will be provided throughout the day from the news center at the City Hall.

The demonstrators made their toughest show of strength yesterday.

After a dozen women formed a human chain to block them and one woman grabbed Mr. Foreman's jacket, the 34-year-old minister said:

"We'll have to re-evaluate the situation. It's never been like this before."

Police had wedged a path for Mr. Foreman and his daughter. At noon, he drove to the rear of the school to escape the incensed crowd. There is no afternoon kindergarten session.

Pamela was one of four white children who attended Frantz yesterday along with one Negro first grader. At McDonogh No. 19, there were three Negro first graders and no white children. About 1,000 go to the two schools.

Cranks Kept Calling

Inside Mr. Foreman's modest one-story frame house, his young wife wept as she saw him return with yelling women demonstrators trailing him. She had received crank calls all morning.

They sat together in the small living room talking it over.

"Think of what the child has to go through," Mrs. Foreman said. "You know Pamela is an emotional child."

Her two younger children, not yet school age, played at her feet.

"I don't think it's disturbed Pamela," Mr. Foreman said after thinking for a few seconds. "She wants to go to school."

Mr. Foreman is pastor of two Methodist churches here.

"When Pamela started going," Mr. Foreman said. "I thought we could do this quietly. Now I don't know. I don't know what to think. Except that I'm convinced this segment is not representative of the City of New Orleans.

La. School Tension Increases

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 1.—(AP.)—Tension increased at New Orleans' two integrated schools today in the wake of a federal court ruling ordering agencies of the state of Louisiana to cease interfering with integration.

The three-judge panel also refused to stay or modify the ruling opening the previously all-white schools to Negroes on a graduated basis.

Demonstrations increased in intensity at one of the integrated schools yesterday after the judges handed down their ruling.

"It doesn't make a damn," a woman demonstrator shouted. "We are going to have segregated schools."

Two women were knocked down as police shoved back members of a jeering, hooting crowd who sought to follow a white mother taking her daughter home from the William Frantz School.

The school board has asked that integration, which started Nov. 14, be suspended pending the settlement of state-federal legal issues.

First, the hillbilly-singer Governor assumed personal control of the city's schools, ousting the local board of education. When a special three-judge Federal Court restored jurisdiction of the local board and declared state segregation laws unconstitutional, Davis appointed a legislative committee to carry out his mission. Before the commission was four days old, U.S. District Judge J. Skelly Wright countered the action with a temporary restraining order, doing away with the committee and barring enforcement of a new package of segregation laws passed by a special session of the Louisiana Legislature.

After Judge Wright's action, the New Orleans School Board approved the admission of five Negro first-grade girls to the city's all-white schools. The legislature, with forces of Governor Davis in complete control, then declared a school holiday to postpone the integration. Judge Wright issued a restraining order to keep the schools open, and last Monday four colored students entered white schools accompanied by U.S. marshals. Opposition from crowds outside the schools was only cool, but Tuesday crowds of teen-agers attempted to enter the grounds of McDonogh School. They were driven back by city mounted police and officers on

Order Confirmed

U. S. marshal Edward J. Pettibon confirmed this morning that deputies would be used also for the protection of white children.

In interviews, parents of white children attending Frantz disclosed threats against their lives, harassments, and economic pressures. Several residents of the Florida ave. housing project told The States-Item they have withdrawn their children from Frantz because of the threats.

At McDonogh No. 19 the white boycott was still complete. Since Nov. 14 the only students there have been three Negro children.

I was invited by the Orleans Parish School Board to serve as moderator on this program because I was one of the first business leaders of this city to speak out in favor of open public schools and to ask for calm and peace at a time when we are faced with one of the major problems of our lives. I readily accepted the invitation. On this evening immediately before schools open tomorrow, I sincerely feel our present position should be reviewed so that everyone may know and understand how and why our public schools have arrived at what is truly a "crossroads." Unless all citizens of this city exercise extreme caution and think and act realistically, we stand to lose one of the foundations on which the U. S. has built the greatest country in the world: the foundation of public education.

5. Overall shot of school board members

Certainly, no men in our community are better prepared to tell what has gone before -- and describe the danger to our public education system -- than four men of the Orleans Parish school board who have worked diligently and ceaselessly for our public school system.

To introduce them to you seems almost unnecessary. After the past seven years they have all become widely known to every New Orleanian. But according to the people here at WYES, it's good television practice to introduce the principals in our discussion tonight.

And they are, of course:

MR. SUTHERLAND: (Describe how constitution can be amended. End up by pointing out that until the constitution is amended, the Supreme Court rulings are the law of the land.)

16. Closeup Smither

MR. SMITHER: One of the men most familiar with all phases of the legal aspects of the school desegregation problem is M. Hepburn Many, U. S. District Attorney in New Orleans. Tonight, the school board has asked Mr. Many to summarize very briefly results of the seven years of litigation that has gone on since the Supreme Court decision.

Mr. Many, would you explain this for us?

17. Closeup Many

MR. MANY: (Summarize Federal Court ruling and how legislatures of various states have passed laws that sought fruitlessly to continue segregated schools. Conclude by pointing out that unless and until the constitution is amended, the Federal Court rulings are the law of the land and must be obeyed by law-abiding citizens.)

18. Closeup Smither

MR. SMITHER: Speaking of obeying the law, it is significant I think that over the past two weeks a growing number of business and civic leaders have emphasized -- in public statements -- the importance of maintaing law and order during this period in which New Orleans is on trial.

Here are excerpts from some of those statements:

MR. SMITHER (continued): From the Chamber of Commerce of the New Orleans Area:

19. Closeup newspaper advertisement

MR. SMITHER: From the Committee of Louisiana, composed of 300 leading citizens of this city:

20. Closeup Stoddard

MR. SMITHER: From the Central Trades council here is A. P. Stoddard.

MR. STODDARD: Reads part of the Central Trades council statement.

21. Closeup Smither

MR. SMITHER: Among the many other organizations that have emphasized the importance of maintenance of law and order are: the Young Men's Business Club; the New Orleans Federation of Churches the Archdiocese of New Orleans, and many . . . many more.

22. Medium shot Smither

MR. SMITHER (continued): Our elected public officials have also emphasized that law and order will be maintained during the approaching weeks at any cost. Mr. Shepard, your statement in the New Orleans States-Item recently emphasized the steps that were being taken to accomplish this. Would you summarize those briefly?

23. Closeup Shepard

MR. SHEPARD: Of most importance, I think, is the statement made by Mayor Schiro recently in Time Magazine in which he said: "I am putting all on notice that law and order will be maintained at any costs." (Point out that since the Chief of Police is responsible to the mayor, this is in a sense a directive to the Chief of Police to take whatever steps are necessary to maintain peace and calm. Also, describe meeting with Schiro and Giarrusso and outline plans for maintenance of law and order around desegregated schools during coming weeks.

24. Closeup Rittiner	MR. RITTINER:(Point out that this maintenance of assurance of law and order around desegregated schools is particularly important to those parents who want their children in those schools. Knows that last year many parents really wanted to send their children to school but were reluctant, fearing for child's safety. This year. no parent needs to have fear for his or her child, because of demonstrations.)
25. Closeup Smither	MR. SMITHER: Last year, one mother of nine children continued to send five of her children to Frantz school throughout the entire year. We have invited Mrs. Conner here tonight to tell you why she feels that public education is important enough to her and her family to continue sending her children to school.
26. Closeup Mrs. Conner	MRS. CONNER: (Tells story of why she felt she should send her children to school, fears that she had at first, but how she overcame those fears etc.
27. Medium shot Smither	MR. SMITHER: Mr. Riecke I believe the school board hopes that parents of children in the Frantz and McDonogh 19 areas will return their children to these schools this year.
28. Overall shot of school board members	MR. RIECKE: Positively, first for the welfare of the child. Secondly, because parents of children run the risk of losing those two neighborhood schools if the boycott continues. (Explain why this is so)

29. Closeup Smither — MR. SMITHER: Would the same situation apply to other schools scheduled for desegregation this year?

30. Closeup Riecke — MR. RIECKE: Positively. If parents elect to boycott those schools, then they are risking loss of those schools permanently, etc. (Emphasize most important that parents continue to send children to schools because of value of public education to our way of life.)

31. Closeup Rittiner — MR. RITTINER: (Points out that public schools of New Orleans have received national acclaim for high educational standards. Even with token desegregation, these standards will be maintained because basis for which Negro students can be placed in all white schools after applying for transfer is ability to learn, etc.)

32. Closeup Shepard — MR. SHEPARD:(Emphasize, however that if some parents want to send their children to private school that is their right. However, they should not interfer with the right of other parents who are willing for their children to continue in public schools.)

33. Closeup Sutherland — MR. SUTHERLAND:(Point out, however that if parent does elect to send child to private school he should be sure that the school is in existence and will do a good job of educating the child. Should meet high educational standards etc.)

34. Closeup Smither — MR. SMITHER: To summarize this discussion, then, gentlemen, I think these are the principal points that have been made here tonight:

MR. SMITHER (continued):

1. Desegregation of our public schools is presently the law of the land and must be obeyed;
2. There is a way to change this law and there are already amendments to the Constitution introduced in Congress that would accomplish this;
3. In the meantime, our public officials have emphasized that law and order will be maintained around our desegregated public schools;
4. The high educational standards of New Orleans public schools will be maintained even with token desegregation;
5. Total boycotts of schools could cause us to lose our public school system;
6. Parents who elect not to send their children to public schools should not interfere with others who elect to continue their children in the desegregated schools;
7. If a parent elects to send his child to private school, he should be sure that the school is capable and staffed to provide the child a sound education.

And gentlemen with that, I am sure the parents of all school children in New Orleans join me in expressing our thanks to you -- not only for presenting this show tonight, but for all you gentlemen have done for the people of this city over the past years as members of the school board.

Good citizens fight in the courts

. . . not the streets!

Last week, citizens of Atlanta proved themselves upstanding, law-abiding citizens in meeting the problem of school desegregation.

In preparing for this crisis, the leadership of Atlanta pleaded with the people: "Let's not be another Little Rock . . . or New Orleans."

Violence and demonstrations here last year were stimulated by a few rabble rousers ... only the irresponsible participated. Certainly, their actions did not represent the majority who believed in law and order.

Nevertheless, we became an example of how not to meet this problem.

Now, we have an opportunity to redeem ourselves.

Today, schools will open. According to the law, more limited desegregation must follow.

The problem facing the individual citizen and the city has now been removed from the area of personal feeling for or against desegregation ... and now becomes a matter of law and order.

Each citizen has the privilege of living his life according to his own views, as long as he acts within the law. The good citizen -- if he disapproves the law -- seeks to change it by orderly and legal means. Only the rabble resort to useless violence that will never change the law.

Violence destroys a community. It disrupts business ... it limits our community's growth ... it undermines the the health and moral strength of all citizens.

Upon each citizen rests the responsibility for our community's future. Upon each citizen rests the responsibility of maintaining law and order. Upon each citizen rests the responsibility for the growth and development of our city's children.

Atlanta citizens proved themselves willing to accept this responsibility. Let's prove New Orleans citizens are willing, too !

CIVIC LEADERS HAVE STEPPED FORWARD!

Schools in New Orleans will undergo further desegregation soon, in compliance with Federal Court directives.

Last year, demonstrations by a small, irresponsible number of people occurred under similar conditions. Magnified far beyond its proportions, this violence succeeded only in creating a world-wide, unfavorable impression of our city. It failed totally to change the action of Federal Courts.

In recent weeks, growing numbers of civic leaders have stepped forward with pleas and demands that law and order be maintained.

Among the many groups and organizations taking such stands are:

American Association of University Women

The Catholic Church

Central Labor Council, AFL/CIO

The Chamber of Commerce

The Committee for Louisiana

The Committee on Public Schools

The Federation of Churches

Independent Women's Organization

Junior Chamber of Commerce

Save Our Schools, Inc.

Young Christian Workers

Young Men's Business Club

These pleas for law and order doubtlessly came after serious consideration and contemplation of the havoc that will be wrought in our community if violence is again permitted to mark our city.

In not one instance was a request made that any individual change his personal views on the matter of desegregation of our schools.

In not one instance was any individual asked to sacrifice his personal right to select his own friends or rear his children according to his own standards.

Every citizen was, however, asked to obey the law and help preserve the peace of our community.

This is in your own best interest, the best interests of your children, the best interests of New Orleans.

"I AM PUTTING ALL ON NOTICE THAT LAW AND ORDER WILL BE MAINTAINED AT ANY COST!"

--Victor H. Schiro, Mayor,
City of New Orleans
As quoted in Time Magazine,
Page 40, August 25, 1961

In this statement, our mayor was referring to the approach of school opening this Fall.

Our mayor has since reaffirmed this statement.

Our police chief has announced positive plans to maintain law and order and prevent the despicable demonstrations that interfered with public education last year.

Our laws are plain!

Louisiana Statute, R. S. 14:103, pertaining to disturbing the peace says:

"A. Disturbing the peace is the doing of any of the following in such manner as would foreseeably disturb or alarm the public:

"(1) engaging in a fistic encounter or

"(2) using of any unnecessarily loud, offensive, or insulting language; or

"(3) appearing in an intoxicated condition; or

"(4) engaging in any act in a violent and tumultuous manner by any three or more persons, or

"(5) holding of an unlawful assembly; or

"(6) interruption of any lawful assembly; or

"(7) commission of any other act in such a manner as to unreasonably disturb or alarm the public.

"Whoever commits the crime of disturbing the peace shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars ($100) or imprisoned for not more than ninety days, or both."

City ordinances are equally pointed, penalty for defiance more severe.

It was under these laws that two separate groups of outside agitators were recently jailed and fined in our city.

It is under these same laws that those who would disrupt the peace and harmony of our community . . . those who interfere with parents who send their children peaceably to school . . . those who bring shame and unfavorable publicity to our city . . . can and will, according to our public officials, be prosecuted.

SCHOOL CRISIS 1961

WHY DO WE HAVE A CRISIS?

LAWS IN CONFLICT

United States Constitution

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; . . .nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

U. S. Constitution, 14th Amendment

"We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs and others similarly situated ... are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment."

United States Supreme Court, May 17, 1954
Brown vs. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas

"This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all Treaties shall be the Supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

U. S. Constitution, Art. 6, Sec. 2, Par 1

Georgia Constitution

"All citizens of the United States, resident in this State are hereby declared citizens of the State, and it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to enact such laws as will protect them in the full enjoyment of the rights, privileges and immunities to such citizenship."

Georgia Constitution, Art. 1, Sec. 1, Par. 25

"The provision of an adequate education for the citizens shall be a primary obligation of the State of Georgia, the expense of which shall be provided for by taxation. Separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races."

Georgia Constitution 1945, Art. 8, Sec. 1, Par. 1

"Legislative acts in violation of this Constitution, of the Constitution of the United States, are void, and the Judiciary shall so declare them."

Georgia Constitution, Art. 1, Sec. 4, Par. 2

THEREFORE:

The Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, is the law of the land and state laws that are in conflict are unenforceable. Any public school system must now recognize that the state cannot by law enforce racial segregation in the schools.

The Sibley Report p. 6

WHY IS THERE A THREAT NOW?

The Federal Court for the Northern District of Georgia in 1959 declared that segregation as practiced in the Atlanta School System was illegal and must cease. It ruled that the Atlanta School Board must submit a plan for desegregation.

The Court accepted and approved the plan on January 18, 1960. Applications for tranfer of negro pupils will be received between May 1 and May 15, 1961 for the 11th and 12th grades. Thereafter one grade a year shall be open for desegregation.

The Atlanta School Board plan has 18 standards for assignment. These include geography, curriculum, academic record, aptitude, psychological qualifications, morals,conduct, health, and the effect of new pupils on academic standards, other pupils and teachers. It also provides for tests, interviews, investigation and hearings.

"It is further ordered, however, that the motion for further relief be granted to the effect that said plan shall be effective as of May 1, 1961, looking toward the operation of the school system for the session beginning in September 1961."

Order of the Court, Judge Frank Hooper May 9, 1960
United States Federal District Court, Northern District of Georgia.

"This Board has the inherent power of pupil placement. To insure orderly procedures of uniform application for pupil assignment, tranfer, and/or placement, and to enable the continuing improvement of the educational advantages offered the following rules and procedures shall be followed ... Student assignment in the Atlanta Public School System shall be made in accordance with aforesaid rules and regulations and without regard to race or color."

Atlanta Board of Education Plan for Desegregation approved by the Court January 18, 1960

THEREFORE:

Atlanta must start its desegregation plan in May 1961

WHY IS THIS A LAST CHANCE LEGISLATURE?

"... The last chance that I think this court can give ..."

To postpone the order to desegregate until May 1, 1961 will give the Georgia Legislature just one chance to prevent the closing of Atlanta Public Schools.

Statement by Judge Hooper May 9, 1960

WHY IS THIS A THREAT TO ATLANTA SCHOOLS?

The Governor "shall" close schools in a district if they are not segregated.

The Governor has the sole authority to ascertain if schools are not entitled to state funds (only segregated are entitled to funds). If not he "shall" by executive order provide for the closing of such schools.

Georgia Laws 1956, p. 6

The Governor as "conservator of the Peace" may close any school in any district of the state (including any school, branch or department of the University System) in order to preserve the "good order, peace, and dignity of the State".

Georgia Laws 1959 p. 15

Funds are cut off:

Georgia Law forbids funds to maintain or pay officials, teachers or employees for any but a segregated school.

Georgia Laws 1955 p. 174

Georgia Law makes it a felony (punishable by not more than or less than 2 years in the penitentiary) for any offical of the state, county or city to give money to integrated schools.

Georgia Laws 1955 p. 174

THEREFORE:

To integrate Atlanta Schools without action by the Legislature "could mean but one thing: that is the closing of Atlanta Schools."

Statement by Judge Frank Hooper May 9, 1960

WHY IS THIS A THREAT TO ALL GEORGIA SCHOOLS?

Because If a State provides for one it must provide for all.

It is an unconstitutional discrimination against taxpayers who pay taxes and yet do not have public schools. The Court ruled no one public school or grade in Virginia may be closed while the State permits other public schools or grades to remain open at the expense of the taxpayers.

James vs. Almond, U. S. District Court, Eastern District, Virginia, Norfolk Division, January 19, 1959

"It must be assumed that a similar suit would be filed by Atlanta parents, and that a similar ruling would follow ... Under such a holding the state would be faced with the necessity for deciding whether to close all the schools of the state,... or to accept integration of Atlanta Schools."

The Sibley Report p. 6

THEREFORE:

The closing of Atlanta Schools would, under application of the principles of law in the Virginia case, result in the closing of all public schools in Georgia.

Opinion filed by Judge Hooper Sept. 8, 1960

IS THERE AN ANSWER?

YES

On April 28, 1960 the General Assembly Committe on Schools (The Sibley Committee) presented its analysis of the situation and recommendations to the Legislature.

THE MAJORITY REPORTED THAT:

Those who insist upon total segregation, but who back away from closing the schools, are not only deceiving themselves and the people, but are creating a very difficult and harmful situation. p. 15

If the schools are closed it should be with the expectation that it will be permanent, not for a short time. To close the schools temporarily is a useless gesture and can cause nothing but confusion, great economic loss, and utter chaos in the school system. p. 14

The basic alternatives to closing the schools are: 1. give local authorities control of placing students, 2. give as much "freedom of choice" as possible to parents and local communities, 3. give "assurance that no child will be required to go to school with a child of a different race except on a voluntary basis." p. 12

Pupil Placement is that plan by which local school boards can place a pupil in a school according to place of residence, level of intelligence, educational attainments, home environment, physical condition, student's fitness and ability to do successful work in a particular school, and relationship to the students in school, but without reference to race or color. p. 12

To put these alternatives into effect would mean some changes in the Georgia Constitution, which would have to be voted on in a general election. p. 15

THEREFORE:

THE MAJORITY RECOMMENDS THAT:

1. A Constitutional Amendment be proposed to the effect that no child shall be forced into a school with a child of the opposite race, and that the child whose parents object to an integrated school be entitled to reassignment, tuition grants or scholarship aid. p. 17

2. A Constitutional Amendment be proposed to provide for a uniform system of local units for the administration of the schools, and to allow any such unit to close schools within the unit or to reopen the school in accordance with the wishes of the majority of voters. p. 17

3. The General Assembly pass laws for tuition grants or scholarships for students who wish to withdraw from an integrated school or whose school has been closed. p. 17

4. The General Assembly pass laws to have teacher retirement cover private school teachers as well as public school teachers. p. 18

5. The General Assembly decide whether to close the schools or to give as much freedom of choice as possible through 1. pupil placement, 2. empowering the people of each community to vote whether to close their schools in the event of integration or to continue the operation of their schools, and 3. enabling each parent to be able to ask for reassignment or withdrawal with tuition grants or scholarship aid for private education. p. 18

THE MINORITY RECOMMENDS THAT:

1. Constitutional Amendment be proposed to guarantee that no child be forced to go to an integrated school.

2. The General Assembly provide for tuition grants by state, county and municipal funds.

3. Schools should be kept segregated as long as possible then resort to tuition grants.

4. The Governor and the General Assembly should take such action and enact such laws as may be required from time to time.

Minority Report p. 6 & 7

WHAT ALTERNATIVES ARE THERE?

WAIT AND SEE

Atlanta must desegregate by September 1961 and, if the laws are not changed, Atlanta schools will be closed and the rest of the schools in Georgia threatened.

Opinion by Judge Hooper, filed Sept. 8, 1960

Why wait for a called special session of the Legislature that cost $30,000 - $35,000 a day?
Will this help the peaceful solution?
Did it help the peace or the solution in Louisiana?
Why continue the confusion that hurts the schools and the economy of Georgia?

If the State stands upon present laws yet thinks it can avoid closing all the schools, the result will be integration in its worst form; coercive integration by court order with no local safeguards for the people.

The Sibley Report p. 15

CLOSED PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The conclusion is inescapable that, to maintain total segregation everywhere in the state, the state will have to withdraw from the operation of public schools. The Sibley Report p. 10

What happens to 1,000,000 public school students in Georgia?
What happens to 2,752 public schools?
What happens to 50,000 public school teachers and employees?
What happens to $200,000,000.00 dollars owed on school bonds?
What happens to $365,000,000.00 invested in school buildings?
What happens to the economy and growth of our State?
What happens when a $300,000,000.00 a year business is shut down?
Figures from the League of Women Voters

On August 27, 1960 a three judge Federal Court in New Orleans, Bush vs. Orleans Parish School Board et al, declared invalid Louisiana law which gave the Governor the power to close any school in the state ordered to integrate. footnote to Opinion by Judge Hooper filed Sept. 8, 1960.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS

It would be impractical to develop a system of private schools that would provide adequately for the educational needs of the whole state.

The Sibley Report p. 11

Public Schools cost $241.00 per pupil per year.
The State pays 72% of the school costs.
Cities and counties pay 23% of the costs.
Georgia private schools cost on an average of $585.00 a year per pupil.
Figures from League of Women Voters.

A great many Georgians cannot afford the luxury of a private school.

Statement by Judge Hooper May 9, 1960

WHAT IS YOUR ANSWER?

A responsibility of citizenship is that we make known our opinions to our elected officals.

INTERSTATE BUILDING — CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE

DeSales Harrison
Chairman of the Board

August 6, 1962

TO ALL EMPLOYERS OF CHATTANOOGA AND HAMILTON COUNTY:

Gentlemen:

On Friday, August 31st, pupils in City and County schools will register for the coming year, and the schools will open on Tuesday, September 4th. For many months the School Boards and the City and County Governments have been working to assure compliance with the orders of Federal Courts concerning desegregation. If the schools open in an atmosphere of respect for the law, Chattanooga is ahead; if disorder of any kind should occur we will all suffer for years to come. The experience of other cities proves it.

We are writing today as fellow businessmen who seek your help. Each of you has great influence with his own employees. We ask you to use that influence on the side of law and order. There are certain things you can do to make the openings of the schools completely peaceful. The first is let your own people know that you support the City and County Governments, and the School Boards. The courts have made their decision, and it is now up to the School Boards to comply. They are determined to do it, and are fully supported by the City and County.

The second thing we ask you to do is to use the payroll inserts which are being provided by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Ten copies are enclosed with this letter. All firms having more than ten employees will receive a supply of the inserts either by mail or messenger. If your company does not receive the forms by August 14th, please call Les Werner, AM 6-7504. If you cannot use the envelope inserts by the 17th, it would still be helpful to give them out as late as Friday, August 24th. This payroll insert carries a simple message, that peace and prosperity go together. We cannot have one without the other.

DALLAS AT THE CROSSROADS

Dallas' Opportunity

Now that the courts have rendered their decision for desegregation in Dallas schools, the problem facing the individual citizen and the city is removed from the area of personal feeling for or against desegregation and becomes a matter of law and order.

Every citizen has the privilege to live his life according to his own views so long as he acts within the law. The good citizen does not resort to violence because he disapproves of or dislikes the law — he brings change about by orderly and legal means. A person who creates civil disorder is a lawbreaker, and a bad citizen who deserves the condemnation of his neighbors.

Violence is a problem that affects the whole community and not merely a few isolated segments of the school or business public. Violence destroys a community. It not only disrupts business and education, but undermines the health and moral fiber of all citizens. Extremist elements and self-seeking individuals come into control, and the city's children are forced to bear alone a burden which rightfully is an adult responsibility. It should be remembered that force has accomplished great things for man throughout history, but it has seldom won admiration.

The continued growth of our city, the prosperity and health of each individual, and the religious life of the community depend upon each citizen's wholehearted acceptance of his personal responsibility. Dallas is known throughout the country for outstanding accomplishment and spirit. Sheer pride in our city should inspire us to work together to preserve a prosperous, healthy, and peaceful community.

Violence and the Child's Burden

The price which must be paid by the city which attempts the solution of community problems by violent means is almost beyond reckoning. This price can be expressed in economic terms, through individual business declines, poorer job opportunities, and loss of new or expanded industry for the city; in medical terms, through individual suffering and adverse effects on the health of citizens; in terms of loss of self-respect for both the city and individual citizen.

One of the most serious consequences of violence is its effect upon the children of the community. Where parental guidance and civic leadership fail, and violence flares, the burden of desegregation falls upon the city's children. They are forced to make adjustments which, without help, often prove beyond their capacities. Lasting emotional injury is the direct result.

The Family's Responsibility

There is a great difference between public desegregation and personal freedom of association.

In private areas, not related to the law, it is the right and responsibility of each individual family to establish its own values and personal standards. The wise parent prepares his child to accept and adjust to the changed school situation and at the same time establishes for his child values for private relationships.

Dallas leaders are not attempting to prescribe a personal standard for any individual. This should be resolved by each family as a family matter.

However, we do ask each family to abide by the law and maintain a peaceful community. A climate of civil peace and order is essential if the family is to be able fully and freely to establish its own standards of personal association.

Setting an Example of Good Citizenship

A civic leader, through his acts, words and social behavior, sets an example. The general public has a right to expect this example from its leaders, and will be inclined to follow it.

For the success of this program, the good citizen must be identifiable both through spoken word and positive action in support of the position established by the Dallas Leadership. Each active example of good citizenship gives the general public a concrete behavior pattern to follow, and supports the individual citizen in his own effort to adjust to the new situation.

In a word, every person in a position of community leadership must stand up and be counted for law and order. The only way to be known as an outstanding citizen is to behave in an outstanding manner. By clear comparison, the individual who misbehaves will then be recognized by all as a poor citizen.

The American Way

Respect for and acceptance of the law is a vital part of the American tradition. It is also a part of the American tradition that every citizen may hold whatever opinions he chooses on the questions of his time.

In the present situation, brought to a head by the court's decision, you as a Dallasite are not asked to change your opinion, be it "pro" or "con." You are asked to respect the law, and help make the American Way work in Dallas.

"Every citizen must accept his personal responsibility to conduct himself sensibly and decently, to refrain from acts of violence, from taking the law into his own hands. This is how democracy works."

Sheriff Bill Decker

"We must create an atmosphere of calm, and prove, constantly, that we have everything to gain by not losing our heads."

Dick West — The Dallas Morning News

"We have only one basic, elementary fact to face in preparing for desegregation in our public schools. It is simple, it is just, it is realistic . . . it is mandatory. Our people must maintain unqualified respect for law and order."

Felix McKnight — The Dallas Times Herald

"Whatever the answer to this problem may be, it will not be found through violence. You and I have the power to control the threat of violence through our thoughts, our acts, and the example of good citizenship which we set for our children and our neighbors. Individually, we have our responsibility. Working together, we will not fail."

Greater Dallas Council of Churches

"As your mayor, and speaking for the City Council, we pledge our assistance in this program and earnestly hope to have yours. Together we can all make the American Way work in Dallas."

Mayor Earle Cabell

"Your children and mine are our most precious possession. Our children need security, the sense of safety and love. As parents we give them these things. As citizens we will keep Dallas peaceful and our children's world secure."

Dallas County Medical Society

"The continued growth of our city, the prosperity and health of each individual, and the religious life of the community depend upon each citizen's wholehearted acceptance of his personal responsibility."

R. L. Thornton, Sr.

"One of the great things about our country and our city of Dallas is that our arguments are settled in the courts, not in the streets. With this spirit, we will continue to have a progressive city of which we can all be proud."

Dallas Bar Association

"We highly value active good citizenship. The most important thing any of us can be is a good citizen."

Dallas AFL-CIO Council

"No law enforcement agency is big enough to police every individual citizen in a community. No law enforcement agency can do its job without the wholehearted support of the people. Every citizen must police himself."

Chief Jesse Curry

Produced in consultation with the Greater Dallas Council of Churches, the Dallas Bar Association and the Dallas County Medical Society.

CLOSE OUR SCHOOLS?

SHALL WE CLOSE OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

We Americans are justly proud of our way of life, our traditions of freedom, of individual enterprise, and of material well-being. We are also justly proud of our progress, which has brought us from colonial obscurity to a position of world leadership in less than two hundred years. We have been a nation and people of vast energy, high ambition, and great achievement.

One of the foundations on which this achievement has been built, and which now supports it, is our system of free, universal, public education—the largest and in many ways the best educational system in the world. We are engaged in a great national effort to strengthen and improve this educational system still further, so that we will have enough trained leaders in science, engineering, government, business, and the professions to keep our nation healthy and strong. Our continued well-being, even our survival as a nation, may largely depend on the success of this effort.

Much the same picture is seen from our own point of view here in New Orleans. Cities and towns and states thrive or decline according to their ability to compete with other cities and towns and states. One of the most important resources of any locality is its trained manpower, the development of which is the main responsibility of its public schools.

Can we afford to close our public schools?
What will happen if we do?

WHAT WILL HAPPEN IF WE CLOSE OUR SCHOOLS?

No one can predict with absolute certainty what the result will be if we close our public schools. But one thing does seem certain. A city the size of New Orleans is extremely complex. Any basic change in the way it is run, such as a shift from public to private schools, will bring some very complicated problems. It will not be possible to solve those problems simply or easily. Extremists, who assure us that we can do such a thing without enormous difficulty and sacrifice, are taking a very naive position.

Fortunately we are not entirely without information on what can happen to a community which closes its public schools. We have the examples of two cities, Norfolk, Virginia, and Little Rock, Arkansas, where public schools were closed. The experience of these cities is not exactly parallel to what ours would be—for one thing, New Orleans is much bigger—but it can give us an indication of what to expect.

Public school closing in both these cities failed. In Little Rock it lasted for a year, in Norfolk for only one semester. In both cities, when the people saw what actually happened when schools were closed, they banded together and demanded that they be opened again. Norfolk and Little Rock are sadder and wiser than they were before they closed their schools. Perhaps, if we are willing to profit by their experience, we can be wiser without being sadder.

Why did Norfolk and Little Rock change their minds about school closing?

WHAT DO WE STAND TO LOSE?

Obviously, those most likely to be hurt by school closing are the children attending public schools. In October, 1959, there were 91,115 in New Orleans. What happens to them if the schools close?

In Norfolk, three junior high schools and three senior high schools closed in September, 1958, shutting out 9,950 pupils. Various efforts were made to provide private schooling: evening classes in a South Norfolk high school took 948 pupils; a private school took 270; an estimated 4,400 attended "tutoring classes"; another estimated 1,620 moved elsewhere for schooling. Some 2,700 received no schooling at all. In January, 1959, full-page advertisements were taken in the two Norfolk papers by 100 leading business men calling for reopened schools, and the six public schools were reopened.

Little Rock had a similar experience. In the fall of 1958, 3,500 pupils were shut out of four high schools. There too, the attempt to provide private education was unsuccessful. The quality of education offered was greatly inferior to that of the public schools. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were raised and spent, but only about half the pupils were taken care of, and at the end of the year the private schools were bankrupt. In February, 1959, members of the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce voted 819 to 245 in favor of opening the public schools again, and this was done the following fall.

During the periods when schools were closed, thousands of children received inferior education, or none at all. Losses in time and effort were tremendous. Little or nothing was gained.

Can we afford to do the same?

WHAT HAPPENS TO THE SCHOOLS?

New Orleans has an enormous investment in its public schools. Buildings alone are valued by insurance firms at $75,170,090.00, and their contents at $7,436,200.00, not counting real estate value. Bonded debt, as of December, 1959, was $43,870,000.00. What will happen to this investment if the schools are closed?

The operating budget for the past year was nearly $29,000,000.00. About $15,000,000.00 of this came from state funds, and some of this in turn came from federal funds. Courts have held consistently that when schools are ordered to be desegregated, money from taxes cannot be used to run segregated private schools. Therefore, if we convert from public to private education, we should assume that state and federal funds will be cut off, and local funds would have to be raised by some method other than taxes.

Private schools cost more than public schools. In New Orleans, the public schools spend less than $300.00 per year per pupil, whereas private schools, here and elsewhere, average well over $450.00. The operating cost of an adequate private school system might be expected to run at least $45,000,000.00 a year, not counting anything for the initial cost of buldings, equipment, or real estate.

It is hard to see how an adquate private school system could be started without costing between fifty and a hundred million dollars during the first year of operation.

Who would provide the money?

WHAT HAPPENS TO BUSINESS?

Both in Norfolk and in Little Rock, business men were among the leaders in calling for the reopening of public schools. Figures gathered by the Little Rock Industrial Development Company show the reason: school closing in Little Rock was bad for business.

The Little Rock Industrial Development Company estimates that in 1956 the city gained 2 new plants, with a value of $325,000.00, and 8 expansions, with a value of $1,350,000.00, for a total of $1,675,000.00. In 1957, the estimated figures were 8 new plants, with a value of $3,092,000.00, and 3 expansions, with a value of $913,985.00, for a total of $4,005,985.00. In 1958 there were no new plants, and only one expansion, with a value of $325,000.00. In 1959, again there were no new plants and only one expansion, with a value of $268,000.00. On the basis of these figures, it would appear that Little Rock lost more than $6,000,000.00 in industrial expansion during these two years.

The nearest comparable figures we have found for New Orleans show that from 1951 to 1956, industrial expansion in the metropolitan area averaged about $81,000,000.00 a year. Our situation is not exactly parallel to that of Little Rock. But if school closing had the same effect here, we could expect that it would cost us $70,000,000.00, or more, in this item alone for every year during which our schools were closed.

Can we afford such a loss?

WHY DOES SCHOOL CLOSING HURT BUSINESS?

The following quotations from business leaders in the South will indicate why business men worry about school closing.

Dr. Louis Rader, manager of General Electric plant near Waynesboro, Virginia ($5,000,000.00 annual payroll):

> "A strong system of public education is very important among those factors that attract new industry into a state and that keep industry already here from moving away."
> Address at Thomas Jefferson High School, Richmond, Virginia, March 15, 1959.

W. R. Bowdoin, senior vice president, Trust Company of Georgia:

> "I have heard any number of representatives from national manufacturing firms now located in Georgia express grave concern on the question of retaining and obtaining highly skilled and technical personnel necessary for the continued operation of industries that provide employment for thousands of our people, unless educational facilities are available for their children."
> Atlanta Journal, Jan. 20, 1960.

Preston T. Holmes, vice president, State-Planters Bank of Commerce and Trusts, Richmond, Virginia:

> "The manner in which this problem is handled will have a tremendous effect on the ability of the South to attract new industry and to encourage existing industries to expand their present facilities. For instance, North Carolina, with legal compliance with the Supreme Court decision and little social unrest, had new plant investment in 1958 totaling $253 million, while Arkansas, with its massive resistance and unsettled conditions, had only $25.4 million in 1958 compared with $44.9 million in 1957 and $131 million in 1956."
> University of Virginia News Letter, Oct. 15, 1959.

HOW DOES SCHOOL CLOSING HURT BUSINESS?

One of the most interesting statistics from the Little Rock experience is a table which shows the number of families moving into the metropolitan area, as compared with the number moving out.

	1957	1958	1959*
Families moving in	3342	2952	2376
Families moving out	1280	1623	2507

*Based on first six months.

If such a trend as that continued very long, Little Rock—or New Orleans—would eventually become a ghost town.

Other statistics, gathered from various sources by the Little Rock Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools, indicate that school closing was accompanied by a slowing-down of percentage gain in personal income, slowing of percentage gain in effective buying income per family, of average workers' income gain, and of gain in retail sales. The city gained less in each of these fiscal areas than it had in other years, less than the state of Arkansas as a whole, and less than the average for the nation. The figures for retail sales seem especially significant: from 1956 to 1958, retail sales increased 4% in Arkansas; but in Little Rock they did not increase at all. A leading real estate dealer estimated that home sales were off between 20 and 25%, and vacancies increased. A surgeon said, "I would estimate that Little Rock surgeons are feeling a drop in their practice of 20%-40%. Since a great deal of surgery is elective (as much as 90% of surgery can be postponed), people are in a mood nowadays to put off having an operation."

The general picture is one of economic stagnation.

Is that what we want in New Orleans?

HOW DOES SCHOOL CLOSING AFFECT THE INDIVIDUAL FAMILY?

Statistics from Little Rock and Norfolk indicate that families faced with school closing tend to move out of town if they can, or send their children elsewhere during the crisis period. But for many families, these solutions are not practical. What happens to them?

Such families have, in practice, two alternatives. Either they find some way of privately educating their children, or their children get no education. For many, the first alternative will be impossible. For the rest, it will be expensive. A Little Rock public accountant remarked, during the school-closing crisis there: "In September and October, normally very good collection months, collections were off about 50%. Sales were off about 20-25%. People seemed to be holding on to their cash to see whether they might have to pay tuition for their children to go to school or what would happen. They didn't seem to quit buying—except in cash businesses—to as great an extent as they just slowed down in paying bills."

This is a perfectly natural reaction of people faced with a situation of doubt and uncertainty concerning the welfare and the future of their children. We know of a number of people in New Orleans right now who are putting off major purchases until they see whether public schools are going to close, and if so what it will cost them to send their children to private schools. Which is more important, a new refrigerator, washing machine, or car—or a year's education for two or three children?

What would you do?

WHAT ARE THE LEGAL ASPECTS OF SCHOOL CLOSING?

Many people are confused about what the law requires with regard to closing public schools, and how it might apply to such a move in New Orleans. This is another matter which is difficult to predict. Court cases are decided on their individual merits, and according to their particular circumstances. However, certain general principles and certain strong probabilities can be stated.

What are some of the important questions, and what are the most probable answers to them?

1 Is public school closing legal?

Yes, provided all the schools in a school jurisdiction are closed. This means that in Louisiana, which has a state system of public education, all the schools in the state would have to be closed. It would not be legal for the governor to close schools in New Orleans and not in other parts of the state, or to close one grade in a school and not others. It was on this ground that the "massive resistance" laws of Virginia were declared unconstitutional.

2 Would "local option" be legal?

It might be, if the state did not require schools to be segregated in any locality, and if as much independent authority as possible were given local school boards. This might mean, for example, that schools could be closed in New Orleans and left open in other parts of the state if all state laws on segregation in the public schools were repealed. Each locality could then decide for itself whether its schools would be open or closed. However, there would still be the possibility of a taxpayers' suit against financial discrimination. This has not been tested in the courts.

3 Is "interposition" legal?

No. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land. It is interpreted by the federal courts, and enforced by the executive branch of the federal government. No one, acting either as an individual or as an official of a state or local government, has a legal right to block, set aside or ignore a federal court order. The governor of a state cannot, therefore, "interpose" himself or his office between the Constitution, or a federal court order based on constitutional law, and the people of his state. If he tries to do so, as Governor Faubus in effect did in Arkansas, it is the sworn duty of the President to enforce the law, using whatever powers he may deem necessary.

4 Is "pupil placement" legal?

Yes, provided it is based on the educational qualifications of pupils and not on race or color.

5 Can money raised by taxes be used to support private schools?

In general, no. That is, if the public schools are closed to avoid segregation and private schools are set up to take their place, and if the private schools are segregated, they must be genuinely private. If they are supported by public taxation, or if they are required by state or local law to be segregated, then they are not really private schools; they are public schools which are merely pretending to be private. In such a case the federal courts will probably treat them as public schools.

Another problem in this connection is that public school buildings, equipment, and teachers cannot be used in the operation of private segregated schools if the public schools have been closed to avoid desegregation. The public schools in Norfolk and Little Rock remained in being, although they were closed; teachers reported for work as usual and were paid as usual, although they did no teaching; the expenses of public education continued, in large part, even though taxpayers were not receiving the benefits.

This probably extends to the question of selling or renting public schools to private organizations at nominal rates. If public schools were sold to private educational organizations in order to avoid desegregation, the courts would be likely to say that they must be sold at a fair price, and for cash. If they were sold on credit, or mortgaged to the school board, the sale would probably be interpreted as a way of subsidizing private schools with public property, which would not be legal. This might also extend to tuition grants to individual pupils, if the grants were a major source of income for private schools.

In general, the principle is this: private segregated schools may be legal in a community where the public schools have been closed to avoid segregation (though there is some question even about this); but if so they must be genuinely and completely private, with no major or direct support from money raised by taxes, and no requirement by state or local law concerning segregation on a basis of race or color.

CONCLUSION

What this all boils down to is that there is no easy, simple, cheap, legal way to educate our children if the public schools are closed. Anyone who says there is either does not know what he is talking about, or is deliberately trying to mislead us. The choice with which we are faced is that of keeping the public schools open—or of really closing them. If we really close them, our experience is almost certain to be the same as that of Little Rock and Norfolk.

Let us summarize that experience again. The public schools were closed, but public school teachers continued to report for work and to receive their salaries. Public school facilities were not used for private schooling. Private schools were set up, but they were unable to take care of all the pupils, they were greatly inferior to the public schools, they were expensive, and they were soon abandoned. Business suffered heavy losses, especially in terms of industrial expansion, but also in terms of retail sales and collections, property sales and rentals, and individual wages and salaries. Families suffered losses from dislocation and uncertainty, the high cost of tuition for private education, and lost time for children who got inferior or no education during school closing. The public schools were reopened.

Nothing was gained by school closing in Norfolk or Little Rock except a short delay. A great deal was lost. We stand to lose much more in New Orleans, because we have much more to lose.

Are we going to take this loss, or are we going to keep our schools open?

JOIN AND SUPPORT ABLE

What is ABLE?

ABLE began with the concern of several Mobile mothers about how court-ordered desegregation might affect their children. They discussed this concern with each other, planned a meeting with their friends and from this ABLE was born.

ABLE is for Mobilians only and is independent of any other local, regional or national group.

WHO ARE ABLE LEADERS?

All four ABLE officers are mothers of children in the Mobile public schools. They have a total of 14 children, and have proven their concern for Mobile by civic and church work. They are: Mrs. Hollis Wiseman, president; Mrs. Robert Midgett, vice president; Mrs. James Wood, secretary; and Mrs. Chatten Haynes, treasurer.

WHAT IS ABLE'S GOAL?

ABLE wants to keep Mobile schools open and free from tension so that Mobile school children can concentrate on their goal—acquiring an education.

WHAT DOES ABLE DO?

ABLE faces facts. Mobile schools must desegregate this September. All legal delays have been exhausted. No matter how we feel about this, it is now a matter of law and order.

ABLE supports the public officials who work to continue free public education and to preserve the peace.

ABLE boosts Mobile. Mobile has a heritage of self-reliance.

> When Mobile's school population grew 64% compared to the 17% growth for the rest of the state, and little help came from the state government, we taxed ourselves to give our children the best.

Mobile has a heritage of good will and racial peace. There is no problem facing our schools now which these tools cannot solve.

ABLE reminds you that it is dangerous to assume that the charm of our beautiful city, the excellence of Alabama's oldest school system, and the harmony which has existed between the races will insure a peaceful transition.

WHAT HAS ABLE ALREADY DONE?

Gathered factual information from all over the south.

- Nearly 200 school districts have already desegregated, most of them without incident.
- Peace and prosperity go together. Economic progress in New Orleans and Little Rock stopped after school strife.
- Wherever there has been trouble, the majority was "waiting to see" while the undisciplined few grabbed the spotlight.

Organized to distribute this information.

Produced a 30-minute television report on the Mobile schools.

Held a large meeting open to the public at which a Little Rock group leader was guest speaker.

WHAT ARE YOU ABLE TO DO?

Insure Mobile's future now.

- Learn the facts.
- Talk about them. Point out that with informed citizens Mobile is ABLE to solve its own problems.
- Support our local public officials who seek to preserve law and order.

Give an ABLE coffee.

> Invite your friends to speak out and discuss their worries and ask questions. ABLE can furnish material or a speaker.

Give a few hours a week to help man the ABLE office.

Arrange for an ABLE program at your club before school starts.

Give dollars for ABLE'S goals.

Our city, our schools, and our children are the responsibility of every man, woman and child in Mobile.

Mobile will be judged by the action of Mobilians.

Let us do the best we can to solve a problem we inherited, to chart a change we did not choose.

Legal Action in Louisiana

The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana ordered the Orleans Parish School Board to proceed with all deliberate speed to desegregate public schools in Orleans Parish, and toward this end to submit to the Court by May 16, 1960, its plan for accomplishing same. The Court's basic order was approved by the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, when the Louisiana Legislature attempted to take away from the Orleans Parish School Board the power to classify schools, the Board moved to be dismissed as a party defendant. This motion was denied by the District Court and its order was again upheld by the Circuit Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court.

When the Orleans Parish School Board failed to submit a plan, the Court furnished its plan, and ordered the Orleans Parish School Board to commence desegregation beginning with the first grade when schools open in September, 1960.

The Court then denied the School Board's motion to stay the execution of this order and the denial was affirmed by both the Circuit Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court.

Therefore, this order is presently in full force and effect and must be obeyed by the Orleans Parish School Board when schools open in September.

We have only two choices. We can comply with the decisions and orders of the federal courts. Or we can completely abandon public education in the entire state of Louisiana.

QUESTIONS AND THEIR ANSWERS

Results of Closing the Schools in Other Communities

What happened in Norfolk?

Three Junior High Schools and three Senior High Schools were closed. About one-third of the locked-out students found no substitute for their closed classrooms. The others attended informal "tutoring groups" scattered widely across the city.

What happened in Little Rock?

Only four High Schools were closed. Out of the 3,700 displaced students, 27 percent went to other high schools in Arkansas, 10 percent went to schools out of the state, 15 percent received no schooling at all. Others were in makeshift substitutes.

Effect on the Students

What happens when children have no school to go to?

Any one of a number of things. First, if they are old enough, they may go to work at some unskilled job – never to return to their "lost" education. And, when they do, they flood the job market creating employment problems.

Some will stay at home, dull and disinterested . . . boredom will set in and cause added stresses in family life. Already overburdened parents will find they have a new and pressing problem.

Many will roam the streets in search of excitement. The crime rate of the city will almost certainly increase as pranks turn into actual mischief.

Lucky ones will leave home to attend school in other states, possibly moving in with relatives. This will split families asunder and put added strain on those relatives who must care for them.

All in all, the closing of the schools (even for a brief time) will interrupt a youngster's normal development to a degree uncalled for in civilized society.

What about the "bright student"?

In these times of world stress when we vitally need our future scientists, doctors, lawyers, engineers, in order to safeguard the American way of life for coming generations, the loss of the "bright student" could be a real American tragedy. Many gifted students, should the schools close, will fall behind in their development – lose interest and drive.

What happens to the "slower student"?

Poor scholars suffer most from a school closure. They will lose precious time at their studies which may never be recaptured. It is imperative that every future citizen be as well qualified as possible to take his place in adult life in order to build a strong America.

Civic and Economic Results in the Community

How will closing the schools affect New Orleans business?

As Little Rock and Norfolk have already proved, what is "bad for public schools is also bad for business". Almost immediately, the economic health of our community will suffer an incalculable blow. Real estate volume and retail trade will decrease appreciably when the schools are closed. New industries will be discouraged from coming into a troubled community where no public education is provided. Recruitment of employees will be seriously hampered. Skilled workers, technicians, college educators, professional men will not choose to settle in a city where there are no public schools.

Are these predictions supported by facts?

Yes. In Little Rock, the year before the school crisis, the number of new jobs totalled 1,003. During the two years that followed, there were no new jobs.

In Norfolk, the city estimated that closed schools cost the economy of the community $172,000 a month.

Why Private Schools are not the Answer

What has been the fate of private schools founded to evade federal court desegregation orders?

Financially, scholastically and legally, such makeshift "private" schools have failed. Schools set up overnight cannot provide the quality of education that our public schools have attained through many decades. These substitutes for schools are always poorly provided with the tools of education. Fewer courses are available. Classes meet in inadequate quarters, often attics and basements, without proper lighting or ventilation.

The "private" high school in Little Rock was abandoned for lack of funds. The "private" school system in Prince Edward county, Virginia, operated last year on voluntary contributions; however, during the next school year, parents will have to pay tuition.

What is the legal aspect of establishing private schools?

The legal outlook is extremely discouraging. First of all, there is no compromise point. If just one of the public schools is closed, every public school in the state must also be barred and shuttered. Federal courts have found unconstitutional: the use of public money for private schools, the operation of private schools with publicly-paid teachers, the leasing or selling of public school buildings for the operation of private schools.

What about private schools already in operation?

They will do their best, but it is a well known fact that they cannot begin to absorb even a small percentage of the 40,000 white children who now attend public school in New Orleans.

Waiting lists are long, and tuitions run approximately $400-$650 a year – a great burden for any family. At the present time only 2,372 children attend white non-sectarian private schools in New Orleans – how could these schools possibly expand overnight into a system that could absorb 18 new pupils for every student presently enrolled?

What Happens if We Face the Problem Squarely

How much integration will take place in the Fall of 1960?

No one knows. We can only judge by what has taken place in other communities. In Norfolk, after two years of integration, there are 21 negro students attending formerly all-white schools. In Nashville, there are 44 colored students scattered throughout 9 schools after 3 years of integration. This is the highest figure thus far. Compare this with Winston Salem – only 7 negro students after 3 years of integration . . . and Charlotte, N. C., with only 1 (again after 3 years). If we cooperate with the mandates of the Supreme Court, chances are integration in the numbers sense may be minor and may not affect all of the schools.

What about "pupil placement"?

Pupil placement has been authorized by the federal courts. Based on a number of deciding factors, the School Board will be able to control which pupils will attend what schools. This will work in favor of all concerned, and could mean that certain areas would remain all-white schools unless specific enrollment requests are brought to bear against them.

What is the Committee for Public Education?

The Committee for Public Education is a locally-organized, non-profit group of public school parents dedicated solely to the cause of concerted action in behalf of our public schools. The Committee believes wholeheartedly in the premise that good citizens united in a good cause can achieve remarkable success. Their aim is to preserve our public schools so that the children of New Orleans can be assured of the educational opportunities to which they are so richly entitled.

What You can do to Help . . .

Every individual who receives this brochure can actively participate in this important job. Everyone is needed. There is no time to be lost. Read the suggestions on the back of this folder and join with us now.

We no longer have a choice between integration and segregation . . .

The issue now is

EDUCATION or ILLITERACY

The tide of public feeling is running high as the date for the opening of New Orleans Public Schools draws near. No matter what our individual feeling in the matter, anxiety is the keynote . . . will the schools open? . . . will our children be provided with the education that is so imperative to their mental growth and well-being?

HERE ARE THE FACTS:

History

The 14th amendment to the United States Constitution states, in part, "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

In 1954, the United States Supreme Court declared that to compel any person to attend schools segregated by race was a denial of "the equal protection of the laws," and therefore unconstitutional. In its second decision in 1955, the Supreme Court instructed federal district courts to see that school officials proceeded to comply with its 1954 ruling stating that, "The courts will require that the defendants make a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance with our May 17, 1954, ruling . . ."

Although the people of many states do not agree with these decisions of the Supreme Court, the decisions have been upheld by the federal courts in every state wherein questioned. Despite the vigorous opposition of Governor Faubus and the Arkansas legislature, public schools were desegregated in Little Rock. Despite the so-called "massive resistance" laws of Virginia and the concerted determination of its able Governor Almond, the public schools of Virginia were also desegregated. Similarly, North Carolina, Kentucky, Maryland, Tennessee, parts of Florida and Texas have desegregated public schools.

Under our system of government, the Supreme Court interprets the Constitution. Whether or not we agree with the desegregation ruling of the Supreme Court, this ruling is binding on all federal courts, all state officials, all state legislators, all state courts and all citizens of the United States . . . and is backed by the full might and authority of the United States government.

SOS IS

- A non-profit organization chartered on April 26, 1960 by a group of concerned parents and citizens "to further, by all proper and legitimate means, the continuation of a state-wide system of free public education."
- A rallying point of moderate opinion on the school crisis.
- Supported voluntarily by any citizen who wants to invest in the maintenance and improvement of free education.

SOS asserts that public education is necessary if popular government is to function effectively; if Louisiana children are to have a decent opportunity in life; and if our society is to continue to achieve economic progress. For these reasons, SOS opposes the closing of the public schools of Louisiana, and calls on all Louisianians to unite in opposition to the closing of the schools.

SOS DOES NOT

- Argue the relative merits of segregation, or de-segregation.
- Discuss whether or not the 1954 Supreme Court decision was right or wrong.
- Debate States Rights vs. Federal Rights.
- Advocate any one method of compliance.
- And will not at any time participate in action or litigation aimed at closing a public school in Louisiana.

SOS DOES

- Give wide distribution to the facts on the school crisis.
- Point out the high cost of private schooling, and its unavailability to the majority of parents.
- Warn that our state will suffer drastic economic losses, unless our schools remain open.
- Work with individuals and groups by furnishing factual material and speakers.
- Conduct public meetings.
- Offer support to public officials in their efforts to continue free public education.
- Stand ready to support any reasonable plan, acceptable to the courts, which will keep the public schools open.
- Hold that Boards of Education, Legislators, the Governor and all citizens owe allegiance to the Constitution of the U. S. A.
- Believe that each of us has an individual responsibility to let elected officials know now where each of us stands: on the side of law, order, and public schools.

"No error could be more grave, no mistake more costly, no travesty more tragic, no curse more productive of woe, than to succumb to the blandishments of those who would have Virginia abandon public education and thereby consign a generation of children to the darkness of illiteracy, the pits of indolence and dependency, and the dungeons of delinquency."

Do you want to lose your hard-won tenure?

Do you want to lose your retirement benefits and pension plans?

Do you want to teach in attics and basements, without proper equipment?

Do you want to lose such programs as maternity leave and reserved jobs for working mothers?

Do you want to see the special services to exceptional children and shut-in children destroyed?

Do you want to lose your jobs outright?

Do you want to work for men and women who are not professional educators? who do not understand your needs? who are completely inexperienced in the business of operating a school?

Do you want to risk your future by teaching in a school which may go broke at any moment?

Do you want to teach in a school which must depend on continuing sizable private contributions for its very existence?

Do you want to give up all the benefits you now receive from the state and the Orleans Parish Public School system, including the ever-present possibility of increased salaries?

These are just a few of the consequences you will suffer if the public schools are closed. Don't think, just because we are in a lull in the school crisis, that closure is not a possibility. Informed officials have said publicly that our public schools may still be closed. Some of them were responsible for the payless paydays you suffered this year. They did not protect you then, and they will not protect you in the future. Protect yourselves. Fight for open public schools.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Would Constitute

CATASTROPHE!

18

The undersigned physicians, acting as individuals, and representing no official organization, believe that the closing of the public schools in Atlanta and in Georgia would constitute a major catastrophe that would result in irreparable damage to the children of our city and state. We believe that closing the public schools would materially interfere with the supply of essential scientific personnel and would ultimately damage the health services of this region. We also recognize the far-reaching consequences to the spiritual, moral and economic welfare of our community.

We respectfully urge all of the people, and particularly the city and state, business, professional and political leaders to take whatever legal steps are necessary to prevent the closing of our public schools.

We, as individuals, further state our willingness to cooperate with other state and local citizens in a concerted effort to solve the problems arising out of the effort to maintain the public schools.

RALPH McGILL

Atlanta has sought in all things to be a responsible city. This is her great tradition. As early as December 1889, Henry W. Grady, whose name is on our modern and beautiful city hospital, on one of our finest schools, on one of our hotels, and whose statue stands in the heart of our city, said, in a speech made to the Merchants of Boston:

"The problem of race . . . is so bound up in our honorable obligation to the world that we would not disentangle it if we could . . . I would rather see my people render back this question rightly solved than to see them gather all the spoils over which faction has contended since Cataline conspired and Caesar fought."

This was Grady's basic approach. His opinions, dealing with the context of his time, do not all jibe with today's. But, he was right in the great sense . . . it must be rightly solved.

This is the city which welcomed back General Sherman, not many years after the war, and gave him a tremendous reception, including a dinner attended by Confederate veterans who directly had opposed him—and who had been driven from the city which he proceeded, in time, to burn.

This is the city which has always tried to look forward, not backward. It has never wanted to be an old Southern city, caught like a fly in amber, and dying of quaintness and musty charm. From the time the sound of hammers and the rasp of saws began to be heard in the rebuilding of the city after Sherman's fires had died, we have sought to build into the city a belief in the principles of this country, of justice and opportunity. We have not always succeeded. The record is not unmarred. But we have never ceased to try.

One of our great strengths is that there have been attracted here the graduates of the many institutions over the nation. Every year we are pleased to carry items about the local alumni of Wisconsin, of Minnesota, of California, of Princeton, Yale, Harvard, Smith, Radcliff, Vassar, et al, who are to have a luncheon or dinner and are calling on the faithful to attend. Atlanta has attracted, too, many of the more ambitious young men and women from the smaller cities and towns of our own state and others of the South. We are a city of transportation and communication, and this has brought to us young executive and professional men.

This press pack is an example. A great many persons, all volunteers, have worked on it. They want you to know that after the school decision by the U. S. Supreme Court, this was a city in which there was a debate and a continuing exchange of ideas. The White Citizens Councils, the Klans, and others of that mentality, could, and did, have their say. But they were answered. They did not dominate. They could not coerce or intimidate, as they did in neighboring states.

The men and women who have compiled this press pack represent volunteer citizen organizations which have worked for public schools—and for the orderly processes of law. We, of the press, radio and television, have helped them have their say. We commend them to you.

One never knows. The forces of evil and violence are unpredictable. But we believe that the overwhelming sentiment in this city is for lawful procedures. What we chiefly want you to know is that we have not been idle. We have not sat with folded hands and waited. We have not left it for others to do. The people of the city have tried to organize public opinion, and, more important, to inform it. This press pack contains the essence of that effort.

CITY OF ATLANTA

OFFICE of the MAYOR

Atlanta 3, Georgia

To the Gentlemen of the Press:

On behalf of the City of Atlanta, it is my pleasure to extend you a cordial welcome.

You have traveled far in order to be present as history is once again made in Atlanta. Knowing Atlanta and her people, I have every confidence that the story you flash to the world will be a positive, dramatic picture of a great City facing profound change with dignity; a City continuing to be a credit to the Nation; a City too busy to hate.

May your stay with us be both enjoyable and rewarding. And when you go, may you take with you in your mind a memory of the South at its best, and in your heart, a desire to return. We are always glad to have you with us.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs B Hartfield

CITY OF ATLANTA

DEPARTMENT of POLICE

Atlanta 3, Georgia

STATEMENT OF HERBERT T. JENKINS, CHIEF OF THE ATLANTA POLICE DEPARTMENT

"The Board of Education and the Superintendent of Schools has original and complete jurisdiction to operate the public schools of Atlanta. In accordance with state and Federal regulations and under order from the Federal Court, the Atlanta schools will be desegregated when school opens on August 30, 1961.

"If any person or persons object to the manner or method of operation of the Atlanta Public Schools, those objections must be made to the Superintendent of School's office at the City Hall, and under no circumstances will objections be discussed, or disturbances be permitted at any of the individual schools.

"Local and State laws have always surrounded and provided special protection for public worship and public schools. Section 36.14 of the City Code forbids disturbing public schools and states that 'no person, at or near any public school, shall, by conversation, sign, or otherwise, engage the attention of any of the pupils, to the disturbance of such school.'

"The highest value of the law is the keeping of the peace—the Atlanta Police Department has full responsibility and authority to maintain the peace and good order over the entire city, and especially at and around the schools."

August 1, 1961

BACKGROUND: ATLANTA (1954-1961)

When the Supreme Court Decision of May 1954 put an end to legal segregation in the nation's schools, Georgia, like other deep South states, adopted an official policy of last-ditch legal resistance. Despite protests from the Georgia Education Association, the League of Women Voters and other responsible citizens' groups, the General Assembly of 1955 adopted a "Private School Plan" which included, among other measures, a provision to cut off funds from any school system which attempted to desegregate.

Secure in their legal "Maginot Line" and unhampered by fear of Federal initiative in enforcing the ruling in "Brown vs. Topeka," most Georgians felt the Supreme Court's emphasis was on the word "deliberate" rather than "speed." Schools would continue in the traditional way; regional mores would remain unchanged. The bitter lessons of Little Rock and Norfolk were as yet unlearned. The changes in Baltimore, St. Louis and Louisville were not deep-South enough to stir Georgians from the blanket of apathy which then covered the entire school question.

The first brush with reality came in January 1958, when a group of Atlanta Negroes, in a "class action," filed suit against the Atlanta School Board. The suit (Calhoun et al vs. Latimer) asked that the School Board be enjoined from practicing racial discrimination in the public schools. When in June of 1959 U. S. District Judge Frank Hooper ruled in favor of the plaintiffs and ordered the Atlanta Board to submit a plan for desegregation by the following December, the handwriting was clearly on the wall. The School Board had no alternative but to submit a plan. Yet any plan to desegregate Atlanta's schools would be squarely in conflict with Georgia's massive resistance laws and would automatically force their closure.

Meanwhile, in October of 1958, echoes from Norfolk and Little Rock began to reverberate along the Peachtrees. Anxious letters were written to the newspapers. Isolated groups of citizens held meetings. In November, the School Committee of the Atlanta League of Women Voters publicly submitted ten questions to the School Board, the most important of which was, "Will every school in Atlanta close if the Courts order integration?" The School Board withheld a public answer since they were litigants in the pending Court suit; but an Atlanta Constitution columnist outlined the city's dilemma. On November 25th, under the auspices of the League of Women Voters, an open meeting was called to discuss ways and means of keeping schools open. A steering committee was formed to seek cooperation with the business and financial leadership of Atlanta. Since it was felt that a public stand at that time would be undesirable and premature, the steering committee never got off the ground.

The disengagement of the local power structure, the unyielding "never" of the State political leadership and the strident, often threatening segregationist voices claiming that "no schools are better than integrated ones" were powerful deterrents to organized community action. Yet because the Atlanta papers responsibly reported the news from other Southern cities, pointing out editorially the tragic consequences of massive resistance elsewhere, many Atlantans realized their public schools were in jeopardy and sought a way to save them.

On December 9, 1958, eighteen white parents chartered HOPE, Inc. (Help Our Public Education), choosing to avoid the integration vs. segregation issue by taking an uncomplicated stand for open public schools, period. Conceived primarily as an educational organization designed to clear up the fog of confusion engendered by "massive resistance," "interposition" and other so-called alternatives to compliance, it rapidly became a rallying ground for moderates who previously had suffered to remain silent. With the fervor and enthusiasm only amateurs could maintain, HOPE spawned a welter of public manifestos (Ministers, Educators and Doctors, to name just a few) and generated enough interest by March of 1959 to hold a public rally which drew upwards of 1,500 people and some prominent speakers in support of open schools (Atlanta Mayor Hartsfield, Publisher Ralph McGill, Georgia Legislator M. M. (Muggsy) Smith and Editor Sylvan Meyer). Favorable press, radio and television coverage of the March rally established a bona-fide "Open Schools Movement." HOPE chapters formed in Gainesville, Marietta, Jonesboro, Rome, Athens, Macon and Savannah with other nuclei of interested supporters in cities and towns throughout the state.

Inevitably there was opposition, much of it well-financed and organized. In addition to the States Rights Council led by Augusta politico, Roy Harris, the Klans and White Citizens Councils, Atlanta-based centers of resistance such as MASE (Metropolitan Association for Segregated Education) and later GUTS (Georgians Unwilling to Surrender) headed by Lester Maddox, now a candidate in the five-cornered Atlanta mayoralty race, sprang up to harass open school advocates.

On November 30, 1959 the Atlanta School Board submitted a stair-step plan for desegregation of the public schools beginning with the 12th grade (given in full elsewhere in this pamphlet). Judge Hooper approved the plan on January 20, 1960 and ordered it into effect the following September; or as soon as the General Assembly of Georgia could enact statutes to allow Atlanta schools to operate.

In an attempt to influence legislative action, open school supporters mounted an educational crash program. Mayor Hartsfield proclaimed a "Save Our Schools Week" in Atlanta. Representatives of state-wide civic groups joined together in a coordinated effort. Legislators, business leaders and other opinion-makers throughout the state received repeated mailings underlining the social, economic and educational disasters accompanying school closings elsewhere. The Fulton and DeKalb County legislative delegations which previously had withheld unanimous support, promised to seek legislative change. They were joined by a handful of solons from other parts of the state; but the prevailing sentiment when the General Assembly convened was to let Atlanta bear the brunt of school closings to preserve segregation elsewhere in Georgia.

All during the legislative session public pressure in behalf of open schools grew stronger. Delegations of open school supporters called on Governor Vandiver, Senator Russell, Senator Talmadge and as many legislators as they could buttonhole. As a result, the Legislature appointed a nineteen-member "General Assembly Committee on Schools" empowered to conduct hearings in each of the State's Congressional Districts to find out whether "the people of Georgia may wish to make a deliberate determination as to whether future education is to be afforded through direct tuition payments for use in private schools devoid of governmental control, or whether the public school system as it presently exists shall be maintained notwithstanding that the school system of Atlanta and even others yet to come may be integrated . . . "

Cynics regarded the Committee as a delaying tactic at best. It had power only to inquire and recommend and it was a foregone conclusion that most Georgians considered "race-mixing" far more disastrous than the abandonment of public education. Yet the strong grass-roots support for open schools in nearly every part of the State was a surprise to almost everyone.

The Committee had the good fortune to be chaired by widely-respected John Sibley, Chairman of the Board of the Trust Company of Georgia. Mr. Sibley conducted the hearings with good-humored dignity and impartiality. The importance of the "Sibley Commission" in awakening Georgians to the alternatives they faced cannot be overestimated. When the Committee issued its report in April 1960, the 11-member majority recommended a Freedom of Choice plan, somewhat similar to Virginia's. The 8-member minority stood fast for segregation, even at the cost of closed schools. The division within the Committee itself reflected the sharp differences of opinion in the state. Yet for the first time in the deep South, the majority of an all-Georgia committee appointed by the State Legislature with the blessings of the State Administration recommended that existing laws be changed to allow some desegregation . . . before a Negro child actually applied to enter a white public school.

After the publication of "The Sibley Report," Judge Hooper stayed integration of Atlanta schools for a year. On May 9, 1960, he amended the Atlanta Plan to include desegregation of the 11th and 12th grades at the beginning of the 1961 school year. The Atlanta Plan was to become effective "whether or not the General Assembly of Georgia at its session in January 1961 passes permissive legislation." In Judge Hooper's words, "to order the Atlanta Public Schools to integrate . . . in September 1960 could mean but one thing; that is, the closing of Atlanta's schools. To postpone this . . . will give the Georgia Legislature . . . one last chance to prevent this closing."

Immediately following this final Court decision, HOPE called a "Georgia Open Schools Conference" attended by 500 delegates invited from some 87 Georgia cities, towns or counties. Edward

R. Murrow televised this Conference in a nationwide documentary "Who Speaks for the South." As it became more acceptable to speak out openly for legislative change, many came forward with strong public statements. As a Gainesville editor put it, "You can hear minds changing all over Georgia."

In the Fall of 1960, open school advocates initiated "Operation Last Chance," taking their cue from Judge Hooper's words. Armed with forthright statements from Churches (all faiths and every important denomination, including the influential Georgia Baptist Convention); business leaders (the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, the Atlanta Jaycees and key individuals throughout the State); lawyers (the Atlanta and Georgia Bar Associations); educators (the Georgia Education Association, "Mr. Jim" Peters, venerable Chairman of the State Board of Education); and many others, the issue was kept constantly before the public. "Days of Decision" Forums were held in Athens, Rome, Albany, Columbus, Augusta and Savannah to plead the case for legislative change. The Georgia Chamber of Commerce conducted its own Legislative Forums, with Administration floor-leaders Frank Twitty and Carl Sanders finding a preponderance of open-school sentiment and reflecting this in their public statements. All this was played against the backdrop of New Orleans which remained in the headlines throughout the Fall.

Coincident with the opening of the 1961 Legislative Session was the now-famous "Athen's crisis." When two Negroes were ordered admitted to the University of Georgia by U. S. District Judge William A. Bootle, Governor Vandiver and the Legislature were provided a chaotic example of what "bitter-end" resistance meant. Existing statutes would force closing Georgia's beloved University (the nation's oldest state-supported institution of higher learning) and this was too bitter a pill for even the strongest segregationists. On January 18, 1961, S. Ernest Vandiver, who had been elected Governor of Georgia only two years prior on a platform which said he would never permit desegregation, underwent a dramatic reversal. In order to save the schools of Georgia, he offered a "Child Protection Plan," through which a community can decide by local school board action or a referendum whether it wants to close its schools when it faces a court order to desegregate. If a community decides for open schools, tuition grants provide money for children not wishing to attend integrated schools. The Legislature promptly repealed the mandatory closing laws and adopted the Governor's four-bill package.

The open schools advocates had won their battle. Atlanta was now free to comply with its Court order, with no threat of school closings. Applications for transfer to the 11th and 12th grades were submitted by 133 Negro children between May 1st and May 15th. After an exhaustive series of tests and interviews (required by the Atlanta Plan) ten were chosen to enter four previously all-white high schools (Brown, Grady, Murphy and Northside). 38 others are still in the process of appealing the Board's decision to reject their applications. One white child, Sandra Melkild, now attending Northside High School, has requested transfer to another presently all-white school, basing her request on "freedom of association." The Atlanta School Board has denied her a transfer. On August 9th the State School Board overruled the Atlanta Board's decision; but Judge Hooper has ordered a stay of the State Board of Education's ruling, pending a hearing.

Once the conflict between State and Federal laws was resolved, emphasis shifted to desegregation with dignity. The organizations comprising the "Open Schools Movement" sent representatives to call on Dr. John Letson, Superintendent of Atlanta Public Schools, early last February to ask what citizens might do to help create a climate of calm, dignified compliance with the law. It was suggested that church, business, service and youth groups outside the immediate jurisdiction of the school administration be encouraged to play a leading role in this effort through public discussion and dissemination of information. A new group, in fact an Organization of organizations, was formed with a broad base of community support. Its name: OASIS (Organizations Assisting Schools in September) an acronym Atlantans feel is descriptive of their city.

OASIS, with its 53 affiliates, is divided into three sections—Religious, Civic and Service Groups and Youth-serving Agencies. Members range from service clubs and Girl Scouts to labor unions and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Its activity has been low-key but intensive, seeking to work through already existing organizational machinery to reach hundreds of thousands of Atlanta's citizens.

OASIS has stimulated hundreds of meetings throughout the long, hot Atlanta summer. 126 volunteer discussion leaders have been on call to assist at gatherings varying from 200 in the Southwest Community Council to half-a-dozen anxious parents meeting in a neighbor's living room. A Speaker's Bureau, headed by an ex-president of The Toastmasters, provides information for business and service groups. A troupe of Theater Atlanta Players has presented improvised desegregation skits for teenagers at camps and youth centers all over town. OASIS has brought over one hundred white and Negro youth leaders together and encouraged Atlanta's more prominent citizens to speak out in behalf of responsible compliance.

OASIS' Religious Section spearheaded the observance of "Law and Order Weekend (Friday, August 25th through Sunday, August 27th) during which Atlanta's prolifery of churches and synagogues conducted special prayers for peaceful transition. Ministers were asked to take their vacations before August 15th so that they would be on hand to give moral leadership. All faiths have participated in this effort, with leading clergy and lay representatives playing active roles as catalysts.

All of these efforts have received considerable support from Atlanta's newspapers, television and radio stations. Mayor William B. Hartsfield's repeated assertions that Atlanta will preserve its reputation for good race relations have been followed by public and private measures designed to prevent trouble. Police Chief Herbert T. Jenkins has had officers from his department observing racial disturbances in other cities for two and one-half years. The Chief has publicly proclaimed that law and order will be maintained and warned would-be violators of penalties. School Superintendent, Dr. John Letson, has told Atlantans that anything less than desegregation with peace and dignity will "exact a price that will not be paid in full for a generation."

And when school opens on August 30th, this city hopes to demonstrate that careful planning and intelligent preparation can prevent the violence that has accompanied school integration nearly everywhere else in the deep South.

AN EDITORIAL P.S.
WE HOPE YOU WILL READ

In writing the foregoing piece, we have tried to give you "just the facts." Now let us tell you what's in our hearts. We had a double purpose in preparing this kit. If our schools desegregate smoothly and without incident—and the overwhelming majority of Atlantans are praying that they will—we wanted you to know why. If a rock is thrown or a demonstration staged, you ought to know that is not the whole story of our city.

Ask any of our local newsmen to tell you about the "Open Schools Movement." They'll say we're a bunch of starry-eyed amateurs—a strictly grass-roots-type operation held together chiefly with scotch tape and imagination. But they'll also tell you that we held together—through three interminable uphill years to accomplish what those who thought they knew all about Georgia said never would happen in our generation.

Who took part in the "Open Schools Movement?" The ordinary people who live in Atlanta—and believe ir or not, much of Georgia. The printer who donated pamphlets and hand-bills on a "pay if you get it" basis. The businessmen who gave an office and typewriter, stationery, erasers and all that scotch tape. The lawyers who voluntered their time and brainpower to unsnarl the tangled legal thickets. But most of all, the women of Atlanta who licked the stamps, organized the meetings and stayed on the telephone until they finished the job. Yes, the unsung heroines of the "Open Schools Movement" are mostly ordinary housewives and mothers who left beds unmade and meals uncooked to insure their children's educational future.

Is it over yet? Not by a long shot. There are those with whom old ways die hard. We have heard the nation's most militant racists are marshaling their forces to make a stand at this "Second Battle of Atlanta." You must have heard it too—or most of you wouldn't be here.

When the "symbolic ten" go to their classrooms, segregation in Georgia's common schools will be officially over. There are those who wish the ten could be a thousand. There are many who object to even one. But whatever the views that divide them, Atlantans are united in a single hope: that the story that unfolds on August 30th will be much different from the one you might have expected. And when ten Negro children go to school on Wednesday, the heart of Atlanta will go in with them.

To Representatives of the Press, Radio and Television:

Citizens of Atlanta have long recognized that good schools are an essential part of a great city. Recent developments have demonstrated a determination on the part of all concerned to assess realistically the problems we face and to proceed with the educational tasks ahead. Teachers and others who are a part of the Atlanta public school system face the future with confidence and with the firm conviction that changes and adaptations will be made as circumstances require. I am certain that I speak for all school personnel in saying that we are happy to be a part of a great city that we are convinced will become still greater in the year ahead.

"the maintenance or severance of established social and psychological relationships with other pupils and with teachers;

"the choice and interests of the pupil;

"the ability to accept or conform to new and different educational environment;

"the morals, conduct, health and personal standards of the pupil;

"the request or consent of parents or guardians and the reasons assigned therefor."

(2). The City Superintendent of Schools will administer these provisions, subject to the supervision of the Board.

(3). The Superintendent will designate the school to which each child applying for assignment or transfer shall go. "All existing school assignments shall continue without change until or unless transfers are directed or approved by the Superintendent or his duly authorized representative."

(4). Applications for admission, assignment, or transfer and/or placement shall be directed to the Superintendent and delivered to the school principal between May 1st and May 15th.

(5). A separate application must be filed for each child.

(6). Application forms must be filled out and signed by parents or guardians and notarized. The Superintendent may require interviews, tests, and investigation.

(7). Notice of action taken shall be mailed to parents or guardians within thirty days or not later than June 15th and will be final action "unless a hearing before the Board is requested in writing within ten days from the date of mailing such statement."

(8). Parents may file in writing objections to assignment or request transfer to "a designated school or to another school." The Board shall act on same within a reasonable time. A hearing will be begun within twenty days of decision by the Board that a hearing is necessary.

(9). Hearings on requests for transfers shall be conducted by the Board or not less than three of the members of the Board, and decisions "of the members or a majority thereof shall be deemed a final decision by the Board."

(10). Unless postponement is requested by the parents or guardian, the Board will notify them of its decision within ten days after conclusion of the hearings. Every appeal shall be finally conducted by the Board before September 1st. Any person dissatisfied with the final decision of the Board may appeal to the State Board of Education.

(11). The Board may assign certain pupils to vocational or other special schools or terminate their public school enrollment altogether.

(12). "Beginning September 1, 1960, or on September 1, following favorable action by the General Assembly of Georgia, student assignment in the Atlanta Public School System shall be made in accordance with aforesaid rules and regulations and without regard to race or color. For the first school year in which it is effective, the plan shall apply to the students in the 12th grade. Thereafter, in each successive year, the plan shall be expanded to the immediate lower grade; e.g. in 1961-62 grade 11th, in 1962-63 grade 10th, etc., until all grades are included."*

(13). "Nothing contained in this resolution shall prevent the separation of boys and girls in any school or grade or to prevent the assignment of boys and girls to separate schools."

(14). These rules shall be contingent upon the enactment of statutes by the General Assembly of Georgia and shall be submitted to the General Assembly for approval.

* On May 9, 1960 U. S. District Judge Hooper ruled that the Plan of the Atlanta Board of Education for gradual desegregation be put into operation on May 1, 1961. Applications to the twelfth and eleventh grades of the Atlanta Public Schools were received from May 1 to 15.

The Atlanta Public Schools: Some Facts and Figures

Prepared by the Atlanta Department of Education

THE FOUR SCHOOLS TO BE DESEGREGATED

Brown High School, named for Joseph E. Brown, Civil War governor of Georgia, is located at 765 Peeples Street, S.W. West End, as the section is popularly known, is an old and established part of the city where the population now comprises low to middle income families, although many longtime residents still retain and live in their fine old homes. It is a section of strong loyalties and considerable pride of accomplishment. The principal of the school, Maxwell Ivey, formerly principal of Hutchinson Elementary School and former Director of Athletics and coach of champion football teams, is serving his first year as a high school principal at Brown. The school may be reached from City Hall by driving west on Whitehall, thence to Gordon, left on Peeples for three blocks. There are about 1200 students and 50 teachers in the school. In 1961 there were 131 graduates with approximately 45% attending college. Both students and teachers are very loyal to the school and its fine tradition of good conduct and high ideals.

Murphy High School was opened in 1930. Its present principal is George M. McCord whose tenure as principal began in 1942. Mr. McCord is well known in national camping circles, is very active in YMCA, and other youth serving organizations. The address of the school is 256 Clifton Street, S.E., adjacent to Memorial Drive. The school may be reached by going east on Memorial Drive for approximately 3 miles. There are approximately 1200 students and 50 teachers in the school. Of the 205 graduating this year, about 50% continued in college. The community is a section of moderate priced homes, law abiding citizens, and church-going population. The school is particularly noted for a balanced program of meeting student needs and interests.

Henry Grady High School was created in 1947 from old Boy's High School and old Tech High School which was once situated in the same building and on the same grounds. Named for Henry W. Grady, famous orator and newspaperman, the school has taken great pride in its preparation of students for college. Located at 929 Charles Allen Drive, N.E., (formerly Parkway Drive) the school is relatively close to the downtown section but is also accessible to very fine residential areas of the city. The school population ranges from families of lower middle incomes to relatively high incomes, with considerable diversity in religious and ethnic composition. It may be reached by way of Peachtree, Ponce de Leon and Charles Allen Drive; or by Peachtree and 10th Street. The principal is Roger H. Derthick (incidentally, brother of Lawrence Derthick, former U. S. Commissioner of Education) who is president of the Atlanta Teachers Association. The school has an enrollment of about 1500 students and there are 60 or more teachers. Approximately 80% of the students continue their education in college.

Northside High School, whose address is 2875 Northside Drive, N.W., is located in an upper income section of the city. Mr. W. H. Kelley has been principal of the school since its inception in 1950. The school is in that portion of the city annexed in 1952. Former coach and English teacher, he presides over the school with humor and dignity. The school has an enrollment of approximately 1100 and there are about 45 teachers. More than 88% of the 242 graduates this year will continue in college. The school has maintained strong lead in football championships in recent years and is one where students indicate a strong school spirit. The school may be reached by going north on the Expressway to Northside Drive, or by going Peachtree Road to West Wesley, turn left to Northside, then right one block.

Information About the Transfer Students

All of the ten transfer students, in the words of Deputy School Superintendent Rual Stephens, "have outstanding school academic records, made excellent scores on the tests given them and very favorable impressions" when they were interviewed by school officials. Some of the 10 were accepted in spite of the fact that their residences are nearer their present schools than the schools they asked to attend. School officials said that in such instances there were factors of "overriding importance" which figured in the decisions to accept the students.

In one case, a youth aspired to go to the Naval Academy at Annapolis and was unable to get the ROTC training or special college preparatory courses in mathematics and physics at his present school.

School officials made it clear from the beginning that an important consideration in whether a Negro student was accepted or rejected would be his chances of doing well in a new school environment. Those finally accepted had composite test scores which in most instances exceeded the median composite scores of the grades and schools to which they are being transferred.

Allen, Demaris—16 years old. Accepted for the 12th Grade, Brown High School. Composite test score: 94.6. Median in 12th Grade at Brown: 66.4. Sigma Delta Chi
Code of Ethics

I. The primary function of newspapers is to communicate to the human race what its members do, feel and think. Journalism, therefore, demands of its practitioners the widest range of intelligence, of knowledge, and of experience, as well as natural and trained powers of observation and reasoning. To its opportunities as a chronicle are indissolvably linked its obligations as teacher and interpreter.

II. To the end of finding some means of codifying sound practice in just aspirations of American Journalism these gains are set forth:

1. RESPONSIBILITY

   The right of a newspaper to attract and hold readers is restricted by nothing but consideration of public welfare. The use a newspaper makes of the share of public attention it gains, serves to determine its sense of responsibility which it shares with every member of its staff. A journalist who uses his power for any selfish or otherwise unworthy purpose is faithless to a high trust.

2. FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

   Freedom of the press is to be guarded as a vital right of mankind. It is the unquestionable right to discuss whatever is not explicitly forbidden by law, including the wisdom of any restrictive statute.

3. INDEPENDENCE

   Freedom from all obligations, except that of fidelity, to the public interest is vital.

   A. Promotion of any private interest, contrary to the general welfare, for whatever reason, is not compatible with honest journalism. So-called news communications from private sources should not be published without public notice of their source or else substantiation of their claims to value as news, both in form and substance.

   B. Partisanship, in editorial comment, which knowingly departs from the truth, does violence to the best spirit of journalism; in the news columns, it is subversive of a fundamental principle of the profession.

4. ALL SINCERITY, TRUST, ACCURACY.

   Good faith with the reader is the foundation of all journalism worthy of the name.

A. By every consideration of good faith a newspaper is constrained to be truthful. It is not to be excused for lack of thoroughness or accuracy within its control or failure to obtain command of these essential qualifications.

B. Headlines should be fully warranted by the contents of the articles which they surmount.

5. IMPARTIALITY

Sound practice makes clear distinction between news reports and expressions of opinion. News reports should be free from opinion or bias of any kind.

A. This rule does not apply to so-called special articles unmistakably devoted to advocacy or characterized by a signature authorizing the writer's own conclusions and interpretations.

6. FAIR PLAY

A newspaper should not publish unofficial charges affecting reputations or moral character without opportunity given to the accused to be heard; right practice demands the giving of such opportunity in all cases of serious accusation outside judicial proceedings.

A. A newspaper should not invade private rights or feeling without sure warrant of public rights as distinguished from public curiosity.

B. It is the privilege, as it is the duty, of a newspaper to make prompt and complete corrections of its own serious mistakes of fact or opinion, whatever their origin.

7. DECENCY

A newspaper cannot escape conviction of insincerity, if while professing high moral purpose it supplies in sentence to base conduct, such as are to be found in details of crime or vice, publication of which is not demonstrably for the general good. Lacking authority to enforce its Canons, the journalism here represented, can but express the hope that deliberate pandering to vicious instincts will encounter effective public disapproval or yield to the influence of a preponderant professional condemnation.

FACT SHEET FOR OASIS DISCUSSION LEADERS

1. Must Atlanta desegregate its schools?

   There is no legal way to maintain a segregated public school system in Atlanta. The reason is pointedly stated by the Sibley Committee's Majority Report: in 1954 the United States Supreme Court ruled that separate schools are inherently unequal, and therefore, unconstitutional. The decision exists; it is binding on the lower federal courts; it will be enforced. The U. S. District Court has enjoined racial discrimination in the Atlanta public schools. There are no delaying tactics which have not been attempted and overruled; there is no alternative.

2. What are the provisions of the Atlanta plan?

   In 1961-62, pupil assignment in the 11th & 12th grades will be made without regard to race or color. In each successive year the plan will be expanded to the immediate lower grade, until all grades are included.

   Current assignments will continue unless transfers are directed or approved by the City Superintendent of Schools or his representatives.

   Certain criteria, known as the "Pupil Placement" program will determine transfers:

   available room & teaching capacity transportation facilities effect of new pupils on academic programs effect of new pupils on academic standards effect of new pupils on academic progress of other students scholastic aptitude & relative intelligence of pupil adequacy of academic preparation of pupil psychological qualification of pupil psychological effect upon pupil ability of pupil to conform to new educational environment morals, conduct, health and personal standards of pupil suitability of curricula for pupil choice & interests of pupil home environment of pupil request or consent to transfer of parents, & reasons therefor maintenance or severance of established relationships of pupil with other pupils & teachers possibility or threat of friction or disorder possibility of breaches of peace or ill will

3. How is the Atlanta plan being applied?

   Applications for transfer to be obtained from Superintendent's office by applicant, his parent or guardian; when completed, forms to be notarized and returned to student's principal, during period May 1 - 15.

Data to be submitted to Area Superintendent, who then schedules an interview with student and parents (this year, interviews were held with selected number of students after tests administered) and arranges for series of tests (standardized achievement tests, aptitude tests, and personality adjustment test). This information, along with a report of the characteristics of the school to which transfer is requested shall then be transmitted to the Deputy Superintendent.

A Student Transfer Reviewing Committee, including the Deputy Superintendent, one or more Area Superintendents, the AssistantSupt for Pupil Personnel Services (or Director of Psychological Services the Assistant Superintendent for Instructional Services (or Director of Instruction), and any other personnel that may be considered desirable, shall meet to study the completed folder of each student. Interviews with the student may be scheduled at the discretion of the Deputy Superintendent.

Recommendations of this Reviewing Committee will be submitted to the Superintendent.

Notice of action taken on transfers will be mailed to parents or guardians within thirty days or not later than June 15th, and will be final, unless the action is appealed.

4. What are the provisions for appeal of a denied transfer?

Appeals are to be made in writing within ten days of the mailing of the notice of action. The Board may conduct hearings if it desires. Every appeal shall be concluded by the Board before September 1st. Any person dissatisfied with the final decision of the Board may appeal to the State Board of Education.

5. What have been the developments in other cities that have adopted grade-a-year plans?

Nashville - In 1957, Nashville began desegregation with the first grade under a court-approved plan. Grades one through four are now desegregated, with 159 Negro children presently enrolled in 10 predominantly white schools. This number is only about one-third of the Negro children eligible by residence to attend white schools; the others requested and were granted transfers to all-Negro schools. Last year only 44 Negro pupils were registered in predominantly white schools; in 1958-59, there were 34, and in 1957-58, there were 19. Surrounding Davidson County desegregated its first four grades in 1960-61, and 41 Negro students are now in interracial classes there.

Knoxville & Houston - In 1960-61, non-discriminatory school assignment was begun in Knoxville and Houston. In Knoxville, 28 Negro students attend white schools; in Houston, there are 12 Negro students attending white schools.

6. How many Negro pupils are attending previously all-white schools?

Although it has been seven years since the Supreme Court decision, there are now only 4,313 Negro children in the previously all-white schools of Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee,

Texas and Virginia. This figure represents 169 school districts, desegregated between 1956-60. In North Carolina, for example, four years after desegregation, there are only 2 Negro children in school with white children in Charlotte, 9 in Winston-Salem, and 5 in Greensboro. Although efforts to limit the desegregation to a "token" number of Negroes may be responsible for this minimal total in some districts, "token" desegregation is not the procedure of the majority of these school boards. The following figures show that the total has increased by less than 1,000 in five years.

NEGROES IN DESEGREGATED SCHOOLS

State	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59	1959-60	1960-61

a - plus Oak Ridge
c - only a handful of whites stayed with 490 Negroes in the racially changing neighborhood of Orchard Villa school near Miami.

7. Will desegregation result in lowering of academic standards?

In March 1959, administrators of 17 desegregated school systems participated in a conference held at Nashville before the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. Not one of the twelve administrators who dealt with the question reported that desegregation had harmed the academic progress of white students, or had lowered academic standards. Following are excerpts from some of their testimony:

Dr. Ward I. Miller, Supt. of Schools, Wilmington, Del.

.... (We have) over the last 4 years developed our grouping program to a point where we classify our youngsters according to performance and scholastic achievement, and those standards are set for each particular track on which the youngsters run. The accomplishment of the average white student is better than it was. The accomplishment of the above average and the advance placement and honor classes is truly remarkable...

Question: In other words, what you are saying is that there has been no diminution of quality resulting from this integration.

Dr. Miller: We feel it is better.

Mr. William Henry Oliver, Supt. of Schools, Nashville, Tenn.

...Our children are all in school, and are, we believe, achieving normal success in their studies...

... I haven't noticed any effect one way or another on the educational success of the children, either white or colored, where they are together.

Dr. John H. Fischer, then Supt. of Schools, Baltimore, Md.

... There is no doubt at all that Negro children are receiving better educational opportunities in Baltimore now than they did under segregation. The opportunities of white children have been in no way diminished. Indeed, they have been increased, not as a result of desegregation, but by our general effort to improve our offerings for all children over the past 5 years.

The Late Dr. Omer Carmichael, Supt. of Schools, Louisville, Ky.

... Now, you asked, if I got your question, in the desegregation, what, if any, changes, we have observed. It happens that one of our principals on sabbatical leave last year wrote a doctor's thesis on what happens to scholarship or to achievement of pupils in a school system in the process of desegregating. His findings can be summarized in about this statement, that there was definite improvement in the 2-year period in the achievement of both races. The achievement of the Negro children increased markedly more than did the achievement of the white children....there was certainly improvement, and it is statistically significant for the Negro at all levels, and the white did not suffer. The white slightly improved, but not as much as the Negro.

None of these communities employed pupil assignment criteria which might have selected for desegregation the Negro students with the highest academic standings. That is, desegregation affected all Negro students, both those of highest and lowest achievement, with transfers made solely on the basis of school districts.

In Washington, D. C. where city-wide pupil testing immediately after desegregation revealed that many Negro pupils lagged far behind white children in school achievement, findings on five years of public school desegregation (published as "Addendum: A Five Year Report" by District School Supt. Carl F. Hansen) reveal:

> Integration has not retarded the advancement of high-quality students, Negro or white, and educational standards in the District public schools, when examined in relation to students' preparation and ability for learning, are high.

City-wide averages on standardized tests have climbed steadily since desegregation to approach -- and in some instances match or surpass -- national norms, Mr. Hansen reports.

8. Does desegregation create new disciplinary problems?

The Superintendent of the Washington, D. C. school district reports ("Addendum"), "serious incidents that seem to be primarily racial in origin are relatively infrequent. The records of the central school office reveal reports of few such cases."

Statistics show that "juvenile delinquency as reported in cases per thousand between 1954 and 1958 has decreased, although data for 1958-59, not yet available in cases per thousand, shows an increase over the year before....The District of Columbia Commissioners' 1959 report... reveals the following delinquency rates for children 5 to 17:

For non-white children a decline from 37.1 cases per thousand in 1954 to 21.2 cases in 1958.
For white children, 15.3 cases per thousand in 1954 to 15.2 cases in 1958."

Dr. Hansen concludes from these data: "The schools do not claim credit for this development. But one conclusion is clear: Desegregation has not resulted in an increase in the rate of juvenile delinquency."

How behavioral problems have been affected by desegregation in some localities is shown in the following excerpts from the report of the Commission on Civil Rights:

Dr. Omer Carmichael, the Louisville Superintendent, stated that in his desegregated schools there had been somewhat greater difficulty in matters of discipline, due more to the emotional reaction to desegregation than anything else, but that it had been substantially less than he had feared.

In the Baltimore schools, Dr. John H. Fischer...has found no problems attributable to race as such...: "...No Negro child has ever brought into any of our schools a problem that had not already been presented somewhere by a white child. Nor has any white child been able to claim much originality for his race in inventing new forms of misbehavior. We find that these are a function of the child's total life-situation and are always due to a number of factors. It is never possible to explain a child's behavior simply in terms of his race, or to classify children's problems on a racial basis."

9. Will desegregation result in increased health problems in the schools?

In a study conducted by Phi Delta Kappa, an honorary international education fraternity, teachers of mixed schools reported that:

Negroes coming from a low socio-economic group have health problems, but not in any greater proportion than whites of the same background. According to teachers, most Negro parents send their children to school so scrubbed they shine. Negro parents are evidently conscious of white people's stereotypes and try thus to change them.

St. Louis and Baltimore school superintendents reported that desegregation did not create any new or difficult health problems.

10. Will school desegregation lead to intermarriage?

Dr. Hansen's report on five years of desegregation in Washington states that "...considering the extent of desegregation here, and the limited number of intermarriages following school attendance together -- one confirmed, two rumored -- it is unlikely that proximity in school has contributed significantly to interracial marriages. This fear that proximity in school will induce intermarriage seems not to have been realized." The Washington experience supports the findings of psychiatrists and social scientists; after investigation it has been concluded that no evidence exists to prove that desegregation of the schools and the mixing of white and Negro children in and of themselves lead to intermarriage.

The Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry (GAP) has stated:

> The many factors that determine fluctuations in the rate of racial intermarriage are far from clear. In Boston, where legal school desegregation has been in effect for decades, there was a relatively high rate in the years immediately after 1900 and a marked decrease in the next decades despite a constant ratio of Negroes to the total population. In urban New York State, other than New York City, the ratio climbed between 1916 to 1924 and then dropped steadily for the next ten years. No satisfactory explanation for this shift has been established. The facts conclude that legal school desegregation per se does not influence the rate of intermarriage in ways that are yet predictable.

GAP, drawing on available evidence, observes that "The expectation voiced by many people that school desegregation will result in a great rise in the rate of intermarriage seems to be an expression of their bias and fear, rather than a reliable prediction."

The Committee on School Desegregation of the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues arrives at the same conclusion:

> One ungrounded fear is that intermarriage will result from desegregation. Statistics show that in parts of the United States where there has been no segregation, intermarriage is a rare thing indeed... Fear of something new and different makes many otherwise reasonable people believe such myths and discount contradicting facts....

11. Will there be disturbances in Atlanta this fall?

No one can predict with certainty what will happen; however, incidents of violence in connection with school desegregation have, in fact, been few indeed, both within schools and in the community. In only seven instances has the situation become so explosive that a real crisis threatened or major violence occurred; these incidents are spread over the seven years in which 778 school districts have desegregated -- proof that violence is not an inevitable effect of school desegregation. There is no example of sustained disturbances where public officials and law enforcement personnel have taken a firm and early position in support of law and order. In Atlanta, both the Mayor and the Chief of Police have promised the people of the city that no disturbance of the peace of the community will be tolerated.

12. Do white people move away from desegregated school districts?

This question is usually raised by citation of the majority report of the House sub-committee (the Davis Committee) which in 1956 investigated the Washington, D. C. schools. The majority report deplored the preponderance of Negro pupils in Washington schools, asserting that "just a few years ago" 59,582 white students and 33,498 Negroes were enrolled. It was later discovered from enrollment records that "just a few years ago" was November 1, 1935, and that the date marked an all-time high in white enrollment in the District schools. In fact, the change in racial composition in Washington began some 20 years before the Supreme Court's decision, a product of a national trend -- a movement to "suburbia" by whites, and an influx of rural non-whites into the downtown central city areas. There have been conspicuous growths, for example, in the Negro populations of Atlanta, Charleston and Nashville during the last two decades. Yet only one of these three cities has a desegregated school system. Richmond had a 42% Negro enrollment in 1953-54, but in 1959-60, Negroes comprised 54% of the total school enrollment; Richmond schools were not desegregated until September 1960.

13. Did not the Davis Report show that desegregation led to serious problems in Washington, D. C.?

The majority report of the Davis Committee presented so questionable a picture of the effects of desegregation in Washington that a recap of some of the facts is in order. The subcommittee of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, created by a vote of only 11 of the 25 members of the larger committee, was chaired by Rep. James C. Davis of Georgia; the majority report of its "findings" and "recommendations" was signed by only four of its six members, all Southerners. Two of its members submitted a minority statement which included the following: "In a close reading of the hearings we must come to the conclusion that the technical staff presented leading questions to a selected group of witnesses. Persons with views not in accord with those of the Counsel were not given full and fair opportunity to testify." Editorially, all three of Washington's daily newspapers discounted the objectivity and deplored the tactics of the investigation. The Washington Evening Star, for example, stated: "The Davis investigation of integration in Washington is of course designed to delay its acceptance elsewhere. The committee will supply ammunition in that respect in the form of testimony by responsible witnesses, under guidance of a skilled interrogator who knows precisely what sort of information he wants in the record."

When asked, during the course of the hearings, if integration had been carried out "smoothly and without incident," the then Asst. Supt. of District Schools, Dr. Carl Hansen, testified: "It would be fantastic to say 'without incident.' I think that the integration program in this city has been a miracle of social adjustment." Various subsequent investigations have confirmed Dr. Hansen's observation. The Richmond Times Dispatch, for example, sent staff reporter Larry Weekley to Washington to see how school integration was developing in 1959. "After four and a half years," Weekley wrote on Feb. 9, 1959, "the integrated public schools of the District of Columbia remain remarkably free of racial strife."

14. What is the cost of violence and tension to a community?

Intangible costs aside, this question can be answered by a look at cold cash losses in communities tolerating violence and tension. Because of its school crisis, Little Rock lost, at lowest estimates, five new industrial plants worth a million dollars and employing a total of 300 persons. Not one single commitment for location of a new factory in the city was signed from the day Gov. Faubus ordered National Guard troops to block the entry of Negroes to Central High until after stability was restored two years later. The Little Rock Chamber of Commerce, the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, and other responsible sources attribute the halt in Little Rock's booming industrial growth to racial tensions and uncertainty in connection with public schools.

Department store sales in New Orleans, already running low, declined sharply as segregationist demonstrations and racial clashes hit the city in November 1960. New Orleans' largest department store, for example, reported a 20% to 30% drop in sales during the first week of near-riots -- a drop which necessitated a 50% slash in advertising outlays, and a halt in buying merchandise. Even loan companies were hurt: "Business has stopped cold," one reported, citing a 50-60% decrease in money loaned. Racial tension sparks a chain reaction of economic losses. Interruptions and stoppages of vital production are also probable -- as in the rubber manufacturing plants in and around Tuscaloosa, Ala. during riots protesting a desegregation attempt at the state university. When mobs gathered as Negro students marched to the state Capitol in 1960, Georgia taxpayers paid for "$75,000 in lost man and woman hours of state employes who left their jobs to watch the demonstration or to see that it did not come off," State Auditor Thrasher reported -- the latter reference to state troopers, who were stationed around Capitol grounds.

Business losses as a result of retaliatory boycotts and counter boycotts, losses from destruction of property, public monies spent to maintain national guard forces: when violence has been permitted, these have been items on the bill.

Ga - OASIS - ?

How can school authorities create a general climate of firmness and calm when school re-opens in the Fall? What can voluntary community organizations do to re-inforce their school officials -- to encourage an attitude of positive acceptance of change?

The following suggestions have been brought forward by various voluntary organizations to stimulate thinking, first steps, and planning for the future.

AREAS OF ACTIVITY - SCHOOL ADMINISTRATORS AND SCHOOL BOARD

1. A Citizens Advisory Committee, set up by the School Board, could gain wide public support for desegregation. Composed of distinguished citizens, by its public statements it could set the tone for community acceptance. This Citizens Advisory Committee, along with School Board members and school administrators could explain in the press and on TV how desegregation will work, how it has worked elsewhere, and answer questions from the public.

2. School administrators could also use communications media, as well as the classroom and assembly hall, to explain in advance of any possible difficulties that rowdyism, absenteeism, or other breaches of disorder will be followed by severe consequences.

3. The School Board might wish to arrange private, regular briefings with the news media to issue progress reports, to discuss reporting of any desegregation incidents, and to insure that incidents will not provide a circus for reporters.

4. The Superintendent might call a special meeting of the teaching staff to enlist teacher support by explaining what is in store for them. Selected teachers might be given inservice training in intercultural education; others might be encouraged to attend summer inter-group workshops. First on the administrative level, then on the supervisory and teacher level, regular integrated staff discussions might give an appropriate background for school desegregation in the Fall.

5. In addition to school assemblies and classroom discussions, the Superintendent might wish to meet with high school student councils to enlist student leadership in insuring peaceful transition.

6. Formation of a behind-the-scenes liaison group might be useful to map out a step-by-step schedule for the first few days of desegregation. It would be helpful if everybody concerned could know in advance what techniques will be used on the first day to handle crowds, where and when Negro students will report to class, how reporters will be dealt with -- all of the mechanisms to be employed that will insure smooth, untroubled early days of desegregation. Such a group might contain representatives from the Superintendents office, the Police Department, the Mayor's office, and white and Negro community leaders.

AREAS OF ACTIVITY -- VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

1. Widest community support must be enlisted by voluntary organizations through special meetings called by existing religious, womens, fraternal and civic associations. Both official school spokesmen and representatives of civic groups must be prepared to address these meetings.

2. Small informal neighborhood "coffee" of high school parents to answer specific questions and allay possible fears may be necessary.

3. Most important is preparation of parents in presently white schools through the PTA. A special PTA meeting in every high school is essential before school re-opens. If PTA leadership in a particular school is hostile, parents who are friendly must be found by voluntary organizations and urged to speak up within PTA if possible, informally if not.

4. Voluntary organizations must stimulate the mass media to undertake a broad-gauged public relations campaign. The key to this campaign might be initiation of a Citizens Pledge along the following lines:

> "I promise to keep faith with myself and my city -- to guard our children's safety, to safeguard our city's future. When school opens in the Fall, with God's help I will do my part to maintain the peace, to respect the law, and to protect the good name of Atlanta."

If such a pledge were launched with high level sponsorship -- quite logically it could be done by the Citizens Advisory Committee suggested above -- adherence to it by leading businessmen, civic leaders, churches, voluntary groups, and most important, thousands of individual citizens, would have a dramatic impact in creating the proper community climate. Newspapers and TV could play their role by reporting on support the pledge has gathered, and by special features, columns and interpretive editorials.

5. The newspapers should be encouraged to tie Atlanta's future growth and progress to peaceful desegregation this Fall. A newspaper series -- Atlanta Twentieth Century -- to run as a companion piece to the Atlanta Century -- could paint a glowing picture of the possibilities in the Arts, Business, Tourism, Major League Sports, etc, all of which would be irreparably damaged by riots and violence. The same theme should be carried over into TV shows.

6. Existing literature prepared by voluntary organizations on the facts of desegregation should be widely distributed to PTA's and other civic groups, to help stimulate interest and discussion.

7. Ministers should be encouraged to preach on peaceful desegregation as well as fostering discussions within church study groups, especially among high school age youngsters.

8. It might be possible to arrange a special TV show on the eve of school's re-opening featuring the Mayor, police chief, school superintendent, civic leaders, with a special message for Atlanta from President Kennedy.

9. Voluntary organizations must stand ready to mobilize community support for keeping our public schools open in the event of a referendum.

Memorandum on the Role of the Press in School Desegregation

Let me suggest a few generalizations which seem to be borne out by the record:

(1) The role of the press is important. There is a definite relationship between the attitude of the press and the response of the community to a school desegregation crisis.

(2) Where the press has taken a strongly resistant attitude, there have almost invariably been disturbances within the community. Examples would be Clinton, Tennessee (the Courier News); Mansfield, Texas; Front Royal, Virginia (the Northern Virginia Daily).

(3) In those communities where desegregation has gone smoothly the press has generally handled the news with restraint, attempting to avoid inflamatory pictures or headlines. Examples would be Charlotte, Winston-Salem, and Greensboro, North Carolina; Norfolk, Virginia (the Virginian Pilot); Arlington, Virginia (the Northern Virginia Sun); Houston, Texas (the Houston Post). In Winston-Salem the paper followed a conscious policy of keeping their photographs unobtrusive. They even directed the use of small cameras.

(4) In a number of cases the newspapers have worked closely with the school superintendent in determining press policy. Examples, Ashland, Kentucky; St. Louis, Mo.; Charlotte, Greensboro, and Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

(5) Newspapers wishing to facilitate peaceful desegregation have varied considerably in their use of editorial and feature material. In some cases the press does a number of background features and a large number of editorials attempting to exert leadership and prepare the community. In other cases, the press takes the position that the whole matter should be played down and that one or two editorials expressing the position of the paper are sufficient. The three North Carolina papers noted followed a fairly active editorial policy, as did the Norfolk Pilot, the Northern Virginia Sun, the Louisville Courier Journal. On the other hand, the Dallas newspapers at present are commenting very little on the coming transition. The Houston papers were fairly conservative in their use of editorials and feature material last year.

HOPE IS

- A state-wide non-profit organization, chartered on December 12, 1958 by 17 concerned parents and citizens "to give direction, guidance, information and program to all citizens of Georgia who desire to continue the operation of the public schools of this state."
- The only rallying point of moderate opinion on the school crisis.
- Supported voluntarily by any citizen who wants to invest in the maintenance and improvement of free education.

"HOPE asserts that public education is indispensably necessary if popular government is to function effectively; if the children of those who are not wealthy are to have a decent opportunity in life; and if our society is to continue to achieve economic progress. For these reasons, HOPE opposes the closing of the public schools of Georgia, and calls on all Georgians to unite in opposition to the closing of the schools."

—James Barrow, Attorney-At-Law, Athens.

HOPE DOES NOT

- Argue the relative merits of segregation, or de-segregation.
- Discuss whether or not the 1954 Supreme Court decision was right or wrong.
- Debate States Rights vs. Federal Rights.
- Advocate any one method of compliance.
- And will not at any time participate in action or litigation aimed at closing a public school in Georgia.

HOPE DOES

- Give wide distribution to the facts on the school crisis.
- Point out the high cost of private schooling, and its unavailability to the masses.
- Warn that our state will suffer drastic economic losses, unless our schools remain open.
- Work with individuals and groups throughout the state, by furnishing factual material and speakers. (Such work often results in HOPE chapters and committees.)
- Conduct public meetings.
- Stand ready to support any reasonable plan, acceptable to the courts, which will keep the public schools open.
- Hold that Boards of Education, Legislators, the Governor and all citizens owe allegiance to the Constitution of the U.S.A. —That we are all first Americans, then Georgians!
- Assert that the schools must be operated in accordance with established law, or not operated at all in Georgia.
- Believe that each of us has an individual responsibility to let elected officials know now where each of us stands: on the side of law, order, and public schools.

"In an era in which man has sent a rocket to the moon, it is utterly unthinkable that we could limit the education of our children. I am convinced that the people of Georgia want public schools. I am certain that if we remain mindful of the motto of our state: 'Wisdom, Justice, Moderation,' we shall yet find a way to conform to the law of our land and preserve our cherished system of public education."—Rabbi Jacob M. HOPE

Help Our Public Education

WHAT IS HOPE?

HOPE, INC., is a daily expanding organization of Georgians deeply concerned about the future of public education in Georgia.

As parents and civic-minded citizens, they believe the consequences of closing Georgia's schools would be catastrophic.

Such a closure would not only shatter — perhaps irreparably — a fine educational system built up at great expense over many years, but also disrupt Georgia's economic and social progress at a time when our state is experiencing its greatest growth and prosperity.

WHY HAVE HOPE?

HOPE, INC., has but one aim — to champion the rights of Georgians to a public education and to support and encourage a school system that U. S. can praise as an example.

HOPE's main activity is the objective presentation of facts on the status of public education in Georgia.

HOPE aims to stimulate constructive action leading to a solution that will permit Georgia's schools to remain open — a solution acceptable to the vast majority of our citizens.

HOPE feels that an informed public, discussing this crisis among themselves and with their elected representatives, can avert the awesome calamity of empty classrooms.

WILL OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS BE CLOSED?

No one can accurately foretell the fate of Georgia's public schools, much less pinpoint the date when any school or system might be shut. But, based on careful study of legislation here and elsewhere in the South, HOPE's committee of lawyers believes:

— That the suit against the Atlanta School Board, now pending in U. S. District Court, will be heard and decided by summer, 1959.

— That such a court ruling could result in the closing of a school in the Atlanta system as early as September, 1959.

— That any tax-paying parent of a child whose school is closed or threatened with closure could bring legal action to prevent such closure (or to require the re-opening of the school).

— That, under existing policies and statutes of the Georgia state administration, this could only result in the closing of all the schools and school systems throughout Georgia.

THE TRAGIC CONSEQUENCES OF SCHOOL CLOSINGS

Shutdowns of schools in Georgia would affect all Georgians — farmers, laborers, business and professional people, religious leaders, homemakers and young people — and cause untold hardship and suffering. Consider a few end-results:

— Complete breakdown of educational processes, together with all related activities, such as sports, recreation, etc.

— Loss of accreditation from grammar school through college.

— Loss of hundreds of qualified, experienced teachers.

— Migrations of students of all ages to other locales.

— Complete disruption of young peoples' formative training.

— Increased juvenile delinquency as thousands of youngsters are left to their own devices.

— Deprivation of education to countless thousands of children from all families.

— A breakdown in health services now provided by the schools.

— Curtailment of local business expansion.

— Loss of technicians, engineers and skilled craftsmen now undergoing training at state educational institutions.

— Possible relocation of plants and resultant reduction in jobs and payrolls.

— Loss of new industries and commercial establishments seeking Southern sites.

— Possible loss of Federal funds for various projects, thus shifting tax burdens to Georgians.

A MEASURE OF THE TRAGEDY

"Of all our public institutions, none are more needful or deserving of stability and continuity than are our schools." — Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, before the United States Senate.

The aim of HOPE, INC., is the "stability and continuity" of our schools and it subscribes to the following remarks made by Sen. Talmadge in the U. S. Senate:

"The closing of any school anywhere is a lamentable occurrence. The closing of a public school system is a terrible tragedy. The destruction of public education in an entire region of our nation would be an unparalleled catastrophe."

Is the closing of schools the solution to the school crisis? Sen. Talmadge said:

"This critical juncture in our national life is no time to permit divisive issues to rob the nation of the minds and talents of a great segment of its youth by closing the doors of the public schools in their faces.

"It is time someone spoke out in behalf of the voiceless masses who will suffer the consequences of such rash action.

"From their standpoint, there is little difference between those who would destroy public schools with bombs and those who would close them with court orders. To those who would advocate inaction and who would sit idly and smugly by while children go without an education, I would point out the unspeakable hypocrisy of using children as pawns of political expediency."

HOPE, INC., ADVOCATES ACTION!

Not in 100 years have Georgians been faced with a problem so critical.

Perhaps never before has a calm, reasonable, unemotional study of the facts been so necessary in approaching and solving a problem.

There is hope with HOPE.

HOPE, INC., urges you to join the many thousands of other Georgians in discussing all aspects of the pending school crisis with your friends, neighbors and elected representatives.

Only in this way can we reach a solution —one which is acceptable to all Georgians —a solution that will assure continuing public education in Georgia to avert what could become an unparalleled catastrophe.

The children of Georgia await your answer.

The nation's security demands it.

HOPE, INC., is an organization of Georgia parents and the other Georgia citizens who feel that the possibility of closing any or all of the Georgia public schools is a matter of deepest concern and urgency.

The general policy of HOPE, INC., shall be to provide factual information concerning the present and future status of public schools in Georgia. We believe that when the people of Georgia have these facts they can and will intelligently take the action through their elected representatives. We believe that public opinion can avoid the catastrophe of closed schools in Georgia.

HOPE, INC., feels that our present laws concerning the schools, if acted upon, will result in the closing of part or all of the public schools in Georgia. We believe the decision to close the schools will create an unprecedented situation.

HOPE, INC., has every reason to believe that parents, religious leaders, professional leaders, civic leaders, industrial leaders, and conscientious political leader share the deep concern for the future of Georgia schools and Georgia.

HOPE, INC., does not propose to argue the pros and cons of segregation versus desegregation, or states rights versus federal rights. HOPE, INC., has one single aim and that is to champion children's rights to an education within the State of Georgia, an education they can be proud of, and a public school system that the balance of the United States can look to as an example. To this single end, HOPE, INC., stands ready to cooperate with the legally elected representatives of the State of Georgia in an effort to reach a solution which will permit the continuing benefits of public education for our children.

HOPE, Inc.: A Citizens Group for Open Schools in Georgia

By Mary Reese Green

HOPE, (Help Our Public Education) Inc.: a non-profit organization of volunteers whose purpose is to preserve free public education in Georgia, was chartered in December of 1958. At that time there were state laws on the books to close any public school in Georgia that was desegregated. A desegregation suit had been filed in Atlanta and it appeared likely that all public schools in the state might eventually close because of the conflict between State and Federal laws.

During the fall of 1958 formal and informal groups were meeting in the Atlanta metropolitan area to discuss this situation. Columns and editorials appeared in the newspapers saying something must be done to change Georgia laws, manifestos were published by ministers, university professors, and physicians calling for continued public education, and a few scattered PTA's had programs about the crisis.

In November two women started a telephone chain inviting people to a public meeting and over 500 parents heard a local legislator speak for open public schools In spite of this activity large portions of the population of Georgia still assumed there was no problem and preferred not to discuss such matters anyway. It soon became apparent that a formal organization was needed to coordinate and spear-head open school activities.

First, an attempt was made to get prominent Atlanta citizens to head such an organization. That failed but a group of 18 parents went ahead. HOPE, Inc. was granted a state charter in December, 1958. Its policy has been to work for the continuance of free public education in Georgia. HOPE does not discuss the merits of segregation or desegregation. An announcement of HOPE's formation and its policy was released to the press at once.

PUBLIC MEETINGS DURING THE FIRST YEAR

Less than three months after being granted its charter HOPE held its first large public meeting at a local theater. Almost 2,000 people came to hear Mayor Hartsfield, Ralph McGill, Sylvan Meyer, a woman from the Women's Emergency Committee of Little Rock, and a student from a local high-school who had organized an open school group among high-school students in the Atlanta area. This meeting established HOPE as the rallying point for open-school advocates throughout Georgia.

Following this rally a series of informative teas were held in over 100 homes in Atlanta. These were covered on the society pages of local papers, thus reaching many readers that might otherwise have been missed.

In the fall of 1959 the courts had ruled the operation of segregated schools in Atlanta to be illegal and the School Board was instructed to produce a plan for desegregation by December, 1959. HOPE held a public meeting in November at which members of the Little Rock School Board and Chamber of Commerce were the speakers. This was followed by another large public meeting at which the Atlanta representatives in the State Legislature were the speakers. By this time all four of these men were speaking openly for open public schools whereas the year before only one had taken a public stand.

ORGANIZATION and FINANCE

Almost from its beginning HOPE was in touch with open-school groups in Virginia and Arkansas. Their experiences and help prevented many mistakes and made HOPE's job much easier. Within Georgia other organizations who were interested in preserving public education now had one group to work with which could coordinate activities and thus increase the efficiency of all.

HOPE's work has been carried on primarily by committees of volunteers. The major committees are finance, public relations, legal, legislative, and most important perhaps, State-wide organization.

There are three significant aspects of the organization that differ from similar groups that had formed or were to form in other southern states.

1. HOPE has, from its inception been a state-wide organization. At least two counties were represented at the organizational meeting and provision was made in the Charter for other chapters to have representation on the Board of Directors. Within five months there were active HOPE groups in four metropolitan areas outside Atlanta and within a year there were open-school groups in almost all major areas of Georgia.
2. HOPE does not have "members." There are supporters who may or may not contribute financially, but there have never been dues.
3. The state office, which was opened in Atlanta before Christmas of 1958 and which has operated continuously since then, has had at least one paid staff person at all times.

The money for the operation of HOPE's office and the many mailings and materials necessary to carry out its programs has come from individual donations. Requests for funds have been sent to the entire mailing list many times. A newspaper ad was tried with poor results. The most successful effort has been a $5-a-month plan where participants are billed annually, semi-annually, or even monthly.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

Since the initial news story appeared concerning the chartering of an open-schools group in Georgia there have been individual statements, general announcements, or background stories on the school crisis released to the papers and wire-services by HOPE almost every week. The newspapers and television stations have been extremely cooperative and responsible in their treatment of the school situation.

As often as every other month for more than two years materials have been mailed by HOPE to its supporters as well as to legislators, professional groups, GEA and PTA leaders, and business leaders all over the state. These materials consisted of progress reports, background material, up-to-date information on the political and legal status of the school crisis, and reports on the experiences of other communities both within and without the state.

STATE ORGANIZATION and LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

While official HOPE organizations have formed in many major cities in Georgia there are countless other communities where open-school groups have chosen different names or even meet in an informal fashion. The state office has kept in constant touch with these organizations and their supporters and they in turn have spread within their areas. In some cases groups of citizens have come to HOPE for help in organizing and in others HOPE has gone to them, telling of the programs and the need for organized effort.

The effectiveness of this early state-wide activity was apparent when in January, 1960 at the beginning of the legislative session HOPE presented to the House of Representatives a petition for open schools signed (with addresses) by over 10,000 persons from 90 Georgia communities.

Repeatedly during that six-week session State Senators and Representatives found on their desks literature prepared by HOPE. There were official HOPE observers at all proceedings and many legislators were visited by volunteers.

The day before Senators Russell and Talmadge were scheduled to address a joint session of the legislature they were visited by representatives of HOPE and fourteen other Georgia civic, church, and school groups with memberships totalling over 500,000. The Senators were urged to take an open-school stand. Both firmly reiterated the "massive resistance" theme and held out no hope of any change in the state laws. The next day when the Senators addressed the legislature instead of being met by the usual wildly cheering onlookers that their visits often inspire they found the gallery filled with quiet, unsmiling citizens who carried signs reading "We Want Public Schools."

The 1960 legislature finally decided to create a School Study Commission headed by banker John Sibley. The Commission held open hearings in each of Georgia's ten Congressional Districts during March and April of 1960. HOPE groups in each district helped stimulate interest in these hearings by stressing the importance of all views being expressed at the hearings and encouraging individuals and groups to attend them. As a footnote it should be pointed out that there is a tendency for people who have once taken an open-school stand to assume that everyone will always remember it. It cannot be overemphasized that repeated statements must be made.

The result of these hearings was that the Commission majority report (signed by 11 of the 19 members) recommended that a plan similar to the one now operating in Virginia be adopted by Georgia. Eight members of the Commission still stood for school segregation at all costs.

LATER PUBLIC MEETINGS

In May of 1960, following the report of the Sibley Commission, HOPE sponsored a state-wide Open Schools Conference. Cooperating groups were Active Voters, Atlanta Branch of American Association of University Women, Atlanta Council of B'nai B'rith Women, Executive Committee of Fernbank School PTA, League of Women Voters of Georgia, National Council of Jewish Women, Atlanta Chapter;

United Church Women of Georgia and the United Nations Council of Atlanta. Representatives from 27 Georgia towns and 7 states attended the conference. Workshops were held on legal questions, how to get communities talking, organizing your town, private schools, cooperation of other organizations, role of religious groups, and what business has at stake. The purpose of the conference was to crystalize state-wide reaction to the Sibley report and to prepare for follow-up activities.

In the fall of 1960 the United Church Women sponsored forums on open-schools and the Sibley report in four key areas of the state. The United Church Women, Active Voters, HOPE, and the League of Women Voters each had a speaker on the panel and James Peters, Chairman of the State Board of Education also spoke.

In January, 1961, just before the legislative session began, HOPE held another state-wide meeting in Atlanta to lay the final plans for what it termed "Operation Last Chance." The court had ordered desegregation to begin in September, 1961, in the Atlanta schools. Late in 1960 HOPE supporters around the state were notified that the legislative session which would begin in January was the last time that Georgia's "massive resistance" could be repealed. People were urged to get in touch with their legislators whenever it seemed appropriate.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION - 1961

The day before the legislature convened the floor leaders of each house appeared on television and asked for public responses to their hope that schools remain open. The response was overwhelmingly in favor of their stand and the papers kept a box-score of replies.

The Sibley report and the public support of the activities of HOPE and the other cooperating organizations finally had an effect. In the wake of the University of Georgia situation Governor Vandiver spoke to a special joint evening session of the legislature. The speech was carried by all radio and television stations. The Governor conceded that Georgia's school closing laws had "become an albatross" around the neck of the state. He recommended a new package of laws which have since been passed. The massive resistance laws have been repealed and provisions have been made for "pupil placement" procedures, "local option," and tuition grants.

Thus the threat of state-wide closing of public schools is gone and HOPE's major objective has been achieved.

FUTURE DIRECTIONS

The future role of HOPE is somewhat uncertain but some problems remain.

The "local option" laws outline both school closing and school reopening procedures through referendums in districts concerned. It is possible that HOPE can assist those trying to maintain open schools in communities faced with this option.

The Atlanta School Board has been ordered to allow desegregation in the 11th and 12th grades next Fall. In all probability HOPE will have a contribution to make in the preparation of the Atlanta community for this event so that the implementation of the court order can be accepted with calmness and dignity.

HERE'S HOW

Y O U

CAN HELP SPREAD HOPE!

1. YOU CAN assemble and participate in neighborhood discussion groups. Gather small groups of friends or hold a "block party". HOPE will donate all the materials you need for interesting and informative sessions on the school crisis. IT IS VITALLY IMPORTANT THAT EVERY FACT BE BROUGHT TO LIGHT AND ALL FACETS OF THE SCHOOL SITUATION BE CLEAR TO YOU. THE TIME MAY COME WHEN YOU WILL NEED EVERY OUNCH OF INFORMATION YOU CAN ACQUIRE.

2. YOU CAN give "DOLLARS FOR HOPE" teas, coffees or card parties. Invite friends to your home for pleasure - and at the same time, they can contribute dollars to preserve the public schools. These dollars will help buy advertising space in newspapers to spread the HOPE story. They will help pay the expenses incurred in legal and factual research. They will help broadcast HOPE on radio and TV. Forward all funds raised to HOPE, Inc., together with names and addresses of all donors so that they may receive HOPE's newsletter.

3. YOU CAN help collect signatures on a mammoth petition subscribing to HOPE's objectives. Get the forms from the HOPE office and start getting names as soon as you can.

4. YOU CAN send HOPE pamphlets to friends and relatives throughout the State. Get them interested so that they will start HOPE chapters in their own localities.

5. YOU CAN give personal financial support - as much as you can spare - to sustain HOPE in the fight for public education.

6. YOU CAN insist at every opportunity upon a calm, reasonable, open approach to the problem, in the belief that this attitude will save our schools.

7. YOU CAN express your opinions in writing through Letters to the Editors, to State Representatives, to any public figure who comments on the school crisis. Point out that there is HOPE in Georgia and that public education must be maintained.

Materials which you will want to use in spreading HOPE are available at HOPE, Inc., 714 Atlanta National Building, 50 Whitehall St., S. W., JA. 5-8469.

Q & A

(HOPE)

(Questions and Answers about the Georgia School Crisis)

MM file

1. WHAT IS HOPE, INC.?

An organization chartered in December, 1958, by a group of Georgia citizens who wanted to take positive steps to make sure that Georgia's public schools stay open. Within two months some 6,000 Georgians expressed their support of this effort and this number is growing daily.

2. WHAT DOES HOPE DO?

Collect facts which they make available to individuals and groups; encourage citizens to know the facts, discuss the problems and express their opinions to their elected representatives.

3. HOW CAN AN INDIVIDUAL PARTICIPATE IN THIS PROGRAM?

By volunteering to help collect facts, organize local groups, speak on this subject to existing groups, by contributing money. For information, contact HOPE, Inc., 714 Atlanta National Building, Atlanta, Georgia, (Telephone - Jackson 5-1100).

4. WHY ALL THE "TO DO" ABOUT SCHOOLS? WHY CAN'T WE KEEP ON OPERATING AS WE DO NOW?

Because all nine justices of the U. S. Supreme Court in a decision on May 17, 1954 (the "Brown case") declared the operation of "all white" and "all Negro" schools is a violation of the "equal protection" provision of the U. S. Constitution and therefore, segregated schools are unconstitutional.

5. DID THE SUPREME COURT HAVE THE RIGHT TO RULE ON SUCH A MATTER?

In the words of Sen. Herman Talmadge, "regardless of whether one accepts it or not, the Supreme Court's decision is an accomplished fact.." Regardless of all the debate, the only way to change it would be for the Court to reverse itself - extremely unlikely - or the Congress to pass, and the states to ratify, an amendment to the U. S. Constitution - also extremely unlikely. Sen. Talmadge has introduced such an amendment, which has not yet been brought before the Senate.

6. IF THE DECISION WAS GIVEN IN 1954, WHY ARE WE GETTING EXCITED OVER IT NOW?

At any time since 1954 local and state officials could have taken steps to make Georgia laws conform to the decision and could have planned for gradual compliance with the law. Since this has not been done, parents of more than 20 Negro children in Atlanta have filed a suit in the U. S. District Court in Atlanta asking that the Atlanta Board of Education be told that it may no longer operate a racially segregated school system.

7. WHEN WILL THE CASE BE HEARD AND A POSSIBLE DECISION BE GIVEN?

The two federal judges, who place it on the court calendar and one of whom will hear the case (Calhoun V. Latimer) have declared that it will be heard before the beginning of the school term of September, 1959.

8. WILL THE BOARD HAVE TO ACT THEN?

Either side may appeal the decision to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals and then to the Supreme Court. While appeals could take a long time, they could be scheduled as an emergency and the matter settled fairly quickly.

9. WHAT ARE THE GEORGIA LAWS THAT APPLY TO THIS SITUATION?

The Georgia Constitution, the Appropriation Bill and other laws require the operation of racially segregated schools and provide that the Governor shall order closed and funds cut off from any school not so operated.

10. ARE THESE LAWS STILL VALID OR WERE THEY NULLIFIED BY THE SUPREME COURT DECISION?

Some claim that even though many of the Georgia laws are obviously in contradiction to the decision and in fact were passed for the avowed purpose of evading the decision, they must be adhered to until a court specifically declares each of them unconstitutional. Others point out that the Supreme Court decision expressly states that all local and state laws must "yield to this principle" and they can simply be ignored and local and state officials could proceed to comply with the decision or with any further court order.

11. WHAT COULD THE LEGISLATURE DO TO CLEAR UP THIS DILEMMA?

They could pass laws to repeal the present ones requiring racial segregation. Such bills were introduced in the 1959 session, are still in the State of the Republic committee and could be acted on at a special session or at the 1960 session. Perhaps a constitutional amendment would be required.

12. WHAT COULD THE GOVERNOR DO?

He could act on the premise that the state laws have been nullified and allow desegregation to proceed if ordered by the Court. He could request a ruling from the State's legal department. He could order a "friendly suit" in the State's courts, such as the State of Virginia filed, to get the matter settled.

13. WHAT ARE THE POSSIBLE OUTCOMES OF THE ATLANTA SUIT?

a. If the request is denied and the Board is not ordered to desegregate, nothing need happen.

b. If the request is granted and the Board is told to desegregate, the Board would have to choose between two courses. (1) It could comply with the order, and leave the decision of testing the Georgia laws up to the Governor. (2) It could claim that the State law has priority and refuse to comply with the Supreme Court decision.

14. WHAT ALTERNATIVE COURSE COULD THE GOVERNOR FOLLOW?

The Board could comply and the Governor could choose to take no action under the State laws. Or, the Governor could order the specific schools involved closed. One of several people - the Board, the parent of a child in a closed school - could then bring legal action to order the Governor to reopen the Atlanta schools or close all the schools in the State. (In Virginia, the federal court ruled that if any school is closed, all schools must be closed.)

15. HOW DOES THIS ATLANTA SITUATION AFFECT THE REST OF THE STATE?

See above. Every court ruling to date has borne out the fact that Georgians will have to choose sooner or later between compliance with the law, and some desegregation, or no public schools.

16. WHO WOULD DECIDE HOW DESEGREGATION WOULD BE CARRIED OUT IN ANY SCHOOL DISTRICT?

Beginning with kindergartens? High schools? One school at a time, etc.? No court orders any Board to adopt any specific plan. Each local Board of Education has the responsibility for setting policies within the law and adopting the plan best suited to its community.

17. WHAT ABOUT PRIVATE SCHOOLS?

The 1954 "private school amendment" allows the Governor to make "tuition grants" to children when a school is closed. This could be the amount now spent on public schools per child in a given district, or he could increase it as he saw fit.

18. WHAT WOULD BE THE ECONOMIC EFFECT OF CLOSING THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

It is a 150 million dollar a year business, in some communities one of the largest businesses. It employs hundreds of thousands of people. Aside from the direct losses due to shutting down such a large business, there would be the loss from businesses leaving Georgia or deciding to go elsewhere for expansion.

19. WHAT CAN YOU DO?

1. Write Governor Ernest Vandiver, State Capitol, Atlanta, that you want him to keep the public schools open.

2. Write or visit your legislators, and ask how they voted on the school bills and why; tell them you want the public schools kept open.

3. Write or visit your local school board members, your local school superintendent; discuss with them the details of your own local situation, tell them you want the public schools kept open.

4. Write letters to your newspaper editor, expressing your opinions, asking questions, agreeing (or disagreeing) with his opinions. Remember expressions of support are just as important as expressions of disagreement.

5. Contact your local radio and tv stations, ask for programs on the schools.

6. The next time a friend or neighbor says, "I certainly want the schools kept open", ask him if he has told the Governor, his legislators, his school board.

7. Contact HOPE, Inc. and join with your fellow citizens who want to Help Our Public Education.

A Guide for the Presentation of the Subject:

HOW WILL DESEGREGATION AFFECT OUR ATLANTA PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

Luckily, Atlanta is not venturing into uncharted territory when it admits qualified Negro students to its white high schools this fall. The trail has already been blazed by such southern cities as Nashville, Louisville, and Baltimore. A look at their experiences is reassuring.

In Louisville, parents have been free for the past four years to transfer their children to any school in the city, unless the desired school was too full. In Nashville, beginning in 1957, all first-grade children have been assigned on the basis of geographic zones without regard to race. In 1961, the fifth grade of the twelve-year staircase will have been reached.

In Baltimore, absolute freedom of choice prevails at all grade levels. This plan has been in effect for the past six years.

Atlanta's plan calls for the admission, without regard to race, of qualified students in the 11th and 12th grades who wish to transfer to other schools in the 1961-62 school year.

WILL ORDER BE PRESERVED?

Wherever the local authorities have stood firmly behind the law, the transition has been orderly and serene. Both our civic and school authorities have spoken out. Herbert Jenkins, Chief of Atlanta's police, in addressing members of his force, has said, "I am prepared to yield to the judgment of the Supreme Court. Why? Because, as law enforcement officials, there is no other position we can honestly take .... as policemen we are the law. The Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land, that must be obeyed by everyone .... history will be written in our city in 1961. Our action will play a large part in the writing. Let's be sure our part is good".

Dr. John Letson, Superintendent of Atlanta's schools, stated, "The goals of all must be to accomplish peacefully and with dignity what we are required to do. Anything less will not change the ultimate result, but will exact a terrible price that will not be paid in full for a generation".

WILL THE ACADEMIC STANDARDS OF OUR SCHOOLS SUFFER?

The country's leading psychologists and anthropologists have long declared that race is not a factor in determining intelligence. Every outstanding scientific group has declared that, given the same degree of cultural background, the average achievement of the members of each race is about the same. The findings of our sister southern cities tend to bear out this assertion. Under the Atlanta plan, any student applying for transfer must meet demanding standards of moral, mental, and physical ability. School officials in areas where less stringent regulations for pupil transfer prevail have testified that there is no difficulty in maintaining and, in many cases, improving the quality of their schools.

Dr. Ward Miller, Superintendent of Wilmington, Delaware schools, reported that the quality of education had improved, while R. B. Piper, Superintendent of the Logan County, Kentucky schools, said that his testing program did not indicate any decrease of quality in the performance of the white students. William Henry Oliver, Superintendent of Nashville schools, reported no effect, one way or the other, on the achievement of pupils of either race, and Dr. John Fischer of Baltimore stated that academic standards were not changed in any school by the presence of a second race.

IS THERE AN ALTERNATIVE TO DESEGREGATION?

Governor Almond of Virginia has expressed dramatically the only other choice. In an address on June 9, 1959, he stated, "We must not allow the welfare of our state to be victimized by the bitterness of disappointment, the pang of frustration, the demon of hate, and threat of political purge, appeal to base passions and prejudices, and the stirring of emotions productive of violence and disorder. No error could be more grave, no mistake more costly, no course more productive of woe, than to succumb to the blandishments of those who would have Virginia abandon public education and thereby consign a generation of children to the darkness of illiteracy, the pits of indolence and despondency, and the dungeons of deliquency".

Well aware of the direness of Governor Almond's predictions, as well as recent events in New Orleans, the Georgia Legislature in 1961 repealed all school closing laws so as to enable each local school district to work out its own solution. Our city is now free to do what the Federal Court says we must do .... without disruption of public education, economic ruin, lawlessness and violence which would only bring chaos and disgrace to Atlanta.

WHAT CAN WE DO TO HELP?

According to informed sources, the general public still does not understand the facts .... for instance, some think that grammar schools will be involved in September.

Therefore, more discussion is needed. May we suggest that each of us does what he can to share his knowledge with other individuals and groups:

---- person to person

---- informal neighborhood "coffees"

---- organized groups, such as churches, civic and service clubs, garden clubs, PTAs, etc.

In our conversations, let us appeal to personal and to civic pride; to acceptance of this challenge as a unique opportunity to bring honor to our city.

HOW TO LEAD A DISCUSSION WITH YOUTH

on the subject:

DESEGREGATION OF THE ATLANTA PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Students, both white and Negro, share a major responsibility toward achieving peaceful and orderly compliance with the Atlanta Pupil Placement Plan. The great majority of students are good school citizens. It becomes the responsibility of this great majority to prepare and conduct themselves in such a way that the few students who are trouble-makers will be discouraged and stopped from doing things that tend to upset a smooth transition from segregated to desegregated schools. A good adult discussion leader, one who is skilled in group discussion techniques and who possesses a knowledge of the necessary facts, can contribute greatly to the success of a student movement dedicated to the preservation of dignity and honor.

The following outline of suggestions may prove helpful:

I. THE DISCUSSION GROUP

A. It should be small - between 10 and 20 is the ideal.

B. It should be a natural grouping - a camp group, students at a particular school, members of a particular club or church group, etc.

C. It may include both sexes but there is probably an advantage in having a man lead an all-male group and a woman lead a girls' group. In a mixed group boys may be more interested in impressing the girls and vice versa than in expressing themselves freely and truthfully.

D. The group should meet in an environment conducive to an informal, relaxed and friendly discussion.

E. The leader should have a friendly and respected relationship already established with the group.

II. GETTING THE DISCUSSION STARTED

A. Socio-Drama

1. Role playing
2. Contrived situations

B. Guest Speaker or Panel Presentation

1. Divide into small groups to discuss afterwards.

C. Use a Naturally Related Topic such as "How Can We Apply Our School (or club or agency) Motto to the Reality of Desegregation?" - or "How Can We Make Democracy a Success?"

D. Check with Atlanta Chapter, AAUN for information on films and records.

III. THE DISCUSSION

A. Introduction

1. It is advisable to make clear in a brief, concise way the purpose of the discussion and to bring out the following points:

   a. the purpose of the discussion is not to debate the merits or demerits of desegregation.
   b. it is to discuss the Atlanta Plan and the laws AS THEY ARE and the effect upon the school and the community.
   c. it is to discuss what the group can do as individuals or together to help the school and the community maintain dignity and honor.

B. The Atlanta Plan

1. It would be well to give a brief and general explanation of the Plan and then invite questions on details and on the school department's rules and regulations for implementing the Plan.

   a. do not discuss how the Plan should or could be changed - it is the Plan that has been accepted by the Federal Courts.
   b. be prepared with as much factual information as possible.

2. Discuss how the Plan will affect a particular school and/or the high schools and community in general.

   a. remember that students in the 8th grade and up will be taking part in a new experience.
   b. remember also that many responsible students, although not expressing themselves verbally, are insecure about their own place in a changed situation.
   c. be prepared to answer questions concerning school standards, health, social activities, athletics, communism, the NAACP, etc.
   d. discuss the necessity for evaluation of all information and opinions to determine whether based upon fact, myth or prejudice.
   e. if necessary, ask some questions:
      1) Are all people who express fear of desegregation prejudiced?
      2) What fears do you have?
      3) What is the factual basis for your fears?
      4) What can you do about your own fears?
   f. discuss the necessity for basing judgment on people as individuals and not on race stereotypes.
   g. discuss suggestions for a positive approach--i.e. "being friendly in a natural way."

3. Discuss what Youth can do

   a. some positive suggestions:
      1) no matter what happens, go to school
      2) avoid situations which would invite trouble
      3) do not let the trouble-maker bait you
      4) remember that the trouble-maker seeks notoriety - do all you can to keep him from becoming a "hero"
      5) make known as individuals or as a group your desire to assume a positive leadership role.

COMMITTEE FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION
BOX 8192
New Orleans 22, Louisiana

WHY NOT PRIVATE SCHOOLS?

As Louisiana citizens become increasingly aware that their public schools must either close or desegregate November 14, there is a growing amount of earnest but uninformed talk of setting up private schools.

LEGALLY, FINANCIALLY AND SCHOLASTICALLY, can Louisiana provide a private school system for all its school-age children?

ON THE LEGAL FRONT.....the judicial proceedings in Virginia and Arkansas have already eliminated many of the devices on which some persons mistakenly pin their hopes.

Federal courts have found unconstitutional: the use of public money for private schools, the operation of private schools with publicly-paid teachers, the leasing or selling of public school buildings for the operation of private schools. (see appendix for specific cases)

Among the schemes to circumvent segregation, the tuition grant plan is sometimes suggested.

In considering whether tuition grants could provide substitutes for public schools, it should be kept in mind that:

1. So far, tuition grants elsewhere have operated only where public schools are also provided.
2. Accredited private schools charge a tuition of about $400 on the elementary level, $600 at the high school level.
3. Louisiana and New Orleans, in particular, have a great many private schools already. Those pupils, now being financed by parents with sufficient means, would have to be included in any tuition grant plan.
4. Where the state intervenes with direction and controls, the risk is immediately increased that the private schools will be classified by the courts as, in fact, public schools and therefore subject to de-segregation. The abuses inherent in hastily set-up, uncontrolled, unsupervised private schools should give planners serious pause.

HOW DOES THE TUITION GRANT SYSTEM WORK IN VIRGINIA?

Here are the facts, documented in a recent study.

As of last May, tuition grants by the state of Virginia numbered 4,029 at a cost of $778,703. (The amount of the grants varied, up to a maximum of $250 per pupil.)

Many of these grants went to students already enrolled in private schools. NEARLY HALF OF THE GRANTS WENT TO STUDENTS IN TOWNS NOT EVEN AFFECTED AS YET BY DESEGREGATION.

An exhaustive and well-documented analysis of the legal aspects of the private school plan has been published by Dr. D. G. Green and Dr. W. E. Gauerke, both faculty members of Emory University.

Here are some of their findings:

"No one should believe he can escape the ruling of the Supreme Court regarding school segregation by sending his children to a school which is supported, directly or indirectly, by tax funds. Regardless of the label attached thereto, the school will be declared a public school by the courts. Evasion is strictly against the law. Governmental measure designed to evade the conclusions of the courts will be struck down as unconstitutional."

WHAT ABOUT TUITION GRANTS FOR STUDENTS TO ATTEND THE PRIVATE SCHOOLS OF THEIR CHOICE?

The Green-Gauerke study states: "Tuition grants for attendance of children in private schools can be valid ONLY if made to the individual pupil without ANY STATE REGULATION OR SHRED OF CONTROL. The private school must exist without ANY TRACE OR EVIDENCE of state, county, or municipal control and be directly supported by NO public tax funds."

Let us consider some of the practical aspects of this hypothetical "tuition-grant plan."

If outright grants of money are made, many parents whose financial needs may outweigh their interest in education will find ways to use the money for other purposes than sending children to school. And against such abuses, the state would find it difficult to set up adequate legal safeguards, for it might then come under the federal ban on "state action" in the use of public money for private schools.

Without these legal safeguards, we can imagine the temptation dangled by these hundreds of thousands of unsupervised tuition dollars for unscrupulous get-rich-quick school operators. (Witness the abuses of the G.I. Bill provisions).

The Green-Gauerke study estimated that per pupil cost of education under a tuition-grant system would be at least double that now spent by public schools and might easily be triple the amount.

Students now paying tuition to such private schools as Newman, Metairie Country Day, Ridgewood, etc., would, of course, be eligible for such grants, and it is reasonable to expect that students in parochial schools would also qualify for the grants.

The cost would be astronomical.

And the legality of such grants, even if they are COMPLETELY UNCONTROLLED, is extremely questionable. For there is the question, "Can there be power to tax for an object not within the purposes for which governments have committeed themselves?"

WHAT ABOUT PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY?

Local spokesmen for the private school plan often point to Prince Edward County, Va., as a model for the State of Louisiana.

This small rural county (15,398 population) has a plan of sorts, offering a private school for white children.

But examine its plan closely and think of its implications for a state the size of Louisiana.

All public schools in Prince Edward county were closed in September, 1959, and the county ceased to levy taxes for education. With the savings from the resulting 53 per cent reduction in local taxes, local citizens were expected to be able and willing to support the private school, which now serves the white children of the county. However, taxes have been levied again for this current year, but at a higher rate and tuition is being charged the parents of each student. Also, moves have been initiated already asking court-directed resumption of public education in Prince Edward County, and the status of the Prince Edward private school is shaky.

It was in Virginia that the James vs. Almond case made it clear that a state may not close public schools in any part of a state to avoid a federal court order when schools are open in any other part of the state.

If no taxes for the public schools were levied in Louisiana, does any reasonable person believe that voluntary contributors, business or other, would even begin to match the $242,388,000 annual operating expenditures of the Louisiana school system, when they would not do it in Prince Edward County?

Think of community attitude generally toward millage increases for school support. Will a citizenry reluctant to add a few mills to its tax bill dig deeply enough to pay for a system predicted to cost double the present one?

In a handful of locations, there have been experiments in private education. All were unsuccessful. All have gone out of business.

WOULD IT BE FEASIBLE FOR SUCH INSTITUTIONS AS CHURCHES TO SET UP TRULY PRIVATE SCHOOLS, WITHOUT GENERAL PUBLIC FINANCIAL SUPPORT?

In Little Rock, the Baptist High School, offering only 25-1/2 high school credits, found itself running in the red$2,000 monthly, even though it had free use of church buildings. Parents of some students found even the nominal $20 a month fee too expensive.

EDUCATIONALLY, CHILDREN IN HASTILY SET-UP PRIVATE SCHOOLS WOULD SUFFER. Accreditation required at least a year. Libraries, laboratories, enrichment courses, extracurricular activities, athletics -- all require much advance planning and expensive physical plants.

The call to arms of "Let's start a private school? has a brave sound, but in the cold, harsh light of law and practical fact, such talk is seen to be sheer bravado.

Governor Faubus of Arkansas and Governor Almond of Virginia issued many a resounding statement of defiance before the truth was brought home to them, in the tragic closing of schools. No satisfactory means could be found to operate any other than public schools. After a period of dislocation, schools re-opened in accordance with previous federal court rulings.

IF THE TRANSITION FROM PUBLIC TO PRIVATE SCHOOLS WERE AS SIMPLE TO ESTABLISH AS SOME WOULD INDICATE, THEN SURELY ARKANSAS AND VIRGINIA WITH THEIR AVOWED DETERMINATION WOULD HAVE SUCCEEDED IN THEIR FIGHT. Instead they had to capitulate to federal court orders.

Must we learn their lesson the same hard way, through loss of school time and economic slump?

Can we not take up the school question at THIS historic moment, accepting what the courts have ruled that we must accept and looking toward peaceable and suitable means of adjusting to the inevitable?

WITH REGARD TO LEASING OR SELLING SCHOOL BUILDINGS
Aaron vs Cooper - U.S. Ct. of Appeals - 8th Cir. 9/29/58
Temp. Res. Order - "Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered that appellees..... are hereby restrained from taking any further action to transfer possession, control, or operation, directly or indirectly, of the senior high schools of the Little Rock School District...

"The irreparable injury.....are that appellees will turn over to a private corporation the senior high schools of the Little Rock School District and the facilities thereof for the apparent operation as segregated schools; that such segregated high schools are intended public wise to serve the purpose and to take the place of the previous high school operations of the L.R.S.D. for the purpose apparently of nullifying the racial integration.."
Final decision by 8th cir. ct.

WITH REGARD TO PAYMENT OF TEACHERS
U.S. Dist. Court, Western Dist., Va. Civil Action #51 - October 9, 1958
Allen vs. The School Board of City of Charlottesville, Va.

"The defendents, School Board, agents, servants or successors are restrained from and enjoined from permitting or allowing their employees, while being paid out of public funds, their facilities or equipment to be used in the education or instruction of pupils eligible for admission, enrollment or education in the Charlottsville Schools unless such instruction or education is afforded to plaintiffs on a racial nondiscriminatory basis in compliance with this courts previous orders herein."

WITH REGARD TO WITHHOLDING OF STATE FUNDS

Decree issued by U.S. Court of Appeals of the 4th Circuit at Richmond, Va. ------ (Ruling on "Massive Resistance" Laws of Va. "No one school or any one grade may be closed to evade the court order. Defendants are enjoined in engaging in any evasive schemes or devices looking to the cut-off of funds for schools or grades affected by the mixing of races or the closing or elimination of specific grades in such schools."

WITH REGARD TO EDUCATIONAL GRANTS
La. State Constitution, Article 4, Section 12:

"The funds, credit, property or things of value of the state, or of any political corporation thereof, shall not be loaned, pledged or granted to or for any person or persons, associations or corporations, public or private....."

DO YOU KNOW THE LAW ABOUT SCHOOLS?

In this time of questioning, the League of Women Voters of Georgia, a non-partisan organization, believes that you can best find the answers for yourself if you know the facts.

Basic to your consideration are these long-standing provisions of the Federal Constitution:

WITH REGARD TO CITIZENSHIP—

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge and privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States ...."

U. S. Constitution Art. XIV, Sec.1

WHEN LAWS CONFLICT——

"This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the Supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Consitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

U. S. Consitution, Art. Vl, Sec. 2

"The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States, and of the several states, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."

U. S. Constitution, Art. Vl, Sec. 3

WHAT DOES THE SUPREME COURT SAY?

"We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs and others similarly situated for whom the actions have been brought are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment."

Brown v. Board of Education, May 17, 1954

Fourteenth Amendment

". . . No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

"Full implementation of these constitutional principles may require solution of varied local school problems. School authorities have the primary responsibility for elucidating, assessing, and solving these problems; courts will have to consider whether the action of school authorities constitutes good faith implementation of the governing constitutional principles .....

"While giving weight to these public and private considerations, the courts will require that the defendants make a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance with our May 17, 1954 ruling ....."

Brown v. Board of Education, May 31, 1955

WHAT DO FEDERAL COURT RULINGS FOLLOWING THE MAY, 1954 DECISIONS SAY?

The courts have begun the long process of clarifying the constitutionality of plans to evade desegregation by various methods, including school closing. Summaries of decisions pertinent to present Georgia law are:

WITH REGARD TO WITHHOLDING OF STATE FUNDS: In Borders v. Rippy on July 23, 1957, 247 Fed. (2nd) 368, of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the fact that a school district will be deprived of state funds if it complies with an integration order does not relieve the court of its duty to apply the law of the land as set forth in the School Segregation Cases, nor does it relieve the school board of its duty to comply with the court order.

WITH REGARD TO EDUCATIONAL GRANTS OF PUBLIC FUNDS: In Kelly v. the Board of Education of the City of Nashville, 158 F. Supp. 272, the court held that the use of public money for separate schools, even though elected by the parents, is "on its face antagonistic to the principles declared by the Supreme Court in the two Brown cases, and is, therefore unconstitutional."

WITH REGARD TO LEASING SCHOOLS: The Supreme Court decision in the case of Little Rock, September, 1958, held unanimously: In short, the constitutional rights of children not to be discriminated against in school admission on grounds of race or color declared by this court in the Brown case, can neither be nullified openly and directly by state legislators or state executive or judicial officers, nor nullified indirectly by them through evasive schemes for segregation whether attempted 'ingeniously' or ungenuously'."

and

"...the 14th Amendment forbids states to use their governmental powers to bar children on racial grounds from attending schools where there is state participation through any arrangement, management, funds, or property."

WITH REGARD TO TEACHERS IN "PRIVATE" SCHOOLS: In Allen v. School Board of Charlottesville and Kilby v. School Board of Warren County, U. S. District Judge John Paul on Oct. 8, 1958, said he was "not willing to countenance" the operation of private schools with publicly-paid teachers since it would be "in clear violation of the mandate of the United States Supreme Court."

WITH REGARD TO PUPIL PLACEMENT: On Nov. 24, 1958, the Supreme Court affirmed the ruling of the U. S. District Court of the Northern District of Alabama (in Hotel Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham Board of Education of Jefferson County, USDC, ND, Ala.) that Alabama's School Placement Law is not unconstitutional on its face. The decision of the lower court is: "The School Placement Law furnishes the legal machinery for an orderly administration of the public schools in a constitutional manner by the admission of qualified pupils, upon a basis of individual merit without regard to their race or color. We must presume that it will be so administered. If not, in some future proceeding it is possible that it may be declared unconstitutional in its application."

The North Carolina Pupil Placement Law has been judicially sustained because race is not one of the factors specified as controlling the assignment of pupils and desegregation is not penalized. The Virginia Act was held unconstitutional on its face because it required the Pupil Placement Board to consider the race of the child in making assignments to schools. (Adkins v. School Board of Newport News).

S. O. S. NEWSLETTER #4 - - - 413 Hillary Street

TO ALL SOS MEMBERS:

As most of you know, there are strong rumors that a special session of the Louisiana legislature may be called to deal with the integration crisis. We cannot say, nor can anyone else, how much truth there is in these rumors, but this newsletter will prepare you for the action we of SOS must take if a session is called.

Any interference in the management of our schools, even if such interference were eventually to be declared unconstitutional, menaces our whole educational system in this state. We must make it clear to the governor and to the legislature that we will not tolerate the destruction, whole or partial, of our schools.

WHAT YOU CAN DO IF THE SESSION IS CALLED

You can volunteer to go to Baton Rouge, both to talk to all available legislators and to indicate by your presence in the capitol, that we in New Orleans, feel strongly on this question. If you can go... and we hope that many of you will be able to make the trip, please call any of the following people:

Mrs. Paul Murison....UN 1-2484; Mrs. Betty Wisdom UN 1-2791 or Mrs. Rolf Dlugos TW 9-7519.

If you cannot go please write the governor and the legislators from your district, urging them to save the schools.

WHAT YOU CAN DO NOW

If any of you have friends in other Louisiana communities, please alert them to the danger which faces their schools as well as ours. Remind them that in the final analysis one closed school in Louisiana means that all of our schools must eventually close. Ask them to write their legislators and the governor now about the necessity for open schools. Ask them to go to Baton Rouge in person, should a session be called.

On the next page you will find a blank form designed to gather names for a long telegram, to be presented to the governor and the leaders in both legislative houses in the event of a special session. Please fill it out and mail it, together with ten cents a signature to defray the cost of the telegram, to Mrs. Rolf Dlugos, 1520 Jefferson Ave. While it may seem premature of us to begin collecting these signatures now, the fact remains that if we waited until a special call was issued it would be too late to gather more than a handful of names. If the November fourteenth deadline nears without a call, we will send the telegram anyway, for the proponents of closed schools are sure to save their deadliest ammunition for those last few days. A similar telegram, sent in Georgia by the HOPE organization, was highly effective in rallying public opinion to the side of open schools.

A REVIEW OF RECENT EVENTS

The Orleans Parish School Board has voted to implement the Pupil Placement Act of 1960.

A Baton Rouge open schools group, called O.P.E.N., has been formed and is working hard to alert that community to the danger it faces. A group of Baton Rouge ministers has come out for open schools.

Four candidates have announced their intention to run for a vacancy on the Orleans Parish School Board. That post will be filled in the election of November eighth unless a second primary becomes necessary. The candidates are:

Mrs. John McCoy, who favors open but segregated schools. Mrs. McCoy has not stated her position on integration versus closed schools, but it seems likely that she would favor closure.

Mr. John Singreen, who has referred to himself as 'another Emile Wagner'. Mr. Singreen would, as Mr. Wagner does, favor closed schools rather than integrated schools.

Mr. Caryll Vesy, who has declared himself firmly in favor of segregation. Mr. Vesy is running on a platform of increased school services which would require a raise in the present property tax should his program be implemented.

Mr. Matthew Sutherland, the incumbent board member, a segregationist who, nonetheless, believes that the schools must be kept open even if integration comes to pass. Mr. Sutherland is a past president of the school board and a respected and able school board member.

We urge all members of SOS to study the platforms of these candidates and to vote for the one best qualified to deal with our problems.

DALLAS' OPPORTUNITY

The federal courts have decided that we must desegregate our public schools in Dallas this fall. No matter how we may feel about this personally, it is now a matter of law and order.

In America, every person can act the way he wants so long as he doesn't break the law. A good citizen doesn't take the law into his own hands simply because he doesn't like a law -- he tries to change it by peaceful and legal means. A lawbreaker is a bad citizen and deserves the disapproval of his neighbors.

For the good of all of us in Dalls, the new school law must be accpeted this fall in a peaceful manner. Violence hurts all of us, not just a few. Violence can:

Destroy our city

Ruin our schools

Endanger your job

Destroy the health and well being of all our children

We don't want this to happen in Dallas. Dallas is a great city. Let's keep it that way!

Produced in consultation with the Greater Dallas Council of Churches, the Dallas Bar Associton, and the Dallas County Medical Society.

What about our children?

It is your job and mine to help our children face the changes at school this fall peacefully. But --

If we parents fail

If our city's leaders fail

If some of us turn to violence

--it is our children who will pay the price. Many will undergo fears they can never forget.

Public desegregation does not mean a loss of personal freedom. Each of us can still make our own friends and bring up our children as we think best.

No one in Dallas would try to tell you how to raise your family or handle your private affairs, but we do ask you to teach your children to abide by the law, and to keep Dallas peaceful.

A peaceful and law-abiding city is the best place in which to bring up your children the way you want!

Produced in consultation with the Greater Dallas Council of Churches, the Dallas Bar Association, and the Dallas County Medical Society.

Resolution adopted unanimously by Atlanta East and West District ministers of The Methodist Church meeting at Sandy Springs Methodist Church - May 29, 1961:

As Christians we are concerned for the welfare of all people who are involved in the rapid social changes taking place in our world today.

We are disturbed particularly over recent racial troubles. We believe that our people do not want a repetition of mob violence here, but that it can happen unless all our citizens are prepared in advance to prevent its recurrence.

Our Discipline reminds us that "it is the duty of all Christians, and especially of all Christian ministers, to observe and obey the laws and commands of the governing or supreme authority of the country . . . and to use all laudable means to encourage and enjoin obedience to the powers that be." (From the Articles of Religion, paragraph 87 of the 1960 Discipline of The Methodist Church.)

As Christian ministers we pledge our support to all responsible community leaders who are working to create and extend an atmosphere of understanding and good will among all the people of our community.

We call upon our people to accept with dignity and calm the changes being required by law, and particularly to work for peaceful compliance with the Atlanta Pupil Placement Plan now in operation according to law.

We believe that now is the time for our churches to provide discussion opportunities for young people and adults so that each person may think through the Christian position and be prepared in advance to do what is morally right when changes come.

'Out of Conviction'

A SECOND STATEMENT on the

SOUTH'S RACIAL CRISIS

signed by 312 Ministers
of Greater Atlanta

Printed by GEORGIA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

THE SECOND STATEMENT

Three hundred and twelve Ministers and Rabbis of the Greater Atlanta area, acting as individual citizens issued a statement on November 22nd, 1958, calling for the preservation of the public school system. Sixteen different denominations are represented among the signers. The text of the statement follows:

On November 3, 1957, a statement dealing with the racial crisis in the South, and signed by eighty Atlanta ministers, was released for publication. The fact that this statement, often referred to as "The Atlanta Manifesto", received widespread publicity through the secular and religious press, radio, and television, not only in the South but across the nation and abroad, was an eloquent commentary upon the nature of the crisis in which we are involved and upon the failure of many of our leaders to confront the problems of our day in a spirit of realism.

Six principles set forth in this statement as essential to the solution of our problem may be summarized as follows:

1. Freedom of speech must at all costs be preserved.

2. As Americans and as religious leaders, we have an obligation to obey the law.

3. The Public School System must not be destroyed.

4. Hatred and scorn for those of another race, or for those who hold a position different from our own, can never be justified.

5. Communication between responsible leaders of the races must be maintained.

6. Our difficulties cannot be solved in our own strength or in human wisdom but only through prayer and in obedience to the will of God.

The months which have elapsed since the signing of that statement have been a period of deepening danger. The events of the recent past have been such as to call for growing concern on the part of all responsible citizens. In the light of these events, we are more convinced than ever of the fundamental truth of these six principles. It is abundantly clear that they cannot be ignored with impunity.

Because of our involvement in this situation, as citizens and religious leaders, it has seemed to many Atlanta clergymen that some further statement on their part is appropriate. Out of that conviction comes this second statement. Once more we speak as individual citizens of Georgia and of the United States, having authority to represent no one other than ourselves. Once more we speak in humility and penitence. At the same time, we speak out of the deep conviction of our souls as to what is right. We believe some facts are now so clear as to throw additional light upon the problems which confront us.

I. It is clearer now than ever before that, at all costs, freedom of speech must be preserved. During the year which has past, it has not become easier to speak the truth concerning our situation. There are still forces which seek to deny freedom of thought and of expression to all who do not insist upon maintaining a rigid pattern of segregation. Economic reprisals, social ostracism, and even physical violence are constant threats to those who do not conform. Such threats strike at the very heart of democracy. As we insist upon the right of honest conviction — whether right or wrong — to be heard, we would pay tribute to the courageous individuals and groups in various walks of life who have insisted that our problem must be faced in a spirit of realism, of sanity, and of good will.

II. It is clearer now than ever before that we must obey the law. Those who insist that the decision of the Supreme Court on segregation in the public schools has no binding force do great injury to our people. The Supreme Court's interpretation of the Constitution has the effect of law in our country. It is possible for that Court to err, just as it is possible for Congress to enact bad laws. The citizens of our country have the right to work through legal processes to secure the correction of judicial errors or the repeal of undesirable legislation. They do not have the right to defy laws simply because they personally hold them to be unwise or harmful. A policy of obeying only those laws or those rulings of the Court with which we agree leads inevitably to anarchy. It is time for us to face up to the fact that, under the ruling of the Supreme Court, made in the discharge of its constitutional authority, enforced segregation in the public schools is now without support in, and contrary to, national law. At times in her history the Church has opposed civil law in the name of the claims of the higher laws of God. However, we believe that the Constitution of the United States in its provisions for human rights is in accord with Divine Law, and we must, therefore, learn to live with and under the law.

We do not believe in the wisdom of massive integration and are sincerely opposed to the amalgamation of the races. We reaffirm our conviction that the integrity of each race should be maintained on a basis of mutual esteem and free choice, rather than of force. There are some areas in which some integration in schools at this time would be possible without insurmountable difficulty, as has already been demonstrated in certain sections of the South; while there are other areas where such integration would involve needless hardship and grave danger. We have the hope that, if our leaders will offer evidence of good faith toward providing constitutional rights for all citizens, the federal government will be willing to leave the working out of details in local hands. We believe it is possible, under the ruling of the Supreme Court, for States to take reasonable steps to comply with the law of the land and at the same time give due consideration to local situations and avoid an indiscriminate desegregation of the public schools.

III. It is clearer now than ever before that the Public School System must be preserved. Many of our people have been led to believe that through some ficticious legal device we could close our public schools and still provide for public education through tax funds. Recent developments in Arkansas and Virginia serve to make it abundantly clear that any such hope is based solely upon wishful thinking. The choice which confronts us now is either the end of an enforced segregation in public schools or no public schools whatever. We are alarmed to note that many political leaders are apparently willing to offer no better solution than the closing of public schools and the destruction of public education in order to maintain what has been inappropriately described as "our sacred way of life". It is inconceivable that the South should deliberately destroy its dearly bought system of public education. The results of such action in the impoverishment of countless lives, in the loss to our section, even from a purely economic, ,viewpoint would be a tragedy of the first magnitude. It is not likely that the South would ever recover fully from the consequences of such action. Obviously, the closing of the public schools means a small and favored portion of our youth would be educated in private institutions, while the great majority, White and Negro, would recieve no school training worthy of the name. No democratic society can tolerate that situation, nor do we believe our citizens wish to sacrifice the welfare of our youth.

In this connection we would voice an emphatic protest against any suggestion that church property be used as a means of circumventing the law of the nation. The churches and synagogues owe a tremendous debt to the State and this we believe they would gladly repay in any legitimate way possible. There are times when the educational equipment of the churches should be offered to supplement the public school buildings in providing space for our growing school population, provided that the separation of Church and State shall always be recognized and maintained in such an agreement. We concur that churches and synagogues have the right, as they have always had, to engage as they may deem wise in educational enterprise in the interest of their constituencies. We believe, however, their facilities should not be offered nor demanded as a means for defying the constituted authority of our national government.

IV. It is clearer now than ever before that hatred and scorn for those of another race, or for those who hold a position different from our own can never be justified. All hatred between races and groups within society carries with it the constant threat of violence and bloodshed, as has been evidenced by the bombing of churches, synagogues, and schools even while this statement was being prepared. Defiance of one law leads to disrespect for all law. We would call upon our political leaders scrupulously to avoid the type of inflammatory utterance which has characterized too many public pronouncements in recent months and to exert an influence for sanity, for justice, and for kindness. We believe that multitudes of voters in the South as in all America are far more prepared to respond to and support fair-minded and statesmanlike attitudes and policies in political life than these men have realized. In any event, political power is by no means so important as to justify its attainment by the sacrifice of justice, of kindness, and of truth, and by the unleashing of these emotions which threaten the very life of our people.

V. It is clearer now than ever before that communication between responsible leaders of the races must be maintained. The time of danger is also the time of opportunity. It may well be that we are passing through that darkest hour which comes just before the dawn. Never has there been greater need than now for men of good will in both races to voice their convictions, to exert their influence, and to maintain open lines of communication. We are heartened by the intelligent concern and struggle of an increasing number of groups who are facing the issue and its implications. We are likewise heartened by the constructive results which are coming from those lines of communication which do exist between the races.

VI. It is clearer now than ever before that our difficulties cannot be solved in our own strength or in human wisdom but only through prayer, obedience to God, and under His blessing. The situation which confronts us is one which calls for sincere penitence, for earnest prayer, for clear thought, and for courageous action.

Believing sincerely in the principles set forth in this statement, we therefore propose the following practical steps:

1. We appeal to our churches and synagogues to encourage and promote within their fellowship a free and intelligent discussion of the issues we confront. We believe such discussion should and would give careful consideration to the moral, spiritual, and legal aspects of the crisis we face in our beloved Southland.

2. We appeal to our community and state leaders to give their most creative thought to maintaining a sound public school plan. Such plan must be consistant with the law of the land, respect and preserve the rights of all citizens, and assure the preservation of our system of public education.

3. We request the appointment of a Citizens'Commission to preserve the harmony of our community. The public officials of our city have earned the tribute of the nation for their refusal to condone violence and their efforts to realize worthy race relations. We believe that in the future the need will be great for the support of calm, intelligent public opinion. Atlanta possesses business, civic, educational, legal, political, and religious leadership of the quality to afford this support. We therefore request that representatives of this leadership from the races involved be formed into a Citizens' Commission to advise and assist in maintaining harmony and good will among all our citizens.

Every section of our state also possesses the same able leadership. We therefore believe that the appointment of a similar Citizens' Commission by the state administration would serve to preserve harmony among the citizens of Georgia.

o

We call upon all citizens to unite with us in dedicating ourselves to the solution of our problems humbly, patiently, in a spirit of realism, and with God's help.

Dear (First Name)

As I'm sure you know by now, I have a one-track mind when it comes to Open Schools. After a relatively quiet period, we have started to move again, as you will see from the enclosed reprint. I feel there is a good chance that we can convince the Legislature in January to keep open the public schools of Georgia.

My own enthusiasm is at fever pitch, and I hope this makes up for the fact that I am a complete amateur at asking for money. I trust you will overlook the amateurishness and recognize the urgent need. It would be catastrophic if we should fail now to save our school system.

I am asking a few of my friends to make a special large gift for our final effort before and during the "Last Chance" Legislature. Your gift will help put over this "Operation Last Chance" -- but it will do more. It will prepare Georgia for peaceful compliance with the inevitable. For even worse than failure in the Legislature would be a repetition of Little Rock.

Please give as generously as you can to (name of your local Open Schools Committee). Enthusiasm will go only so far. It takes dollars to carry on the fightt effectively. If you have any questions about your gift or wish to earmark it for a special purpose, please call me.

Thank you very much for what I know will be a thoughtful and generous response.

Warmly,

Security and Precautionary Measures on Opening Days at Brown, Henry Grady, Murphy and Northside High Schools

A. General

The following conditions and procedures should prevail in all four of the high schools:

I. The most careful attention must be directed to the proper scheduling and programming of the transferred students, not only with respect to subjects but particularly the homeroom and class teachers.
   (a) Where possible the transferred students should be assigned to the same homeroom and teachers.
   (b) Students in classes to which Negro students are scheduled should be allowed to seat themselves as they choose, not alphabetically or by particular design.
   (c) Transferred students are to be transported to and from their respective schools in one car, probably by a member of their own race, at specified times and places. A clear understanding should be worked out about use of eating and toilet facilities, and activities.

II. Principals and teachers will be held accountable for the good order of students on the school grounds and in the school buildings. To reduce opportunities for confusion and disorder the following are considered to be necessary regulations:
   (a) Students will report directlyto designated areas -- homerooms, auditoriums, or cafeterias, as determined by the principal. Under no circumstances should students be allowed to loiter on sidewalks, parking areas, yards, corridors, or toilets.
   (b) A selected group of teachers should be on assigned duty with the principal at the building as early as the building is open. All teachers are to be in their homerooms or assigned stations before 8:00 A.M. Students should not be permitted to leave their homerooms without good cause.
   (c) A carefully detailed schedule for the day should be determined and communicated to the faculty and students in order to reduce uncertainty and confusion about the length of periods, traffic, recess assignments, and so on.
   (d) Principals and teachers will not have time to give to conferences with parents or to other visitors on the opening days. Parents should be informed of this fact politely but firmly.
   (e) Constant scrutiny should be directed to preventing strangers, former students, and adults from access to or traffic in the building or on school premises. Two plainclothes detectives in each building will be available to enforce this regulation.
   (f) Students should not be permitted to bring cameras or radios into the school building.

III. Despite the necessity for every precaution the principal and teachers should create and maintain a psychological climate calculated to reduce tension and excitement. To the highest degree possible, a normal, businesslike, and unstrained atmosphere should prevail.

IV. Principals are directed to write a letter to parents of students to inform them of safety measures and to solicit their help. The letter should request that necessary parent conferences be scheduled prior to the opening of school or after September 6; the letter should inform the parents about traffic patterns and restrictions and special conditions; and the letter should convey a note of assurance and optimism.

B. The News Media

I. Newspapermen, photographers, radio and television personnel will not be allowed in the school buildings, on the school premises, or on the sidewalks or streets adjacent to school premises. This is to say that the sidewalk on the opposite side of the street is the nearest limit to which representatives of the news media will be allowed. Students will not be permitted to loiter near, or talk with, news representatives while at school. Representatives of the news media will carry press cards issued by the Chief of Police. All others will be required to move on.

II. Area Superintendents will transmit, or authorize transmission by designated personnel, periodic releases of news and developments -- good or bad, favorable or unfavorable -- to a central receiving station at the City Hall. In the absence of a later plan, an amplifying attachment will be installed to central telephones to enable reporters to obtain news which is more complete and accurate than will be available from the sidewalk opposite the school. Straight telephone lines will be installed to insure immediate and uninterrupted opportunity for communication.

C. Police Protection

I. Specific objectives

(a) To insure a safe and efficient flow of vehicular and pedestrian traffic in the vicinity of the school.

(b) To prevent the formation of groups -- loiterers, curiosity seekers, mobs, or even observers -- on school yards, sidewalks, streets in or about the vicinity of the school.

(c) To keep traffic -- in automobiles or on foot -- moving.

(d) To screen out all unauthorized persons seeking entrance to school premises and buildings. Only school personnel and students will be authorized entrance.

(e) To enable, in general, the schoolto carry out its legal function without harm or interference.

II. Personnel

(a) Two detectives in plain clothes inside each building

(b) Regular traffic policemen plus such additional personnel as may be necessary to handle added traffic problems.

(c) Officer in charge to maintain local communication with assigned police personnel through utilization of walkie-talkies.

(d) Adequate mobile units -- motorcycle, wagon, cruise cars.

(e) Reserve details with special equipment.

III. Scope of Supervision

(a) Full police supervision of each school 24 hours each day, including use of K-9 detail at night.

D. Individual Schools

I. Brown High School

(a) Issuance of special parking stickers to faculty for use in gaining admission to facilities at rear of building -- with entrances from both Peeples and Beecher Streets.

(b) Sufficient police officers will be assigned to and around the school to maintain safe traffic conditions and to protect the safety and welfare of the students.

(c) Traffic flow as customary. Parking in legal spaces as customary.

II. Henry Grady High School

This building will require a larger detail because of the easy accessibility of the 26 different entrances to the building.

(a) Sufficient police officers will be assigned to and around the school to maintain safe traffic conditions and to protect the safety and welfare of the students.

(b) Traffic flow as follows:

(1) 10th St. as customary

(2)Monroe Drive as customary

(3) Charles Allen Drive -- between 8th St. and 10th St. -- open to traffic to discharge passengers only. Positively no parking.

(4) 8th St. -- between Monroe Dr. and Charles Allen Drive -- normal traffic conditions. Cars to discharge passengers but not permitted to block traffic. Normal and legal parking.

(c) Issuance of parking cards to faculty members for entrance to parking areas on school grounds.

(d) Students allowed to park in stadium and gym area if not accompanied by adult. No parking on Charles Allen Drive between 8th and 10th Streets.

III. Murphy High School

(a) Issuance of special parking cards to faculty for use in gaining admission to facilities in rear of building.

(b) Traffic policemen at Memorial and Clifton, in front of school building, and in front of gym.

(c) Sufficient police officers will be assigned to and around the school to maintain safe traffic conditions and to protect the safety and welfare of the students.

(d) Traffic flow as customary. Parking in legal spaces as customary.

(e) Restrict passage to rear of building to school personnel and students.

IV. Northside High School

(a) Issuance of special parking cards to faculty for use in gaining admission to facilities in front and side of building.

(b) Sufficient police officers will be assigned to and around the school to maintain safe traffic conditions and to protect the safety and welfare of the students.

(c) Traffic flow as customary. Parking in legal spaces as customary.

(d) Restrict passage to parking lot in front and on side to school personnel and students. Adults without park ing cards not admitted.

(e) Pedestrian and vehicular traffic kept moving on King wood Lane.

ARE ALL LOUISIANA STATE SCHOOLS IN DANGER OF BEING CLOSED IN SEPTEMBER?

YES: Judge Wright's ruling forbids the School Board to operate the Orleans Parish Schools on a segregated basis. State laws prohibit the spending of state moneys on any but segregated schools.

The Federal Court in Virginia ruled that states may not discriminate by closing some schools ordered to integrate and continue to operate others in the state. (James v Almond)

The only foreseeable result of this impasse is the closing of all schools in the state of Louisiana, either by federal injunction or by total removal of the state financial support.

WOULD CLOSING OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS RESOLVE THE QUESTION?

NO. When and if they reopen, the federal directive would still be in force. No other city or state similarly directed by a federal court has been able by law or by subterfuge to escape compliance.

During the months -- or years -- that the schools would be closed, the loss to the state would be catastrophic. From the experience of Arkansas and Virginia, we know that merchants suffer financial loss; the state loses new industries; schools lose good teachers permanently. And, of course, the loss in learning time by students is irreplaceable. (With the four high schools in Little Rock closed, merchants estimated their weekly loss at $167,000.)

IS IT REASONABLE TO ASSUME THAT GOVERNOR DAVIS HAS A WORKABLE SOLUTION TO THE PROBLEM?

Any position our governor thinks he might take has, in all probability, been tried and found void by the federal courts. If our governor has a plan that would stand the light of public view and hold up in court, there would be no need for the policy of secrecy that is prevailing today.

Governor Almond of Virginia, elected on a platform of "massive resistance" to desegregation, was determined to find a way to maintain his segregated schools. But he eventually came to this conclusion:

> "The only sure prevention of any integration anywhere in Virginia is the total abolition of every public school everywhere in Virginia..... I tell you now that we cannot reverse a final decree of the federal court.....I further tell you, notwithstanding the claims of some, that the General Assembly (i.e., the state legislature) cannot.....take over and operate the public school system and thereby negate the final decree of a federal court. People who permit themselves to be fooled by such delusions deserve to be fooled."

COULD OUR EXISTING SCHOOL BUILDINGS BE LEASED FOR THE OPERATION OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS?

U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, 8th Cir., found such a device to be unconstitutional, ruling in Aaron v. Cooper that Little Rock school District "was restrained from taking any further action to transfer possession, control or operation directly or indirectly of the senior high schools of Little Rock."

EVEN THOUGH SCHOOL BUILDINGS ARE NOT AVAILABLE WHY CAN'T WE LAUNCH A CITYWIDE OR STATEWIDE SYSTEM OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS?

In the first place, the use of public money for separate (private) schools has been declared unconstitutional. Moreover, the failures of such makeshift measures contributed largely to the change of community attitude that brought the re-opening of public schools in Little Rock and Norfolk.

Parents and students found that the cost of the private schools was prohibitive and the quality of education was poor. Curriculum was limited to a minimum. Physical plants were inadequate and often uncomfortable. Lost were the advantages now considered an integral part of our school system -- laboratories, libraries, foreign languages, art, music, student publications, and sports. With the high requirements for college entrance existing throughout the country today, the graduate of an unaccredited high school (which these private schools would be) would find it practically impossible to continue his education.

Such "co-operative" private school ventures failed to reach large numbers of the students. Many of Louisianas' pupils, once displaced from their public schools, would never receive any more formal education.

IS THERE ANY SOLUTION, CONSISTENT WITH JUDGE WRIGHT'S RULING, WHICH WILL ENABLE OUR PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM TO SURVIVE?

Already on the Louisiana statute books is a provision for "pupil placement" on the basis of individual merit, without mention of race. Seven states have passed similar laws, and in court tests, they have been found not unconstitutional. Under the working of a similar law, in Nashville 1% of Negro students were integrated without incident. An additional 2% of Negro students eligible for integration, requested transfers out of the biracial schools, preferring their own schools.

In Norfolk, 21 Negro children attended formerly all-white junior and senior high schools, allowing 10,000 white children who had been locked out of those schools for a whole semester, to return to them.

Under pupil placement, three schools in Charlotte, N.C. absorbed a total of 15 Negro students, thus providing NOT TOTAL, BUT TOKEN INTEGRATION. Schools were NOT closed. School standards were NOT lowered. Federal directives were NOT flouted.

Section 7 of the Louisiana Statute 259 of 1958, which is the Louisiana Placement Law, states: "....no child shall be compelled to attend any school in which the races are co-mingled when a written objection of the parent or guardian has been filed with the School Board. If in connection therewith, a requested assignment or transfer is refused by the Board, the parent or guardian may notify the Board in writing that he is unwilling for the pupil to remain in the school to which assigned, and the assignment and further attendance of the pupil shall thereupon terminate and such child shall be entitled to such aid for education as may be authorized by law."

HOW CAN THE AVERAGE CITIZEN REGISTER HIS SUPPORT FOR THE PRESERVATION OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

A strong surge of public opinion has been the force that restored public education in other areas.

Our governor, our legislature, our city councils, and our school boards are all responsive to the desires of the voters.

We should let them know that we are alerted to the crisis that faces us. We should let them know that we are studying the experiences of other communities; that we know which measures have failed and which have succeeded. We must let them know that we feel strongly that the closing of the public schools is no solution and is, in fact, unacceptable to the citizens of this state.

In view of all of these reasons it would seem necessary that parents interested in seeing public education continued should go on record as groups and also as individuals to encourage our governor, legislature and school boards to continue efforts to keep our schools open as public schools. Only concerted parental pressure will enable us in Louisiana to continue public education.

REPORT NO. 1

In hopes that this report will stimulate your interest in our present school crisis, we send for your consideration and information the following on the activities of the BACK TO SCHOOL Trust Fund. As you know, the purpose of the fund is to provide financial assistance to parents who have suffered economic losses as a result of having their children attend the two desegregated schools in New Orleans. The money is given to them as a reassurance, not as a reward. A total of $2,234.00 has been received from persons in eleven states--from California to New York, Washington to Louisiana. As of February 28, 1961, we have a balance in the fund of $1,319.75. So far, the following has been accomplished:

Report on Families

Family A

A Baptist seminary student was employed by a shoe store in a section of town with a very active White Citizens Council branch. His employer was besieged by phone calls threatening a picket line unless the student was fired. The young man offered to resign and this was accepted. Reimbursements were given to this family over a six-weeks' period, then he received his degree and was assigned to a pastorate.

Family B

Mr. B was employed as a night clerk at a motel. When it was disclosed that his children were attending the boycotted school, he was told that the motel was cutting down on staff and he lost his job. He has been reimbursed for salary loss; he has now moved out of the district and no longer has a child in the boycotted school. Efforts made to help him find re-employment have been unsuccessful.

Family C

Mr. C was employed as a cashier in a supermarket for three years. When his name appeared on the White Citizens Council list as having children attending the boycotted school, he was told by his employer to take the child out of school or lose his job. He kept his children in school. He then received notice to report to work at 9 a.m., which was impossible for him because of his classes at the seminary. He was reimbursed for the weeks he was unemployed and last week reported he had finally found temporaory employment and expressed his great appreciation for the assistance he had received.

Family D

Mr. D is a garbage collector for the City. He will not lose his job, but his fellow employees have made things difficult for him. His tire was slashed by vandals, and he was reimbursed for the tire.

Family E

Mr. E lost his job before the school crisis but complained that people were refusing him jobs because his child was in school. He has been given some assistance. After consulting with the social worker and his parish priest, it was decided that the only future assistance be given to him in the form of groceries through the parish priest and attempts be made to find him work.

Family F

When Mr. John Thompson took his child to McDonogh 19, which had previously had no white children in attendance, his landlady asked him to move. Mr. Thompson was called on by two committee members and assured that help was available if he needed it. No financial aid was given since he had not lost his job. He was advised that his landlady must give him 15 days notice before evicting him. He left town without asking for help.

In furnishing the meager economic necessities of these wonderful people, your gifts are a constant reminder of support and a source of inspiration to the few who are trying to keep alight the flame of decency in our community. Your continued support will be sincerely appreciated.

It is the Committee's hope and prayer that we will continue to justify your trust and confidence. As you may already know, our work is becoming increasingly difficult due to the recent passage of two laws by the Louisiana Legislature. The first makes it a crime to "bribe" or "offer to bribe" the parent or guardian of any school child to permit the child to attend school in violation of state law. This law provides that the fine be given to the informer who gives evidence resulting in conviction. The second law defines the crime of intimidation or interference in operation of public schools and also provides that the fine be given to the informer. The law further provides informer immunity and mandatory jail sentences. These two bills would "prohibit the intimidation" of parents to induce them to send their child to a desegregated public school.

"Intimidation" was broadly defined as any act, direct or indirect, that would "encourage, influence, prompt, reward or compensate" a child or parent to cause a child to attend a desegregated school. This law would have no application to threats or intimidation of parents who wanted to send their child to integrated schools. The law was designed to discourage them from doing so. These bills, of course, were directed towards the type of activity which we have been performing, and it is one indication of how successful this type of fund has been.

Please be assured that we will continue our work of encouragement and giving, in the hopes that within the near future the people of our community will more fully realize the true worth of the individual and thereby grow in respect for the dignity of man.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. R. R. Eckart
Secretary

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE SENATORS OF LOUISIANA:

The attached analysis of bills presently before you was prepared by a competent constitutional lawyer who has advised our organization from the beginning. This lawyer, together with several other members of our organization, devoted all of Saturday and worked until the early hours Sunday morning to prepare as simple a summary as possible.

If this legislation were deemed by its proponents to be capable of succeeding in its proposed purpose --maintenance of open and segregated schools-- we wonder why the necessity for its secrecy. The plain fact is, we believe, that this legislation cannot succeed.

Consider this reasoning: If House Bill 2 will prove successful, then why the necessity of all the other bills? If House Bill 2 does not prove effective, then it's reasonable to believe that most of the other bills will not stand the test of Federal Courts.

If House Bill 2, the interposition measure, is valid, and if the legislature succeeds in suspending the Brown case within the boundaries of Louisiana until the U. S. Constitution is amended and thus maintains open schools in Louisiana, we shall have nothing but praise for the men who saved our schools.

However, we take our cue from the men who prepared bills 10 through 30. If they had really believed in the validity and durability of House Bill 2, they would have offered no further legislation relative to the schools. The fact that they have sponsored this multiplicity of bills leads us to think that they do not believe in the validity of the interposition measure. In this we agree with "the best legal brains in the state". The interposition measure is not durable or valid. Further litigation may now be necessary but ultimately the Federal Government will act to:

1. Protect is judges, marshals and other officers threatened under Section 6, House Bill 2;

2. Enforce the Brown case and the subsequent Louisiana cases.

Judging from its action in Little Rock, the Government will do this, if necessary with Federal troops. If the legislature adopts this interposition measure and follows through with its threat, then it is inviting Federal troops into Louisiana to uphold the jurisdiction of the Federal government and its officers.

We believe this point should be absolutely clear: If civil strife and military intervention occur as a result of the adoption of this measure, those who proposed it and those who passed it will stand condemned in the eyes of all Louisiana citizens as the initiators of this catastrophe.

Yours sincerely,

TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOL PARENTS OF NEW ORLEANS —

Some Facts About Private School Plans

As the school crisis drags on, citizens of New Orleans are hearing more and more often that an easy way out of their troubles would be to switch to a system of private cooperative schools. The people who are advocating such a change make it sound easy -- as if private cooperative schools could use the same buildings, supplies, and teachers which the public schools now use. This is not true!

Experience in Virginia and other southern states has shown that the federal courts will not consider the schools private if they are supported or controlled in any way by State action. This means that:

The state cannot rent school property to private groups.

The state cannot sell school property on credit or for a price less than its real value. (An average cost for a New Orleans elementary school is $500,000.)

The state cannot pay the teachers or even protect them with pension, or tenure plans.

The state cannot give the private schools desks, chairs, cafeterias, libraries, athletic supplies, or any other equipment.

The state cannot provide school buses.

The state cannot provide special services such as classes for the handicapped, teachers for house-bound students, visiting teachers, teacher recruitment, or guidance and counseling.

The state cannot even insist that the private schools remain segregated. A school is not really private if it is controlled by the state in this way.

The state cannot give tuition grants only to pupils in the newly formed cooperatives. Children who have always gone to private schools will be collecting the grants, too. And of course the grants would have to be given to children of all races.

The benefit to the child tuition grant will be legal only if the public schools are also operating.

Here are some questions that haven't been answered by those advocating the overthrow of Louisiana's public school system:

Who will be responsible for school policies in your private cooperative school?

How can you be sure that the armed services, employers, or out-of-State colleges will accept diplomas from your private cooperative?

Who will provide the cash to buy your building for your private cooperative school? Will the banks be willing to loan the money?

If you need further information, write to Save Our Schools.

ECONOMIC ASPECTS OF CLOSING PUBLIC SCHOOLS

When a community is threatened with the closing of its public schools, it is at first only the parents who feel a direct and immediate concern.

But Little Rock and Norfolk have shown that a school crisis is like a rock thrown in a pond. The spreading circles reach far. A school crisis very soon becomes an economic crisis, and the financial well-being of the entire community is at stake.

As business men, you may be wondering what the impact on Louisiana economy will be, if our schools are closed November 14.

First of all, the $20,000,000 school construction program in New Orleans alone for which the bond issue has been approved would have to be abandoned if the school system is shut down.

Secondly, the $242,388,306 annual operating expenditures for Louisiana schools would be lost to the economy.

And what of the $318,447,680 school bonds that are now outstanding in the state? Payment would be enforced on these bonds, although the taxpayer would be paying taxes for benefits no longer received.

These results we can foresee plainly.

What will happen to real estate, to small businesses, to retail dollars spent? For these results, we will have to look at the record in two states that have already been through the fire of school closure.

In the period of Virginia's massive resistance, North Carolina (which, as noted, made a peaceable adjustment to desegregation) was able to out-compete Virginia in the race for new industries by a whopping 10 per cent.

That same year (1958) North Carolina had new plant investments totaling $253 millions, while strife-torn Arkansas could claim only $25.4 million, though two years earlier, Arkansas could boast $131 million.

For the city of Little Rock, industrial development came to a dead stop. Since the outbreak of violence in Little Rock in September, 1957, NOT ONE NEW PLANT HAS COME TO LITTLE ROCK.

After the Little Rock crisis, rentals and real estate sales were reported off 20 to 25 per cent, and more than half the business men interviewed reported that business was hurt.

In one instance when Arkansas was removed from a list of possible locations by an industry, a spokesman for that industry wrote the Little Rock Industrial Development Corporation: "We have no desire to be involved in the segregation problems current in that state."

In Norfolk, Va., when only six high schools were closed for four months, city officials put the cost to the economy at $172,000 a month.

The Miami, Florida News said editorially last year, "Destruction of the Florida Public School system, or any part of it, means just one thing----economic suicide."

The business editor of the Atlanta Constitution reported that Georgia had been dropped from a list of potential plant sites by a major electronics manufacturer, primarily because of the threat of school closure. He also quoted the manager of a large branch plant, who said he would hesitate to expand or build a new plant in a state that could be affected by school closing or violence.

In Virginia, an official of General Electric said, "Without the public schools, we cannot attract highly trained engineering and managerial talent, for such people can obtain positions any where in the United States. They simply will not join us, unless their children can obtain as good or better education here as elsewhere.....Not only that, but the individuals who are already with us might very well leave, if good education opportunities do not continue to be available.

In view of the experience of other communities and states, should we think for a moment, "It can't happen here"?

In Little Rock only four high schools were closed. In Norfolk only six junior and senior high schools were closed and the results were disasterous.

If the Orleans Parish Public schools are closed to avoid the effect of the federal court order, all public schools throughout the state will have to be closed.

SHALL WE DROP A BOMB ON OUR OWN ECONOMY?

LEGAL HISTORY OF THE FIGHT FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

QUESTION: IS IT REALLY TRUE THAT CLOSING OF THE SCHOOLS IN ORLEANS PARISH WILL MEAN CLOSING THE SCHOOLS THROUGHOUT THE STATE?

ANSWER: YES, unfortunately, this is true. Already tested in both Virginia and Arkansas is the law that no one public school, grade, or system may be closed to avoid the effect of the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court, while the state permits other public schools to remain open at the expense of the taxpayer. Interposition of the Governor and legislature of Arkansas was rejected by the Supreme Court in Cooper vs. Aaron in 1958.

QUESTION: WHAT HAS HAPPENED TO THE LAWS THE LAST LEGISLATURE PASSED TO BLOCK INTEGRATION?

ANSWER: Louisiana Act 542 of 1960 - Governor may close schools because of riot or disorder on account of integration -- DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Louisiana Act 495 of 1960 - Governor may close all public schools and sell or lease property - DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Louisiana Act 496 of 1960 - Legislature may classify schools, Governor Shall close schools - DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Louisiana Act 333 of 1960 - Textbooks, funds and equipment to be withheld from integrated schools - DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Louisiana Act 555 of 1954 - Required separate schools under state police powers - DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Louisiana Act 256 of 1958 - Authorizes closing of mixed schools, protect personnel, and sell or lease schools, and promote children - DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Louisiana Act 319 of 1956 - Classifying schools as white or negro in Orleans Parish - DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

QUESTION: WOULD CLOSING OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS MAINTAIN SEGREGATION?

ANSWER: NO. When the schools reopen, the federal directive to desegregate would still be in force. In the long history of this fight against desegregation involving 17 states, there has not been a single instance where subterfuge to escape compliance has been successful.

Disastrous educational and economic losses were the only harvest.

QUESTION: WILL PRIVATE SCHOOLS SUPPORTED BY STATE TUITION GRANTS BE AN EFFECTIVE SUBTERFUGE FOR PUBLICLY SUPPORTED SCHOOLS?

ANSWER: NO. State tuition grant schools have not worked in any other state except where public schools were in operation. Therefore, if our public schools are closed, this would not work in Louisiana, either.

QUESTION: DID THE ORLEANS PARISH SCHOOL BOARD "THROW IN THE SPONGE"?

ANSWER: ABSOLUTELY NOT. The Orleans Parish School Board has fought unceasingly since 1952 to prevent any integration in the schools.

With the best legal talent available, paid for jointly by t he State and the Orleans Parish School Board, thirty five attempts in court to keep the schools segregated have been rejected, and the laws declared unconstitutional.

The Orleans Parish School Board accepted the state laws and state position on segregation, and cooperated with the Governor when he was empowered to run the schools. But he was soon enjoined by the courts and the school control was returned to the Orleans Parish School Board. The Orleans Parish School Board cooperated with the Attorney General who had to admit defeat. Every conceivable effort short of closing the schools has been made by our school board.

No fair minded person, and no citizen familiar with the facts can hold the school board responsible for failure to use powers, when the state is powerless to grant them.

QUESTION: DOES TOTAL INTEGRATION NECESSARILY RESULT FROM TOKEN INTEGRATION USING THE PLACEMENT LAW WHICH HAS BEEN DECLARED CONSTITUTIONAL.

ANSWER: The historical facts in relation to the extent of present integration in the southern states using the pupil placement plan are:

1. In North Carolina after four years of desegration, only 77 negro students now attend desegregated schools.

2. In Arkansas after four years, only 102 are attending previously all-white schools.

3. In Virginia after three years only 205 are attending previously all-white schools.

All of these states have heavy negro population.

The essence of the pupil placement plan is gradual addition of negro children who are of superior ability and can successfully maintain the scholastic standards of the schools.

If the pupil placement plan works in other states, there is reason to believe that it is the best of the solutions offered so far. And wemay point out that the pupil placement plan was passed by the Louisiana Legislature, and was signed by the Governor. It alone remains as the one possible way to prevent closing the schools and to insure that the children of Louisiana are not deprived of an education.

In Little Rock, although the state administration was irrevocably opposed to desegregation, the schools did, after all, de-segregate, after a deplorable drama of violence, closed sc hools and choked-off business activity.

In the Lemley decision, deriving from the Little Rock events, the court held;

"NO STATE LEGISLATOR or executive or judicial officer can war against the constitution without violating his undertaking to support it."

That same Lemley decision held that public funds could not be used for establishing segregated private schools.

Let us consider another state, another governor pledged to find a way around the de-segregation order. Governor Almond of Virginia repeatedly expressed his support for " "massive resistance."

"I will not yield," he stated. Eight days later, the governor addressed the opening meeting of the state legislative body and said,

"IT IS NOT ENOUGH FOR GENTLEMEN TO CRY TO YOU AND ME: 'DON'T GIVE UP THE SHIP.' 'IT MUST NOT HAPPEN' OR 'IT CAN BE PREVENTED.'

IF ANY OF THEM KNOWS THE WAY THROUGH THE DARK MAZE OF JUDICIAL ABERRATION AND CONSTITUTIONAL EXPLOITATION, I CALL UPON THEM TO SHED THE LIGHT FOR WHICH VIRGINIA STANDS IN DIRE NEED.....NO FAIR - MINDED PERSONS WOULD BE SO UNREASONABLE AS TO SEEK TO HOLD ME RESPONSIBLE FOR FAILURE TO EXERCISE POWERS WHICH THE STATE IS POWERLESS TO BESTOW."

Letson, West Boost Sibley Plan

The Sibley Committee's recommendations offer the best solution available to Georgia's school desegregation problems, Atlanta and Fulton school superintendents said Sunday.

"The recommendation of the Sibley Committee outlines a way—and the best way—that is open to us at the present time," said Atlanta Supt. John W. Letson.

Letson appeared Sunday on The Atlanta Constitution's Press Gallery. He and Fulton County Schools Supt. Paul West were interviewed by two Constitution staff members on the weekly WSB-TV program.

Commenting on Lt. Gov. Garland Byrd's recent statement that Georgia may not face a school integration crisis for another two years, Letson pointed out that Atlanta schools currently are under federal court orders to desegregate at the beginning of the next school year. Local schools will "obey all legally constituted authority," he added.

Asked what would happen in the case of conflicting federal-state orders such as occurred in New Orleans, Letson said these conflicts would have to be resolved by federal courts.

WANTS LOCAL CONTROL

Letson said he agrees with suggestions that laws should be passed to authorize local officials to handle school integration problems before federal courts take charge of mapping desegregation. Louisiana laws adopted after de-

Baptists Urge Vandiver To Keep Schools Open

By JIM BENTLEY
Constitution Staff Writer

SAVANNAH—The Georgia Baptist Convention, representing nearly a million Georgia church members, Tuesday night called on the governor and all other state officials to do whatever is necessary to keep public schools open.

The 2,000 delegates to the 139th Baptist convention here also voted to strike down a resolution that flatly opposed integration and hinted at the possible necessity of school closings.

Dr. Louie D. Newton, pastor of the Druid Hills Baptist Church in Atlanta, introduced the keep-the-schools-open resolution. After an hour's debate, it passed by voice vote with only a smattering of opposition.

The resolution reads:

"Recognizing that public schools are essential in preservation of our democratic way of life we, the duly certified messengers (delegates) of the 139th Georgia Baptist Convention, do hereby earnestly and respectfully petition the governor and General Assembly and all other responsible state, county, municipal and district officials that they take such steps as are necessary to continue the public schools. We pledge our

Must Save Schools, Says Purcell

SAVANNAH (AP) — Dr. Claude Purcell, state superintendent of schools, said here Wednesday that Georgians will have to face the fact that they must live under the federal court decision on school integration "because it is binding."

"The next session of the State Legislature will have to answer the next question, then: Shall we continue massive resistance or shall we join a number of other states which have already passed legislation providing for living as best they can under the federal ruling?"

Adopt Sibley Plan, School Boards Ask

The Georgia School Boards Assn. has voted to press the 1961 General Assembly to adopt the Sibley Committee majority report, which recommended some sort of local option plan to prevent the mass closing of schools in Georgia.

The school board members also called for state authorities to take "immediate steps" to equalize property evaluation throughout the state.

In their resolution on the school crisis, the board members noted that some Georgia schools are faced with court orders that will require them to admit some Negro students.

". . . under present Georgia law, all school systems in the state face closure when the first Negro student is admitted to a white school," the school board official said.

The resolutions were adopted by the association, which has a membership of more than 700 local school board members and school superintendents, at a recent meeting in Athens and released Thursday. They represent 116 of the 198 local school boards in Georgia.

Alter School Laws Now, State Urged

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Two former Georgia Bar presidents and the Sibley Committee's chairman warned Thursday that the state will lose control of its schools unless segregation laws are changed soon.

Past bar chiefs Howell Hollis and Newell Edenfield, and banker-attorney John A. Sibley all insisted the action must come before a final desegregation order is entered for Atlanta.

Each warned that any laws adopted after desegregation goes into effect run the risk of being struck down by federal courts as "evasion."

"I have heard some legislators quoted as saying 'Our schools won't be closed for long, but I don't expect any legislative action until the closing comes,'" Edenfield declared.

"Well, maybe so. But if the experiences of Louisiana are any guide, the choices open to the Georgia Legislature at that time will be painfully few," he added.

Sibley told bar association members meeting here that "the time for delay and evasion is over and the time for action is here."

ditch weapon of closing all public schools might be lost after desegregation is ordered into effect in Atlanta:

"Closing the school system is still open, but in the face of an injunction, it is entirely possible that any form of closing would be struck down as an evasion.

"Those things we are able to

Jaycees Here Urge Local Option In School Integration Crisis

The Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce Thursday advocated a local option plan in the state's school integration crisis.

The Jaycees, in a "statement of position," declared that the closing of public schools would "cause irreparable damage to our economic growth and prosperity as amply demonstrated by tragic experiences elsewhere."

Daniel C. Kyker Jr., Jaycee president, said the statement was approved by the executive committee and the board of directors before being presented to the general membership. It was approved by secret ballot Thursday.

All-Out Effort To Save Schools Planned in C of C

Ivan Allen Lays Down 6 Key Goals

By MARVIN WALL

Six major goals—including all-out opposition to school closings—were outlined for the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce by its new president Monday night.

Ivan Allen Jr., elected president at the group's 101st annual meeting, said the Chamber "must clearly set forth to the public at large and the business community in particular the full implications of the Little Rock and Norfolk and New Orleans stories."

BACKS SIBLEY REPORT

Allen said the Chamber should officially endorse the Sibley Committee's majority report and "actively work" for pasasge of open-schools legislation at the January session of the Georgia Legislature.

"Atlanta's public schools must stay open and the Chamber should provide its share of vigorous leadership in seeing that they do," Allen declared.

The other five goals listed by Allen in his address to the dinner meeting were:

1. Push for completion all projected expressways by 1970.

2. Press for a "practical, large-scale" rapid transit system.

URBAN RENEWAL

3. Back urban renewal and particularly aid efforts to expand Negro housing opportunities.

4. Support plans for a new auditorium-coliseum and stadium.

State's Schools to Stay Open, GEA's President Predicts

Georgians will not stand for their public schools to be closed in the face of the segregation-integration dilemma, the president of the Georgia Education Assn. predicts.

E. C. Mitcham Jr. of Greenville made the statement on a television program Tuesday night, and right now. He obviously meant with a bare minimum of integration but he did not spell that out.

NEITHER DID he say how the schools could be kept open in view of a federal judge's order that the Atlanta school plan go into effect next year and in view attributed this partly to the work of 1,058 local PTA units in trying to educate parents and form public opinion on the schools crisis.

The two education leaders were guests Tuesday night on "Reporter's Notebook," a panel program on WAGA-TV.

Adoption of Sibley School Plan Urged on Assembly to Block Closing

CARTERSVILLE (AP)—A member of the Sibley School Committee has urged the General Assembly to adopt the committee's recommendations for local option and pupil assignment to prevent closing of Georgia schools.

Charles A. Cowan, Cartersville mayor, who was a member of the committee as president of the Georgia Municipal Assn., urged adoption of the plan "before the federal courts have assumed jurisdiction of all the state schools."

"As I see it, there is no alternative to the continued operation of public schools in the State of Georgia, and I fully believe that an overwhelming majority of the people of Georgia will come to realize this," he said.

Referring to the federal court order to integrate Atlanta schools next September, he emphasized that Georgia law compels closing of Atlanta schools the minute a Negro is admitted.

"Unquestionably, when this happens, the federal courts will require the closing of all other public schools in Georgia," he told a joint Parent Teacher Association

Purcell Urges 'Facing Fact' On Schools

By the Associated Press

Dr. Claude Purcell, state superintendent of schools, said in Columbus Wednesday that Georgians will have to face the fact they must live under the federal court decision on school integration "whether it is binding" or not.

The dual session of the state superintendent will have to answer the question, Shall we continue massive resistance or should we [illegible] a number of other measures which have already passed legislation, providing for living [illegible] they can under the federal ruling?

Dr. Purcell was one of several speakers at the Georgia Legislative Forum for Women, [illegible] at the Manger Hotel under the sponsorship of 14 state and [illegible] women's organizations.

TIME FOR SCHOOL DECISION DRAWS NEAR

United States Judge Frank A. Hooper this week issued a timely warning to citizens that the 1961 General Assembly must make a choice between some desegregation in the Atlanta schools or a [illegible] statewide shutdown of the public schools.

In an opinion supporting his decision [illegible] integration in Atlanta until September, 1961, Judge Hooper said:

"This court wishes to make it clear that the court has no desire to meddle in the affairs of the Georgia Legislature or State of Georgia, but in making a sincere effort to enable the people of Georgia the Legislature to make a decision [illegible] matter, if they so desire, that will prevent the closing of the schools of Georgia.

The judge took notice of the fact that members of the 1959-60 General Assembly had readily [illegible] [illegible] the Legislature is not prepared to take any serious action to meet the 1961 crisis, however, even though the federal courts have warned the crisis is coming and have granted a delay so that the forthcoming Legislature may act.

HOPE Pins Hope on '61 Assembly

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Tagging the 1961 General Assembly the "last chance Legislature," HOPE Monday launched a new campaign to rally public opinion behind the Sibley Committee recommendations.

The open-schools organization said its "Operation Last Chance" would be aimed at community meetings, individuals and "every legislator."

The 1961 Legislature Must Face Responsibility

It would seem unnecessary for the chairman of the state school board to have to speak on the "Importance of Public Education" in mid-twentieth century Georgia.

But such is the climate of the times that men like Jim Peters must do just that.

The reason is not, as some insist, that there are two points of view on education's importance. The number of Georgians who prefer closing all schools to a limited amount of desegregation is negligible. The number who realize that that is the choice is small, too, and that is the failure of Georgia leadership.

The reason that Mr. Peters and others must now speak out on public education's importance is that for six and a half years Georgia politicians have closed their eyes to the problem brought on by the 1954 Supreme Court decision and tried to close the eyes of Georgia citizens. They have argued that the law need not be observed—but if it must private schools can do what public schools have

Tuesday Session Here To Air School Crisis

Rep. Erwin Mitchell Key Speaker; Berry Leader Urges Open Schools

Growing interest was reported Saturday in plans for a public meeting to be held at the Rome First Christian Church Tuesday to discuss Georgia's impending school crisis.

Meanwhile Dr. John B. Bertrand, president of Berry Schools and College, released a statement saying the closing of our Georgia public schools, even in one large city, would be disastrous. It is the responsibility of every one of us, as citizens—it is the responsibility of every person—to face this issue honestly and squarely. Legislature Is Getting Reminder on Schools

It is heartening to find this full-up surge of effort urging the "last-chance Legislature" to save public education in Georgia.

No steep impressive seems to have been made on the Legislature yet.

But the United Churchwomen of Georgia, the Georgia League of Women Voters and Help Our Public Education on Voters, Active Voters and Help Our Public Education (HOPE) have arranged meetings this month in Rome, Albany, Columbus and Augusta, with speakers ranging from Rep. Erwin Mitchell to James S. Peters.

And these are only starters. The purpose of these groups is simply to outline the facts to Georgians. Then, in the words of Mrs. Frances Breeden, "it is up to us as parents and citizens, to let the Legislature know exactly what we expect from it."

Events have moved swiftly this year.

Groups Join Hands To Probe School Problems

Let People Have Facts On Danger to Schools

It is encouraging to note that James S. Peters, state school board chairman, will take part in statewide rallies in support of public education.

The rallies, sponsored by four state organizations concerned with keeping the schools open, are intended to acquaint the public with the fact that Atlanta's impending school crisis is not merely one for Atlanta but involves the whole state.

Mr. Peters is booked for two speeches titled "The Importance of Education."

Rep. Mitchell Speaks With Responsible Voice

Seventh District Rep. Erwin Mitchell, of Dalton, who next year will take his seat in the Georgia General Assembly, continues to plead with Georgians that the alternative to closing the public schools is the reasonable approach suggested by the majority report of the Sibley Commission.

He makes good sense. Time and circumstances will determine his political wisdom but it should be noted that his constituents backed him in his bid for the State Senate. If the state's politics leadership makes the mistake of letting the schools close, the results very well could be as predicted by James S. Peters in his now-famous letter to Ray Harris.

Forecasting "chaos beyond imagination" if schools are closed, Mitchell urges action by state government and the General Assembly to forestall it by adopting

MITCHELL CHARGES LEADERS DECEIVE

Maximum Segregation, Open Schools Proposed as Crisis Answer

By DOUGLAS KIRKE

Seventh District Congressman Erwin Mitchell charged Wednesday that Georgia political leaders are "guilty of deliberately deceiving the people of Georgia of inexcusable ignorance" on the state's school integration dilemma.

"The issue is simply 'is the un[illegible] interrupted training of our young [illegible] men and women of sufficient [illegible] part that we will maintain our [illegible] public school system even though [illegible] means some integration'" Rep. Mitchell said.

[illegible]

THE TRICK is at hand, Mr. Mitchell said, for Georgians to ask themselves "just where do we stand today?"

"Clearly the course that we follow will be charted by our governor and the General Assembly in the next two years," he said. "They hold the key to the future of education in our state."

But he added that "active, vocal public opinion" also is going to be a big factor in shaping over action the Legislature may or might not take in its next session.

"For us whilst to deprive a child of one day of school by the [illegible] of our action is unpardonable," he said. "Today is [illegible] to think of closing public schools [illegible] some form of token inte[illegible] school system with the maximum segregation permissible."

Rep. Mitchell Vows to Offer Bills for Sibley School Plan

ROME—U.S. Rep. Erwin Mitchell promised an open-schools meeting here Tuesday that he would offer bills in the 1961 Georgia General Assembly implementing the Sibley report.

But veteran editor Milton Fleetwood of Cartersville asserted that "until the governor of Georgia puts his stamp of approval on any legislation there will be none."

ALBANY—The chairman of the State Board of Education and Dougherty County Sheriff [illegible] declared Tuesday that open-schools laws cannot pass in 1961 without the blessings of Gov. Vandiver.

The Cheerleader Got There Late

"Contrary to what some would have you believe," said Lt. Gov. Garland Byrd on Tuesday, Georgia's laws requiring actual segregation "have not changed one iota."

Somewhere amid Garland's ticket to last week's football game Byrd got the taxpayers gather up more Confederate money, with the unchanged writing still there to show the unchanged signature of Judah P. Benjamin, and from this fund, on every payday, he the incumbent governor draws his salary.

Contrary to what some would have you believe, the Confederate bills and last week's football tickets have not changed one iota. They retain all the value of Georgia's unchanged school laws.

For a politician of Mr. Byrd's intelligence to throw the public such a marshmallow at this late date is discouraging indeed.

The lieutenant governor knows very well that Georgia's "unchanged" laws are worthless and, when tested, cannot stand in the light of repeated court decisions that have cut the legs off of them.

To go on speaking these dead-letter laws as literature defenses is insult Mr. Byrd, who knows better. The people know the truth, too. They have had enough euphoria. They no longer desire to have a cultivated variable their car and tell them it's raining.

They want to know what these politicians intend to do next, now that they know the segregation laws, which have not changed one iota a comma, do not have any iota of validity in court.

We would refer Mr. Byrd to Wednesday's statement by Harold Mayfield, president of the Georgia Bar Assn., who urges the state to release the useless laws now.

THE PROBLEM AHEAD

38 Days Left for School Decision

(The States-Item today begins a series of articles on the integration controversy which could destroy New Orleans' public school system. The series will examine issues, viewpoints, experiences elsewhere, and the risks involved in the battle pitting Louisiana law against federal court desegregation rulings.)

By ROBERT N. KELSO

The count-down has started . . .

New Orleans is bracing herself for a blast that could destroy the city's 118-school public education system.

Zero is Sept. 8—just 38 days away.

That is the effective date of federal district Judge J. Skelly Wright's order for desegregation in the first grade of New Orleans public schools.

During those 38 days, forces opposing school integration will mount an 11th-hour offensive to open the schools with traditional separation of the races.

Gov. Jimmie H. Davis has promised "every legal step possible" will be taken to continue school operation on a segregated basis.

ROBERT N. KELSO

Every School May Be Closed

If his last-minute efforts fail, every public school in New Orleans may be padlocked.

So may every other schoolroom in Louisiana.

No city or state has put so much on the line in the South's long legal battle to prevent desegregation of public schools.

Louisiana's Legislature, acting on what it regarded as a mandate from a majority of the state's citizens, two months ago plugged every visible loophole in Louisiana's "segregation" laws.

Legislators also forged new measures to bolster those already on the books aimed at preventing school integration.

Mandate from Supreme Court

Forces seeking to remove racial barriers in classrooms are pressing forward under a six-year-old mandate from the United States supreme court outlawing school segregation.

They have won ground in 13 Southern and border states, along with the District of Columbia.

Louisiana, and New Orleans, now become the 1960 battleground in this historic struggle.

Meanwhile, only four other Southern states have escaped some measure of school integration.

Louisiana and her largest city now face a showdown.

The Orleans parish school board has carried its battle against integration to court more than two dozen times since 1952.

It was then that Negroes first brought the suit which has plagued school board lawyers for eight years.

School Board Lost All Fights

Every one of these legal skirmishes was lost by the school board. The most recent defeat came July 19, when U.S. Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black refused to stay Judge Wright's integration order.

Board members admit they have reached the end of their legal rope.

Control of the New Orleans public school system will pass to Gov. Davis and the Legislature on Sept. 8 under newly forged state law aimed at blocking court-ordered integration.

Davis has repeatedly stated he will not permit integration in any Louisiana school.

During his gubernatorial campaign last year, he asserted he would go to jail rather than see any school in the state integrated.

He may risk jail Sept. 8 in an attempt to keep New Orleans schools open and segregated.

Wright Not Expected to Yield

Judge Wright, with the weight of voluminous court opinion backing him, is not expected to yield to any frontal assault.

Will New Orleans become another Little Rock, with federal troops enforcing the court order?

It could. But no responsible Louisianian on either side of the fence wants such a pitched battle with federal authority.

This is the first of a series of articles on the issues raised by the impending public school crisis. Among questions to be discussed in this series are:

What is at stake in this struggle? Who are the chief contenders? Why are they fighting? How are the battle lines drawn? Who will win?

Answers — where answers are possible — to these and other questions will be given in this series. The States-Item with these articles offers an analysis of the biggest issue facing New Orleans today.

Tomorrow: Will the schools close?

THE PROBLEM AHEAD

Pupils Face Lockout Unless Court Modifies Order

By ROBERT N. KELSO

Will 95,000 New Orleans children be locked out of public school classrooms Sept. 8?

They will, unless:

1. Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright modifies his order requiring desegregation of the first grade.

2. Gov. Jimmie H. Davis intervenes and succeeds in running the schools on a segregated basis, in defiance of the federal court order.

One of a Series

3. A massive shift of statewide public opinion prompts the Louisiana Legislature to rescind laws barring compliance with Wright's order.

These three alternatives appear to offer the only hope that public school classes will start as scheduled.

'With All Deliberate Speed'

He has since chopped down every legal obstacle the Orleans parish school board has erected to block desegregation.

Judge Wright has been upheld repeatedly by the federal circuit court of appeals, and on three occasions by the U.S. supreme court.

A year ago, Judge Wright ordered the school board to present a plan for integration on or before May 15, 1960.

The board, contending a 1956 Louisiana statute prevented it from desegregating, offered no plan. Judge Wright ordered one of his own May 16—that public schools be desegregated in the first grade in September.

State legislators immediately got busy in Baton Rouge to plug loopholes in existing state segregation laws and forge new ones.

Governor Can Close Schools

One of these new laws would permit the governor to close all Louisiana's public schools when Judge Wright's order takes effect Sept. 8.

Another says in effect that no school or school system can be integrated without the express consent of the Legislature.

control, management and administration" of any school or schools ordered integrated, and to operate them on a racially segregated basis "until such time" as the Legislature approves their being integrated.

Under this law, Gov. Davis must supersede the Orleans school board Sept. 8 if any white school in New Orleans admits a Negro pupil.

School Board Action Barred

This means that the school board is barred from making any move to comply with Judge Wright's order.

A third key measure authorizes the governor to close any school "in case of or to prevent" disorder, riots or violence and to reopen the school when he sees fit.

This is the armor the Legislature provided Gov. Davis for his promised battle against school integration.

The governor's second in this duel with federal authority—Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion—filed an injunction suit in civil district court July 25 to prevent the school board from complying with Wright's order.

State's Position Bolstered

This action was merely insurance taken to bolster the state's legal position.

School board member Emile A. Wagner, most vocal segregationist in that body, says the governor will interpose. In Wagner's words:

"Gov. Davis will throw the cloak of sovereignty over the edifice of public education, saying—in effect—that in the realm of public education the state of Louisiana is sovereign and not the United States of America."

Gov. Davis himself has made no such positive announcement on interposition.

Urged by the school board early in June to interpose himself, the governor described interposition as "a last resort."

Such a maneuver, said Davis, would be "the last thing right before secession."

Interposition Defined

Interposition means that the governor, invoking state sovereignty, personally blocks the carrying out of federal law or a federal court ruling.

One of New Orleans' most informed lawyers on the segregation issue says positive intervention by the governor is the only way Louisiana's battle against school in-

He has since chopped down every legal obstacle the Orleans parish school board has erected to block desegregation.

Judge Wright has been upheld repeatedly by the federal circuit court of appeals, and on three occasions by the U.S. supreme court.

A year ago, Judge Wright ordered the school board to present a plan for integration on or before May 15, 1960.

The board, contending a 1956 Louisiana statute prevented it from desegregating, offered no plan. Judge Wright ordered one of his own May 16—that public schools be desegregated in the first grade in September.

State legislators immediately got busy in Baton Rouge to plug loopholes in existing state segregation laws and forge new ones.

Governor Can Close Schools

One of these new laws would permit the governor to close all Louisiana's public schools when Judge Wright's order takes effect Sept. 8.

Another says in effect that no school or school system can be integrated without the express consent of the Legislature.

This same law throws up another barrier against court-ordered integration.

It requires the governor to take over the "exclusive control, management and administration" of any school or schools ordered integrated, and to operate them on a racially segregated basis "until such time" as the Legislature approves their being integrated.

Under this law, Gov. Davis must supersede the Orleans school board Sept. 8 if any white school in New Orleans admits a Negro pupil.

School Board Action Barred

This means that the school board is barred from making any move to comply with Judge Wright's order.

A third key measure authorizes the governor to close any school "in case of or to prevent" disorder, riots or violence and to reopen the school when he sees fit.

This is the armor the Legislature provided Gov. Davis for his promised battle against school integration.

The governor's second in this duel with federal authority—Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion—filed an injunction suit in civil district court July 25 to prevent the school board from complying with Wright's order.

State's Position Bolstered

This action was merely insurance taken to bolster the state's legal position.

What the governor's own move will be has most of New Orleans guessing. His choice of weapons is limited. He meets a determined adversary.

School board member Emile A. Wagner, most vocal segregationist in that body, says the governor will interpose. In Wagner's words:

"Gov. Davis will throw the cloak of sovereignty over the edifice of public education, saying—in effect—that in the realm of public education the state of Louisiana is sovereign and not the United States of America."

Gov. Davis himself has made no such positive announcement on interposition.

Urged by the school board early in June to interpose himself, the governor described interposition as "a last resort."

Such a maneuver, said Davis, would be "the last thing right before secession."

Interposition Defined

Interposition means that the governor, invoking state sovereignty, personally blocks the carrying out of federal law or a federal court ruling.

One of New Orleans' most informed lawyers on the segregation issue says positive intervention by the governor is the only way Louisiana's battle against school integration will ever get a decisive trial in court.

The state, so far, is not a defendant in the NAACP's suit originally instituted in 1952 against the school board.

Value of Move Sized Up

Here is how this New Orleans attorney sizes up the value of an interposition move:

Davis could make his most positive interposition move by personally visiting each white elementary school in New Orleans Sept. 8 and ordering any Negro children enrolled to leave.

Such action could lead Judge Wright to cite Davis for contempt.

The governor would then be entitled to a trial by jury. "And what 12 Louisiana citizens," asked the lawyer, "would find the governor guilty?"

The New Orleans expert on segregation law admits he doesn't know whether interposition would delay integration for any appreciable length of time.

He says he has been unable to find in legal literature any precedent on a successful interposition move to prevent school integration.

'Embarking on Uncharted Seas'

If Gov. Davis interposes, he would—in the words of Emile Wagner—be "embarking on uncharted seas."

Two governors—Arkansas' Orval Faubus and Virginia's Lindsey Almond—have made personal intervention moves to prevent integration of schools in their states. Both were unsuccessful.

Faubus sent the National Guard into Little Rock in September, 1957, to prevent Negroes from attending Central High school. President Eisenhower countered with federal troops.

The following September, Faubus ordered Little Rock's four high schools closed under a newly written Arkansas law "to prevent violence." This law later was declared unconstitutional by federal courts. The high schools reopened last September with Negroes in attendance.

Virginia Schools Closed

In September, 1958, to block integration, Gov. Almond closed schools in several Virginia counties, including six secondary schools in Norfolk.

Four months later, Virginia's own state supreme court of appeals and the federal district court at Norfolk declared Almond's action was illegal.

The federal courts in both Arkansas and Virginia held that closing a few schools violates the "equal protection" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment by denying to some citizens the right to attend public schools, while others are permitted to do so.

Free Schools Not Required

Louisiana is not required to operate a free public school system.

Hence, Gov. Davis can if he chooses close all Louisiana public schools to prevent any of them from being integrated.

If he were to close only selected ones—under the state law authorizing him to do so "to prevent violence"—his action would come up against these same court rulings which held that Faubus and Almond acted illegally.

These are among the considerations that lead many informed persons to believe New Orleans public schools are likely to close on or shortly after Sept. 8.

Public Opinion Forcing Sept. 8 School Showdown

By ROBERT N. KELSO

New Orleans parents worry more with each passing day that the doors of public schools won't open Sept. 8.

Many of them fear their children are pawns in a king-sized struggle between the state and federal government over school desegregation.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

Other parents prefer closed schools to any degree of integration.

It is this weight of public opinion — strong in New Orleans and reportedly overwhelming across the state—which forces a showdown Sept. 8.

The issue of school segregation—outlawed six years ago by the U. S. supreme court—shows signs of shifting now into Louisiana's larger battle for state's rights.

Davis Defiance Is Urged

Gov. Jimmie H. Davis, a strong foe of school integration, has been urgently requested to defy federal courts and open New Orleans schools on a segregated basis.

If he intervenes in so strong a fashion, he will be cheered on by a large segment of Louisiana's white population.

All informed proponents of such action admit it is a gamble, and that the next move would be to padlock every school in the state.

Closing only a few schools to avoid integration has been ruled illegal by federal courts in Arkansas and Virginia. A 1960 Louisiana law takes cognizance of this hard fact.

Only Two Alternatives

With battle lines drawn so tightly, the likelihood that schools will open appears increasingly slim.

Only two things could change this.

One requires that Gov. Davis intervene successfully, forcing at least a delay in integration.

The other would require a massive and almost overnight reversal of statewide public opinion and a demand that the Legislature be called into special session to rescind laws barring compliance with Judge Wright's integration order.

Interposition in the words of Emile A. Wagner, New Orleans lawyer and segregation-minded school board member, is "embarking on uncharted seas."

Never Before Attempted

Lawyers on both sides of the fence and astride it admit they don't know if interposition will work.

The interposition move reportedly mapped out by Gov. Davis and his legal strategists has never before been attempted.

Interposition is a big question mark.

But the odds are heavy against an overnight reversal of statewide public opinion.

New Orleanians, embattled over their own public schools, tend to forget the schools and the public viewpoint of Louisiana's 63 other parishes.

Vast Majority Opposed

The vast majority of Louisianians are apparently opposed to school integration in New Orleans. They know their own schools may be next.

A significant reminder of this came during the recent legislative session when school officials from 45 parishes indicated they would rather have the schools in their parishes close than see a single New Orleans school integrated.

This poll was taken in Baton Rouge after the chief architects of the segregation bills summoned school officials and related groups to get their ideas about the soundness of the measures.

Forty-seven of the 64 parishes were represented at the private conference where the vote emerged during discussion of the bill empowering the governor to close all Louisiana schools when any one of them is ordered integrated.

The vote favoring this idea was 45-2. Only dissents came from New Orleans and Shreveport.

Other Mixing Orders

This informal vote, of course, is not binding on the parish school boards whose representatives attended the meeting. But it is a clear indication of thinking across the state.

New Orleanians may also have lost sight of the fact that Judge Wright—ruling in other cases brought by Negro plaintiffs with the help of the NAACP—ordered desegregation "with all deliberate speed" in East Baton Rouge, which embraces the state capital, and St. Helena parishes.

Judge Wright, a month previously, also ordered integration of Louisiana's six trade schools. They are located in

Shreveport, Natchitoches, Lake Charles, Crowley, Opelousas and Greensburg (St. Helena parish).

Judge Wright set no definite date for integration of any of these schools.

Summary Judgment Moves

But attorneys say if New Orleans schools are integrated, Negro plaintiffs in these other suits can promptly ask for—and may get—a summary judgment ordering integration by a specific date.

Other Louisiana areas, for this reason, are vitally interested in the outcome of the battle in New Orleans.

Gov. Davis and Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion are making their moves with the full confidence of fulfilling a mandate from a determined majority of Louisianians.

Even if public opinion were to shift because of the possible destruction of Louisiana's free public school system, another almost insurmountable obstacle facing those who want to keep schools open is this:

The very same legislators who two months ago mapped out and speedily approved "iron-clad" school segregation bills would be the ones beseeched to repeal and nullify their own actions.

Termed Tragic Price

Three New Orleans legislators recently declared that, while they champion segregation, closing New Orleans schools permanently is a tragic price to pay for it.

They urged citizens to tell legislators what they want.

Many New Orleans parent organizations have already expressed their opinions on the issue.

Resolutions urging open schools, even if they have to be integrated, have been passed by a number of school parent groups, general-membership organizations and a sizeable portion of the city's Protestant clergy.

Other resolutions urging that schools be closed to avoid integration have been approved by an opposite-minded number of school parent groups and other organizations.

Waging Stepped-Up Campaign

Organized public opinion on the issue is still spotty.

The Citizens Council of Greater New Orleans with its area affiliates is still the most potent voice raised among segregationists who favor closing schools.

Two citizens' organizations urging that they be kept open at all costs are the Committee for Public Education and Save Our Schools, Inc.

Each side, with smaller and specialized membership groups joining in, is waging a stepped-up campaign as the Sept. 8 deadline rolls closer.

Private School System

Meanwhile, a private-school system has been suggested by anti-integration forces as a workable substitute if public schools close down.

Other observers, including four of the five Orleans school board members, say a private system would be a makeshift at best.

Gremillion, during this rising furor, has assured New Orleans that he and Gov. Davis "will do everything humanly and legally possible to preserve segregation in the schools.

One mystery yet unanswered is whether the open and segregated schools Davis and Gremillion promised New Orleanians July 5 will be public schools, or private ones supported by state tuition grants.

Gremillion was asked precisely this question July 6. His reply:

"We'll let you know later on that."

THE PROBLEM AHEAD--# 4

Big Question: How Much Integration Next Month?

By ROBERT N. KELSO

One question which has gotten only cursory attention thus far in the school integration controversy is how much racial mixing would actually take place next month if the federal court order is carried out.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

This is no simple question to answer, but the public school administrative staff has data from which reasonably accurate conclusions can be drawn.

The staff, itself, has not made an attempt to compute the actual extent of first-grade mixing which would follow compliance with federal Judge J. Skelly Wright's order.

Until two weeks ago, the staff was under specific instructions from the school board to continue planning on the traditionally segregated basis.

Planning suggestions requested by the board on July 18 were to meet possible administrative problems—they had nothing to do with pupil placement.

Judge Wright's order stated:

A. All children entering the first grade may attend either the formerly all-white, or formerly all-Negro school nearest their home, at their option.

B. Children may be transferred from one school to another, provided the transfer is not based on consideration of race.

The judge's order provides a yardstick for an educated guess on which white elementary schools in the city would immediately be subject to racial mixing.

The simple test here is: How many, if any, Negroes, live closer to a white elementary school than they do to a school now designated as Negro?

A huge map hanging in the offices of the school board's department of research and planning shows — block by block throughout the city—the residence of every public school child, white and Negro.

It also pinpoints the location of the various white and Negro schools.

This map gives a picture of the desegregation problem posed under Judge Wright's order—IF no other considerations which can limit the amount of actual mixing are taken into account.

There are several factors, other than the location of schools in racially-mixed neighborhoods, which can limit the number of Negro children who would be actually admitted to white elementary schools.

Strongest weapon in the hands of the school board's staff is Louisiana's 1958 pupil placement law.

This law is modeled word-for-word on an Alabama law which has been declared constitutional if not abused in its administration.

Another identical pupil placement law in Arkansas has been declared valid on its face by federal courts.

This law sets up no less than 16 factors which school officials take into account when a pupil's parents or guardians request his transfer or assignment to a particular school.

List 16 Factors

These factors include: available room and teaching capacity in the particular school, the intelligence, mental energy or ability of the pupil, the effect of his admission on prevailing academic standards, the pupil's home environment, and his morals, conduct, health and personal standards.

The law also sets up criteria which deals with the "possibility or threat of friction or disorder" caused by admission of the pupil, and the effect of his admission on "established social and psychological relationships with other pupils and with teachers."

This is a tough set of criteria for the average Negro pupil to meet. Some will qualify.

In Little Rock, where in 1957 nine Negroes entered a white high school under the protection of federal troops, 74 Negroes this June requested assignment to formerly all-white or desegregated junior and senior high schools.

The Little Rock school board, applying Arkansas' pupil placement law, approved the admission of only 16.

Orleans school superintendent James F. Redmond, asked recently to give a rough estimate of how many Negroes might be assigned here to white schools under desegregation this fall, said:

As Many as 100 Pupils

"We might have to place about 100."

If schools open, there will be 65 white elementary schools and 53 Negro elementaries to accommodate an estimated 7000 Negro and 4000 white first-graders.

A major factor which will limit the number of Negroes gaining assignment to white schools is their average level of academic achievement.

Nearly five years ago in the drawn-out court battle against integration of New Orleans schools, school board counsel placed in evidence an affidavit from Dr. Redmond stating that:

"Achievement tests contribute evidence to support the generalization that Negro pupils are from 1.5 to 3.4 years below the level of achievement attained by white pupils."

Dr. Redmond says the figures on this achievement differential "still hold good."

'Sociological Reasons'

"The difference is often explained as due to 'sociological reasons,'" Redmond said, "but the fact remains that the average Negro is that far behind the average white."

Another factor is likely to limit the number of Negro pupils who would apply for admission to white schools.

This would be the reluctance of many Negro parents to send their children to a white school where friction between the races might develop, so long as a Negro school was within reach.

A. P. Tureaud, attorney for the New Orleans Negroes whose eight-year-old suit won a desegregation order from Judge Wright, says on this score:

"Very few Negro children would enter the first grade of a white school. If for no other reason, they would probably have brothers and sisters attending the Negro school in that district. And they would be too small to start alone in a white school."

No One Has Knowledge

Nobody, of course, knows now how many Negro children would apply, or how many of the applicants would be assigned under the criteria of the pupil placement law.

But the big map in the research and planning department indicates which of the city's white elementary schools is vulnerable to mixing this September if Judge Wright's order is carried out to the letter.

The map was drawn on data compiled last fall, listing the address given by the parents or guardians of every child in public school. There has been no significant change in neighborhood racial complexion since then.

Twenty-eight of the city's 48 white elementary schools are vulnerable because they have Negroes living closer to them than the nearest Negro school.

These vulnerable schools are:

McDonogh 19, Semmes, Washington, Frantz, Palmer, McDonogh 15, McDonogh 16, Rogers, McDonogh 31, McDonogh 11, Davey, Jackson, McDonogh 10, Laurel-McDonogh No. 1, Live Oak, Howard, McDonogh No. 7, Jefferson, Audubon, Allen, Wilson, Lusher, Lee, Benjamin, Shaw, Bradley, Davis, and Schwarz in Algiers.

Older Residential Areas

Nearly all these schools are located in older residential areas where whites and Negroes have lived in the same general neighborhoods for years.

Four more white schools appear to be borderline cases, although they have as few as two or three Negro families in their vicinity.

These are: Lafayette, McDonogh 14, and Danneel, also in older uptown neighborhoods, and the Meyer school in Algiers.

Sixteen white elementaries, a majority of them in new residential sections in the Lakefront-Gentilly-City Park area, have no Negroes living close enough to them to warrant their applying for admission under Judge Wright's order.

These are Lakeview, Hynes, Gordon, Bienville, McDonogh 39, Claiborne, Gentilly Terrace, Abrams, White, Dibert, Crossman, Howard, LaSalle and Gayarre, all in New Orleans, and Belleville and Harte in Algiers.

Two-Thirds Close Enough

As it stands, nearly two-thirds of the city's white elementary schools are located close enough to Negroes who could apply for admission if Judge Wright's order were carried out.

But the application of the pupil placement law would reduce the number of such admissions.

School officials expect to know later this month—if operations are not totally disrupted by the segregation battle—how many Negroes want to go to each particular school, and what the enrollment picture looks like.

Parent Groups Plan Their Own Private Schools

By ROBERT N. KELSO

The prospect of sending their first-graders to school with Negroes this September has prompted a number of white parent groups to plan for private schools of their own.

Nonsectarian private schools are authorized under 1960 Louisiana law as an alternative to integration of public schools under federal court order.

They draw encouragement from the fact that the schools of Prince Edward county, Va., closed last fall to avoid integration, were operated last year as a private venture.

The Prince Edward School Foundation, during the 1959-60 school term, educated 1446 white students in two high schools and six elementary schools. The schools were housed chiefly in church Sunday school facilities.

Parent Groups Plan Their Own Private Schools

By ROBERT N. KELSO

The prospect of sending their first-graders to school with Negroes this September has prompted a number of white parent groups to plan for private schools of their own.

Nonsectarian private schools are authorized under 1960 Louisiana law as an alternative to integration of public schools under federal court order.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

New legislation would also permit the sale of public school properties to private educational corporations or co-operatives after a school is ordered permanently closed by the governor to avoid integration.

And a 1958 Louisiana law provides for "education expense grants from state and local funds" to any child displaced by the closing of a public school, if he has enrolled in a private nonsectarian school.

These laws are designed to give a "leg up" to groups who want to start their own private schools.

Only one New Orleans group to date has readied actual plans for opening one or more elementary schools this fall to avoid the consequences of federal Judge J. Skelly Wright's order.

Carrollton Organization

This is the Carrollton Education Co-operative Inc., the first such organization to receive a state charter for private school operation.

A half-dozen school parent groups in the Gentilly-Lakefront area are also seeking charters for private-school operations, but their plans are strictly in the formative stage.

School parent groups in other areas of New Orleans are also reported considering the idea.

All these parents are hoping that Gov. Jimmie H. Davis will be able to make good on his promise to open New Orleans schools this fall on a segregated basis, despite the federal court integration order.

Their plans are stand-by schemes to be put into operation if the city's public schools fail to open, or are forced to open with the first grade integrated.

These people favor closing all of New Orleans' 118 public schools, if such a drastic move is necessary to avoid integration.

Draw Encouragement

They draw encouragement from the fact that the schools of Prince Edward county, Va., closed last fall to avoid integration, were operated last year as a private venture.

The Prince Edward School Foundation, during the 1959-60 school term, educated 1446 white students in two high schools and six elementary schools. The schools were housed chiefly in church Sunday school facilities.

Some 1700 Negroes in predominantly agricultural Prince Edward county (1950 pop., 15,400), had no school system last year.

Administrator Roy R. Pearson of the Prince Edward School Foundation says white citizens offered to help Negro parents set up their own private system, but there were no takers.

Pearson, former board president of public schools in the Prince Edward county seat at Farmville, visited here recently at the invitation of the Citizens' Council of Greater New Orleans.

Calls Plan Solid Success

He told a newspaper interviewer and a Citizens Council rally that the private school system in Prince Edward county was a solid success, and detailed plans for expanded operations this fall.

The foundation's schools, Pearson said, offered the same curricula as the public schools had, with the exception of physical education classes. These are planned for the coming term.

Virginia gave accreditation to the foundation's two high schools during the year, Pearson said, and 37 of its 62 high school graduates intend to enter college this fall.

The Prince Edward School Foundation charged no tuition last year. Pearson said it operated "in the black" on donations of $305,000.

But the foundation plans tuition charges this term of $240 for elementary pupils and $265 for high school students. Parents may seek state tuition grants of $250 a year authorized under Virginia law.

Teachers Under Contract

Pearson said the foundation has all of its teachers under contract for the new term and has launched a $300,000 building fund campaign.

The building fund money may be used to buy some of the $2.5 million in public school properties padlocked last fall, if these properties are put up for sale as surplus.

Meanwhile, an NAACP suit to force reopening of Prince Edward county's public schools is now pending in a federal court in Richmond.

The suit also seeks to bar sale of public school properties.

Prince Edward county is the only locality in the United States which has tried supplanting all its public schools with private ones.

Four Private Schools

When Little Rock's four public high schools were closed by Gov. Orval Faubus during the 1958-59 school term, four private, segregated, schools were set up.

They folded when the Little Rock high schools were reopened on a desegregated basis last fall. The law under which the private schools received state funds was declared unconstitutional.

In Virginia, a total of four private schools were set up in 1958 in Norfolk, Charlottesville and Front Royal when certain schools in these localities were ordered integrated.

The four schools educated a total of some 1580 white elementary and high school students in the 1958-59 term. They operated again last year, but with reduced enrollment as public resistance to integration slackened.

No other Southern communities have seen the rise of new private schools as a direct result of court-ordered desegregation.

Termed 'Pilot Plant'

Many segregationists view Prince Edward county Virginia as a sort of "pilot plant." They regard its success as proof that private school systems can replace public schools, if only citizens are determined to make them work.

Opponents of the private-school idea say the Prince Edward experiment can't be broadened to accommodate a city the size of New Orleans.

New Orleans has 10 schools, white and Negro, each of which enrolls more students than the entire system of Prince Edward county. Two of these are Fortier and Nicholls, both white high schools.

Among the pointed questions asked by those who doubt the feasibility of a private-school system are these:

1. In the short time required if public schools close, who will set up private schools for some 45,000 displaced white children—even if 50,000 Negro children are left out of consideration?

2. Where are the money, staff and the facilities coming from?

3. How many parents will be able to afford tuition charges for their youngsters in private schools until, and if, state education grants are forthcoming?

Even segregationist leaders admit these problems call for Herculean work, determination and a spirit of willing sacrifice for those who want to "preserve our traditional Southern way of life."

School board member Emile A. Wagner is the board's sole exponent of the virtues of a private school system. None of the other four board members regards such a plan as feasible.

Wagner, himself, admits the problems to be faced in setting up a private-school system are knotty.

Special Session Needed

He recently asserted a special session of the Legislature would be needed to iron out "bugs" in existing laws designed to help in the establishment of a private school setup.

A major legal question, still unanswered, is whether the state can funnel money by tuition grants into private schools without running afoul of federal court prohibition against states underwriting segregated schools.

Such grants would almost certainly invite contesting lawsuits from integration forces.

The grants might also be contested by disgruntled taxpayers whose children were unable to attend either public school or such private schools as come into existence.

Still, the tuition grant idea is the best evolved so far to meet the staggering problems that would attend closing down all public schools.

Few Hundred at Most

If public schools close here, there is little likelihood that more than a few hundred of the city's 45,000 white school children will find another school to attend.

All existing accredited private schools already have waiting lists. And parochial schools are reported by the Archdiocesan school board to be "very crowded."

The Carrollton co-op, now dickering for school locations and lining up teachers on a contingent basis, figures—roughly—that it may get by with charging a tuition of only $20 a month. No transportation facilities are contemplated.

If the Carrollton co-op actually begins operation and succeeds in holding tuition charges to $180 a year, it will have surpassed all long-established private schools in financial maneuvers to pare costs.

Least Expensive $612

The least expensive fully accredited private high school in this area charges a tuition of $612 a year. There are other incidental charges.

The least expensive accredited private elementary school in the New Orleans area has an annual tuition of $255, plus additional charges.

These are a registration fee of $25, a $15 charge for miscellaneous items (accident insurance, special books and materials, etc.), and a sliding-scale transportation charge of from $70 to $100 a year.

The school is operated by Stuart Ferroux, a teacher of 16 years' experience, with a master's degree. Ferroux, in addition to his administrative duties, teaches the fourth grade and gives special instruction in remedial reading.

Operated in Red

"I started this school 13 years ago," Ferroux said, "and I operated for nine of those years in the red.

"I wouldn't be able to hold tuition as low as $255 without working at a personal financial sacrifice and having the benefit of a $75,000 plant which is part of a family inheritance and on which I pay no mortgage interest."

Ferroux says he finds it difficult to round up accredited teachers, even at the salary levels offered by the New Orleans public school system.

He cites other snags in private school operation which he doubts are taken into account by parents who hope to organize schools of their own.

"It's a shame," says Ferroux, "that people don't recognize the many problems involved in setting up and operating a private school."

Hidden Facts Aired in Private School Operation

By ROBERT N. KELSO

The way things are shaping up in the school integration battle, New Orleans parents sincerely interested in educating their children had better bone up on problems of private school operation.

A private school system is being put forward as a last-ditch alternative by the high command of Louisiana's anti-integration forces.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

Leaders of this movement envision closing all public schools in the state to avoid integrating any one of them under federal court order. Closing only some of the schools has already been declared unconstitutional elsewhere.

Sept. 8 is "D-Day in this historic campaign, and the last ditch is no longer a remote eventuality.

This ditch is a deep one. No state in the Union has ever abandoned its public school system. Opponents of such a drastic move predict chaos.

Prophesies of doom notwithstanding, let's assume nearly any social feat—whatever its magnitude—can be accomplished by energy, intelligence and application.

Authorized by State Law

Suppose you and a group of other parents in your general neighborhood want to set up a private school for your children. You may, after all, be forced to do this.

First comes the question of money. You and the other parents will have to assess yourselves for the original financial outlay.

Tuition grants for displaced public school children enrolled in a private, non-sectarian school are authorized by state law, but you can't depend on getting them immediately.

While you're rounding up the money, you'll also have to find a building or some kind of quarters for the school. You might be lucky here, and get quarters from a sympathetic owner for nominal rent.

Meantime, you are busy trying to line up however many teachers you'll need.

Since accredited teachers are in demand throughout the country, you'll have to offer them at least as much as they would normally earn, and convince them yours is no fly-by-night operation that might fold and leave them suddenly jobless.

The Orleans parish school board pays teachers with academic degrees a starting salary of $3490 to $3818, and its principals $6754 to $7057. Top salaries for teachers range from $5664 to $6746, and those for principals from $7562 to $9481.

Offer Retirement Plan

You might get one of your teachers versed in school administration to act as principal, but the added work load would command additional salary.

You will also have to offer some kind of teacher retirement plan—probably an annuity insurance program to work in combination with federal social security.

Operating a school, in many respects, is like operating a business. There is need for secretarial help, and purchasing, accounting, auditing and maintenance work.

Sloppy operation costs money and may spell ruin. Some of the above work will have to be done by experts. Not all of it can be spare-time contributions from helpful parents.

Since you are a small business, you'll be unable to buy as cheaply as a school system can.

A headmaster of one of this area's better private schools estimates it costs his institution on the average about 40 per cent more on purchases than it does the school board.

The operator of a less-expensive, but accredited, private elementary school estimates he pays only about 15 per cent more.

Financed by State Grants

Your school, whatever the differential, will be in a position comparable to that of a corner grocery competing with a supermarket chain.

Proponents of private-school operation as a substitute for public schools have two major premises which they contend simplify setting up such a "business."

The first is that operations will be financed by state tuition grants channeled to the private schools through payments to the pupil's parents or guardians.

If such payments escape prohibition by the federal courts, they will have to be made monthly to prevent financial snarls in auditing.

The state of Arkansas, while Little Rock's high schools were closed for one term, paid out $24.50 a month per student to private schools, until the payments were stopped by federal court action.

Financial planning will be difficult. The Orleans school

Economic Loss Seen in Millions If Schools Shut

By ROBERT N. KELSO

What will it cost New Orleans, economically, if its public schools close down as a result of the integration controversy?

Segregation leaders don't expect schools to close.

They say if legal moves by the state to keep schools open and segregated should fail, any sacrifice entailed in setting up a substitute private school system is worthwhile to maintain traditional separation of the races.

Other observers believe disruption of the public school system is a strong possibility as the state gathers its strength for a showdown battle with federal authorities.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

No one in New Orleans has attempted to survey the possible economic repercussions of school closure. A dollars and cents estimate is hard to come by.

See Millions Lost

Still, Tulane university economic experts think the community would suffer a cumulative loss running into millions of dollars if the public education system were disrupted or destroyed to maintain segregation.

These experts put Louisiana's eventual loss, if all schools in the state were to close, in the billions.

They cite two prime factors they say would cripple economic growth and lower total buying power if schools were to close:

1. National publicity about schools closing would strongly deter new industrial or business development from outside the state.

Some national firms which have established offices or operations in New Orleans, these observers feel, might leave because their key personnel could not get schooling for their children.

The Tulane men describe the availability of good public schools as one of the principal requirements for luring new plants and offices to any community.

2. The community would suffer substantial losses in earning power as thousands of youngsters enter the labor market without a high school diploma and the paychecks of other thousands who resume school and graduate start a year behind-hand.

Canal street merchants, meanwhile, are already feeling the effect of public uncertainty over whether schools will open.

Sales of "back-to-school" items for children were off about 30 per cent last week as this special merchandising campaign began.

"The promotion fell flat," one merchant reported.

This sales resistance is, perhaps, just a straw in the wind, but merchants are apprehensive that bigger blows may follow.

Considers Move to Houston

Meanwhile, a major oil company was reported considering a move from New Orleans to Houston.

Key employes were said to have generally opposed the idea until recently, when public school opening became a question mark.

Persons opposing a school shutdown to avoid integration cite the experience of Little Rock, where high schools were closed for a year after an integration battle in 1957.

They quote figures provided by the Little Rock Industrial Development Company to the efect that 40 new plants located in Little Rock in the years 1950-57.

There have been no new industrial plants added since that time.

Sharp Decline Is Shown

Another study showed that the number of families moving into Little Rock has declined sharply since the integration trouble in 1957.

Moving companies in Little Rock reported business was good, but a majority of 85 business men polled in the winter of 1959 said the Little Rock school situation had hurt sales.

Member firms of the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce went on record in March last year nearly three-to-one against continued school closure.

They voted nearly four-to-one in favor of opening the schools with "controlled integration" acceptable to the federal court.

Faubus Gains Claim

Other indices of Little Rock's economy appear to have dropped off during the period since 1957, but this effect cannot be traced with any certainty to the closing of schools.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who recently won a fourth term as the champion of Arkansas' segregationists, has been quoted as saying the state's economy has actually improved during this period.

Whatever the picture in Little Rock may imply, the effects of schools closing for a year in New Orleans would be felt to the tune of something like $2.4 million.

A study of projected expenditures, based on the school board's 1959-60 budget, indicates the New Orleans business community would lose approximately that amount if schools closed this term.

Building, Equipment

Also imperiled is $6.3 million in new school construction and equipment purchases scheduled for the coming year.

Involved here are three new junior highs, one elementary school and two additions to existing schools.

The letting of contracts for $5,781,769 in construction and $540,240 in equipment would normally occur in late November or early December.

But this $6.3 million would probably not be spent if schools were closed at that time.

Salaries Would Continue

A bright spot in the school expenditure picture is that all salaries of the board's 3313 teachers and 2119 other employes would be continued as long as a full term if schools are temporarily closed.

Salaries represent some $21 million of the school board's $28 million operating budget.

If schools close temporarily, a majority of the school board's employes would probably remain in New Orleans, spending their salaries here as usual.

However, approximately one-third of the teaching staff has five years or less service with the system.

School administrators fear a sizeable number of this group would seek teaching jobs elsewhere if schools didn't operate. These teachers are predominantly younger persons whose roots in the city may not be deep enough to impel them to stay.

Blow to System

This loss of teachers would be a blow to the educational system as well as to the economy of the community.

Whatever the turn of events on school construction and the continued residence of teachers left without pupils, the $2.4 million in miscellaneous expenditures is almost certain to go unspent if schools close.

This is not the total budgeted for such items. The school board has already spent a part of it and will spend additional sums on skeletal operations if the schools close.

But each and every month during a school shutdown, New Orleans firms who normally service the school system will lose some $265,000 in sales.

This would hit a broad cross-section of New Orleans business—oil, automotive repairs and replacement parts; detergents and other custodial supplies; building maintenance items; office and classroom furniture; telephone and utilities—to name a few.

Food and Milk Bill

Biggest single item that will be dispensed with if schools close is $1.3 million in food and milk bought annually for school lunchroom operation.

New Orleans dairies sell some 50,000 half pints of milk a day to the school lunch department.

Closure of the school lunch department also would rule out some $92,000 in equipment purchases, repairs and maintenance normally slated for purchase during the year.

The estimate that closing schools would cost the New Orleans economy "hundreds of millions" comes from four economic experts associated with the Tulane university school of business administration.

Round-Table Discussion

This prediction emerged in a special round-table discussion staged for the States-Item by business administration Dean Howard Schaller; former Dean Paul Grambsch, recently named to a similar position at the University of Minnesota; Clarence H. Danhof, professor of economics, and W. David Maxwell, associate professor of economics.

If New Orleans schools were closed for a year, say the Tulane men, the cumulative loss in earnings to the 45,000 white students affected could run into millions of dollars over their working lifetimes.

The Tulane economists calculate this figure in two ways.

Several thousand students, they say, quite probably would never finish the high school training. Each of these, in his lifetime working career, would lose $60,000—the amount the average high school graduate earns above that made by persons lacking a high school diploma.

'Sterilize' Growth Rate

The thousands more who would finish their high school training if schools reopened would lose $5000 apiece in lifetime-average earnings, because they would start their work careers a year late.

The Tulane economists contend long-range economic effects of closing schools would eventually hit the pocketbook of every citizen, regardless of whether his own education or that of his children was affected.

They say that closing schools could "actually sterilize" the rate of New Orleans' economic growth. They believe this growth would "slow down to zero" if schools were permanently closed.

board knows, to the penny, how much it will have to spend for the entire succeeding year of operation.

Recruits Teachers, Personnel

The school board's administrative staff recruits teachers and other personnel on a round-the-calendar basis, anticipating in October or November needs for the following year.

The staff also gears its purchases throughout the year to take advantage of market trends.

Advocates of a private-school system also hold forth the prospect that private educational corporations will get a chance to buy public school buildings and other facilities if they are permanently closed.

Legislation permitting such transfer is on the books. The law says school properties can be leased or sold for "cash or credit" at not less than their replacement cost.

Those who doubt the legality of such an arrangement say you might have to buy the properties, and pay cash on the line.

If you could arrange to buy a school building on credit, you'd have to demonstrate your ability to pay something like $250,000 for an old elementary school, or $500,000 for a recently-built one.

Run into Unsuspected Difficulties

It would probably cost you more to borrow the money to close this deal than it costs the school board when it borrows money to build or renovate.

With your income fluctuating and uncertain from tuition grants, you might not be able to borrow the money at all.

You could, of course, abandon the idea of buying a public school property and obtain the best type of quarters

With your income fluctuating and uncertain from tuition grants, you might not be able to borrow the money at all.

You could, of course, abandon the idea of buying a public school property and obtain the best type of quarters available for what you have to spend.

Here, too, you would run into unsuspected difficulties. Buildings not designed specifically for school use are less suitable to educational needs, and are more expensive to run.

DeKalb county, Georgia, was recently obliged to use some church buildings while new schools were under construction. The school superintendent reported maintenance costs were double those in standard school buildings, and insurance costs four times higher.

Another consideration is that your school plant, facilities and operation must meet certain standards to be accredited by the state.

For an elementary school some of these standards are:

Properly-Located Office

Not more than 35 pupils per class; sufficient teaching staff so no teacher instructs in more than three grades; a school term of not less than 175 days, excluding holidays, and a long list of specifications for school buildings and grounds.

Some of these last are:

Location and construction, upkeep, lighting, heating, ventilation, nature of the toilets, corridors and closets, water supply, apparatus and methods of cleaning, classrooms suitable for both teachers and students, and janitorial services.

The principal, moreover, must have a properly-located office and facilities for record-keeping and the compilation of reports to the state board of education.

A library of not less than five volumes per pupil is required.

Standards for high schools are more elaborate. They require that classes be held to an average of 30 students and a teaching load of not more than 150 students per teacher daily; laboratories and workshops of specified size and equipment, and a school day of not less than five clock hours, exclusive of lunch and recess periods.

These are merely general statements on rigorous requirements which actually spell out the minimal square-footage of plant facilities and other precise specifications.

They are required of both public and private schools alike, and must be maintained if state accreditation is to continue.

Are You in the Clear?

Let's suppose you and your group have ironed out all these foregoing problems. Are you in the clear?

Not if you intend to give your children education and auxiliary services comparable to those they get in New Orleans public schools.

How will you provide instruction in music, art, manual skills and the foreign languages most readily learned in childhood?

What will you do with pupils who have difficulty reading, seeing, hearing, speaking, or those with other handicaps? What about visiting teachers for children bedridden with lengthy illness?

How will you handle dental and health care that public schools now help oversee?

What will you do with pupils who may need special guidance, counseling or psychiatric testing and referral?

Where will you get and how will you offer visual aids—educational films, recordings, special charts-at-a-glance, etc.?

Spread Over Entire System

These things can be offered in New Orleans public schools because the services of visiting teachers, cultural instructors, nurses, doctors, psychologists and others are spread out over the entire system at a minimal cost per pupil.

Not even the most expensive private school in the New Orleans area offers all this. Yet it comes "free" in public school.

Multiply these problems 100-fold and you get a rough idea of what sort of effort it would take to replace the city's public schools with private ones.

White Minority Seen If Orleans Schools Integrate

By ROBERT N. KELSO

Ardent segregationists contend that Southern communities cannot accede to "token" school integration without opening floodgates which eventually will overwhelm white schools with Negro applicants.

They cite the District of Columbia, whose schools were completely desegregated in 1954. In the District's 161 public schools last term, 73,290 Negroes were attending school with 25,880 whites.

Segregationists say the racial mixing of schools in the nation's capital has forced thousands of white families there either to move to less-integrated communities nearby, or send their children to school elsewhere.

They fear New Orleans will eventually fall into the same pattern under integration, with Negroes far outnumbering white children in public schools.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

The Citizens Council of Greater New Orleans, the city's most vocal segregationist group, sums up its own view in these words:

"There can no more be 'token integration' any more than there can be 'token smallpox'—you have it or you don't."

Third Highest Degree

The degree of racial mixing in District of Columbia schools is unparalleled in any other Southern or 'border' state.

Desegregated Missouri had an estimated 35,000 Negroes attending school last term with whites. The state had an enrollment of 738,000 whites and 82,000 Negroes.

Maryland, also completely desegregated, had the third highest degree of racial mixing in schools, with 28,072 Negroes attending school with whites. Enrollment was 442,244 whites and 74,480 Negroes.

These states, of course, have a lower percentage of Negro pupils than do states in the Deep South, like Louisiana.

A higher degree of racial mixing—unless curbed by pupil placement laws—would result from desegregation of Deep South schools.

Louisiana, last term, had a total school enrollment of 412,563 whites and 261,491 Negroes. The percentage of Negro pupils—38.7 per cent.

New Orleans itself had a public school enrollment last term of 40,894 whites and 50,221 Negroes.

Expected enrollment next month, if schools open, is approximately 43,000 whites and 52,000 Negroes.

Outnumbered by Large Ratio

The ratio in the first grade, ordered desegregated by federal district Judge J. Skelly Wright, would be an estimated 4000 whites to 7000 Negroes.

In New Orleans, Negro public school children have outnumbered whites by an increasingly large ratio since 1956.

Resident birth statistics indicate this trend is likely to continue, despite the fact that white citizens of New Orleans outnumber Negro citizens nearly two to one.

The most recent racial breakdown of the city's population available is that made in a special census two years ago. At that time, the city had 388,587 whites and 214,060 nonwhites.

Those classified as "nonwhite" are almost entirely Negro, with only a sprinkling of Orientals falling under this heading.

Despite the predominance of white citizens, Negroes in 1959 began producing more children than whites in New Orleans.

In the period from January, 1959, to May, 1960, state health department statistics show this comparison on resident births:

Whites, 9148.

Nonwhites, 11,851.

Future Racial Complexion

This trend has particular significance to the future racial complexion of public schools, for this reason:

A three-year statistical study by the school board administrative staff shows that only about 44 per cent of white babies born here enter a public school when they reach their sixth year.

But the number of Negro children entering the first grade of a public school is some 90 per cent of resident births.

This wide divergence can be explained, in part, by the greater number of white children who enter parochial or private schools rather than public school.

Some Negro children also start their education in parochial schools and the handful of Negro private schools that exist in the city—but the proportion is very much smaller.

Parochial schools last year absorbed less than 14 per cent of the 61,675 Negro children enrolled in all New Orleans schools—public, parochial and private.

Nonsectarian private schools enrolled only 1398 Negro children.

There is another factor which makes gradual integration of New Orleans public schools difficult.

Unique Among Metropolises

New Orleans is almost unique among Southern metropolises (or smaller cities, for that matter) in having a number of older residential neighborhoods where for years whites and Negroes have lived side by side.

In most Southern cities, Negroes live in neighborhoods set apart from those of white citizens.

A number of existing white schools in New Orleans are located in neighborhoods with a relatively high percentage of Negro residents.

Integration of these schools—without elaborate screening of Negro applicants under the pupil placement law—could immediately produce a high degree of racial mixing.

Segregationists say these prospects make the idea of "token" integration completely unacceptable. They say if public schools are closed down to avoid integration, any resulting sacrifice is worthwhile.

Opponents of integration are banking on Gov. Jimmie H. Davis' interposing the sovereignty of Louisiana to keep New Orleans public schools open on a segregated basis.

The Citizens' Council, in a carefully wrought brochure recently given public distribution, describes Louisiana's school segregation laws as "the soundest, fairest, best planned program for emergency education of the victims of court-ordered integration that can be devised."

This view is not shared by other observers. A notable example is school board president Lloyd J. Rittiner.

Public Must Choose

While asserting he prefers segregated schools, Rittiner contends the public now has to choose between integrated schools and no public schools at all.

Rittiner attended a top-level conference on the school crisis in Baton Rouge last month.

Gov. Davis and Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion assured the public after this conference that the state would take legal steps to keep New Orleans public schools open and segregated.

Rittiner emerged from the conference unconvinced. He was asked the following day by a States-Item reporter, "Do you believe that what the attorney general is proposing will preserve segregation in the public schools?" Rittiner replied:

"To answer the question directly, as a lay person, I believe there is absolutely nothing that the governor or the attorney general can do to maintain a segregated school system in Louisiana."

Rittiner, a majority of the school board, and many New Orleans parents who actually prefer segregated schools believe the issue has narrowed down to this urgent question:

"Will the public school system be disrupted or completely destroyed in the battle against court-ordered integration?"

These people contend that the crucial issue, under the pressure of Judge Wright's order to desegregate first-grade classes next month, is not segregation vs. integration.

Some Degree of Mixing

As they see it, the question is: Shall we start integrating schools, or abandon the public education system?

These people are willing to accept some degree of racial mixing in the schools, rather than risk having them close down.

Fervent segregationists don't see the issue this way.

The Citizens' Council brochure, answering the question whether there were any solution consistent with Judge Wright's ruling which would enable the public school system to survive, declared:

"The answer to this question suggested by the (school) board was 'token integration' under the pupil placement act passed in 1958.

"This is nothing more or less than a program of planned appeasement of federal aggression . . . the school integration program is merely another step in a long program of federal aggression against states of the South.

"For more than 30 years we have been told by public officials and well-meaning, but gullible, private citizens that if we would but give a little more on the question of states rights and segregation, all would be well and the NAACP would be satisfied.

Lion's Share of Welfare

"We have tried building better public schools for our colored children than for our white; we have tried raising salaries of colored public employes to equal or better than their white equivalent; we have tried furnishing colored people with the lion's share of public welfare, public medical assistance and other such programs.

"We have tried in every way to acceed to any demand which could be met without the final sacrifice of our institutions, our families and our honor. All has been in vain.

"We would indeed be fools to assume that 'token integration' would appease these enemies of our whole social system."

Looking beyond Sept. 8 and into the years to come, a sober observer could conclude that New Orleans' school integration battle is likely to be part and parcel of a long war.

THE PROBLEM AHEAD #9

Who Loses Most In Closing of Public Schools?

By ROBERT N. KELSO

As public concern deepens over whether New Orleans public schools will open Sept. 8, the segment of the population most directly affected stands in the wings, waiting.

That group is the students themselves.

Adults alone are helping decide the outcome of the struggle stemming from the federal court order for school integration at the first-grade level.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

The gravity of the integration issue, which shows strong signs of becoming a major campaign in Louisiana's states' rights battle, demands mature decisions and careful judgment.

Few parents would say school-age youngsters were equipped for this job.

Yet it is the youngsters who will have to take whatever comes on and after Sept. 8.

Some observers—and there are many educators among them—fear the youngsters may suffer a permanent setback in their educational development if public schools are closed.

The educators contend closing public schools would disrupt the learning process of pupils at all age levels.

Graduating Classes Most Affected

Any disruption, however, would be felt soonest by high school students eyeing graduation, and the significant percentage of them who want to go to college.

Advocates of private-school substitutes for public education insist that no major disruption of the educational process need take place if the public schools are closed.

They regard such a changeover as chiefly a matter of handling technicalities so that buildings, teachers, materials and methods are transferred from public operation to control by private educational corporations.

Counting on Governor

Fervent segregationists don't belive the schools will close. They're counting on Gov. Jimmie H. Davis' promise to keep them open and segregated.

But if a determined move by the state to operate racially-separated schools fails, segregationist leaders envision a private-school system as a last resort.

The belief that private schools would be a workable substiute for public schools is not shared in some quarters.

Several New Orleans educators have told this reporter they don't believe students attending such newly-set-up private schools would earn credits acceptable for college-entrance requirements.

Year's Operation Required

The state board of education doesn't accredit new schools until they've been in operation at least one year.

Accreditation standards of the state board are not easily met. Those of higher accreditation agencies—such as the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and the Association of American Universities—are even more demanding.

The educators also contend many "just average" students would drop out of school altogether if public schools were closed.

Experience in Little Rock and in Norfolk, Va., where in 1958 secondary schools were closed during an integration battle, indicates many displaced public school pupils didn't even finish high school.

Hasty Private Schools

Some of these students were enrolled during the shutdown in hastily set-up private schools, others were sent to schools away from their home communities; still others, less lucky, got no schooling whatever.

Little Rock's four high schools were closed during the entire 1958-59 term, shutting out some 2700 students. Several private schools were organized in an attempt to fill the gap.

But in December 1958, the Little Rock school board estimated that 825 high school children were getting no schooling whatever, and 405 others were receiving instruction only by mail.

The following November, after the Little Rock schools had reopened, the school board announced that 1141 boys and girls who should have been attending the city's high schools were not enrolled.

Several Hundred Dropped Out

Many of these children were presumed to be attending school in other cities and states, but several hundred were considered to have dropped out of school altogether.

In Norfolk, some 9950 pupils were shut out of three high schools and three junior highs when these schools closed in September, 1958. The schools remained closed one semester, then reopened under federal court order.

During the semester shutdown in Norfolk, 948 students were lucky enough to attend nearly regular classes in unaffected South Norfolk high school from 4 to 9 p. m.

Another 270 attended a newly-organized private school. Some 4400 children paid $20 a month to attend tutoring classes in such quarters as churches, stores and garages.

2700 Got No Schooling

An estimated 1620 children left Norfolk to study elsewhere. And 2700 children got no schooling whatever.

The superintendent of Norfolk schools reported only 487 of the 1048 seniors in the three white high schools which closed graduated that June at their reopened schools.

The shutdown in Virginia also hit three high schools in other localities, displacing some 3600 additional students.

Several New Orleans educators have stressed in interviews with this reporter that any interruption of schooling tends to kill the "momentum" students need to continue their studies.

Psychological Effect Felt

This psychological effect is felt, the educators say, even after the interruption of school during a regular summer vacation. It slows down all but the brightest and most eager students.

U. S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Arthur S. Flemming touched on this point in commenting last summer on the school shutdowns in Arkansas and Virginia. Said Flemming:

"We know that as far as many of the children and young people are concerned, these are . . . lost days which will be difficult for them to recapture from the point of view of their intellectual growth and development.

Time Alone Will Tell

"Approximately 14,500 of the 16,300 students affected by the shutdowns were exposed to schooling of one kind or another during the year . . . Time alone will make it possible to appraise the results of the instruction.

"It is clear, however, that from the standpoint of the development of the individual it doesn't make sense to resort to makeshift arrangements when adequate facilities, equipment, and libraries are available."

In New Orleans last week, the executive committee of the Tulane chapter of the American Association of University Professors issued a statement deploring any proposal to close the city's schools.

Thousands Face Injury

The statement said, in part:

"If for any reason the public schools close, thousands of children in our community face irreparable injury to the natural course of their education . . .

"It is impossible to calculate precisely the amount of personal injury to promising life careers that will be inflicted upon the school children of New Orleans if the public schools are closed, but there is little question that it will be severe and permanent."

A number of New Orleans parents share the professors' alarm at the prospect of schools closing.

Some Have Made Plans

Some of them have already made plans to get their children enrolled in schools outside New Orleans.

Several hundred other New Orleanians are involved in setting up co-operatives for operation of private, segregated schools.

But these people say they are "standing by" to see if Gov. Davis manages to keep public schools open.

Parents with no plans afoot are just waiting.

NAACP Readies Plans of Action For Mixing Date

By ROBERT N. KELSO

One of the chief combatants in New Orleans' school integration battle is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP, little heard from while white citizens have wrangled for three months over integration and the possibility that schools might close, is now readying plans of action for Sept. 8.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

These appear to be chiefly an effort to get a significant number of Negroes who live near white schools to stand up and be counted—if the state fails to keep the schools segregated — by seeking transfer of their first-grade children into these schools.

The NAACP has slated a closed meeting for tonight, where members are to be given "specific instructions on how to carry out our program against vulnerable spots."

court injunction from making any move toward integration.

Segregationist leaders say Gov. Jimmie H. Davis will open and operate the schools Sept. 8 on a segregated basis dispite the federal court order.

The NAACP, which has already won more than two dozen legal skirmishes in federal court, expects its winning streak to continue.

New Orleans NAACP attorney A. P. Tureaud, in the middle of the state's bid for an injunction against the school board two weeks ago, went into court and filed a three-way action seeking to prevent Gov. Davis and Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion from blocking integration.

Hearing Is Postponed

Tureaud's motion was originally set for hearing yesterday, but Judge Wright is conducting court in New York.

Against this legal background, the New Orleans NAACP chapter is forging plans to take what advantage it can of Judge Wright's integration order. It expects the order to hold.

Chapital told this reporter that remarks at Monday night's NAACP meeting meant nothing more nor less, than:

"We must be ready to move, now that there is hope of accomplishing the intent of at least eight years of pains-

Its shield and buckler in these legal encounters has been the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which guarantees to all persons born in the U.S. and to naturalized citizens the right of "due process of law" and "equal protection of the laws."

U.S. supreme court justices, outlawing racial segregation in public schools in 1954, said segregation deprived the Negro plaintiffs "of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment."

The NAACP has spearheaded all school desegregation suits, and presumably will continue to do so. One of its avowed purposes is complete elimination of school segregation.

The organization maintains national headquarters in New York and has chapters throughout the country.

Denies Red Influence

Critics have charged that the NAACP is influenced by Communists. Some of them charge the leadership of the organization is Communist infiltrated.

New Orleans NAACP leader Chapital flatly denies all this. So does national NAACP headquarters. Says Chapital:

"We have had legislation banning Communists since 1950. Every annual session has gone on record as being opposed to Communists, and Communist-front, Communist-the dawn of a new day in the education of Negroes has broken."

Chapital listed the objectives of the NAACP as:

"To gain first-class citizenship, equal opportunities and freedom for the American Negro through legal action in keeping with the constitution of the United States and its democratic ideals."

He said the NAACP fights school segregation not only as a matter of striving for "first-class citizenship," but "because every study in facilities, curricula and training establishes the fact that segregated education is unequal."

The Orleans parish school board, while fighting off interation during the past eight years, has in some of those years spent more money building new schools for Negroes than it has for white children.

It has also attempted to make the "separate" facilities and training more nearly "equal" to those provided for whites.

Tureaud says the NAACP here originally had its sights set on more and better schools for Negroes, "but there were never enough."

After the 1954 supreme court decision, he said, the NAACP pressed directly for school segregation.

Delaware Plan Tossed Out

Tureaud said the NAACP has no present plans to sue for a speedup in the rate of integration ordered by Judge Wright.

Judge Wright, although his May 16 order didn't specifically state it, had suggested a stairstep, grade-a-year plan, in an earlier order requesting the school board to map out some integration plan.

In Delaware last month, the U.S. third circuit court of appeals threw out the state's grade-a-year plan in

NAACP Readies Plans of Action For Mixing Date

By ROBERT N. KELSO

One of the chief combatants in New Orleans' school integration battle is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP, little heard from while white citizens have wrangled for three months over integration and the possibility that schools might close, is now readying plans of action for Sept. 8.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

These appear to be chiefly an effort to get a significant number of Negroes who live near white schools to stand up and be counted—if the state fails to keep the schools segregated — by seeking transfer of their first-grade children into these schools.

The NAACP has slated a closed meeting for tonight, where members are to be given "specific instructions on how to carry out our program against vulnerable spots."

This announcement was made at an open meeting of the New Orleans NAACP chapter Monday night by chapter president Arthur J. Chapital Sr.

28 White Schools

He later explained that the "vulnerable spots he referred to were some 28 white elementary schools with Negroes living nearby.

These schools were listed in a previous article of this series.

Close observers of the school integration controversy found nothing surprising in Chapital's announcement.

The NAACP eight years ago provided legal counsel for a suit by New Orleans Negro school children, which subsequently sent the Orleans parish school board into court more than 30 times. The board lost every round.

This same suit brought federal Judge J. Skelly Wright's May 16 order for desegregation of the first grade. The school board has since lost two appeal moves.

Forced Out by State

The board two weeks ago was forced out of the picture by the state of Louisiana, and is restrained by a civil court injunction from making any move toward integration.

Segregationist leaders say Gov. Jimmie H. Davis will open and operate the schools Sept. 8 on a segregated basis dispite the federal court order.

The NAACP, which has already won more than two dozen legal skirmishes in federal court, expects its winning streak to continue.

New Orleans NAACP attorney A. P. Tureaud, in the middle of the state's bid for an injunction against the school board two weeks ago, went into court and filed a three-way action seeking to prevent Gov. Davis and Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion from blocking integration.

Tureaud's motion was originally set for hearing yesterday, but Judge Wright is conducting court in New York.

Against this legal background, the New Orleans NAACP chapter is forging plans to take what advantage it can of Judge Wright's integration order. It expects the order to hold.

Chapital told this reporter that remarks at Monday night's NAACP meeting meant nothing more nor less, than:

"We must be ready to move, now that there is hope of accomplishing the intent of at least eight years of painstaking court action."

He declined to say what "specific instructions" would be given NAACP members at tonight's special meeting.

He indicated, however, that the instructions would be aimed at corraling a sufficient number of Negro parents living near white schools to make a showing, if Judge Wright's order is carried out.

Tureaud, himself, said recently he thought "very few" Negro parents would immediately try to enroll their first-grade youngsters in white schools.

Segregationists and many white Southerners in general regard the NAACP as hostile to Southern society.

Seek Membership Lists

A number of Southern states, including Louisiana, have attempted with varying degrees of success to force the NAACP to divulge its membership lists.

The NAACP, for its part, claims it is an enemy only of racial discrimination and segregation.

It has played the role of gadfly for some 50 years in court cases across the country, seeking "equal rights" for Negroes.

Its shield and buckler in these legal encounters has been the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which guarantees to all persons born in the U.S. and to naturalized citizens the right of "due process of law" and "equal protection of the laws."

U.S. supreme court justices, outlawing racial segregation in public schools in 1954, said segregation deprived the Negro plaintiffs "of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment."

The NAACP has spearheaded all school desegregation suits, and presumably will continue to do so. One of its avowed purposes is complete elimination of school segregation.

The organization maintains national headquarters in New York and has chapters throughout the country.

Denies Red Influence

Critics have charged that the NAACP is influenced by Communists. Some of them charge the leadership of the organization is Communist infiltrated.

New Orleans NAACP leader Chapital flatly denies all this. So does national NAACP headquarters. Says Chapital:

"We have had legislation banning Communists since 1950. Every annual session has gone on record as being opposed to Communists, and Communist-front, Communist-dominated and Communist-led organizations.

"We also direct our chapter youth councils and college chapters not to become involved in any way with such groups."

The New Orleans NAACP branch claims about 3000 members.

The organization had a statewide membership in 1958 of some 10,000, according to Tureaud. This was about the time the state began a drive to make public NAACP membership lists.

Tureaud said the membership had dropped off considerably since 1958, but he attributed the decline as "due probably to better economic conditions—fewer people are interested when times are good."

Chapital, asked for the NAACP's views on the current school controversy, said his organization considers that "the defenders of segregated schools have come to the end of their legal rope."

'Dawn of a New Day'

He described New Orleans Negroes as "gladdened that

"To gain first-class citizenship, equal opportunities and freedom for the American Negro through legal action in keeping with the constitution of the United States and its democratic ideals."

He said the NAACP fights school segregation not only as a matter of striving for "first-class citizenship," but "because every study in facilities, curricula and training establishes the fact that segregated education is unequal."

The Orleans parish school board, while fighting off interation during the past eight years, has in some of those years spent more money building new schools for Negroes than it has for white children.

It has also attempted to make the "separate" facilities and training more nearly "equal" to those provided for whites.

Tureaud says the NAACP here originally had its sights set on more and better schools for Negroes, "but there were never enough."

After the 1954 supreme court decision, he said, the NAACP pressed directly for school segregation.

Delaware Plan Tossed Out

Tureaud said the NAACP has no present plans to sue for a speedup in the rate of integration ordered by Judge Wright.

Judge Wright, although his May 16 order didn't specifically state it, had suggested a stairstep, grade-a-year plan, in an earlier order requesting the school board to map out some integration plan.

In Delaware last month, the U.S. third circuit court of appeals threw out the state's grade-a-year plan, in operation since September, 1959, and ordered integration at all grade levels in 1961.

This has brought speculation that Negro plaintiffs elsewhere would ask for speedups in integrating schools.

Tureaud said the Delaware court's action, if upheld by the U.S. supreme court, "may have the effect of speeding up such cases as come along" where Negro plaintiffs seek admission to higher grades of white schools.

Benjamin Franklin High

The NAACP attorney said he knows of no one in New Orleans who plans such a suit, "although there are some Negroes who want to get into Benjamin Franklin High school."

On the "speedup" score, Chapital said:

"It is only logical to assume that a grade a year for 12 years is too slow. We'll take up the matter (of a possible speedup) in due time.

"No action of that nature will be taken until this matter of first-grade integration has been cleared up."

Opinion Divided On the Price of Desegregation

By ROBERT N. KELSO

Public opinion on the school crisis is sharply divided on the presumed price New Orleanians will pay if the federal court order to desegregate is carried out Sept. 8.

Segregationists say the price is too high—that first-grade integration is an opening wedge to thorough racial mixing which they contend will destroy the school system.

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

They term people who think the price can be met "integrationists."

Segregationist opposition to any form of integration in the schools is apparently shared by a majority of New Orleans white citizenry, including the bulk of white parents of public school children.

On the other side of the fence are individuals and groups of widely divergent character.

They include plain parents joined to press for open schools, members of the clergy, college professors, and rep-representatives of various strata of community life.

These people, in the main, regard any proposal to close schools—as provided by state law if they can't be kept segregated—as an invitation to disaster.

Segregationists believe Gov. Jimmie H. Davis will open racially separated schools.

If he fails, they are willing to see schools close and an attempt made to substitute a private-school system.

Some Mixing or No Schools

The other camp says the issue is public schools with some degree of integration, or no public schools at all.

Each side claims that the other is not facing up to the main issue.

The public school controversy doesn't fall into the category of a manageable debate topic. Too many unknown factors are still on the loose for an "either-or" proposition.

The prime factor still to be made known is what will happen when, and if, Gov. Davis steps in to run the schools, despite the federal court order.

He told a news conference Wednesday he still intends to "do anything necessary" to keep New Orleans schools open and segregated next month.

Gov. Davis didn't say what procedure he will follow to do this. He added he wants the "benefit of the opinion of a lot of people" before he acts.

Wagner Spells Out Procedures

Attorney Emile A. Wagner, segregationist school board member and member of the newly appointed state sovereignty commission, says Gov. Davis will move in, operate segregated schools, and the federal court won't be able to prevent it.

Wagner is the only segregationist leader who has spelled out what procedures Gov. Davis might take.

Wagner told the States-Item this week, after attending a secret meeting of the Sovereignty Commission in Baton Rouge; that Gov. Davis will move in Sept. 8 and operate the schools on a segregated basis.

Wagner stressed that Davis would be "acting in his official capacity, and not just as Jimmie Davis," invoking the sovereignty of the state of Louisiana.

"The laws of Louisiana provide for the governor to take over the schools," Wagner said. "He will do so and operate them as they have been operated in the past."

State Not Party to NAACP Suit

How can Gov. Davis do this? Wagner offers this explanation:

The state of Louisiana has never been made a party to the NAACP suit which resulted in Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright's order.

Judge Wright held in his order that the state was not a "proper party defendant." Judge Wright's decree was upheld by the federal court of appeals, and the U.S. supreme court refused to review the case.

"Therefore," says Wagner, "the state of Louisiana is not a party to these proceedings, has not been enjoined by any court, and may legally operate the schools on a segregated basis without violating any mandate of any court."

(The NAACP has filed a motion in federal court to block any effort by Gov. Davis and Atty. Gen. Jack P. F. Gremillion to interfere with integration of the schools. It is expected to get a hearing within two weeks.)

Wagner gives this line of legal reasoning which he says will support the legality of an interposition move by Gov. Davis:

1. Gov. Davis, first of all, won't voluntarily accept service of any federal court citation charging him with violating the court mandate or with contempt.

2. If Gov. Davis is cited anyhow, "the federal court would lose jurisdiction of the case because no action can be brought by any individual or individuals against a state in any form except in the courts of that state."

3. No judgment could be rendered against Gov. Davis in his official capacity unless the state has consented to be sued. Consent is given only by statute.

4. It is an "established principle of law" that a state cannot be sued without its consent.

The picture, as Wagner gives it, shows Gov. Davis acting within the framework of Louisiana law and theoretically beyond the reach of federal court judgment.

Wagner contends that Gov. Davis' interposition and "refusal to submit himself to the federal court" would prevent his meeting the fate of Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus and Virginia Gov. J. Lindsey Almond when they tried to close schools to prevent integration.

Faubus, Almond Actions Held Illegal

Federal courts ruled that Faubus and Almond had acted illegally.

U.S. Attorney M. Hepburn Many doesn't believe Gov. Davis can successfully ignore Judge Wright's order.

He cites Article VI of the U.S. Constitution. Section two of this article states:

"This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, . . . shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary nothwithstanding."

Many says this means that "when state laws conflict with national laws, national laws prevail."

In a public address last week, Many had this to say about any attempt to interpose the sovereignty of the state of Louisiana to prevent school integration:

"When we accept executive fiat for rule by law, we abandon the American concept of government."

Many was asked what measures would be taken to enforce Judge Wright's integration order. He replied:

"What the court orders is law. We as citizens should live according to the law.

"However, the court will use what force is necessary. The greater the resistance, the greater the force."

Plain citizens seldom can keep up with the hair-splitting legal points raised by lawyers. Still, it is the lawyers who will meet in the finish fight over whether New Orleans schools are integrated.

Here is a sampling of opinion voiced on the integration issue:

Dr. Emmett L. Irwin, president of the Citizens' Council of Greater New Orleans—"The white people of New Orleans and Louisiana, in overwhelming numbers, have spoken repeatedly at the polls and in the Legislature through their duly elected representatives that they do not want their children to be placed in school with Negro children, and they do not intend to have this crime committed against their children and the white race."

Dr. Albert W. Dent, president of Dillard university—"The question before New Orleans is a very simple one. If we operate a public school system, we must comply with the interpretations and directives of the federal court . . . defiance in this matter . . . can only lead to disregard of other laws and to the eventual breakdown of our form of government."

New Orleans Family Service Society (in a letter to officials urging schools be kept open)—"An ongoing public education system is essential and basic for family stability and the development of children who will eventually be parents and citizens . . . The principle that every child has a right to an uninterrupted education is basic to the democratic American way of life."

Lawrence Hennessy Jr., president of the White Educational Association, Inc.—"School integration will lead to the destruction of our country, our civilization and the Caucasian race." The NAACP "is running the country and pushing the white man around."

From a statement by 94 New Orleans area ministers and rabbis—"The choice which confronts us now is either the end of an enforced segregation in public schools or no public schools whatever.

"We are alarmed to note that many political leaders are apparently willing to offer no better solution than the closing of public schools and the destruction of public education in order to maintain what has been inappropriately described as 'our sacred way of life.' "

Executive committee, Tulane chapter, American Association of University Professors—"Closure (of public schools) is a counsel of utter despair, a kind of secession from the civilized world, incompatible with the rational character of the human intellect."

THE PROBLEM AHEAD # 12

3 Possible Outcomes as School Mix Deadline Nears

By ROBERT N. KELSO

The showdown in New Orleans' school integration crisis is 25 short days away.

Sept. 8, the scheduled date for opening public schools, is D-Day in the battle which will decide whether:

ROBERT N. KELSO

One of a Series

1. Integration begins in first-grade classes as ordered by federal district Judge J. Skelly Wright, nullifying years of legal action by the school board to prevent desegregation.

2. Schools are closed as authorized under one of the state's segregation laws, shutting out an estimated 95,000 New Orleans pupils, white and Negro.

3. Gov. Jimmie H. Davis, ignoring the federal court, can operate the schools on a segregated basis.

These are the three most probable outcomes of the struggle which pits the state of Louisiana against the authority of federal courts which have ruled that school segregation violates the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Some other resolution aside from these three is possible, but not likely, as the battle lines are now drawn for a head-on clash Sept. 8.

Judge Wright's desegregation order has been upheld by the U.S. fifth circuit court of appeals and the U.S. supreme court has refused to review the case.

Judge Wright, a graduate of Loyola university law school and a former teacher at Fortier High school, is backed in his desegregation order by a voluminous mass of federal court rulings outlawing school segregation and the various devices states have used in an effort to block it.

Reported Firm in Stand

Sources close to Judge Wright say he won't back down and is ready to call on Washington for help in enforcing his order if such help is needed.

The jurist foresaw the possibility of just such a clash as looms Sept. 8, when he ordered the school board in July of last year to prepare a plan of integration.

He suggested then that the board offer a plan for desegregating one grade each year, starting with the first grade.

And he expressed hope a crisis similar to that in Little Rock—where President Eisenhower sent federal troops to guarantee the safe entry of Negroes into a Little Rock high school—would not develop in New Orleans.

Judge Wright's comment, when ordering a desegregation plan, was:

"The choice whether New Orleans will become another Little Rock is not the school board's alone. Our news media, our public and private leaders, our churchmen and the public generally will share in the responsibility of that decision . . .

"This court has every confidence that these responsible influences of our community life will take their places, as they have in the past, on the side of law and order."

The school board, contending it was prevented by a 1956 Louisiana law from complying with Judge Wright's request, offered no desegregation plan by the May 15, 1960, deadline the jurist set.

Judge Wright then produced one of his own. It authorizes white or Negro students in the first grades, at their option, to attend the school nearest their home—whether the school be formerly all-white or all-Negro, and permits transfers to other schools unless they are made for considerations of race.

Many informed observers doubt that Gov. Davis can successfully defy Judge Wright's order.

This possibility prompted the drafting of a whole new set of school segregation laws in the May session of the Legislature, on the heels of Judge Wright's ruling.

One of these statutes empowers the governor to close all the public schools in Louisiana on the date that any of them is to be integrated by court order.

Possibility No. 2

This is the law leading to Possibility No. 2—that schools may close.

Gov. Davis has repeatedly promised he will "do anything needed" to keep New Orleans schools open and segregated.

The school closure law does not bind Gov. Davis to close all schools. It leaves such a move up to his discretion.

But if Gov. Davis should attempt to close some schools, while permitting others to operate, he will run afoul of federal court rulings in other states that hold such action illegal under the Constitution.

This is the angle that leads some observers—including attorneys who have studied the whole problem—to believe that schools may close down in the face of the state's determination to prevent integrtaion.

Whether schools will, or should, close has emerged as the biggest issue in the controversy.

A predominant majority of white citizens in New Orleans and throughout the state decidedly prefer segregated schools.

The question is whether they can keep them in the face of a supreme court interpretation of the Constitution which flatly states that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal" and a violation of the 14th Amendment's guarantee that all citizens have "equal protection of the laws."

Segregation leaders apparently backed by most white citizens are determined to make a last-ditch stand to retain racially separate schools.

They contend that school mixing will eventually lead to the destruction of the public school system because of a heavy influx of Negroes into white schools and the refusal of many white parents to send their children to such racially mixed institutions.

In New Orleans they have ground for their argument that integration could soon create a "white minority" in public schools.

In September, if schools open, there will be an estimated enrollment of 4000 white children and 7000 Negroes in the first grade.

Over-all public school enrollment this September will number about 43,000 whites and 52,000 Negroes.

Negroes have outnumbered white students in New Orleans public schools by an increasingly large ratio since 1956. Statistics indicate this trend will continue.

Public school officials point out, however, that the state's pupil placement law—identical with an Alabama statute declared constitutional if not abused in its administration—can limit the actual number of Negroes admitted to white schools.

The supreme court, recognizing the existence of special local problems in integration, has authorized federal judges to give communities time to work out such problems if the delays be proven "necessary in the public interest" and consistent with "good faith compliance" with the 1954 desegregation ruling.

This leeway has permitted many communities to desegregate on a gradual basis and prevent an overnight flooding of white schools with Negro applicants.

Fervent segregationists prefer to see the schools close down altogether, rather than see them desegregated in the slightest degree. They contend "token integration" is merely the first step to total integration.

They say if schools have to be closed to avoid integration, private, segregated schools supported by state tuition grants to the students is a workable substitute.

Experience elsewhere casts doubt that such an arrangement would work in a city the size of New Orleans. There are also federal court rulings which might prevent the state from financing such segregated private schools with public tax monies.

Opponents of school closure contend it would be disastrous to the education progress of displaced public school students.

Economists estimate the cost of closing public schools would be a blow to the economy of New Orleans and the state which could run high into the millions of dollars.

The economists say new industry shuns an area where employes can't get a public school education for their children.

Segregationist leaders admit that closing schools to avoid integrating them is a last resort.

Meanwhile, a number of school parent groups in New Orleans are readying plans to operate their own private schools.

Other parents economically situated to do so are trying to enroll their children in what parochial and private schools in the area have space to accept them, or are shipping them off to relatives elsewhere.

We come now to the third possible outcome of the school integration battle.

This is that Gov. Davis will succeed in a move lawyers call "interposition," stepping in under the cloak of state sovereignity to operate segregated schools.

Interposition moves are rare in the past 100 years.

Interposition means that a governor, declaring his state has the right to manage certain affairs within its borders, acts without giving recognition to federal law or federal court rulings prohibiting such a move.

A New Orleans attorney most highly versed in the jurisprudence of school integration says he can find no precedent in legal literature that Gov. Davis could lean on if he interposes to open segregated schools.

Neither Gov. Davis nor Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion has said that an interposition move would be tried. They have implied that interposition might be their weapon in asserting "all legal means" would be taken to keep schools open and segregated.

Attorney Emile A. Wagner, the school board's most vocal segregationist and a member of the recently appointed state sovereignty commission, told The States-Item flatly this week that Gov. Davis would interpose.

Legal experts contend Gov. Davis can't get away with an interposition move invariably cite a 1958 supreme court ruling which emerged from Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus' attempt earlier that year to close Little Rock's high schools.

Here are some points in this ruling which can serve plain citizens as a guide in estimating whether interposition here can be made to stick:

(1) ". . . The controlling principles are plain. The command of the 14th Amendment is that no 'state' shall deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws . . ."

(2) "Thus the prohibitions of the 14th Amendment extend to all actions of the state denying equal protection of the laws; whatever the agency of the state taking the action . . ."

(3) "Article VI of the Constitution makes the Constitution the 'supreme law of the land'. . . ."

(4) "No state legislator or executive can war against the Constitution without violating his undertaking to support it . . . A governor who asserts a power to nullify a federal court order is similarly restrained."

This supreme court decision also deals with arrangements by states to use tax monies to support private, segregated schools. It says:

"State support of segregated schools, through any arrangement, management, funds or property cannot be squared with the amendment's command that no state shall deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

What New Orleans waits to see is how Gov. Davis will fare in his promised attempt to open segregated schools.

All Louisiana has a stake in this. Every public school in the state could be shut down if the governor's offensive fails.

Judge Wright, ruling in other cases brought by the NAACP, has ordered desegregation of East Baton Rouge parish schools (which include those in the state capital) and St. Helena parish schools.

These orders, though they set no date for compliance, indicate that it is only a matter of time before communities other than New Orleans will find themselves in the same fix.

As things have shaped up, a historic encounter is due on or shortly after Sept. 8.

THIS GOOD LIFE

This good life may be identified by a camping trip, a new hit play, or a quiet evening at home. But here in America it is really much more than these or other material things.

More than anything else, the good life is brought about by the freedom to choose your own way. This freedom, which is yours for every decision from a brand of fishing tackle to your choice of a career, makes life rich and exciting.

And what provides the information for your choices in material things? Probably advertising. It tells you what is available . . . makes even the everyday choices interesting and fun.

Advertising is information. So long as our mental appetites are stimulated by the freedom of choice offered through advertising, we will continue to be an alert, progressive nation.

Dear Lois:

"Operation Last Chance" is getting off the ground in such unlikely places as Augusta, Columbus, and at least twenty-five other communities. This quiet effort can be made with or without the name of HOPE. The important job is to get as many people as possible to agree to contact the Governor and their own legislators at the most effective time.

This "crisis moment" will probably come during the legislature. Our trusted advisors will give us the word, which we in turn will pass on to the key person or persons in each town. They will then fan out to the people who have agreed to join their voices with ours in a public outcry, privately made in whatever media they deem best: letter, card, telegraph, telephone, or personal visit.

We will be most grateful if you will implement this project in your town by whatever method seems most suitable. For instance, in LaGrange a small group met in a home, discussed it, and chose a chairman. Each person took ten cards, and agreed to take more in two weeks time. In Columbus three ladies are taking the responsibility together. It's as simple as that.

Of course, it saves time and money if you will just go ahead and do this "on your own". However, if you really need help, call on us. Someone will be glad to come and meet with a group. Just name the day, hour, and place.

The kit is being sent to you in hopes that it will help you get the job done. May we hear from you soon?

Hopefully,

Betty

A CITY DECIDES

is a documentary motion picture, told in dramatic form. It was nominated in the documentary class for a Motion Picture Academy "Oscar" in 1957.

A City Decides is a true story about the integration of the public schools of St. Louis, a border city in a border state. It revolves around a teacher who was directly faced with a "racial incident" in his class at Beaumont High School shortly after integration took place.

A City Decides shows how the Board of Education of St. Louis, helped by many citizens and local organizations and working from the precedent established by the private and parochial schools of the city, carried out a policy of integration firmly and wisely.

A City Decides does not say what other communities should do. It shows only what one community did. It does suggest that the answers to the problem of integration can be found.

Integrate or Close, Edict Tells Solons

Up to 1961 Legislature to Choose, Hooper Says in Ruling on Schools Here

Federal Judge Frank A. Hooper Tuesday reminded Georgians again that the 1960 Legislature must choose between desegregation in Atlanta or a possible statewide school shutdown.

In an official opinion supporting his delay of school integration in Atlanta until September, 1961, the U.S. district judge said:

"This court wishes to make it clear that the court has no desire to meddle into the affairs of the Georgia Legislature or the State of Georgia, but is making a sincere effort to enable the people of Georgia and its Legislature to make a decision in this matter, if they so desire, that will prevent the closing of the schools of Georgia.

"This is a matter of grave concern to the people of Georgia and in particular to the parents having children of school age, but not having sufficient funds with which to provide a private school for their children."

THE OPINION, dated Sept. 8, was filed Tuesday in the federal court clerk's office. It was an edited version of Judge Hooper's ad lib ruling from the bench May 9 when he denied a Negro request for integration to begin in Atlanta schools this month.

COMING ON the eve of the Democratic primary Wednesday when Georgians will finish selecting members of the 1961-62 Legislature, the official Hooper opinion said:

"This court on May 9 . . . had the feeling that the best interests of Georgia would be served by permitting a new Legislature to be elected with the full knowledge by most of our people as to the real issues involved and the possible disastrous consequences which could flow from the failure of the Georgia Legislature to permit the Atlanta plan to become effective."

The judge noted that members of the 1959-60 Legislature had mostly been elected on promises of all-out resistance to integration.

Judge Hooper said he "cannot say" whether the General Assembly Committee on Schools, set up at the 1960 session, "had no other purpose than to obtain a year's delay" in the start of school integration.

But it was "a wise step," he said, and "much progress has resulted" from the work of the committee, generally known as the Sibley Commission.

* * *

JUDGE HOOPER sounded something of a warning that the rural-dominated Legislature can bring disaster to country as well as city schools if it doesn't relent from its no-integration-anywhere position.

"The danger which Georgia faces in the event representatives of the rural communities will not permit the Atlanta plan to become operative is clearly and forcefully brought out by the (Sibley) report," he said.

The report pointed out that under court decisions set in Virginia cases a state must allow some integration or else get out of the public school business.

Judge Hooper in a footnote to the opinion cited a recent decision in the New Orleans case voiding the school-closing authority in the Louisiana governor and a Louisiana law depriving integrated schools of funds. He didn't comment on what effect that decision might have on Georgia developments.

* * *

SOME OF the Sibley Commission's recommendation — notably for local option and pupil assignment laws—could be enacted by the 1961 Legislature, Judge Hooper said.

He did note, however, that some constitutional amendments suggested by the commission could not be voted on until November, 1962. The other laws could serve the purpose of saving the public schools in the meantime, he intimated.

The Atlanta plan calls for desegregation to begin in the 11th and 12th grades in September, 1961, under a pupil assignment procedure.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, Tuesday, May 10, 1960

Text of Judge Hooper's Order on Desegregation

Here is the text of Judge Hooper's order that the Atlanta Board of Education make its pupil placement plan effective May 1, 1961, regardless of whether the General Assembly passes legislation permitting the board to put the plan into operation:

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

VIVIAN CALHOUN, et al,
Plaintiffs — CIVIL ACTION

vs.

MEMBERS OF BOARD OF EDUCATION, CITY OF ATLANTA, et al, Defendants — NO. 6298

ORDER OF COURT

The above stated case has come on for a hearing on this date upon the order of the court entered March 9, 1960, upon plaintiff's motion for further relief filed Feb. 26, 1960. Said motion for further relief sought an order of the court making effective the plan of operation of the Atlanta Public School System as of the school term beginning in September 1960. The court withheld action upon said motion for further relief pending the filing of a report by the General Assembly Committee on Schools.

IT IS NOW ORDERED that the motion for further relief, insofar as it seeks to put said plan into operation as of September 1960, be and the same is hereby denied.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, however, that the motion for further relief be granted to the effect that said plan shall be effective as of May 1, 1961, looking toward the operation of the school system for the session beginning in September 1961.

Said plan, however, which contemplates the assignment, transfer or continuance of pupils must contemplate the same as to both the twelfth and the eleventh grades beginning September 1961.

The effect of this order is that defendants shall as of May 1, 1961, put into operation the plan heretofore approved by this court, receiving applications from May 1 to May 15 to the twelfth and the eleventh grades of the Atlanta public schools, and shall do so whether or not the General Assembly of Georgia at its session in January 1961 passes legislation permitting defendants to put said plan into operation.

An opinion will be filed pursuant to this order at a later date.
This the 9th day of May, 1960.

Peters to Aid Drive Aimed To Promote Open Schools

Four Groups Unite In Georgia-Wide Plan

By BRUCE GALPHIN

James B. Peters, state school board chairman, and Superior state Democratic chairman, will take part in what appears to be the "major effort to rally statewide support for open, orderly desegregation of public schools.

The chairman Mr. Peters is expected to go as far as any other public official in advocating open schools even as unanimous question Monday.

Dr. Claude Purcell, state superintendent of schools, said in Savannah Wednesday that Georgians will have to face the fact they must live under the federal court decisions on school integration "because it is binding."

TIME FOR SCHOOL DECISION DRAWS NEAR

United States Judge Frank A. Hooper this week heard a timely warning to officials that the 1961 General Assembly must make a choice between some desegregation in the Atlanta schools or a statewide shutdown of the public schools.

In an opinion supporting his decision on school integration in Atlanta last October, 1961, Judge Hooper said:

"This court wishes to make it clear the court has no desire to meddle in the affairs of the Georgia Legislature. The State of Georgia, but in making a sincere effort to enable the people of Georgia, the Legislature to make a decision matter, if they so desire, that will p[illegible] the closing of the schools of Georgia.

Legislature Is Getting Reminder on Schools

It is beginning to find this fall an surge of effort urging the "last-chance Legislature" to save public education in Georgia.

No deep impression seems to have been made on the Legislature yet.

But the United Churchwomen of Georgia, the Georgia League of Women Voters and Help Our Public Education on Voters, Active Voters and Help Our Public Education (HOPE) have arranged meetings this month in Rome, Albany, Columbus and Augusta, with speakers ranging from Rep. Erwin Mitchell to James S. Peters.

And these are only starters. The purpose of these groups is simply to outline the facts to Georgians. Then, in the words of Mrs. Frances Breeden, "it is up to us, as parents and citizens, to let the Legislature know exactly what we expect from it."

Events have moved swiftly this year.

The 1961 Legislature Must Face Responsibility

It would seem unnecessary for the chairman of the state school board to have to speak on the "Importance of Public Education" in mid-twentieth century Georgia.

But such is the climate of the times that men like Jim Peters must do just that.

The reason is not, as some insist, that there are two points of view on education's importance. The number of Georgians who prefer closing all schools to a limited amount of desegregation is negligible. The number who realize that that is the choice is small, too, and that is the failure of Georgia leadership.

The reason that Mr. Peters and others must now speak out on public education's importance is that for six and a half years Georgia politicians have closed their eyes to the problem brought on by the 1954 Supreme Court decision and tried to close the eyes of Georgia citizens. They have argued that the law need not be obeyed—but if it must private schools can do what public schools have

Growing interest was reported Saturday in plans for a public meeting to be held at the Rome First Christian Church Tuesday to discuss Georgia's impending school crisis.

MITCHELL CHARGES LEADERS DECEIVE

Maximum Segregation, Open Schools Proposed as Crisis Answer

By DOUGLAS KIKER

Seventh District Congressman Erwin Mitchell charged Wednesday that Georgia political leaders are "guilty of deliberately deceiving the people of Georgia of inevitable ignorance" on the state's school integration dilemma.

"The issue is simply 'is the uninterrupted training of our young men and women of sufficient importance that we will maintain our public school system even though it means some integration'," Rep. Mitchell said.

* * *

THE TIME is at hand, Mr. Mitchell said, for Georgians to ask themselves "just where do we stand today?"

"Clearly the course that we follow will be charted by our governor and the General Assembly in the next two years," he said. They "hold the key to the future of education in our state."

But he added that "active informed public opinion" also is going to be a big factor in whatever action the Legislature may or ought not take in its next session.

"For us adults to deprive a child of one day of school by closing of our schools is unpardonable," he said. Today is a time to think of ways school [illegible] some form of token [illegible]

THE DALTON congressman made these statements in a prepared speech he was to deliver Wednesday before the Valdosta Rotary Club.

Rep. Mitchell Speaks With Responsible Voice

Seventh District Rep. Erwin Mitchell, of Dalton, who next year will take his seat in the Georgia General Assembly, continues to plead with Georgians that the alternative to closing the public schools is the reasonable approach suggested by the majority report of the Sibley Commission.

He makes good sense. Time and circumstances will determine his political wisdom but it should be noted that his constituents backed him in his bid for the State Senate. If the state's political leadership makes the mistake of letting the schools close, the results very well could be as predicted by James S. Peters in his now-famous letter to Roy Harris.

Foreseeing "chaos beyond imagination" if schools are closed, Mitchell urges action by state government and the General Assembly to forestall it by adopting

A flat, statistical measure plainly is impossible.

Those who have watched developments here for years have found on-the-record judgments hard to obtain.

Industrial promoters appear ever cautious, like their kind everywhere, about openly admitting unpleasant facts. Some of them admit the years of furore over public schools had some "possible" effect on Virginia's industrial growth. But they minimize it to the point of rejecting the possibility.

To assert otherwise is, of course, to fix blame on prevailing political leaders who authored the massive resistance policy.

STATE BUREAUS concerned with industrial growth issue reports which cite a variety of reasons, some of them valid, for a growth lag. But school closing isn't among them. Such bureaus exist only at the whim of the political leadership, and it is customary for them to word reports with a keen discretion born of the will to survive.

The Virginia Division of Industrial Development has held to a steadily rosy view in its reports on new manufacturing plants.

One such report on gains in 1958 — the critical year which brought closed schools and led to the collapse of massive resistance — was dissected by Benjamin Muse, then the Washington Post's writer on Virginia affairs.

BALANCING known losses with the claimed and sometimes indefinite gains, Muse concluded: ". . . 1958 was a year not of progress, not of standing still, but of retrogression in this field."

With neither comment nor interpretation, the Virginia State Employment Service supplied me with figures that appear to show 1958 as a year of a severe backward slip in manufacturing development.

The year's average number of persons in manufacturing employment was 8,000 less than the average for the previous year. This isn't to imply the instable school situation may be cited as the sole cause of that year's, or any single recent year's, slump. In 1958, particularly, a general national recession prevailed.

But a relationship between the school situation and industrial growth springs out at you from a chronology of the decade's manufacturing employment in Virginia.

AND IN fact, however you choose to weigh the causes, Virginia in the years since it mounted the policy of massive resistance to the 1954 Brown desegregation decision has lagged far behind the capacity for industrial growth which it demonstrated in the early years of the decade.

The measure here is elementary — jobs. And the figures came, on request, from the Virginia State Employment Service.

In 1950 an average of 228,100 persons worked in manufacturing. In 1951 the average climbed 15,600. In 1952 it was up 7,100 and in 1953 it rose by another 8,700.

In 1954, year of the decision, the average dropped 2,400, but that year was followed by increases of 8,400 in 1955 and 8,600 in 1956. In the three years that followed massive resistance came both to its fruition and its demise.

In 1957 the average employment in manufacturing was 1,700 higher than the previous year. In 1958 it declined 8,000, and in 1959 rose 11,400.

FOR THE first five months of this year, the average stood at 272,700 or 3,500 over last year's average.

In 1951-52-53, the first three years of the decade, before massive resistance and school closing had been thought of, Virginia increased the average number employed in manufacturing by 31,400.

In 1957-58-59, the last three years of the decade, during which massive resistance was legally formulated and tried, Virginia increased the average by a net 5,100, or roughly one sixth as well as it had done in the earlier three years.

Measured in terms of actual manufacturing jobs, the rate of growth has been sharply less in recent years than had been managed at the outset of the decade.

And those really big industrial plums have been rare of late.

A LIST of the big ones — employing 500 or more — was carried in the Virginia Economic Review of April, 1960, published by the Division of Industrial Development of the Virginia Department of Conservation and Economic Development. These were ones established in the 1950-59 period.

And these were the plants put up by bluechip national concerns — General Electric, Westinghouse, Allied Chemical and the like — and employing more than 500.

This list of 11 such plants, employing up to 1,650 today, shows none obtained for 1958 and 1959, one for 1957, one for 1956 and all the remainder in the first half of the decade.

How much should the state's general school crisis be blamed for a demonstrable slowdown in growth? Here's the puzzler nobody presumes to answer in arbitrary terms. It's as impossible to answer as mankind's timeless backward-looking teaser about what-might-have-been.

● "Private schools" were set up when public schools were closed.

HOW, AFTER ALL, do you go about discovering what industries scratched Virginia from their list of potential sites because of the instable school situation?

"I know of no letters or documents in which an industry has stated that as a reason for not coming here," a leading Richmond banker told me.

I had been sent to him as one who had been concerned over the economic effects of the massive resistance period and as one who had participated in the dialogues which preceded Gov. J. Lindsay Almond's abandonment of that policy.

"I don't believe you have to be able to cite situation 'a' or 'b' or 'c' to prove the point," the banker went on. "I believe it's just common sense. You don't have to be shot by a bullet to know that a bullet will kill you if it hits you in the right place."

IN FACT, the concern of the Virginia business community that it might face a mortal blow if massive resistance wasn't abandoned is perhaps the best evidence of all of the serious impact the school situation was having on the state's economy.

Businessmen and industrialists, traditionally politically timid except where their own narrow governmental interests are concerned, played an important part in pressing for the abandonment of massive resistance.

Mostly they played this part in secret, conspiratorial circumstances. Few, then or now, wish their names publicly introduced into the controversy. The Richmond banker mentioned above would talk only with the understanding his name wouldn't be used.

Some business leaders candidly spoke out in the period of crisis. One top industrialist told the people he probably wouldn't have brought a plant to Virginia if he had known the schools would be placed in jeopardy — food for thought for those wondering about what-might-have-been.

Integration And Industry—II . . . By Frank Trippett

Business Helped End 'Massive Resistance'

RICHMOND, Va. — Virginia business leaders remained generally silent in the years when the politicians framed the policy of massive resistance.

TRIPPETT

But when that policy resulted in closed schools — and a costly drain on the vitality of the state's economic growth — the business community began asserting leadership.

An almost conspiratorial air surrounded this development.

Talking with those who followed Virginia developments closely in the period of crisis, you learn of a mysterious meeting at Richmond's Rotunda Club between a group of industrial and business leaders and Gov. J. Lindsay Almond.

The meeting preceded by a short time Almond's abandonment of massive resistance in his address to the General Assembly in January of last year.

YOU CAN LEARN the names of some of those who attended — but always in confidence. The "guest list" included big names in Virginia business, notably big names affiliated with industries which promote industrial growth generally, such as railroads.

Further, the "guests" included close friends of U.S. Sen. Harry Byrd, who still hasn't repudiated massive resistance. "They would represent most of his campaign financing," said one student of the episode.

What is known about this meeting and other discussions which were the prelude to Almond's turnabout has led many observers to believe that it was the eternal pressure of the dollar which finally backed Virginia — Byrd to the contrary — away from a school-closing policy.

A POLICY framed by politicians was turning the screws on business, so business turned the screws on the politicians—that's the the idea.

It's hard to doubt that the economic powers furnished a significant, if not the critical, leverage in veering Virginia away from massive resistance.

A leading Richmond banker who participated in some of the pre-reversal conferences with Almond was inclined to give business a less important position in the picture.

"The participation of the business community in Almond's reversal has been exaggerated," he said. "It is amazing that Almond went to the extreme he did, not that he reached the conclusion he finally did.

"THERE IS no doubt that Almond knew businessmen were terribly concerned about this thing," the banker went on. "I don't mean there was any unanimity among them of what finally took place. But he knew there was a consequential segment of Virginia's civic structure, I would say, who could not possibly stomach a closed down system of schools. He knew this would involve us in havoc."

Almond, whatever the pressures upon him, chose an exceedingly curious way to preface his reversal. A few days before the January 1959 session he still sounded like the champion diehard of them all.

'Let me make it abundantly clear for the record now and hereafter, as governor of this state, I will not yield to that which I know to be wrong," he declared, after clearly indicating he regarded racial mixing in the "wrong" category.

Hardly more than a week later, in addressing the legislature, he jerked the rug from under massive resistance and in a plaintive plea to the lawmakers said:

"No fair minded person would be so unreasonable as to seek to hold me responsible for failure to exercise powers which the state is powerless to bestow."

In April of that year the General Assembly approved the present "Freedom of Choice" plan — which still allows a single county to close its schools on a local option basis — by a slim majority in the house and by only a single vote majority in the senate. Previously closed public schools in Norfolk, Charlottesville and Front Royal came back into operation.

What part did business play?

"THE FULL STORY in the reversal of Virginia policy will never be told," wrote Helen Hill Miller of Charlottesville in a recent issue of Harvard Business Review. "Too many private conferences with the Governor and members of the state legislature on the part of businessmen, bankers, attorneys, though known about off the record, will remain permanently private.

"The Committee for Public Schools, a statewide citizens organization formed with the single purpose of mustering support for keeping the public schools open, was visible like an iceberg — the main mass and weight were below the surface."

Some key industrial officials have asserted open leadership in behalf of public schools both before and following the crucial legislative reversal.

DR. LOUIS RADER, General Electric plant manager at Waynesboro, warned that school closure there would cost him up to a fourth of his key personnel, probably irreplaceably. Pointedly, he said the $5 million payroll of his GE plant probably wouldn't have been located there had there been advance knowledge the schools might be jeopardized by state action.

"I am convinced that industrial development of Virginia will not take place as rapidly as it might, unless we have an attitude that will build a strong, effective public schools system," Rader said in March last year. "There is no doubt that the education climate and the business climate are interdependent. To this I can attest by my own experience, for I was personally responsible for the selection of Virginia as the location of one of General Electric's new plants."

In this period, when the "Freedom of Choice" plan still leaves the way open for schools to be jeopardized on local initiative (there's still no official move to reinstitute public schools in rural Prince Edward County), there has been an increasing emphasis by the leadership on the economic effects of the public education system.

GOV. ALMOND, addressing what was billed as the largest economic development conference in Virginia history last year placed "adequate schools" at the top of his list of community cultural and economic factors in attracting industry.

One of the evening short courses for adults conducted by the Community Educational Service at Emory University

This non-credit course was designed to give both sides of the educational picture in Georgia. Speakers with known points of view were invited to talk to the participants of the course. Among the fall quarter speakers were J. M. Dabbs, writer and farmer of Mayesville, South Carolina; Omer Carmichael, superintendent of the Louisville Public Schools; Ed Ball, Southern Educational Reporting Service, Nashville, Tennessee; former governor of Georgia, Marvin Griffin; Millard F. Caldwell, attorney and former governor of Florida. Included in the speakers for the winter quarter have been Robert Jordan, floor leader of the Georgia State Senate; Ralph McGill, editor, The Atlanta Constitution; Bell I. Wiley, professor of history, Emory University; John H. Fischer, superintendent of Public Instruction, Baltimore, Maryland; Charles Bloch, attorney of Macon, Georgia; and Jim Montgomery, Atlanta Constitution business editor, whose talk is printed here. The course was conducted by John A. Griffin, director community educational service, Emory University.

THE ECONOMIC EFFECT OF SCHOOL CLOSING

January 19, 1959 By Jim Montgomery

PERHAPS THE MOST CERTAIN THING that can be said at this time about the future of Georgia's public school system is that it's very uncertain. But whatever the outcome, it is bound to have an important effect on Georgia's economy for years to come. Public education itself is a big business. If it is abandoned in Georgia, the economic impact will be staggering.

Just consider some of the immediate and direct consequences should it turn out that the closing of a single school would force the closing of ALL public schools.

Right now, for example, Georgia has upwards of 30,000 teachers in its primary and secondary schools. Their wages and salaries—combined with the pay of all other public school employees—stimulates more than $300 million a year in economic activity throughout the state. This figure includes the multiplier effect of their pay circulating through retail stores, service establishments and so on.

If the schools are closed, the loss of teachers' and school employees' income would be felt proportionately in every one of Georgia's 159 counties. It would range from more than a quarter of a million dollars a year in the smallest county to some $60 million a year in Fulton and DeKalb counties.

In addition, the federal government would no doubt cut off the $5 to $10 million a year it provides for milk, lunches, vocational training, and so forth in Georgia's public schools.

Now, should the public schools be closed a year or more, this would mean postponement of graduation for about 30,000 high school students a year — at a cost of more than $100 million a year in lost earning power.

This assumes that about 5,000 of the 30,000 would eventually graduate from college, but that each year of postponement would cause a loss in earning power of $7,000 per student—or a total of $35 million a year. The other 25,000 that would have graduated from high school would have earnings of $4,000 a year per graduate postponed — which would amount to $100 million a year in lost earning power.

Even if half of the seniors were lucky enough to get temporary jobs at low wages — the total loss of earning power because of a year's postponement of graduation would remain over $100 million.

Chances are, it would rise even higher in the long run, because some would never return to school. A recent survey in Norfolk indicated that nearly half of the seniors did not intend to return to school if, and when, the schools are reopened. And failure to graduate would no doubt cost those that do not return some degree of earning power for the rest of their lives.

Then there are millions of dollars in outstanding school bonds, and the bond-holders would no doubt require immediate settlement. To meet these full-faith-and-credit obligations, the local governments would either have to sell its public school buildings and equipment, or raise additional tax revenue — or both.

Another extremely expensive item would be the rebuilding of teaching staffs in the primary and secondary schools, as well as the colleges, if Georgia ever resumed public education.

Having interviewed many college faculty members, there is no doubt in my mind that a large proportion of them will abandon Georgia on the day Georgia abandons public education — whether because of their jobs or their children. And it will probably take considerably more than is now being paid to get them or others of equal competence to return to Georgia.

On the matter of private schools and tuition payments, one of the big remaining questions is whether any tax decreases or deductions would be large enough so that the great majority of families could afford to send their children to private schools.

Teachers, by the way, are not the only people inclined to strike out for greener pastures should the public schools attended by their children be closed. The same is true of engineers, scientists, administrators, and others in colleges and industrial plants. More than 17 per cent of those interviewed in a survey conducted by The Atlanta Constitution two months ago indicated their first move in the event that their children's school is closed would be to find a job in another state. An equally large number said they would do this if the schools remained closed for a period of three months to a year.

That is one reason why nearly all of the college and industrial officials interviewed in connection with the survey were frankly worried about the future of public schools in Georgia.

Here's how a top executive of a large Atlanta area industry expressed this feeling:

> "I am personally very concerned about our ability to maintain a competitive position in this industry if this question comes to a head. I even have serious doubts about whether we could stay in business if they closed the schools here."

Obviously, then, the loss of even a small percentage of the highly skilled technical management personnel now employed in Georgia would impair the operating efficiency — the essential competitive ability — of many industries now located in Georgia. And should such plants be forced to close down or cut back production as a result of losing key personnel because of public school closings, hundreds — possibly thousands — of other employees willing to stay on would wind up jobless. Furthermore, there would be a sharp decline in state tax revenue based on the income of these industries and workers. Depending on how long the public schools remained closed, these losses would have a snowballing effect on Georgia's entire economy — gradual, at first, but eventually affecting nearly everyone.

Meanwhile, the very uncertainty that clouds the future of Georgia's public school system is having an adverse effect on the recruiting of qualified technicians, teachers and management-level personnel needed right now by the universities and some industries.

I have been told of many specific instances — and have seen letters of rejection — in which skilled personnel have turned down offers of good jobs with excellent pay simply because there is no assurance of whether or how long Georgia's public school system will continue to operate. Of course, many people never give their reason for not accepting a particular job. But there are signs that the number turning down employment in Georgia because of the uncertain school situation is growing.

Just a year ago, there were 235 physicists listed in the annual registrant's qualification booklet of the American Institute of Physics. Seven of them specified that they would not accept work in the South or Southeast. Although that number is less than 5 per cent of the total, a physics department head at one of Georgia's universities said this was the first time in his memory that any of the registrants had specifically rejected working in a given part of the country. No reasons were given. But it is hard to imagine what other circumstance would account for these negative geographical limitations showing up for the first time just a year ago. The geographical preferences of job-seeking physicists are normally stated positively.

This evidence, in addition to recruiting difficulties, shows why some faculty members at both Georgia Tech and the University of Georgia are doubtful that their new science facilities can be fully and adequately staffed as long as there is any possibility that Georgia's public schools could be closed because of the integration-segregation dispute.

As for industrial development and expansion, there is as yet little evidence that Georgia is suffering because of this issue. Indeed, capital spending announced for new and expanded industrial plants in the state reached a record high in 1958. And, of course, there is no way of determining at this time whether it would have been even higher if there had been no public school crisis.

However, a business research economist at one of the state's major universities told me recently that a major electronics manufacturer had dropped Georgia from its list of potential plant sites primarily because of the threat to continued operation of public schools.

And there are definite signs of slowing industrial development in Arkansas and Virginia, where the school situation has already come to a head. In Arkansas, according to that state's chamber of commerce, capital spending announced last year for new and expanded plants barely exceeded $25 million. Just one year before, in 1957, the total was nearly $50 million, and in 1956 Arkansas had added $130 million in industrial growth.

In an effort to discover what, if any, effect the school crisis of the past year and a half has had, the Little Rock branch of the American Association of University Women polled 85 local businessmen and found that more than half of them — 44 to be exact — said business had suffered. And although another 35 said there had been no effect, direct quotes from many of the local businessmen indicated an even darker picture. Indeed, the hand of irony was evident in the business improvement reported by the remaining six — such as moving companies, moving an increasing number of families out of Little Rock, and service stations selling gasoline to tourists who stop to ask directions to Central High School. And the Little Rock difficulties are not confined to the city limits, but spill out through the State of Arkansas.

That state's sharp decline is hardly in line with fluctuations in purely economic conditions. Nor is the situation in Virginia, which has caused a railroad president there to publicly express dissatisfaction with the state's current rate of industrial development. Another Virginia business leader has attributed his state's lagging economic development directly to the public school closings there.

Clearly, then, if Georgia abandons its present system of public education, it will lose new industry, as well as hurt industry that is already located here.

It may be as much as a year or two before the economic losses become widely felt. Any loss of new industry will show up only in statistics over several months to a year or more. As a matter of public relations, no company is going to admit — much less announce — that it is not locating a plant in Georgia or any other state due to closed schools. After all, the company will still want to sell its products there.

If one is inclined to doubt that Georgia's economy would be seriously affected by this situation, he might ask himself this question: If I were interested in establishing a new business or a branch plant, would I consider locating such a plant in an area in which the provision for educating children of workers is in a state of confusion and turmoil; or which did not provide advantages for young people comparable to those of other areas?

And of the many new plants which have established themselves in Georgia in the past 10 years or so, how many would give serious thought to closing their operations here if these difficulties continued and increased? Certainly, any environment which is unstable, and in which public education is threatened, is not conducive to business development or expansion.

Most businessmen are carefully avoiding any public discussion of this problem. Many have told me they are afraid to do so; that they are, in effect, intimidated by fear of losing business. They are, however, just as scared of the irreparable long-run economic damage most feel would result from the abandoning of public education. Only the immediacy of feared economic reprisal silences their tongues. The few who have spoken out, however, have expressed the concern of the majority who have been willing to discuss it with me providing their identities are never revealed.

McGregor Smith, president of Florida Power and Light Company, has likened the economic effects of closing schools to the effects of a strike — hurtful to everyone involved. And Ivan Allen, Jr., past president of the Georgia State Chamber of Commerce, has declared that business and capital investment in the state will be hampered as long as "uncertainty, chaos and confusion" remain over the continued operation of public schools.

Clearly illustrating the attitudes of this country's major industrial corporations toward the schools is a recent publication of the General Electric Company. I am taking liberties in applying it to this discussion, for it was not made in reference to the South's public school crisis.

It was simply a brief restatement of General Electric's long-established position on what the company calls "The Essential Elements of a Better Business Climate." One of the eight essential elements is "Adequate community services such as schools."

This statement demonstrates industry's awareness that it cannot grow without public education. It also shows that the educational system of a community is one of the foremost in the criteria used by industry for new plant location. I think the implications are clear as far as the present situation in Georgia is concerned.

Thus, the economic consequences of closing public schools — if that is what comes to pass — are hardly cheering.

My own opinion is that to whatever extent Georgia abandons its present system of public education, it will:

1. Arrest the economic progress of the past two decades.
2. Undermine its present economic strength.
3. Cause the abandonment of its otherwise bright opportunities for continued — and still desperately needed — economic growth.

GEORGIA'S PUBLIC EDUCATION AT THE CROSSROADS

What of the Past?

1777 - Georgia Constitution assigns responsibility of providing schools to state. But in 1840 - laws for providing public schools were repealed. So that by 1864 - only 1/2 of Georgians in the Civil War could read or write.
1875 - $1.50 spent per child for a three-month school year. As late as 1900 - less than 1/2 of Georgia's white children attended school as much as 100 days per year. Not until 1937 - did a seven-month school term become compulsory. It was 1952 - before the compulsory school term was extended to nine months.
1952 - $153.45 spent per child per school year.

Where Are We Now?

961,000 children enrolled in public schools.

$140,000,000 spent annually for public schools. Yet only

22 out of every 100 students graduate from high school.

"The provision of an adequate education for the citizens shall be a primary obligation of the State of Georgia.... Separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races."
-Constitution of the State of Georgia-

"Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal...Such segregation is a denial of equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution."
-U.S. Supreme Court Ruling, 1954-

"Legislative acts in violation... of the Constitution of the United States, are void, and the Judiciary shall so declare them."
-Constitution of the State of Georgia-

What of the Future?

WILL THE STATE OF GEORGIA CONTINUE WITHOUT INTERRUPTION TO GUARANTEE TO EACH CITIZEN HIS INHERENT RIGHT TO AN EDUCATION?

CLOSED SCHOOLS COST YOU

Closed schools cost you in many ways, only one of which is financial. But let us look at the economical costs of closed schools, for if closed schools hit you nowhere else, they strike straight at your pockbook.

NORFOLK KNOWS ABOUT CLOSED SCHOOLS. Norfolk's experienoe shows how closed schools can pick a community's pocket. Six white schools were closed in Norfolk from September 1958 to February 1959 in an act of "massive resistence." During this period, overall economic activity* in Norfolk grew only 27 percent as fast as in the rest of the Richmond Federal Reserve District,  while it grew 76 percent as fast during the comparable period September 1959-February 1960, when Norfolk's schools were open. In addition, employment declined 2.91 percent in Norfolk during the period its schools were closed, while employment in all Virginia rose 0.35 percent. If you want to shoo business out of Atlanta and cut jobs in Georgia, Norfolk's lesson shows closing the schools is a good way to start.

DON'T POISON YOUR POCKETBOOK. Talk about closing the schools for any purpose creates an unstable environment that scares away business. In Charlottesville, Virginia, where the desegregated public vs. segregated private school controversy has continued from 1958 to date, employment declined in both 1958 and 1959, although 1959 was a "boom" year, with employment gains in the state as a whole. Would you want to locate a branch plant or office in Georgia if its public schools were going to close? Your answer to this question should be your answer to any plan which would close Georgia's schools.

NOTE: Norfolk and Charlottesville were chosen for this study since they are the two largest Virginia cities in which schools were closed. The effect on Atlanta could be even worse, since Atlanta is much more of a Southern business center than either Norfolk or Charlottesville. For instance, Atlanta contains regional distribution offices for over 3300 different national companies, many of which could move their offices elsewhere if Atlanta's schools were to close.

*Overall economic activity in a community is, perhaps, best indicated by bank debits, which measure check spending (nine-tenths of total dollar spending) in the community. Bank debits present a comprehensive picture of economic activity since they include such items as the paycheck you receive, the checks you write to pay bills, taxes, and rent, and the checks you sign to buy houses, stocks, materials, and supplies. Thus, when we say overall economic activity rose so much in one area relative to another area, we base our information on bank debits for these areas. Bank debit data for 344 U.S. areas are available on release G6 of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Washington 25, D.C.

THE SIBLEY REPORT

On April 28, 1960, after meetings throughout the state and with legal counsel, the General Assembly Committee on Schools (the Sibley Committee) presented a majority report and recommendations, and a minority report with an added statement by Rep. Render Hill.

THE MAJORITY REPORTED THAT:

The Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by the Supreme Court is the law of the land, and those state laws that are in conflict are unenforceable. Any public school system must recognize that the state cannot, by law, segregate by race. p.6

To maintain total segregation throughout the state, Georgia will have to give up all public schools. p.10

It will be impractical to develop a system of private schools that will provide adequately for the educational needs of the people of Georgia. p.11

Those who insist on total segregation but back away from closing all schools are deceiving themselves and the people. p.15

To close the schools temporarily would be a useless gesture, and would create confusion, great economic loss in the state and utter chaos in the schools. p.14

The basic alternatives are 1. give local authorities control of placing students, 2. give as much freedom of choice to parents and local communities as possible, and 3. give "assurance that no child will be required to go to school with a child of a different race except on a voluntary basis." p.12

Pupil placement is the plan by which the local school boards can place a pupil in a school according to geographical, scholastic, and psychological standards. p.12

To put these alternatives into effect would mean some changes in the Georgia Constitution, which would have to be voted on in a general election by all voters. p.15

THEREFORE THE MAJORITY RECOMMENDED THAT:

1. A Constitutional amendment be proposed to the effect that no child shall be forced into a school with a child of the opposite race, and that the child whose parents object to an integrated school be entitled to reassignment, tuition grants or scholarship aid. p.17

2. A Constitutional amendment be proposed to provide for a uniform system of local units for the administration of the schools, and to allow any such unit to close schools within the unit or to reopen the school in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the qualified voters. p.17

3. The General Assembly pass laws for tuition grants or scholarships for students who wish to withdraw from an integrated school or whose school has been closed. p.17

4. The General Assembly pass laws to have teachers retirement cover private school teachers as well as public school teachers. p.17

5. The General Assembly decide whether to close the schools, or to give as much freedom of choice as possible through 1. pupil placement, 2. empowering the people of each community to vote whether to close their schools in the event of integration or to continue the operation of said schools, and 3. parent option-parent would be able to ask for reassignment or withdrawal with tuition grant or scholarship aid for private education. p.18

THE MINORITY REPORT RECOMMENDED THAT:

1. A Constitutional amendment be proposed to guarantee that no child be forced to go to an integrated school. p.6

2. The General Assembly provide for tuition grants by state, county and municipal funds. p.7

3. Schools be kept segregated as long as possible then resort to tuition grants. p.7

4. The Governor and the General Assembly take such action and enact such laws as may be required from time to time. p.7

Representative Render Hill added that each member of the 1961 General Assembly should inform himself of the school situation, and determine the will of the voters so each may present these views, 2. the General Assembly in 1961 should resolve these issues, and 3. laws be made so no child shall be forced to attend an integrated school and if necessary make each school a separate authority. p.2

EXPLANATION:

These figures do not include the money which each school district puts into its public education program, nor do they include the 30 million received by the state from the Federal Government in goods and services (i.e. lunch room expenses, surplus properties, etc.)

During the current year, the total cost is 225 million dollars. Of this amount, local school districts pay 23 million (required local effort for the minimum foundation program) and they also contribute another 23 million in "local enrichment" programs.
